START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

APRIL 1994

Camera Operator:
Kathy Wilder

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-018

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959

VOL	TITLE	DATES
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copyright law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: IA IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 12X

FILM STOCK:

REEL 18

Volume 37-38

KARL MUCK
1918
to
BSO-POPS
1918-1919

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
4.5 mm 1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
3.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 37

Karl Muck

1918

HILL, SMITH & CO.
STATIONERS AND BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS
8 MILK STREET, OLD SOUTH BUILDING, BOSTON.
Job No. Y1262
Duplicate this book by sending the above number.

[ii]

[illegible]

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA

BSO

BALTIMORE, MD.

SOON TO A

KEEN INTEREST IN MAHLER SYMPHONY

Interest is keen in the second and last performance of Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony, which will be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon.

Items and Announcements

At the Symphony Concerts of Feb. 22 and 23, Mme. Leginska, the pianist, will play for the first times in Boston with Dr. Muck's orchestra, though elsewhere she has more than once assisted it. She brings to a concerto no less ardor of technique, tone and temperament than she has been wont to display in recitals here.

No Symphony This Week

There will be no Symphony concerts this week, Feb 1 and 2. The following week the soloist will be Anton Witek, the concert master of the orchestra. He will play the Bruch Concerto in G minor. The orchestral numbers will be the fine symphonic poem of the English composer, Wallace, "Villon," which was played here with much success in 1912, and Alfven's Symphony No. 3 in E major. This symphony will be heard in Boston for the first time. It is said to be melodious, bright and very pleasing.

THOUSANDS OF MUCKS

Get Rid of Aliens Who Are Against Us, Says Fitzgerald in Liberty Loan Speech—Find Out Who Are Loyal

"The present Liberty Loan drive furnishes a good opportunity to find out who are Americans and who are not," former Mayor Fitzgerald told an audience at the Weymouth Catholic Club last night.

"There are thousands of Dr. Mucks in our midst," continued Dr. Fitzgerald, "and every citizen should co-operate with the government in finding them out and bringing them to justice. We have been altogether too lenient toward those who were born in the countries that are fighting us.

"There are more than 100,000 Germans, Austrians and Turks in Massachusetts today. Many of them are undoubtedly loyal, but let us find out whether they are or not.

"Failure to act may cost the lives of many an American soldier. There are hundreds of thousands of other foreigners who are exempt from war duty, but who should be liberal buyers of bonds. Let us put them to the test. They are getting the highest wages, and their money, if we waged this war on correct principals, should be conscripted just as our boys are being conscripted. America has been altogether too lenient with the alient immigrant.

"Men who come here and get the protection of our flag should be willing to fight for that flag, but thousands of them show themselves unwilling and hide behind the colors of their native land, though that same land is being bled to death by German bullets.

"Let us get them on the Liberty Loan. Search every house, get into every tenement, interview every single one of them, and if they refuse to fight and will not buy a Liberty bond, let us organize a band of liberty men and get rid of them. If they are not with us they are against us. 'America for those who are with America in this fight' should be our slogan."

PENSION FUND

An unusually interesting program with unusually interesting artists as soloists has been prepared for the second concert of the season in aid of the pension fund o fthe Boston Symphony Orchestra which will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. The soloists will be Miss Sophie Braslau, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, who have generously given their services. Miss Braslau has appeared in Boston several times. The beauty of her voice, which is a true and genuine contralto, has won for her many admirers. Her success is all the more noteworthy in that her training and her career has been entirely in this country. As for Mr. Gabrilowitsch there is little to be said at this late date about his very fine art.

Miss Braslau will sing an aria and a group of three songs with piano. Mr. Gabrilowitsch, urged by a number of his friends in Boston, will play the two pieces with which he had such success with the orchestra three years ago.

Overture, "Roman Carnival".....Berlioz
Concerto for piano and orchestra in D minor ..... Mozart
Mr. Gabrilowitsch.
Aria, "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix," from Samson et Dalila.....Saint-Saens
Miss Braslau.
Symphonic poem No. 3, "Danse Macabre." Saint-Saens
Songs with piano:
Do Not Sing, Oh Maiden....Rachmaninoff
The Classicist.....Moussorgsky
Eili, Eili.....Schalitt
Miss Braslau.
Concertstueck for pianoforte in F minor, Op. 79.....Weber
Mr. Gabrilowitsch.
Suite for full orchestra taken from the ballet, "Nutcracker".....Tschaikowsky tions for themselves. Despite the opposition of Councils, the hampering of their work by lack of funds, the refusal to acquiesce in their carefully planned economies, these men accomplished the apparently impossible; and they did it not only because they were inspired by the sturdy optimism and patriotism of the mayor, but because they managed their departments without regard to politics, as if they were engaged in some business enterprise and were responsible solely to a board of directors. His preëlection promises of efficiency, despite all the gangsters could do to hamper him, Mayor Blankenburg more than carried out.

The Police Out of Politics

He took a police force which for forty years had been the plaything and the club of politicians, and because none could doubt his purpose transformed it in a few months into one of the most efficient instruments of its kind to be found in America. "It cannot be done," his advisers told him.

American
Apr 14

Pension Fund Concert Today

AN unusually interesting program has been prepared for the second pension fund concert, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon. The soloists will be Miss Sophie Braslau, contralto, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, both of whom have generously given their services. The program is as follows:

Overture, "Roman Carnival".....Berlioz
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in D minor .....Mozart
Mr. Gabrilowitsch.
Aria, "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix," from "Samson et Dalila".....Saint-Saens
Miss Braslau.
Symphonic Poem, "Danse Macabre"..... Saint-Saens
Songs with Piano:
(a) Do Not Sing, Oh Maiden....Rachmaninoff
(b) The Classicist .....Moussorgsky
(c) Eili, Eili .....Schalitt
Miss Braslau.
Concertstuck for Pianoforte in F minor. Weber
Mr. Gabrilowitsch.
Suite from the Ballet, "Nutcracker"..... Tschaikowsky

22D SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The feature of the 22d Symphony concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be the first performances in Boston of the "First Symphony," by John Alden Carpenter, who seems, generally speaking, to be quite the most talented of the younger generation of American composers.

Mr. Carpenter is more than pleasantly remembered from the great pleasure he gave with his unusual suite, "Adventures in a Perambulator," which appeared on two different programmes of the Symphony Orchestra two years ago. In that music he betrayed uncommon skill as a musician, a very pretty sense of humor, and a gift for characterization in music which are decidedly unusual.

The symphony which is to be played the coming week had its first performance last spring at the Norfolk music revival. It is a work of serious purpose, of great difficulty from a technical point of view, and altogether promises to be one of the most important contributions to American music that has been made in many years. It is possible that Mr. Carpenter had a programme in mind when he wrote it, for on the title page is the motto, "Sermons in Stones," taken, of course, from the well-known speech of the duke in "As You Like It."

Another pleasant feature of this programme will be one of the all too rare appearances of that admirable artist, Mr. Emile Ferir, first viola of the orchestra. Mr. Ferir stands quite alone in this country, at any rate, as a master of his peculiarly appealing instrument, and he is one of the men who have done so much to make the Boston Symphony Orchestra famous. He will play two short pieces, a lied by d'Indy, and Gustav Strube's "Fantastic Dance," which was written by Mr. Strube for Mr. Ferir several years ago.

Other pieces on the programme will be Svensden's legende, "Zorahayda" and Goldmark's overture, "Sappho."

THE POPS

But three more pairs of Symphony concerts are to be given, and then the memorable season of 1917-1918, the 37th of the Symphony Orchestra, will be ended. Following immediately on the Symphony concerts will come a nine weeks' season of Pops. The Pops will begin Monday evening, May 6, and close Saturday evening, July 6. It is planned to revert to the original character that made the Pops, so to say, so popular for many years. In other words, soloists will not be employed, at least to any ex-tion which the next Liberty Loan faces—serious in the sense that the business world has been antagonized by legislative and administrative crudities and will not render the double service of production and contribution because its capacity for production and for corresponding profit has been materially reduced by lack of official vision. One of the most practical of American senators proposes a cure for the admitted defects of the tax system and the Administration turns its back on the proposal because it comes from a Republican. The Government takes over the railroads purely as a war measure and the director general of railroads, who happens also to be Secretary of the Treasury, disturbs the fundamentals of railway invest-

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT
PUBLISHED DAILY

METAL AND MINING

Bar silver in London is quoted at 45¼d; in New York, at 91⅝c.

Nipissing Mines, Ltd., produced in March silver valued at $308,000. Total shipments of bullion, including custom metal, were valued at $526,000. Silver produced in February was valued at $295,546, and total bullion shipments at $197,232. Bullion shipments in February were below the average owing to annual mill clean-up.

At the annual meeting of the Allouez Mining Company retiring directors were re-elected, with exception of Benjamin Joy, who is succeeded by Earnest B. Dane.

The Texas Pacific Coal Company, which discovered and developed the new as there should have been, to the west and in the suburbs there are only forty-five. Sir Christopher Wren made a comprehensive plan for rebuilding London after the great fire, but the citizens were in too great a hurry and recent attempts to rectify the great blunder of overcrowding have been both unsatisfactory and enormously costly. This story is everywhere repeated both

22D SYMPHONY

The feature of the 22d Symphony concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be the first performances in Boston of the First Symphony by John Alden Carpenter of Chicago, who is pleasantly remembered by his suite, "Adventures in a Perambulator," which was played by the Symphony Orchestra two years ago. The symphony had its first performance last spring at the Norfolk music festival. It is a work of serious purpose, of great difficulty from a technical point of view. It promises to be an important contribution to American music. It is possible that Mr. Carpenter had a program in his mind when he wrote it, for on the title page is the motto, "Sermons in Stones," taken from the well-known speech of the duke in "As You Like It."

Another pleasant feature of this program will be one of the all too rare appearances of Emile Ferir, first viola of the orchestra, one of the men who have done so much to make the Boston Symphony Orchestra famous. He will play two short pieces, a Lied by d'Indy and Gustav Strube's "Fantastic Dance," written by Mr. Strube for Mr. Ferir several years ago.

Other pieces on the program will be Svendsen's Legende, "Zorahayda," and Goldmark's overture, "Sappho."

THE PASSION MUSIC

The performance of Bach's Passion music in Symphony Hall Tuesday afternoon, March 26, will begin at 4 o'clock. At this first session the first part of the work will be given and will last between an hour and a half and an hour and three-quarters, so that the first session will be over at the very latest, counting all delays, by six o'clock. Then there will be an intermission until 8 o'clock, when the second part will be given. This lasts about an hour and a half, and the entire concert will be over by 9:30. Naturally, the same tickets will be used for both sessions. The soloists so far engaged are Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Lambert Murphy, tenor, and Reinald Werrenrath, bass. These singers have had much experience with Bach's music, the "Passion Music" in particular. The name of the bass will be announced later.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, AT 3.30
Pension Fund Concert
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERNST SCHMIDT, Conductor
Assisting Artists
SOPHIE BRASLAU CONTRALTO Met. Opera Co.
OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.
4t(A)

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Joseph Malkin, who shares the first desk of the 'cellos with Heinrich Warnke, will be the soloist at the Symphony concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play the concerto in D minor, by Edouard Lalo. The first number will be "Sakuntala," overture of Goldmark.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
ERNST SCHMIDT, Cond
GUIOMAR NOVAES, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
4t(A)
ap 10

THE POPS

Only three more pairs of Symphony concerts are to be given. Following immediately on the Symphony concerts will come a nine weeks' season of Pops. The Pops will begin Monday evening, May 6, and close Saturday evening, July 6. It is planned to revert to the original character that made the Pops so popular for many years. In other words, soloists will not be employed, at least to any extent. It seemed to be the general opinion of the patrons last year that they preferred straight programs of popular music to programs broken by singers. Plans are making which should result in the Pops being particularly attractive and interesting. Full announcement will be made shortly.

Herald

4/17

the F. M. C. A. work.

Arlington Woman's Club

Children's day will be observed at the next meeting of the Arlington Woman's Club in Robbins Memorial town hall on April 18 at 2:45 o'clock P. M., when Thornton Burgess will tell original stories to the children, who will be the guests of the club, and Mabel Greeley will sing songs especially adapted to them. The afternoon is in charge of the home committee, Mrs. Charles A. Alden, chairman.

The regular monthly luncheon of the Professional Women's Club will take place next Tuesday at 12:30 o'clock at the Copley-Plaza. Marie Dewing Faelten will preside in the absence of Mrs. Barbara Galpin, club president, who is still confined under home through illness. A musical program consisting of piano solos by Frank H. Luker, songs by Arthur Meyers, tenor, accompanied by Miss Elsie Luker, will be given. The guests of honor who have accepted invitations are: Col. H. R. Perry of Camp Devens Mme. Szumowska-Adamowska, who will speak on conditions in Poland and the Polish army; Mrs. C. A. Porter, acting chairman of the N. E. surgical dressings committee; Miss Edith Parkman, who has recently returned from France, and Miss St. John. Mrs. May Fiske Hoffman, chairman of the hospitality committee, will be assisted by Mrs. Elmer A. Stevens at this luncheon.

On Saturday evening, May 4, in the Copley-Plaza ballroom at 8 o'clock, a dance and entertainment will be given in honor of the enlisted men of the U. S. army and navy. The proceeds are for the surgical dressing fund.

Boston Teachers' Club

EXTRA—SYMPHONY HALL
SECOND and LAST PERFORMANCE
SUNDAY AFTERNOON FEB. 3, at 3:30
Mahler's Stupendous
Resurrection Symphony
"A Masterpiece by Bohemia's lamented Genius."
CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA OF 500
MAY PETERSON (Met.Op.Co.) SOPRANO
MERLE ALCOCK, CONTRALTO
DR. KARL MUCK, CONDUCTOR
TICKETS $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, at 3:30
Pension Fund Concert
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERNST SCHMIDT, Conductor
Assisting Artists
SOPHIE BRASLAU CONTRALTO Met. Opera Co.
OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2:30 Saturday Evening at 8. ERNST SCHMIDT, Conductor.
GUIOMAR NOVAES, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE

Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8.
ERNST SCHMIDT, Cond.
EMIL FERIR, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
ap 17
4t(A)

"The Great War and Its Fruits," and is open to members of the club and their guests, who may secure tickets at the club office.

On Wednesday, April 24, a special luncheon is to be given in honor of Miss Helen Holmes of Kingston, the president of the New England branch of the Woman's National Farm and Garden Association. Miss Holmes, who after many years of experience, is a practical and successful farmer, will speak on "Women's Work in Food Production." Mrs. William A. Copeland, secretary of the Farm and Garden Association, will also be a guest of honor and will answer questions regarding the work of the association. Miss Edith N. Burleigh, chairman of the community service committee, will preside. Tickets may be secured on application to the club office.

Club members are given the opportunity to buy Liberty bonds, and thereby have their subscriptions credited to the total sales of the club, through a special representative who is at the clubhouse daily from 12 to 2:30 o'clock to sell the bonds.

Business Women's Club

Tuesday evening at 7:45 o'clock, Charles T. Carruth, the well-known lecturer on art, is to give an illustrated talk at the Business Woman's Club on "A Story of Florence, as Told on Its Churches and Palaces."

While the members sew for the war classes in that school for radio telegraphic work, and is considering other fields that may be met by the use of the radio.

Placed on file.

EVENING CLASSES IN TELEGRAPHY AND RADIO OPERATION, BOSTON TRADE SCHOOL.

A communication was received from their edges. It is not lines which interest him, but planes—planes often put in with a single brush stroke. Indeed, so great is his knowledge of all the things he represents. This accuracy of brush work is the result of a lifelong habit of mechanical and tiring energy.

"Our two greatest American artists are

Tuesday, Wednesday

son's activities begin to broaden with ly, first because it is our fixed po ive all our attention to the early it

e purposes of modern merchandi

s fashionably correct now and fo

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, AT 3.30
Pension Fund Concert
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERNST SCHMIDT, Conductor
Assisting Artists
SOPHIE BRASLAU CONTRALTO Met. Opera Co.
OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.
4t(A)
Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
ERNST SCHMIDT, Cond
GUIOMAR NOVAES, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
ap 10
4t(A)

York. One simply considers them as artists. Yet here is one presumably responsible critic writing that Mr. Tarbell is "the very heart of Boston—there is so much snobbery and shuttlness in his painting," and that he "probably belongs to the Back Bay section," and "puts the family above the person."

"The astonishing thing is that a person whose business it is to know about American art and artists—who is paid a salary or space by a metropolitan newspaper for knowing such things—should not carry enough of a "Who's Who" in his head not to hazard an ignoramus's probably" as to what a man of Tarbell's national reputation is or is not; ignoring the easily ascertained truth that this artist is not in any way a product of the Back Bay (whether that would be for him or against him); that he fought his way to an American recognition, which came through Philadelphia and Cincinnati, not New York, before he was appreciated in his home his introduction to Hegel's "Philosophy of Mind," gives similar reasons for rendering the word "Geist" as mind and not spirit. A reading of Croce himself would go far to show that what is denoted more correctly as Croce's thoughts upon art and history. To the Italian philosopher, indeed, philosophy is nothing but of such a conception of history. The importance of such a conception becomes all the more striking to the light of Croce's views upon history,

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, AT 3.30
Pension Fund Concert
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERNST SCHMIDT, Conductor
Assisting Artists
SOPHIE BRASLAU CONTRALTO Met. Opera Co.
OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.
4t(A)
Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
ERNST SCHMIDT, Cond
GUIOMAR NOVAES, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
ap 10
4t(A)

COLONIAL—"The Rainbow" musical the new Klaw and Erlanger musical comedy production, has all the earmarks of a popular entertainer, the cast, itself is a powerful one, and music is snappy and tuneful. Nancy Lenny and Billy B. Vann could hardly be excelled, which is headed by Patricia Lenny and the settings and costumes are extremely beautiful.

which the author devotes one of the most illuminating chapters of his exposition. I recommend the reading and digesting respectfully the thorough reading of history of this chapter by the writer of a few grammar and high schools, everything for them, without assenting to everything, could profit by his vivid conception of history as the past acting in Croce says, an easily derived corollary

Says a glass of phosphate befo keeps illne

Physicians the world ove claiming this is of vastly more i liness, because the skin pores do blood, causing ill health, while bowels do.

Men and women are urged breakfast, a glass of hot water w phosphate in it, as a harmless m the stomach, liver, kidneys and digestible material, poisons, sou ing, sweetening and purifying th fore putting more food into the

Those who wake up with nasty taste or have a dull, achi acid stomach; others who are constipation, should obtain a qua phate at the drug store. This ficient to demonstrate the value

VICHY

To the genuine Vichy out the world and gua Government, has been a

Transcript 4/18

Opera Hous

OPERA AND CONCERTS

THE PROSPECTS FOR "THE GOLDEN COCKEREL"

Increasing Likelihood That the Metropolitan Company Will Undertake It in Boston Along with Mr. Gilbert's Ballet —Debussy and Audiences of 1918—Mme. Matzenauer as Notable Singer of Old Airs and Songs—A New Overture by Dr. Davison

DECISION as to a "special performance" in Boston by the Metropolitan Company of Rimsky-Korsakov's opera-pantomime, "The Golden Cockerel," still hangs fire, with the odds for the moment favoring such a matinée. If it is finally undertaken, it will fall on the afternoon of Friday, April 26, while with the Russian piece will be coupled Mr. Gilbert's applauded ballet, "The Dance in Place Congo," in agreeable compliment to the Bostonian composer and to the public interested in such progress and prowess. The management of the Metropolitan is now more inclined to the venture because the response of Boston to the opera and the singers, proposed for the week here, has so far been highly encouraging. Subscriptions to the whole series of eight performances, or to the half-series of four each, have been unexpectedly numerous, while the orders at hand by mail for single evenings or matinées are similarly promising. The inference is that Bostonians are keen for such opera as the Metropolitan Company—and only the Metropolitan Company—can afford them. The more, then, is Mr. Gatti, with Mr. Kahn behind him, on his mettle to maintain the prestige that has given his forces and his performances such rank and to clinch the good will of the public so responding to them.

Now an appreciable part of that public craves a hearing of "The Golden Cockerel" more than it desires aught else that the Metropolitan might bring hither; while it will also hear and see with pleasure Mr. Gilbert's ballet. It may not be a sufficiently large public to flood the box-office, but it is one that the Metropolitan should win and hold, if it is to establish itself in annual and profitable visit to Boston. It is also a public exactly akin with that in New York to which Mr. Gatti and Mr. Kahn annually address some production or revival of a novel opera that shall prove the capabilities and the standards of the Metropolitan in high and fine artistic accomplishment. Of such, by common consent, and of unique quality and pleasure besides, is "The Golden Cockerel" as it is now ripened in both the music and the miming on the Metropolitan stage. Moreover, as has often happened with these exercises in novel artistry for its own sake, the general public in New York has responded no less than the specialized. Communication between both in

ThSM(A) ap 4

SYMPHONY HALL

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, AT 3.30

Pension Fund Concert

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ERNST SCHMIDT, Conductor

Assisting Artists

SOPHIE BRASLAU CONTRALTO Met. Opera Co.

OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

WEM(A) ap 3

Transcript 4/14

It has been decided that the performance of Bach's Passion music in Symphony Hall on Tuesday afternoon, March 26, shall begin at 4 o'clock. At this first session the first part of the work will be given and will last between an hour and a half and an hour and three quarters, so that the first session will be over at the very latest, counting all delays, by 6 o'clock. Then there will be an intermission until 8 o'clock, when the second part will be given. This lasts about an hour and a half, and the entire concert will be over by 9:30. Naturally, the same tickets will be used for both sessions.

The soloists so far engaged are Florence Hinkle, soprano, Merle Alcock, contralto, Lambert Murphy, tenor, and Reinald Werrenrath, bass. All of these singers have had much experience with Bach music in general, and the "Passion Music" in particular. Another bass singer will be chosen later. The first full choral rehearsal in Symphony Hall will be held the coming week under Mr. Townsend. The chorus will number 400, divided into two groups of 200 each. The boys' choir will number 80, and the orchestra will number 74, divided into two orchestras each having 16 violins, six violas, six cellos, five basses, two flutes and two oboes. There will also be the organ and piano.

Sophie Braslau.

MAHLER'S SYMPHONY

Interest is keen in the second and last performance of Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony, which will be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 3, at 3:30. The number of mail orders from out of town is large, showing what an impression the orchestra and the chorus have made on the musical public of Boston and vicinity. Merle Alcock and May Peterson will again be the soloists.

Herald

PENSION FUND CONCERT

An unusually interesting programme with unusually interesting artists as soloists has been prepared for the second concert of the season in aid of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. The soloist will be Miss Sophie Braslau, the distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Mr. Gabrilowitsch, pianist, both of whom have generously given their services.

Miss Braslau has appeared in Boston several times both in concert and in opera and the beauty of her voice which is a true and genuine contralto—a rarity nowadays—has won for her many admirers. Moreover, Miss Braslau is a musician of very uncommon gifts and altogether she is one of the finest of the younger generation of singers that this country has produced. Her success is all the more notable in that her training and her career has been entirely in this country, Miss Braslau being a native of New York and having done all her study there.

As for Mr. Gabrilowitsch there is little to be said at this late date about his very fine art. He is a pianist of most unusual gifts and one who has grown steadily since the time he first appeared in America as a slip of a boy.

Miss Braslau will sing an aria and a group of three songs with piano. Her aria will be that favorite of all contraltos, "My heart at thy dear voice" from Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah." Her songs are unusual. The first will be Rachmaninoff's "Do Not Sing, Oh Maiden"; the second, Moussorgsky's "The Classicist" and the third an arrangement by Schalitt of the old Hebrew song, "Eili, Eili." Mr. Charles Albert Baker will be her accompanist.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch, urged by a number of his friends here in Boston, will play the two pieces with which he had such remarkable success with the orchestra just three years ago, Mozart's Concerto for piano and orchestra in D-minor and Weber's Concert-Piece for piano in F-minor. There is no pianist in the world that plays Mozart more finely than Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the brilliancy of his performance of Weber's piece is well remembered by all who heard him play it in 1915.

The orchestral numbers will be Berlioz's "Roman Carnival." Overture, Saint-Saens' "Dance Macabre" and Tschaikowsky's "Nut-Cracker" suite. The programme in its entirety is as follows:

Overture, "Roman Carnival" .....Berlioz
Concerto for piano and orchestra in D minor .....Mozart
Mr. Gabrilowitsch.
Aria, "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix," from "Samson et Dalila".....Saint-Saens
Miss Braslau.
Symphonic poem No. 3, "Danse Macabre," after a poem by Henri Cazalis, op. 40..
Saint-Saens
Songs with piano:
Do Not Sing, O Maiden.....Rachmaninoff
The Classicist .....Moussorgsky
Eili, Eili .....Schalitt
(According to the text of St. Matthew, "My God, my God! Why has Thou forsaken me?")
Miss Braslau.
Concertstuck for pianoforte in F minor, op. 79 .....Weber
Mr. Gabrilowitsch.
Suite for full orchestra, taken from the score of the ballet, "Nutcracker," op. 71a .....Tschaikowsky
Mr. Charles Albert Baker at the piano.

GALLI-CURCI

Amelita Galli-Curci continues to be the musical sensation of the year. She has been giving concerts throughout the country during the past six weeks, since she left Boston, with her usual success. Everywhere the houses were

Post 4/14

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, giving its twentieth pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Friday, April 5, and the evening of Saturday, April 6, will present Dvorák's "New World" symphony, Debussy's nocturne, "Nuages," and Charpentier's "Impressions of Italy."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra appears at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on the evening of Thursday, April 4, with Miss Alice Allen, pianist, assisting. The program comprises Mozart's symphony in E flat major, Chopin's second piano concerto in F minor, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon."

NEWS OF MUSIC

The Attack Upon Dr. Muck in New York Ends in Almost Comical Fiasco—More Light on His Swiss Citizenship—Mr. Kreisler and Privacy—Savonov in America—Mr. Gilbert's Ballet at Hand

As it was easy to foresee the loud but hollow outcry raised for three or four days past over Dr. Muck as the conductor of the concerts of the Symphony Orchestra in New York resulted in nothing but fresh evidence of the regard in which the four or five thousand subscribers to them hold him and of the support that they are prepared to give in a trying time alike to him and to Mr. Higginson. As a matter of fact, the hullaballoo was largely fomented by a few women who actually subscribe to the concerts and by a larger group of outsiders who are wholly uninterested in them. As the event proved, Dr. Muck and the orchestra have very seldom appeared in New York before a more numerous or a more eager audience, and have hardly ever been more heartily applauded. Nay: the applause twice included Mr. Higginson himself, when he left the seat reserved for him and when he returned to it. The Sun chronicles the occasion with signal effort to be fair and accurate; the account in The Tribune tallies in all essentials with it; and The Sun's story follows herewith:

> The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall last evening, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing in that part on the ground that he is a German subject and pro-German in sympathy. The question whether Dr. Muck actually is pro-German, as Mrs. Jay and her followers allege, or is a citizen of Switzerland, as he asserts, with no interests in Germany, still remains unsettled, but the concert last evening left no doubt of the fact that the anti-Muck campaign caused no falling off in attendance. All seats and standing room had been sold three-quarters of an hour before the concert began.
>
> Dr. Muck entered the hall at 8.15 o'clock through a double line of uniformed policemen. Not a single voice protested, and five minutes later the conductor was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers. To the casual observer it was instantly apparent that Mrs. Jay's prophecy of empty seats and boxes had been unfulfilled. Fewer than thirty seats were vacant and only three boxes, indicating that very few subscribers had taken Mrs. Jay's suggestion to remain away as a protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck. And against these few protestants (if their absence is to be taken as a protest) were the standees filling every foot of space the fire laws permit and a crowded outer lobby filled with more than two hundred persons insisting on their right to pay admissions.
>
> As individuals in the crowd outside clamored for the management in their eagerness to attend Dr. Muck turned from the applauding audience and lifted his baton. Instantly the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" floated into the vast auditorium. The audience rose as one man. After the playing of the anthem the loud applause was taken up again and long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.
>
> The programme comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde." The orchestra gave a splendid performance of the Brahms symphony, the master's third. Dr. Muck is in his own kingdom when he interprets the music of Brahms. Last evening his reading was significant for rare tonal clarity, a marvellous treatment of dynamics and beauty and depth of style. The andante especially gave a rare display in delicacy of nuance and fine phrasing. At the end of the whole performance the approval shown by the audience was very warm. Dr. Muck had the orchestra stand and share in it and again he himself received several recalls.

To this account The Times adds a copy of the official documents establishing Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship from 1881 onwards and the formal validation of the certificate by the Swiss Legation at Washington as recently as 1917. Then, the queer provinciality which made that newspaper so amusing in its "discovery" of Mme. Galli-Curci, besets it and it solemnly declares that the fate of the Symphony Orchestra rested largely upon the temper of New York toward it last evening. If New York was cold, it was to be disbanded; if New York was warm, it was to be continued. None the less, it is not difficult to believe that Boston, where the orchestra was founded, where it is still maintained and where it happens to give fifty concerts annually to a numerous and contented public, may have something to say in so momentous a decision. The fact is, if we are not mistaken, that there is every intention to continue it as usual next year, and with Dr. Muck as conductor, unless he himself should insist upon retirement.

Transcript 4/8

Opera Hous

OPERA AND CONCERTS

THE PROSPECTS FOR "THE GOLDEN COCKEREL"

Increasing Likelihood That the Metropolitan Company Will Undertake It in Boston Along with Mr. Gilbert's Ballet —Debussy and Audiences of 1918—Mme. Matzenauer as Notable Singer of Old Airs and Songs—A New Overture by Dr. Davison

DECISION as to a "special performance" in Boston by the Metropolitan Company of Rimsky-Korsakov's opera-pantomime, "The Golden Cockerel," still hangs fire, with the odds for the moment favoring such a matinée. If it is finally undertaken, it will fall on the afternoon of Friday, April 26, while with the Russian piece will be coupled Mr. Gilbert's applauded ballet, "The Dance in Place Congo," in agreeable compliment to the Bostonian composer and to the public interested in such progress and prowess. The management of the Metropolitan is now more inclined to the venture because the response of Boston to the opera and the singers, proposed for the week here, has so far been highly encouraging. Subscriptions to the whole series of eight performances, or to the half-series of four each, have been unexpectedly numerous, while the orders at hand by mail for single evenings or matinées are similarly promising. The inference is that Bostonians are keen for such opera as the Metropolitan Company—and only the Metropolitan Company—can afford them. The more, then, is Mr. Gatti, with Mr. Kahn behind him, on his mettle to maintain the prestige that has given his forces and his performances such rank and to clinch the good will of the public so responding to them.

Now an appreciable part of that public craves a hearing of "The Golden Cockerel" more than it desires aught else that the Metropolitan might bring hither; while it will also hear and see with pleasure Mr. Gilbert's ballet. It may not be a sufficiently large public to flood the box-office, but it is one that the Metropolitan should win and hold, if it is to establish itself in annual and profitable visit to Boston. It is also a public exactly akin with that in New York to which Mr. Gatti and Mr. Kahn annually address some production or revival of a novel opera that shall prove the capabilities and the standards of the Metropolitan in high and fine artistic accomplishment. Of such, by common consent, and of unique quality and pleasure besides, is "The Golden Cockerel" as it is now ripened in both the music and the miming on the Metropolitan stage. Moreover, as has often happened with these exercises in novel artistry for its own sake, the general public in New York has responded no less than the specialized. Communication between both in

ThSM(A) ap 4

SYMPHONY HALL

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, AT 3.30

Pension Fund Concert

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ERNST SCHMIDT, Conductor

Assisting Artists

SOPHIE BRASLAU CONTRALTO Met. Opera Co.

OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH

Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00.

WFM(A) ap 3

Transcript 4/8

It has been decided that the performance of Bach's Passion music in Symphony Hall on Tuesday afternoon, March 26, shall begin at 4 o'clock. At this first session the first part of the work will be given and will last between an hour and a half and an hour and three quarters, so that the first session will be over at the very latest, counting all delays, by 6 o'clock. Then there will be an intermission until 8 o'clock, when the second part will be given. This lasts about an hour and a half, and the entire concert will be over by 9:30. Naturally, the same tickets will be used for both sessions.

The soloists so far engaged are Florence Hinkle, soprano, Merle Alcock, contralto, Lambert Murphy, tenor, and Reinald Werrenrath, bass. All of these singers have had much experience with Bach music in general, and the "Passion Music" in particular. Another bass singer will be chosen later. The first full choral rehearsal in Symphony Hall will be held the coming week under Mr. Townsend. The chorus will number 400, divided into two groups of 200 each. The boys' choir will number 80, and the orchestra will number 74, divided into two orchestras each having 16 violins, six violas, six cellos, five basses, two flutes and two oboes. There will also be the organ and piano.

Sophie Braslau.

MAHLER'S SYMPHONY

Interest is keen in the second and last performance of Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony, which will be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 3, at 3:30. The number of mail orders from out of town is large showing what an impression the orchestra and the chorus have made on the musical public of Boston and vicinity. Merle Alcock and May Peterson will again be the soloists.

PENSION FUND CONCERT

An unusually interesting programme with unusually interesting artists as soloists has been prepared for the second concert of the season in aid of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. The soloists will be Miss Sophie Braslau, the distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Mr. Gabrilowitsch, pianist, both of whom have generously given their services.

Miss Braslau has appeared in Boston several times both in concert and in opera and the beauty of her voice which is a true and genuine contralto—a rarity nowadays—has won for her many admirers. Moreover, Miss Braslau is a musician of very uncommon gifts and altogether she is one of the finest of the younger generation of singers that this country has produced. Her success is all the more notable in that her training and her career has been entirely in this country, Miss Braslau being a native of New York and having done all her study there.

As for Mr. Gabrilowitsch there is little to be said at this late date about his very fine art. He is a pianist of most unusual gifts and one who has grown steadily since the time he first appeared in America as a slip of a boy.

Miss Braslau will sing an aria and a group of three songs with piano. Her aria will be that favorite of all contraltos, "My heart at thy dear voice" from Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah." Her songs are unusual. The first will be Rachmaninoff's "Do Not Sing, Oh Maiden"; the second, Moussorgsky's "The Classicist" and the third an arrangement by Schalitt of the old Hebrew song, "Eili, Eili." Mr. Charles Albert Baker will be her accompanist.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch, urged by a number of his friends here in Boston, will play the two pieces with which he had such remarkable success with the orchestra just three years ago, Mozart's Concerto for piano and orchestra in D-minor and Weber's Concert-Piece for piano in F-minor. There is no pianist in the world that plays Mozart more finely than Mr. Gabrilowitsch and the brilliancy of his performance of Weber's piece is well remembered by all who heard him play it in 1915.

The orchestral numbers will be Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture, Saint-Saens' "Dance Macabre" and Tschaikowsky's "Nut-Cracker" suite. The programme in its entirety is as follows:

Overture, "Roman Carnival" ..... Berlioz

Concerto for piano and orchestra in D minor ..... Mozart

Mr. Gabrilowitsch.

Aria, "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix," from "Samson et Dalila" ..... Saint-Saens

Miss Braslau.

Symphonic poem No. 3, "Danse Macabre," after a poem by Henri Cazalis, op. 40.. Saint-Saens

Songs with piano:

Do Not Sing, O Maiden ..... Rachmaninoff

The Classicist ..... Moussorgsky

Eili, Eili ..... Schalitt

(According to the text of St. Matthew, "My God, my God! Why has Thou forsaken me?")

Miss Braslau.

Concertstuck for pianoforte in F minor, op. 79 ..... Weber

Mr. Gabrilowitsch.

Suite for full orchestra, taken from the score of the ballet, "Nutcracker," op. 71a ..... Tschaikowsky

Mr. Charles Albert Baker at the piano.

GALLI-CURCI

Amelita Galli-Curci continues to be the musical sensation of the year. She has been giving concerts throughout the country during the past six weeks, since she left Boston, with her usual success. Everywhere the houses were

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, giving its twentieth pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Friday, April 5, and the evening of Saturday, April 6, will present Dvorák's "New World" symphony, Debussy's nocturne, "Nuages," and Charpentier's "Impressions of Italy."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra appears at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on the evening of Thursday, April 4, with Miss Alice Allen, pianist, assisting. The program comprises Mozart's symphony in E flat major, Chopin's second piano concerto in F minor, and Wallace's symphonic poem, "Villon."

NEWS OF MUSIC

The Attack Upon Dr. Muck in New York Ends in Almost Comical Fiasco—More Light on His Swiss Citizenship—Mr. Kreisler and Privacy—Savonov in America—Mr. Gilbert's Ballet at Hand

As it was easy to foresee the loud but hollow outcry raised for three or four days past over Dr. Muck as the conductor of the concerts of the Symphony Orchestra in New York resulted in nothing but fresh evidence of the regard in which the four or five thousand subscribers to them hold him and of the support that they are prepared to give in a trying time alike to him and to Mr. Higginson. As a matter of fact, the hullaballoo was largely fomented by a few women who actually subscribe to the concerts and by a larger group of outsiders who are wholly uninterested in them. As the event proved, Dr. Muck and the orchestra have very seldom appeared in New York before a more numerous or a more eager audience, and have hardly ever been more heartily applauded. Nay: the applause twice included Mr. Higginson himself, when he left the seat reserved for him and when he returned to it. The Sun chronicles the occasion with signal effort to be fair and accurate; the account in The Tribune tallies in all essentials with it; and The Sun's story follows herewith:

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall last evening, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing in that part on the ground that he is a German subject and pro-German in sympathy. The question whether Dr. Muck actually is pro-German, as Mrs. Jay and her followers allege, or is a citizen of Switzerland, as he asserts, with no interests in Germany, still remains unsettled, but the concert last evening left no doubt of the fact that the anti-Muck campaign caused no falling off in attendance. All seats and standing room had been sold three-quarters of an hour before the concert began.

Dr. Muck entered the hall at 8.15 o'clock through a double line of uniformed policemen. Not a single voice protested, and five minutes later the conductor was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers. To the casual observer it was instantly apparent that Mrs. Jay's prophecy of empty seats and boxes had been unfulfilled. Fewer than thirty seats were vacant and only three boxes, indicating that very few subscribers had taken Mrs. Jay's suggestion to remain away as a protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck. And against these few protestants (if their absence is to be taken as a protest) were the standees filling every foot of space the fire laws permit and a crowded outer lobby filled with more than two hundred persons insisting on their right to pay admissions.

As individuals in the crowd outside clamored for the management in their eagerness to attend Dr. Muck turned from the applauding audience and lifted his baton. Instantly the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" floated into the vast auditorium. The audience rose as one man. After the playing of the anthem the loud applause was taken up again and long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The programme comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde." The orchestra gave a splendid performance of the Brahms symphony, the master's third. Dr. Muck is in his own kingdom when he interprets the music of Brahms. Last evening his reading was significant for rare tonal clarity, a marvellous treatment of dynamics and beauty and depth of style. The andante especially gave a rare display in delicacy of nuance and fine phrasing. At the end of the whole performance the approval shown by the audience was very warm. Dr. Muck had the orchestra stand and share in it and again he himself received several recalls.

To this account The Times adds a copy of the official documents establishing Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship from 1881 onwards and the formal validation of the certificate by the Swiss Legation at Washington as recently as 1917. Then, the queer provinciality which made that newspaper so amusing in its "discovery" of Mme. Galli-Curci, besets it and it solemnly declares that the fate of the Symphony Orchestra rested largely upon the temper of New York toward it last evening. If New York was cold, it was to be disbanded; if New York was warm, it was to be continued. None the less, it is not difficult to believe that Boston, where the orchestra was founded, where it is still maintained and where it happens to give fifty concerts annually to a numerous and contented public, may have something to say in so momentous a decision. The fact is, if we are not mistaken, that there is every intention to continue it as usual next year, and with Dr. Muck as conductor, unless he himself should insist upon retirement.

December. Miss Cleveland went abro in June of last year to engage in war r lief work and was assigned as a nur to St Dunstan's Home for Blinded Soldie in London. William Sydney Bence Bosa quet was born in 1893. His father ha been common serjeant of London sin 1903.

NEW HONOR FOR MADAME MELBA

Distinguished Opera Singer Now a Dam Commander of Order of British Empire

A new honor has been bestowed upo Madame Melba, the opera singer, who ha been made a Dame Commander of th Order of the British Empire, as was an nounced in the Colonial Honor List pub lished today in London.

GEORGE ARLISS A SPEAKER

English Player, His Wife and Mrs. Fiske Guests of Honor at Reception at Mr. Charles H. Bond's Residence

At the residence of Mrs. Charles H Bond, 128 Commonwealth avenue, o Thursday afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. Georg Arliss and Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fisk were guests of honor at a reception give by the board of directors of the New Eng land Antivivisection Society. Edward H Clement, president of the Massachusett branch of the society, presided and was i the receiving line with Mrs. Bond, Mr Fiske, Mr. and Mrs. Arliss and the officer of the society. A musical entertainmen was given by Miss Lillia Snelling, mezzo soprano, and Miss H. Saunders, pianis Mr. Arliss, who is the national presiden of the Antivivisection Society, spoke o "Antivivisection." Mr. Clement also mad an address.

Engaged to a Tech '13 Man

Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Nichols of 3 Bowker street, Brookline, announce the en gagement of Mrs. Nichols's daughter, Mis Etta May Fowler, to William Allen Bryan son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Bryant o 61 Clark road, Brookline. Mr. Bryant is graduate of Technology, class of 1913.

Miss Torrey Still Critically Ill

From Millbury, it is announced that th condition of Miss Delia C. Torrey, ag ninety-two years, an aunt of former Pres dent William Howard Taft, is unchange Miss Torrey is critically ill at the Torr mansion on Elm street.

Engagement of College Interest

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Haddock of 5 West 123d street, New York, announce t engagement of their daughter, Miss Eth Haddock, to Lieutenant Guy E. Fuller Springfield, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fuller. Lieutenant Fuller was graduat from Dartmouth College in the class of ' and went back to be a member of the Da mouth class for army training. He ca from there to Boston, after enlisting in t Quartermaster's Department as assista to the depot quartermaster in Boston. date had been mentioned for the marria

Founded Wesleyan College in Nebrask

Rev. Charles F. Creighton, founder Nebraskan-Wesleyan College, a noted Met odist minister and former pastor of leadi churches in Cleveland, Buffalo and oth cities, died on Thursday in Columbus, O following a stroke of apoplexy on Monda A son, Lieutenant Colonel Samuel Creighton of the Medical Corps, Regul Army, survives him.

An Old-Time Telephone Employee

Edward Everett Lillie, who died at h home, 56 Charles street, Dorchester, Thursday, was one of the oldest employe of the telephone company in years of se vice, having entered the employ of Edw T. Holmes, manager of the Telephone D spatch Company in 1879. This company 1883 became a part of the present Ne England Telephone & Telegraph Compan Mr. Lillie was for fifteen years assista superintendent of the supply departmen Since May, 1908, he had been connect with the office of supervisor of supplie He was born at the North End of Bost on May 27, 1863.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Earnshaw o Brooline are at The Greenbrier at Whit Sulphur Springs, W. Va., where are als William R. Hedge and James Millar o Boston.

The negagement of Miss Gladys G. Hunt daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Hun of Quincy, to John H. Dialogue, Jr., o Portsmouth, N. H., has been announced.

VITTUM HEADS BOSTON PRESS CLU

Advertising Manager for Houghton & Dut ton Company Defeat

nals

pressure. Many serious errors have be made by inventors through their assum tion that because a model works, the fu your copy of FOLDER X

adly send it to you e 15c extra (prefer-
s) for "The Party
52-page book of ique party ideas pre-ell known authority, rrell.

Minutes
3/30

the two cities is close—as witnesses the present Bostonian eagerness to hear "The Prophet," the other notable artistic achievement of the year—and it seems valid expectation that "The Golden Cockerel" would fare as well, proportionately, here as it has at home.

As the End Leaves Debussy

The playing of Debussy's Nocturne, "Clouds," at the Symphony Concert of Saturday, in tribute to the dead composer, brought to mind at least one great regret. Gone is our period of hoping for another opera from him, or for another important piece of chamber music among the sonatas in various forms, whose writing his death interrupted. If there is any consolation, it lies in the fact that he had not composed anything momentous since the "Images" of 1909.

By the current status of music, Debussy the individual far overtops Debussy the "influence." Fame and appreciation have rapidly and steadily grown with the century. People once sceptical of what they called "the Debussy cult" and impatient of his style are fast recognizing the sincerity of the one, and fast discovering new beauties in the other. They had first to become accustomed to his distinctly mannered and deliberately imposed idiom, which in range, emotion, and procedure is and always will be a speech apart.

Once acclimated and adjusted to the new and strange surroundings, these people begin to look about them with an awakening enthusiasm, and a realization that their uncomplimentary remarks were misplaced. They had accused Debussy of being vague, haphazard and formless, of lacking that logical clarity, accounted the first virtue to be expected from a Frenchman. Then, they gradually find that Debussy is particularly French in just these respects. No Frenchman has taken a more definite stand, more clearly realized his aim, and kept to his point with more clean and scrupulous consistency. Debussy set his dreams in a narrow and rigidly imposed scope—hence, he never flounders, but knows precisely what he is doing. He will not admit orthodox form, but his own species of shape and mass, and unity can be felt. His voices move with utter freedom, but the ensemble is crystalline. These qualities and all his qualities were guided by an ultra-refined taste, a super-sense of fitness and measure. The doubters further accused Debussy of being repetitious. That fallacy arose from the fixed and limited style which he cut out for himself. But within those bounds is the greatest range of color. He was indeed a composer of endless variety, but since that variety lay in subtle and minute gradations, it was not immediately appreciated, and can only be perceived by the highly developed musical ear. Debussy's variety became apparent simultaneously with his genius of faultless workmanship, the superbly fresh and tingling newness of his ideas. Never did a composer so combine a marvellous spontaneity with artificial restrictions of his own choosing; never did a composer set out more definitely to be vague; never was a composer more various within stricter confines, or "formless" under a more punctilious formality of procedure.

Items and Announcements

At the Symphony Concerts of April 25 in Cambridge and of April 26 and 27 in Boston, Mr. Schmidt and the orchestra are to play, for the first times, a "Tragic Overture," written by Dr. Archibald T. Davison of the Division of Music at Harvard. On the same programme for Boston stands also Berlioz's "Fantastic Symphony," long unheard here and well deserving revival.

Before the season ends, Miss Raisa of the Chicago Opera Company purposes to repeat in Boston the concert of songs and operatic airs in which she has recently fared well in New York and Philadelphia. The probable date is Sunday afternoon, May 4, at the Opera House.

THE THEATRES

REDUCTION RATIO

14x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Symphony Concert

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

MISS NOVAES AND UNFAMILIAR PIECES

A Signal Pianist as Chopin Disclosed Her and She Disclosed Chopin—Dittersdorf Interestingly Unearthed—The Comparisons of Imitative Grieg and the Contrasts of Sturdy, Honest Smetana

BY token of the programme at the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon, by similar sign on two programmes to come, Mr. Schmidt is delving into the innermost recesses of the orchestral library and drawing from them pieces unheard for years. One such on Friday was Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, last played by the orchestra in the winter of 1897; another was Grieg's Suite for strings, "From Holberg's Time," still longer voiceless at the Symphony Concerts; while for next week Svendsen's "Legend of Zorahayda" has been similarly unearthed with Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony and Wolf's Italian Serenade in like resurrection for the week to come. When there are no novel pieces at hand unless some American composer like Mr. Carpenter next Friday or Dr. Davison on the Friday thereafter, is ready with a manuscript, how else in these days shall a conductor freshen his lists? Mr. Schmidt is by no means without grace as a programme-maker and already his hand is beginning to recall the like accomplishment in Mr. Fiedler. If no piece upon his list of yesterday, which also included Smetana's tone-poem of Bohemian river, "The Moldau" and Chopin's Concerto in E minor for Miss Novaes, was exactly impressive, the sum of it clearly pleased and held his audience. Once more, from parquet upward through the balconies, it was of normal numbers and quick with applause for both conductor and, when it had discovered her merit, pianist. The orchestra, in turn, answered well to the leader from its own ranks. Thus, by every present indication the concerts of Friday afternoons bid fair to go well until the end of the season.

Doubtless, one of that series of symphonies, noted in his time, that Dittersdorf wrote on various tales in Ovid—of Phaëton, of Artemis and Actaeon, of Midas as judge between the singing voices of Apollo and Pan—would have been more amusing (as the French use the word) than the plain symphony in C-major actually played? The naiveté of eighteenth century "tone-painting" has piquant quaintness to twentieth-century ears, and Ovidian symphonies are rare birds in any place and time. Moreover, if we are to believe some of the learned commentators who have scrutinized them Dittersdorf was capable of true tonal delineation in which the music as music and the suggestion of mood or scene went hand in hand. Unfortunate y none of these Ovidian pages lie in the library of Symphony Hall and none knows where to seek them. It was the symphony in C-major, if we were to have Dittersdorf at all, and so Mr. Schmidt played it.

Most of us tacitly infer that the last quarter of the eighteenth century listened only to the symphonic music of Mozart and Haydn, because we of the twentieth hear no other of that time. Yet as a matter of fact, it heard—and heard gladly—countless Symphonies, Suites, Serenades and Divertimenti from composers as dead and forgotten as those of the harpsichord pieces that Mr. Bauer once drew from yellowed manuscripts in library tombs. There were formulas for eighteenth-century music, even as in these days of ours, there are formulas for music in the manner of Strauss or Debussy; and many neatly and plentifully applied them. It is even doubtful whether the general average of musical composition was as high then as it is now. The recent [illegible] the relics of Dittersdorf suggest that he was well above the mean; yet it was easy to listen to his symphony yesterday as typical of the pieces to which Prince-Bishopsmith a fondness for the arts and Fermiers Généraux with a purse for them usually listened. Not that it was without interest and even individuality. Like his fellows, Dittersdorf knew the manifold voices to be drawn and interwoven among the string choir. His Allegro is sturdy, almost strident with them, while it runs with a hint of Händelian energy of progress. His slow movement is indeed far from Mozartean grace and tenderness, from Haydnish fancy and felicity, but the flowing variations are not dull to hear, even if the reflection would come that sometimes a figure was what our youth call a "life-saver" to these eighteenth-century composers. Give them so much as one and what inexhaustible play they make with it. From the Minuets the impression rose that Dittersdorf reached for the convenient stencil, and rubbed in a ready but still pleasantly formal pattern. As for the Finale, it had the running grace and lightness, if not always the instant and gleaming invention, that again is ear-mark and distinction to these eighteenth-century symphonies and that contemporary composers with all their artful suspensions and intricate fleetness, somehow miss. By token of this symphony in C major, Dittersdorf's Prince-Bishops, who were many, had reason to enjoy him.

—

Perhaps this music of ancient pattern and voice is quite as agreeable to hear in itself, though only a Dittersdorf write it, as modern imitation even from so eminent a hand as Grieg's. With plays of Holberg, some of which are still amusing to read, the Suite has nothing to do; he flourished in the Copenhagen of the eighteenth century; Grieg was minded, in the nineteenth, to write in the eighteenth-century manner; hence a fanciful, but somewhat misleading title. Grieg is skilful and imaginative with his string choir which he divides and doubles after the sophisticated fashion of his own time with curious outcome in suggestion of the music of Holberg's. The Norwegian sets the pattern of an ancient Prelude better than he designs contour and course of a pseudo-eighteenth-century air. His rigadoon at the end does not lack sprightly rhythms and lively play of the blended or contrasted violin and viola; his other dances suggest willed more than kindled imagination. Yet somehow until the gay rigadoon begins, the Suite seems from moment to moment to drop out of assumed character. Try as he may, Grieg cannot help being plaintive; and to be plaintive is not a vein that the eighteenth-century, a sturdy or a dry-polished time, much cultivated. As well imagine a gentleman of Versailles whining on his way to execution as the music of his day running to Grieg's murmurous moan. He must get to his rigadoon, which is the glorified folk-dance he loved, before he can quite stay within his ancient pattern and mood.

Wise, then, was Mr. Schmidt to follow these rather finicking pieces—as so much of Grieg's music seems—with Smetana's study measures in picture and pean of the great river of his beloved Bohemia. In these days, it is hard to conceive a simpler, franker music—from the tinkle and shimmer in which "The Moldau" as river and tone-poem begins its course, through the broadening stream of melody, past huntsmen and dancers, under softening, glamoring moonlight, across the tossing rapids, into the climacteric sweep of the end in mighty stream. "Old Hat" to be torn and trodden is simple, songful, transparent Smetana to our young lions who suspect Stravinsky of ageing; but somehow the honest earnestness and candor of mind and heart when he sets to music-making still conquer for him.

—

Yet the crown of a steadily interesting concert was Chopin's Concerto or, more truly, Miss Novaes's playing of it. Agreed that outside the slow movement, the piece is a thin-bodied, somewhat faded, gradually withering music in which the composer strives to fill and manipulate an uncongenial form. Agreed also that seldom has an "assisting artist" of Miss Novaes's established reputation been so coolly received at a Symphony Concert. Almost for nothing, so far as her present hearers were concerned and as appeared in the tepid and scattered applause ushering her upon the stage, had she been gaining rank as signal pianist, these two years and up and down "this broad land." Miss Novaes, with all the quaintness that her square-cut, singular little figure lends her, seems an exceedingly well poised young person. Not a hint in her demeanor or her playing reflected this chilliness; but she must have heard with inner and just elation the plaudits mounting and spreading at every pause and at the end once, twice and thrice recalling her triumphantly. It was her day for Cæsar's laconic words and amply she deserved her victory.

From end to end of the Concerto out of Miss Novaes's playing shone the radiance which is the pure lustre of Chopin's music. Light were the rhythms to which she sped the mazurka-like Finale, with sensitive pliancy and variation but never with distorting emphasis. Broad, full, clear, almost stately, always earnest, sounded from her hands the ample periods of the beginning. Steadily Miss Novaes diversified the body of her tone with equal sensibility of fancy and finger, yet always she was luminous with the music as one who played it out of clear comprehension, warm sympathy, and, occasionally, winging intuition. About it, in finely imaginative skill with pedal and touch, she wove that endless iridescence which is the coloring of Chopin's tones even when a Concerto cribs or strains them.

In particular Miss Novaes's playing of the Larghetto summed her distinctions. It came from her fingers in exceeding clearness of outline and course: the pervading melody hung glowing upon air and ear; about it she spun the diaphanous web of Chopin's harmonies; the answering declamatory measures she sounded with grave intensity; deep emotion rose, then fell to a gentle tenderness; as music in itself, as a poetry of tonal vision, the Larghetto so played, stirred the mind, touched the heart. Through Miss Novaes Chopin indeed spoke nobly. Through his music, as virtuoso in rare command and feeling with her instrument, as musician of fine intelligence, delicate sensibilities, euphonious ear and supple self-mastery, as woman of imagination who can feel and transmit the [illegible] of tones without hint of womanish [illegible] stood revealed.

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Mr. Carpenter's Symphony for the First Times — Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Miss Braslau for the Pension Fund of the Symphony Orchestra — "The Children's Crusade" from the Cecilia — Mr. de Gogorza and Miss Komenarski in Song Recitals—More Honor for Debussy

THE conspicuous item on the programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening is the Symphony in C major, written by Mr. John Alden Carpenter of Chicago, and to be played for the first times in the East outside the original performance at the music festival at Norfolk last June. The piece, free of form and divided into many sections, somewhat in the manner of the symphonic poems of Liszt, runs without pause for half an hour. It is written in a ultra-modern idiom, and the harmonic and instrumental detail lays incessant exaction upon the orchestra, with outcome in exceeding richness and variety of coloring, especially in the glowing progress of the Finale. At every turn the music is the fruit of the individual imagination and the thorough mastery of means that have already set Mr. Carpenter high among American composers. To the poetic content of the symphony he gives no more hint than the quoted lines from Shakspeare: "Sermons in stones and good in everything." For three weeks the orchestra has been working at the music; the composer will share in the final rehearsals, and there is every reason to expect revealing performance. As the programme now stands Mr. Carpenter's symphony will begin the concerts. Thereafter will follow Goldmark's warm-blooded and ornately colored overture, "Sapphe"; Svendsen's "legend" for orchestra of the Moorish Zorahayda, and two numbers for Mr. Ferir, first viola player of the orchestra and past master of his instrument. They are a Chanson by d'Indy—the first piece of his music to be heard at the Symphony Concerts since the war began—and a Fantastic Dance by Mr. Strube.

—

For the Pension Fund

The second of the two concerts that the men of the Symphony Orchestra annually undertake for the increase of their Pension Fund befalls on Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall with a programme in wide departure from precedent. No symphony, however well-liked, stands upon it, and fragments of the operas and the music-dramas of Wagner do not fill it. Instead, the orchestra, with Mr. Schmidt conducting, will be heard in three brightly rhythmed and brilliant-colored miscellaneous pieces; the overture of Berlioz, "Roman Carnival"; the tone-poem of Saint-Saëns "Danse Macabre"; and the long Suite of dances that Chaikovsky drew from his ballet, "The Nut-Cracker." A distinguished pianist high in public favor and a rising young singer will assist the band—Mr. Gabrilowitsch and Miss Braslau of the Metropolitan Opera House. He will play a Concerto by Mozart and the "Concert-Piece" by Weber—seldom heard pieces in which he has been already applauded in Boston. She, in the full flower of the young talent that has advanced her fast in opera house and concert-hall, will sing the familiar air of Delilah in Saint-Saëns's opera of Samson and the Philistine woman; the old Hebrew chant of "Eili, Eili," and songs by Musorgsky and Rakhmaninov.

CONCERT CALENDAR

Mr. Schmidt's Final Programmes—Mr. McCormack and Mme. Galli-Curci for the Last Times This Season

SUNDAY afternoon, April 21, in Symphony Hall, Mr. McCormack, the tenor, for his final concert of the year in Boston. An old air or two; classic and semi-classic songs; Irish folk-pieces and American ballads will as usual make his programme. As familiar will be the qualities of his voice and song and the satisfaction therein of his hearers.

Thursday evening, April 25, in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge, the eighth and last of the series of concerts by the Symphony Orchestra with Mr. Schmidt conducting and Mr. Thibaud for assisting violinist.

Friday afternoon, April 26, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-third of the afternoon concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Schmidt with Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony and a Tragic Overture by Dr. Davison for the chief items of the programme.

Saturday evening, April 27, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-third of the evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Schmidt with the two pieces just noted.

Sunday afternoon, April 28, in Symphony Hall, the final Sunday Concert of the season at which Mme. Galli-Curci will sing her usual array of old airs, operatic pieces, French and Italian songs and "bergerettes" of the eighteenth century in France. It were a late day to signal the rare distinctions of voice, the rare qualities of artistry that, whatever the limitations, have made her reigning favorite with the miscellaneous public of opera house and concert hall.

Sunday evening, April 28, in Symphony Hall, the second public concert of the year by the eager and eloquent chorus of the People's Choral Union. The chosen oratorio is Mendelssohn's "Elijah"; the solo singers, Mmes. Littlefield and Foote and Messrs. Gunster and Whipp; the conductor, Mr. Wodell; and the band, a contingent of the Symphony Orchestra.

Thursday evening, May 2, in Steinert Hall, a concert of operatic numbers by Mme. Lucia Hoagland, soprano, and Miss Celinia Fortini, mezzo-soprano.

Friday afternoon, May 3, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-fourth and final afternoon concert of the season by the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Schmidt, with Chaikovsky's third Suite—the Suite of the final Polacca—and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony dividing the programme.

Saturday evening, May 4, in Symphony Hall, the twenty-fourth and final evening concert of the season by the Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Schmidt, with the two numbers above noted.

and New Conductor of e European and the American Field of Ch

nteux

Arturo Toscanini

Henry Wood

Wi

before the beginning of the war he preferred to dwell at Dresden, and that fervent nationalistic spirits in Petrograd and Moscow then spoke bitterly of him as "Germanized."

Similar objection, in these fervent days of our own, might be raised against Mr. Mengelberg, for long the eminent conductor of the noted Amsterdam Orchestra and known by many a visit from London and Paris almost to Tiflis and Teheran. In the years before the war, no European conductor, except Mr. Nikisch, journeyed so widely and persistently as did he. From a concert at Amsterdam or The Hague, he might pass to another, as "guest conductor," in Copenhagen, to a third in Dantzic, to a fourth at Liège, to a fifth in London and so back to Holland again. The inevitable result was the cultivation of a few displayful "specialties," like the tone-poems of Strauss, a rough-and-ready handling of successive orchestras, and a zest for performances that were more effective in bold and ardent outline than in careful adjustment of detail. Among the past conductors of the Symphony Orchestra, the nearest analogue in many respects to Mr. Mengelberg is Mr. Paur. However Bostonian audiences may have received Mr. Paur in the nineties—some would say now "bore with him"—it is doubtful whether in these later days, they would be so complacent through fifty concerts a season toward Mr. Mengelberg. Yet he is known to cherish American ambitions; while, after his incessant journeys in Europe, the routine of the Symphony Orchestra might seem to him almost as relaxation.

Wood and Toscanini

Not so long ago in London, Sir Thomas Beecham likewise cast ambitious eyes toward America, though oftener upon opera houses than upon concert-halls. Then, however, Sir Thomas was struggling to make his way with the public of London as conductor, operatic manager, entrepreneur in general of the performance of music. Now, however, Manchester—mounting rival to London as seat of British interest, intelligence and taste in the arts—regards him as little less than saviour in exceed his competences as conductor. Moreover, in Boston and elsewhere, the Symphony Concerts have long been quite as much organized as is for their good.

On the other hand, it is within possibility that Sir Henry Wood could be persuaded to forsake London for a few years in Boston; while of available European conductors only he and Mr. Toscanini are of the tested ability and the established reputation that the Symphony Orchestra seems to demand. Sir Henry's years are still a little short of fifty; in mind, body, executive powers, capacity for work and vigor of ambition he is still in his prime. Outside a few excursions into the opera house in his earlier days, he has been through all his career a conductor of symphony and choral concerts. Through many vicissitudes he has developed the Queen's Hall Orchestra until it is without peer in England. He has conducted at festivals in the Provinces and at choral concerts in London in a fashion to make him worthy of the Boston Symphony Chorus, as it has proved itself to be, as it bids fair to continue. No conductor could be more catholic in his programmes—a high tradition of our Symphony Concerts—though he has clear and unashamed predilection for modern and ultra-modern music, for the innovators of Paris, Vienna, Petrograd and Moscow. In such music, from Wagner and Strauss, through Chaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakov, to Mahler and Skriabin, d'Indy and Ravel, he most excels; but he is eloquent, no less, with Beethoven and Brahms, with Schumann, Liszt, Franck—the "romanticists" generally. His audiences have been faithful and expansive; his men work readily and loyally for him; his diligence and ambition are tireless. To symphony concerts in London he has added concerts on Sunday afternoons, and the long series of Promenade Concerts in August, September and October that have opened the books of music of many degrees to a public to which they would otherwise be sealed. As the most distinguished conductor in Britain by title of long and full achievement, Sir Henry might readily pass to high place among conductors in America. Once, indeed, he visited it, when the Philharmonic Society summoned him to New York for two concerts as guest.

Yet with all this British and European reputation, Sir Henry would hardly bring to the Symphony Concests the prestige that would surely attend Mr. Toscanini. In his years at the Metropolitan, the Italian proved himself beyond question an operatic conductor of the first rank, while far and wide in America went his fame. He was in full command of his orchestra; he was master of the music before him or rather stored in his memory; in the hollow of his hand he held stage, pit, au-

The American Field

So much for the European field of choice. From the American, a summary but inevitable elimination quickly rejects the Hadleys, the Rothwells, the generally undistinguished abilities whose partisans fondly believe, or profess to believe, that nationality, through the sifting of a hundred concerts in a season, will somehow continue to hide mediocrity. A like inevitable but gentler elimination puts aside established conductors, like Mr. Damrosch, bound by every obligation and opportunity to his generous "sustainer," Mr. Flagler, and also Mr. Stock, seemingly and deservedly "fixture," as the phrase of sport goes, with the Chicago Orchestra. Mr. Stransky, in turn, were he not an "enemy alien," is, in many judgments, unthinkable as conductor of an orchestra of the first rank. There remains, then, only Mr. Stokowski, reputed to dream of ultimate ascent to the Boston Orchestra, warmly commended to it by not a few ardent spirits, yet by much agreeing report in letter and in honor bound to continue for some years in Philadelphia.

Of the younger conductors now working in America, Mr. Stokowski is unquestionably the best equipped, the fullest tested, to succeed to the Symphony Concerts. Surface shortcomings he has in a certain displayful attitude toward audiences, which he may easily outgrow; in a certain inclination toward social prestige—and, as broke out and liberated, among many other things, the boy's social emotions.

"Day after day, on his way to and from the Conservatory, he saw the street fighting that reigned, would rush into the narrow alleys between the houses when the cry of 'Cosaki, Cosaki'! rose, and the wild horsemen charged down the avenues, shooting and sabering indiscriminately all who came in their way, whether revolters who had been singing the Internationale, or innocent passersby. He saw the slaughter on the Admiralty Square, and on one occasion, when a Cossack charge went thundering down the street as he was hastening to the Conservatory with his roll of music, was thrust into a dry-goods shop in the nick of time, and had to remain there fourteen hours before it was safe to venture forth."

No psychologist has yet proved that such experiences affect the trend of a youngster's artistic activity, but it is difficult to escape the suspicion that a connection exists. Berlioz and Wagner are distinguished examples of artists who became "musical anarchs" after living for a space in the midst of political anarchy. At least it is a safe guess that one's emotions get thoroughly stirred when there is a band of Cossacks sabering people just around the corner, and that one becomes a little anarchic in soul when one is forced to leave Petrograd and later Russia itself because of the anti-Jewish pogroms of the "black hundred."

Spiritual turmoil, however, is temporarily put to sleep when one, having come to America, falls under the musical tutelage of such conservative persons as Dr. Percy Goetschius, Mr. R. Huntington Woodman and Mrs. Thomas Tapper. Ornstein heard little modern music in these years, even in a trip to Europe with Mrs. Tapper in 1915. It was in the spring of 1913 that he experienced his conversation, saw his vision, and "hit the trail" for musical "futurism." It came suddenly, in the middle of the night, as Ornstein has elsewhere described. It came in the form of a burning desire to play certain outlandish chords on the piano, developing them into what seemed to the musician a complete and well rounded composition. This "Funeral March of the Dwarfs" was later written down exactly as it had flashed before his mind, and many more pieces of the same kind came presently from the same mysterious source.

This "conversion" is the most interesting item in Ornstein's biography. One may question its utility to the world of music, but one hardly questions its genuineness. It may be assumed that Ornstein's new system is related to that

REDUCTION RATIO

12x

2.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Dvorak and Debussy on Mr. Schmidt's Programme—A Repetition of Bach's "Matthew-Passion"—Mr. Heifetz and Mr. Gabrilowitsch in Recitals—"The Redemption" Anew—The Italian Tenor, Ciccolini

As for the rest of the season, Mr. Schmidt, eager to do his task to the utmost, will conduct at the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. For them he has set on the programme Dvorak's familiar, transparent and melodious symphony, "From the New World," unabating favorite with nine-tenths of a given audience; the first of Debussy's Nocturnes, music that would translate into tones the motion and the illusion of passing clouds, to be played, for the first times in some years, in memory of the composer recently dead; and Charpentier's full-bodied and warmly colored Suite, "Impressions of Italy."

On Thursday evening, in Sanders Theatre at Harvard, again with Mr. Schmidt conductin[illegible] the Symphony Orchestra will [illegible] eries of concerts at Cam- [illegible] gramme traverses Mozart's [illegible] at major; Chopin's Con- [illegible] piano and orchestra; [illegible] Vallace's pictorial [illegible] m, "Villon," [illegible] vaga- [illegible] of [illegible] st, [illegible] t.

Tuesday afternoon and evening, March 26, in Symphony Hall, a performance in "two sessions" and in entirety of Bach's "Passion Music according to Matthew," with the orchestral accompaniment that the composer set down, or with Dr. Muck's loyal approximations. He will conduct; the Symphony Orchestra will provide the band; the chorus will be his own and Mr. Townsend's, already noted for its work in Beethoven's and Mahler's music; while among the solo singers will be Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock and Messrs. Murphy, Witherspoon and Werrenrath. By every token a unique occasion.

OLOISTS OF TH

phony Hall, Wednesday Afternoon: Alice Allen Pi

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

An important event in the season of music will be the performance in Symphony Hall next Tuesday, March 26, of Bach's "Matthew Passion." The management announces thus early that owing to the very large demand for tickets the performance will be repeated under exactly the same conditions and with the same soloists the following week, on Tuesday, April 2. For the vast majority of persons interested in music the performances next Wednesday and the following Tuesday will be their first opportunities to hear the "Matthew Passion" in its entirety, and it will be their first opportunities to hear it sung and played in practically the manner in which Bach intended.

The adult chorus will number about 400 voices. There will also be a choir of 80 voices from Trinity and Emmanuel churches and the Church of the Advent. For nearly two months past Stephen Townsend, the chorus-master, has been holding two rehearsals a week with many special rehearsals of smaller choruses. In all the choral concerts given this year C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has endeavored to secure soloists peculiarly well fitted for the work to be performed. For both of the performances of the "Passion" he has engaged Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Herbert Witherspoon, bass.

As the work is divided into two parts it has been decided to give both concerts in two sessions: The first will begin at 4 P. M., and will run about an hour and three-quarters. The second session, beginning at 8 o'clock, will run about an hour and a half. The intermission of at least two hours will give the audience ample time for dinner. It is understood that various hotels in the Back Bay are making special preparation to accommodate those who do not care to go home. At the concert on next Tuesday, and at the concert on Tuesday, April 2, one ticket will admit to both sessions.

WEEK-END CONCERTS

As to Concertos for Clarinet—"The Redemption" Well Sung and Well Applauded—The Uneven Ciccolini and a Promising Pianist

ONCE in a generation, and at the Symphony Concerts of Friday and Saturday last, an audience will listen with pleasure to a Concerto for clarinet. Except for an aged few, it will never have heard such a piece; hence its curiosity is mingled with a friendly interest in the first clarinetist and a certain civic pride in his notable adornment of the orchestra. The event is genial and agreeable and Mozart wrote correspondingly genial and agreeable music for a corresponding occasion. With such music, moreover, Mozart was never at a loss in abundant provision for the virtuoso and spirited invention for the ensemble. Under the incessant pressure or contract, obligation and livelihood, his compositions were ever as lively and sociable as they were fertile. To be sure, the utmost of the clarinet's range and shading, runs and shakes were quickly used up, and its fixity of tone is not of the most eloquent in a slow movement. But Mr. Sand outcountenanced such inherent deficiencies with point and dexterity, a true eighteenth-century balance and finesse. Withal, it is not the music for the habitual courtesy of every spring, or every other spring. Even the Concertos by the violinists and 'cellists of the orchestra might be more enjoyable if farther between. As for clarinet Concertos—Boston may be eagerly curious for another in the year 1950.

Gounod After Bach

An animated performance of Gounod's "Redemption" served for the evening of Easter Sunday in Symphony Hall. Not only were choral standards exactingly maintained, but the Händel and Haydn Society was fortunate in its six soloists. The voice of Mr. Lambert Murphy, the most distinguished of them, was suitably softened and religious; Miss Komenarski's had a more earthly charm; Mme. Hudson-Alexander was at least enjoyed and applauded; Mr. Cartwright gave a quiet and becoming interpretation of the part of Jesus, and Mr. Martin provided a solid and sustaining bass. But most important was the enthusiasm of the chorus and the audience, and the evident fondness of both for the music. To an outsider, attending the concert to scoff at the homely, commonplace, sentimental, Victorian religious music of Gounod, that enthusiasm came as a sort of reproach. There is certainly a genius, a greatness in such a far-reaching popular appeal. Indeed, the total enjoyment of "The Redemption" in Anglo-Saxon countries would measure to mountainous proportions, and in that light the composer is to be envied and esteemed. Only the most sincerely and devoutly felt music could gain the hearts of the "middle class" millions as "The Redemption" has done. You will meet many people who are snobbish about it. For music of Holy Week, they will protest their preference for Bach's Matthew-Passion of last Tuesday and next, more than often because that is the correct stand of the "musically educated." As a matter of fact, some of these people do not enjoy their Bach half so genuinely as the Händel and Haydn Society and its audience, frankly slighting Bach, enjoy their Gounod.

And yet, how can the puny theatricalities of Gounod stand for a single moment beside the fine exaltation of Bach's religious music? Only consider Gounod's orchestral episodes — the none too impressive "Creation," the "dress parade" march to Calvary, which is all of Cæsar and none of Christ, the devices of the earthquake and Pentecost. Gounod's narrative of the martyrdom of Jesus is characterless and empty beside Bach's poignant and indelibly engraved recitatives. "Unfold, ye portals everlasting" must be admitted as thrilling and uplifting, with its crowning trumpet calls at right and left. But Bach's music of the Passion, knowing no triumph, has incomparably finer scope in anguish and grief, in final sorrow and expectancy. Le

Spanish Dance .....Granados
Allegro Appassionata .....Saint-Saens

Bach's Passion Music

J. S. Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew" will be given in Symphony Hall next Tuesday, March 26, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a large chorus under the direction of Dr Muck. The management announces thus early that, owing to the very large demand for tickets, the performance will be repeated under exactly the same conditions and with the same soloists the following week, on Tuesday April 2. For the vast majority of persons interested in music in general, and choral music in particular, the performances next Wednesday and the following Tuesday will be their first opportunities to hear the St. Matthew Passion in its entirety, and it will be decidedly their first opportunities to hear it sung and played in practically the manner in which Bach intended. Certain changes have been made necessary by modern conditions, but Dr. Muck, who has spent a vast amount of time preparing the score, has elided practically all the modernisms found in the Franz version. The Muck version will follow closely the original, which was first performed in St. Thomas' Church, Leipsic, on Good Friday, 1729.

The chorus will be larger than either of those which sung with success in Beethoven's Ninth and Mahler's Second symphonies. The adult chorus will number about 400 voices, while to this will be added a choir of 80 voices drawn from Trinity and Emanuel churches and the Church of the Advent. For nearly two months past Stephen Townsend, the chorus master, has been holding two rehearsals a week, with many special rehearsals of smaller choruses, and there is no question that the chorus is well prepared for this exacting composition.

The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, the contralto who made such a deep impression at the performance of the Mahler Symphony; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Herbert Witherspoon, bass.

To listen to this music without a break would be too great a strain on any audience and, as the work is divid- into two parts, it has been decided to give both concerts in two sessions. The first session will begin at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and, with the delays that always occur, will run about an hour and three-quarters. Then will come an intermission until 8 o'clock when the second session will be given which will run about an hour and a half. There will, therefore, be an intermission of at least two hours which will give the audience ample time for dinner. One ticket will admit to both sessions.

A decided novelty in the nineteenth Symphony programme to be played next Friday afternoon, March 29, and Saturday evening, March 30, will be Mozart's Concerto in A-major for clarinet. Only once in the history of the orchestra has a clarinetist appeared as soloist and then in 1884. The Mozart Concerto will be played by Albert Sand, first clarinet of the orchestra. Not a small part of the fame of Boston's Symphony Orchestra is due to the beauty of its wood-wind section and the appearance of one of its principals as soloist will be welcomed by all.

The programme includes Cherubini's Overture, "The Abencerrages"; the Mozart Concerto; a suite of ballet music by Rameau which Dr. Muck played last season; and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony.

Post 3/22/

Transcript
mar 21

CONCERTS AND OPERA

A SEASON WAXING RATHER THAN WANING

The Return of Mr. Casals and the Coming of Miss Novaes—A Second Performance of "The Passion Music"—The Public and the Repertory for the Visit of the Metropolitan Company—Testing the Berkshire Quartet—Items and Incidents

BY exception the musical year in Boston is flowering late and now, when it should normally wane in interest and promise, it rather waxes. Not only is the town to hear next Tuesday what is likely to prove the best rounded and the most eloquent singing of Bach's "Matthew Passion Music" that it has ever known, but on Sunday also Miss Novaes comes to it for the first time in her young prime as pianist; while on Monday, Mr. Casals, as many believe the most remarkable musician who now draws bow, will venture, again for the first time in Boston, a concert of his own. It were a late day to sound his praises anew as the master-violoncellist above all his compeers. With the Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Bauer, with Miss Deyo, he has thrice and four times proved title to such distinction. It were almost as superfluous to recall also those qualities of mind and spirit, those habits of study and life, which have made him a man and a musician of keen intelligence, warm imagination, fine sensibilities, poised powers, whose mastery of technique and tone are but the means by which he communicates himself—and through himself his music and his instrument—to those that hear engrossed, stirred, illuded as by hardly another virtuoso of our time. To sit before Mr. Casals is not merely to listen to music in perfection but to receive clear impression of a personality like no other within our concert-halls. It is the custom to disparage the violoncello; but it is the wont of Mr. Casals to transfigure it with himself. For in that self lies the quality that differentiates his playing of the instrument from all other that our generation has heard. "It is not merely the exquisite quality of the tone with its almost infinite variety of colors," writes an amateur who has lately heard him, "but the spirit back of it that animates his every phrase. It seems like hearing the very creation of music from the void, as though the thing itself but came into being at the moment. This is not an art, much less a skill; it is pure force of a spirit.

Once before in Miss Novaes's earliest days in the United States, a scanty Bostonian audience heard her on the testing-ground of Steinert Hall. Since, she has ripened the qualities of which she then gave proof or promise until she sits high among the younger generation of pianists. By clear title she is of it in that she respects the limitations of her instrument, treats it in no wise like a pseudo-orchestra, yet draws from it full and supple range of delicate or sonorous tone. Her technical mastery is altogether unobtrusive, conquering exaction and intricacy yet never signalling them, capable equally of astute shadings and large emphases. And her command is a tone that can carve music upon air and ear clear, soft, cameo-like, that can rise no sparkle lightly bejewelled, that can less into glowing splendors. Her playing of pieces by Chopin has been plausibly likened in finesse to that of the departed Pachmann; yet she can spread and fill the larger canvases of Beethoven himself. For Miss Novaes is more than pianist of technique and tone, of contrasting finesse and force. She was born with the musical mind that understands and discriminates, and with the musical temperament that projects and transfigures what intelligence has discovered and imagination divined. Coming late to Boston in her Am progress, she comes the riper.

...wegian, French and Italian.

PASSION MUSIC

Few choral concerts have left such a deep impression as the performance of Bach's St. Matthew Passion, which was given in Symphony Hall last Tuesday afternoon and evening. Mr. Schmidt, assistant conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, who conducted on short notice, won the highest praise from all. The repetition of the Passion music will be given next Tuesday, April 2, and will employ the same forces as those used in the first concert. As at the first performance, the work will be given in two sessions, the first at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and the second at 8 o'clock in the evening.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

The twentieth Symphony program, for next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, with Ernst Schmidt as conductor, will present three works of unusual attractiveness. As a tribute to the memory of Claude Debussy, the opening number of the second part will be his nocturne, "Nuages." The first number will be Dvorak's symphony, "From the New World," while the closing number will be Gustave Charpentier's charming suite, "Impressions of Italy."

committee was assisted by Mrs. Emmons Whitcomb, Mrs. Roy Davis, Mrs. C. L. Speyers, Mrs. R. G. Page.

Arlington Woman's Club

"Fashion, Taste, Style and Art in Dress," was the subject of the lecture which Fred H. Daniels, director of drawing in the public schools of Newton, gave at the Thursday meeting. He illustrated his talk by crayon sketches in colored chalk, and by witty comments he gave much artistic and valuable advice. The afternoon was in charge of the home committee, Mrs. Charles A. Alden, chair-has recommended that local laws restric ing commercial fishing be suspended durin the war. The Bureau of Fisheries has bee active and has done admirable work i bringing the attention of the fishermen a well as the consumer to the value of fis as food, especially to the neglected fis such as the tilefish, grayfish, whiting, skat and goosefish of the Atlantic, the sablefis of the Pacific, the turbot of the Grea Lakes and the bowfish of the interior wa ters. The hatcheries of the Bureau hav yielded an enormous crop."

The upward trend of prices, ex-vessel, o from first hands, during the past two years is shown by the following tables:

	1916.	1917.
Fresh haddock, per lb	[illegible]c	3–16½
Large fresh cod, per lb	2½–13c	3–13½c
Small fresh cod, per lb	[illegible]c	2¾–13½c
Swordfish, per lb	11–20c	10½–37c
Shore salt mackerel, bbl	$14.25–19.25	$14.50–33.
N. S. salt mackerel, bbl	[illegible].00–25.00	$15.00–36.
Irish salt mackerel, bbl	$13.00–23.00	$21.00–30.
Large shore salt cod, qtl	$6.75–8.00	$7.75–11.0
Med. shore salt cod, qtl	$5.50–7.25	$7.00–10.0
Boneless cod, per lb	11–14c	13–19c
Salt hake, per qtl	$3.50–5.00	$5.00–7.50
N. S. large split herring, per bbl	$6.00–7.00	$7.00–12.5
N. S. medium large split herring, per bbl	$5.00–6.50	$6.00–9.00
Sardines, per case	$2.40–4.25	$4.00–7.00
Live lobsters, per crate	$16.00–75	[illegible]

Eighteen steam trawlers sels and 200 smaller fresh fish fleet during forty-five vessels
March and men, th app
o

is iridescent rather than radiant. In a few moments, however, the vision becomes attuned and one sees how consistent and well ordered many of the most violent combinations are. No artist, it may be said, is happier in the truthfulness of his exaggerations. None has more successfully achieved the incredible.

Motivating Old Glory has been the painter's graceful task in a series of four New York street scenes, enlivened with flags, the quartet appearing in the catalogue with the title "Breathes There a Man with Soul So Dead—" Hardly anyone else has ever played up so successfully with stains of wine color and orange to the intensity of the Red, White and Blue; though one has somewhere seen a silvery background used with at least equal artistry. The total result is a vinous gayety of tone that hardly comports with the actual light grayness that is so typical of sunlit days in New York. But this presumably is not meant to be realistic painting. It is doubtless decoration, and patriotic propaganda.

For a quite different kind of thrill follow Mr. MacKnight into the snow covered land of the recreant and disloyal —into the non-English section of lower Canada where he likes to study the color of cast shadows on the universal whiteness.

With a brilliantly effective outcome, too. It is literally true that everything comes out in the "French Canadian Wash." Into the reddest of red houses, past the most multi-colored of unmentionables strung on a clotheline, strides Louis, loyal at least to Yvonne. Elsewhere are the red little Canadian sleighs, just made and painted to be Dodge-MacKnighted.

Of Newfoundland, Spain, Mexico, Cape Cod are the other motives, some as startling as ever fell from this brush; others of a quiescent glory. Whoever else has so compellingly painted the flaming forth of "Huckleberry Bushes in Autumn?" Whoever else has so utterly removed all that is dun and wan out of "Dunes and Swamps"?

This year's display as a whole is one that may well inspire several new s to JOHN KEND

d worry," said Shakes- the author of his own g e fact is it has galled me wasn't like you, who kens to have them class have been heard of h German product, anyway, translators."
arch me, Walt, and if you "That's it," cried vords made in Germany coming valiantly to Ho where on my person, I'll always owe our ase it with blue vitriol, somebody else. A ma n't take any ether while pulls off an immortal s ng it. I don't mind then finds he didn't do it at t Adam was a Prussian, the whole thing was can have Ananias and some retiring molly-co they want 'em, but not ever heard of before. B satisfaction of knowing that she has dured all, suffered all, and yet is dragged back from the grave—to witness the final triumph of right. So mote it be.

A CENSOR FOR THE CENSORATE

[From the New York Herald]

As the result of the investigation conducted by a committee of the United States Senate, the Committee on Public Informatio has had to admit itself to be a committe of misinformation. Is it going to b necessary to establish a censorship ove the censorate?

WHAT WE SHOULD DO

[From the Kansas City Star]

The only safe way for America t proceed is on the assumption that th war is just beginning. We ought t plan exactly as though we were goin to fight Germany alone. We have n artillery in France and no airplanes Our expeditionary force has not reache numbers to constitute more than a mere reserve in such a battle as is now raging. We cannot, according to General Wood, expect to make our weight felt for another year. These facts must be met squarely. If they are appreciated by the American people there will be instant public demand for a broader foundation for our whole military structure, so that when it does come to completion it will be adequate to the task to which it will be applied.

An army of four or five million men ships to transport and maintain them an air fleet to give that Army supremacy overhead, cannon to give it a clear path across any terrain, machine guns in limitless number—these are the things America must set itself to if i is to meet what is ahead. America ha its warning in the guns of Hindenbur now roaring, in the British front fall ing back. It has it in the grave word of General Wood, who has seen an studied the situation. Will it regar that warning and act now before it i too late?

CALLING ON SLAVES

[From the Baltimore Star]

The fact that Austrians and Bulgarian are fighting on the western front ind cates that the Teuton man power must b waning.

A PRECIOUS HOUR

[From the New York Evening Post]

Philosophers, connoisseurs of huma nature, and those historians who ascrib the fall of Rome to a malarial mosqui will be heard to remark that no perma nent change in mankind's inevitab trend toward night-life can be accom plished by mere legislation. They wi point out that the shortening of daylig and the lengthening of illuminated hou have coincided almost exactly with th improvement of lighting and the growt of material prosperity. Daylight has al ways been devoted to work; artificia light to amusement. Hence, as soon a immediate pressure is removed, thes scientists would maintain, we shall sa back again into our old ways, late sup pers, theatres, and late rising. How ever that may be, for the present th new schedule will present us with a additional daylight hour, and, therefore for purposes of work, really with a entirely new resource in time. What t do with this added hour ought not to b hard to discover, under present interna tional circumstances. What not to d with it might be more difficult to determine. For one thing, a firm resolution not to talk nonsense about matters which we don't understand, such as military tactics in France and the Administration's war measures, ought to b among the first adopted.

THE VERNAL PERIL THREATENS

[From the Springfield Union] is to sing songs in English, Russian,

he Athlan

The Reading Public, at the Business Women's Club, No. 144 Bowdoin street, Tuesday evening at 7:45 o'clock.

Wednesday evening Miss N. J. Cox and Mrs. Ethelyn J. Morris have ample work scheduled for the war relief labors, from 7 to 9 o'clock.

The bowling team, under the leadership of Mrs. Gertrude S. Cole, is eager to recruit its members to greater strength, with a view of having some interesting matches on Mondays, at 6:30.

John Orth is to present his delightful account of his acquaintance with Liszt while studying under him at Weimar, with illustrations on the

MONDAY.

Brockton Women's Club—Federation Day, Pythian Temple, 2:30 p. m., address, Mrs. Herbert L. Gurney; musical program.

Woman's Committee, National Council Defense—Meeting, Lower Auditorium, State House, 2:30 p. m., Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer, presiding.

Brightelmstone Club—Meeting, 2:30, Clubhouse, Mrs. Samuel W. McCall, Journal

8/13/17

wspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

m WORLD
dress: New York City
FEB 13 1918

WELCOME FOR DR. MUCK HELD UP IN SPRINGFIELD

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 12.—A majority of the Council Committee in Charge of City Property is opposed to renting the Municipal Auditorium for the scheduled appearance this month of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, and is seeking an expression of public opinion. Last year's board refused the use of the hall to Fritz Kreisler.

m AMERICAN
ress: New York City.
e FEB 1 1918

New Beauties Disclosed by Boston Orchestra

LAST night the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its fourth evening concert in Carnegie Hall. The programme was composed of only two numbers, yet these were of such quality and interest that Dr. Muck deserves a special compliment for his choice. The selections were Mozart's Symphony in G minor and orchestral extracts from the Berlioz dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet." There was no soloist, but the evening lacked nothing on that account.

It seems almost impossible to discover new delights in a composition written 130 years ago, but Dr. Muck disclosed beauties in the Mozart number that won round after round of grateful applause. His method of interpretation was faultless. His reading was beautiful, convincing and marked by that euphony and balance of chordal harmony which one invariably expects and always receives from the Massachusetts musicians.

The performance of the closely interwoven minuet movement, with its elaborate counterpoint, was noteworthy for the manner in which he indicated and controlled the interweaving melodies. The musicians stood to acknowledge the applause which followed.

Notable and of a different character was the orchestra's exposition of the Berlioz idioms. The first extract, "Queen Mab," was read with a grace and delicacy that easily persuaded the auditors they were listening to fairy music. "The Garden Scene" was superbly dramatic and marked by modulations of tempo and emphasis so subtly managed that they never obtruded themselves. "The Grand Fete at Capulet's" was a riot of harmony in which were presented such variations of orchestral color as few bands can compass.

Altogether, it was an occasion that reflected credit on the conductor and his men, as well as on the taste of the big audience, which responded so spontaneously and sincerely.

m POST
lress New York City
e FEB 1 1918

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"As beautifully as Mozart we can no longer compose, but what we can endeavor to do is this: we can try to write in a style as pure as his." This remark by Brahms was called to mind by last night's performance in Carnegie Hall of a symphony by Mozart (in C minor) by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a performance as beautiful as the music itself. What Brahms did not dwell on, however, is that from the emotional point of view Mozart's symphonic music leaves us cold. We may enjoy it intellectually and applaud it loudly, as last night's audience did, but it does not appeal to our feelings as the symphonies of Beethoven, Schubert, Tchaikovsky, and Dvorák do. How much more musical material there is, too, in these later symphonies than in Mozart's. Style is a nice thing to have around—think of Verdi's "Falstaff"—yet how infinitely more stirring is his "Aïda," which has less style but more melody and emotion.

Dr. Muck, on the whole, favors intellectual music more than the emotional kinds. The rest of his programme last night was given over to excerpts from Berlioz's "Roméo et Juliette," which, in its own way, is charming, yet how unemotional compared with Gounod's opera!

m REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.
dress
e FEB 1918

PATRIOTS PROTEST

WANT MUCK BARRED

SOME USE HEATED WORDS

AT ENEMY ALIEN MUSIC

H. H. Bowman, Frederick Harris and Others Think Property Board Should Say "No" To-night—A. W. Damon Takes Opposite View

A majority of Springfield citizens who could be reached by telephone last night were in favor of forbidding the use of the Auditorium to the Boston symphony orchestra, with Karl Muck as leader, for a concert on the 27th. The general idea seemed to be that it would be unpatriotic to let a German citizen have the use of an American public building. Others thought it unwise and hysterical to let prejudice interfere with music, something they consider entirely disconnected with war. A good many refused to take sides.

Chairman E. F. Leonard said last night that the city property committee would make a final decision to-night, and also said that Springfield was keenly interested in the Muck question, judging from the large number of telephone messages and visits made him during the day.

Bankers Against Muck

"I assume that until proved to the contrary, Muck is a German subject. As such he should not be allowed to conduct the orchestra in the Auditorium," said Frederick Harris of the Third national bank.

"Alien enemies should be kept out of the Auditorium," said Henry H. Bowman of the Springfield national bank. "Music by enemy aliens should be avoided during the war. Springfield is intensely patriotic. An American orchestra leader in Berlin would be kicked out or shot. I think Springfield sentiment is pretty unanimous against having Muck in the Auditorium."

"Dr Muck is or was a pro-German and those whose interests are not wholly American should be kept out of the public eye during the war," thinks Rev J Burford Parry. "I don't presume that Muck would be allowed in London, Liverpool or Manchester. Sousa wouldn't be allowed to lead a band in Berlin."

Rev Neil McPherson had nothing to say, but didn't have much sympathy for Muck.

(Continued From First Page)

Labor Man "Doesn't Give a Rap"

Richard A. Hennessey, prominent in the central labor union, said he didn't give a rap what the property committee decided to do about letting Muck use the Auditorium.

Arthur H. Turner, a prominent musician, was very much opposed to letting Muck and the alien enemies come to Springfield. He is in favor of having American conductors and American musicians take the place of the foreigners. The fact that 40 members of the Boston symphony orchestra were kept out of Camp Devens was enough to convince him that they should not come to Springfield. It is his opinion that the musicians of Springfield are greatly opposed to having Muck appear, and that they would not attend.

These Defend Dr Muck

President William Allen Neilson of Smith college, in a recent address here, pooh-poohed the brand of patriotism that would put German musicians out of business. "We can't lick the Germans by stopping their music," he said.

A. W. Damon, president of the Springfield Fire and Marine insurance company, can see no reason why the Auditorium shouldn't be used by Muck and his orchestra. "I'm as anti-German as anyone," he said, "but I think antagonism should not extend to music. Muck has made a tenable defense which has been generally accepted. I've never heard of his expressing himself as pro-German. The whole question of antagonizing German musicians is superstitious. Music can stand on its own merits. We should consider the effect of such opposition to our loyal German citizens, most of whom are democratic and antimilitarists. We've got to live with them after the war in peace and amity, and it's not good policy or good sense to antagonize them so unjustly. I wouldn't hesitate to attend a concert led by Muck."

m EVENING JOURNAL
dress: New York.
te

America's Greatest

FIVE SYMPHONIC CONCERTS OVER THE WEEK-END

"Stevensoniana," a New Suite by an American, Brought Forward by Walter Damrosch.

There were five orchestral concerts over the week-end, three of them morning, afternoon and night on Saturday and the other two yesterday afternoon. Large audiences attended all of them—there are always large audiences, for special or merely general reasons, at orchestral concerts. And yet there was very little of the quality of the significant to stir one amid the performance of all this music, unless the number who listened itself constituted significance.

Perhaps the nearest approach to the memorable—which is the effect of actual significance in the matter or in the manner of musical performance—was to be sensed at the concert of the Boston Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The matter was Haydn and the manner that of Dr. Muck, and what made for the quality of the significance was that both seemed to be the same thing. Concertgoers, led on by orchestral conductors, have fallen into a state of mind where Haydn is invariably denominated "Papa" and patronized accordingly. His minuets are teetered out so as to produce an irritatingly pat-on-the-back kind of laugh, his slow movements skeletonized and kicked about by pink satin slippers and his rondos made to sound like the bits of colored glass in a kaleidoscope look. Small wonder people smile humoredly at Haydn.

Even the newspaper reviewers—some of them—get the habit, but now and then startled, by an extraordinary performance, into considering the special work of Haydn thus played to sound quite "modern." The same experience leads to the same result with Mozart or Bach or any of the other towering figures of the eighteenth century which we are prone to view as the romantics pictured them in Sevres or Dresden, rather than through the realism of an actual perspective such as that created by Mozart's letters, or the last will and testament of Johann Sebastian, or even the multitudinous comment of Gretry upon his era. It is forgotten that it was the eighteenth century that gave Beethoven birth, even if it was the nineteenth in which he closed his eyes.

NEW YORK HERALD
s New York City
FEB 1 7 1918

BOSTON ORCHESTRA REFUSES TO PLAY WITHOUT ALIENS

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Saturday.—Word was received here to-day from the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that rather than lower the standard of the orchestra's performance, as would be necessary were its concerts here to be given without the thirty German and Austro-Hungarian members who have been barred from the Auditorium, the concert has been cancelled.

Orchestra Heard in Concert Here, Giving Finished Performance.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was heard yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Without the aid of a soloist the interest of the audience was kept at high tension. The principal orchestral number was Haydn's "Surprise" symphony. But it was in Tschaikowsky's Suite for Strings that the perfection of the ensemble was best shown. The string section of the orchestra is marvellous. The only remaining number was Goldmark's "Sakuntala" overture.

SUN
New York City.

shading were creditable.

Boston Symphony Heard.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its fourth matinee yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. The programme was composed of the Haydn Symphony in G major, No. 6 in the Breitkopf and Haertel catalogue (the one known as the "Surprise") Tschaikowsky's serenade in C major for strings and Goldmark's "Sappho" overture. The audience was large and gave abundant evidence of its pleasure.

SUN
: New York City.

BOSTON SYMPHONY WON'T PLAY

Concert Given Up Because Alien Musicians Are Barred.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 16.—Word was received here to-day from the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that rather than lower the standard of the orchestra's performances, as would be necessary were the scheduled concert to be given here without the thirty German and Austro-Hungarian members who have been barred from the Auditorium, the concert has been cancelled.

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City

Springfield Denies Hall To Boston Symphony

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 15.—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to state what course would be taken relative to the scheduled concert of the orchestra in view of the conditions attached by the City Property Board to its use of the Auditorium.

The board voted unanimously last night not to allow the use of the Auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion." It is understood the orchestra includes twenty-two Germans and eight Austrians.

The board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck is a Swiss, although he was born in Germany, and to allow him to appear.

n TRIBUNE
dress: New York City
FEB

Dr. Muck's men at Carnegie Hall in the afternoon played Haydn's "Surprise" symphony as they had played Mozart's in G minor two days before, which is to say with perfect balance and infinite finesse. The lovely, Tschaikowsky "Serenade for String Orchestra" was a little less flexible and graceful than one could have expected after hearing the "Queen Mab" movement of the earlier recital, but the orchestra won its listeners back with the much liked "Sakuntala" overture of Goldmark, which closed the programme.

WORLD
ess: New York City
FE 15 18

SYMPHONY ENTHUSES.

Fourth Evening Concert Heartily Received at Carnegie Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its fourth evening concert in New York last night before an enthusiastic audience at Carnegie Hall.

The programme comprised Mozart's G Minor Symphony and three orchestral pieces from the dramatic symphony of "Romeo and Juliet" by Berlioz.

The programme was played with fine tonal beauty and with feeling and finish.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

FEB 15 1918

OPERAS and CONCERTS

Boston Orchestra Plays at Its Best; "Thais" and "Faust" by Rival Co.s

BY SYLVESTER RAWLING

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra at its fourth evening concert of the season in Carnegie Hall last night dispensed with a soloist. Moreover, only two numbers graced its programme. They were Mozart's second symphony in G minor and three orchestral pieces from Berlioz's dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet." Neither work is hackneyed, and each got such eloquent proclamation by this famous band of musicians that the crowded audience of the elite of New York's music lovers was held spellbound from the first to the last bar. If it had not been my privilege to say in this column many times in the last two decades that this orchestra is unrivalled throughout the world it must have been said now. Such fine balance of the choirs, such exquisite daintiness in the strings, such splendid wholeness of tonality as we were privileged to hear last night may not be forgotten easily. All honor to Dr. Karl Muck, who conducted, but honor, too, to a galaxy of previous conductors, especially to Mr. Gericke, who brought this orchestra to its high state of perfection.

After the third and last movements of the Mozart work and after the "Queen Mab" of the Berlioz excerpts, the whole orchestra was forced to stand in acknowledgment of the applause. At the end there was another demonstration.

EVENING SUN

New York City

Music

The Boston Symphony.

The short and unexceptional programme which Dr. Muck had chosen to be played by his Boston orchestra at its fourth evening concert gave a pleasure to its Carnegie Hall audience last night which has hardly been equalled by any of this year's symphonic music. Such playing comes to New York all too rarely, coming even when it does two blessed times a month.

The simplicity and familiarity of the selections were no possible hindrance in such a case. These were the Mozart C minor symphony and the accustomed trio of orchestral excerpts from the Berlioz "Romeo et Juliette" symphony. Their challenge, which certainly could not lie in any novelty or extraordinary largeness to the works themselves, was nevertheless one which kept the whole hall gratefully keen to listen and applaud. The orchestra had often to rise and bow its thanks in mass formation.

It is difficult to imagine the Mozart played with a more radiant care or more exquisite result. The phrasing of it flirted with, if it did not permanently wed, perfection; and the grace and sure balance with which its gentle melodies were exploited seemed to lift the whole of the first violin section into sublimated, Heifetz realms. To all of it there was a Gobelin beauty which speaks for skilled and delicate fingers at the weaving.

The "Queen Mab" of the Berlioz suite was, too, immense with lightness fancy, thistledown madness, forest fears and follies. The garden scene, in turn, beginning with the "Tristan" languor of a shimmering summer night, spoke with the eloquence of the Bard himself, almost word for note and note for word, while all Verona—and, thanks be to Gounod—crowded whispered, danced, wrangled and made love at the fine fete chez Capulet."

SUN

New York City.

FEB 15 1918

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD IN CONCERT

Symphony Selections From Mozart and Berlioz Presented in Carnegie Hall.

The programme of the fourth evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night was simplicity itself. It presented Mozart's C minor symphony, one of the last great trio, and the customary three orchestral excerpts from Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette" symphony. It looked on the printed page like a programme of comparatively small interest, but the large audience appeared to regard it as of absorbing power.

The reason for this result was not difficult to find. For illustration, take the symphony. There was not a single instrumental phrase in its entire score that did not receive its proper value, no more and no less. Not one fragment of Mozart's suave melody was forced into undue prominence, and not one was in the least obscured. The performance was a beautiful exemplification of the mathematical axiom that the whole is equal to the sum of all its parts.

Such a performance betokens a most affectionate care on the part of the conductor in the preparation and a sympathetic response on the part of every man in the orchestra. The Boston Symphony Orchestra persists in giving performances of this kind and exacting from local music lovers admiration of the warmest sort. There has been much excited talk about what might be the fate of this organization before the war ended. But so long as it continues to utter such messages of beauty it is likely to endure.

POST

New York City

FEB 15 1918

RESTRICTIONS ON ORCHESTRA.

Boston Symphony's Enemy Aliens Cannot Play in Springfield, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., February 15 (by A. P.).—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to state what course would be taken relative to the scheduled concert of the orchestra, in view of the conditions attached by the City Property Board to its use of the Auditorium. The Board voted unanimously last night not to allow the use of the Auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion." It is understood the orchestra includes twenty-two Germans and eight Austrians. The Board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck is a Swiss and to allow him to appear.

BOSTON, February 15 (by A. P.).—In connection with the barring of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Washington some time ago, because its membership included a number of enemy aliens, a representative of the orchestra, in a statement recently, said that the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, was a Swiss citizen. Although Dr. Muck was born in Germany, the statement said, his parents early removed to Switzerland, and his father became a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck became of age, it was stated, he took out Swiss citizenship papers for himself. The Swiss legation at Washington has declined to make any comments as to Dr. Muck's status.

EVENING JOURNAL

New York.

DR. MUCK PLAYS A MOZART SYMPHONY

Boston Orchestra Gives First of Fourth Pair of Concerts in Carnegie Hall.

Dr. Karl Muck is perhaps never more interesting as a conductor than when he plays Mozart. The intriguing wonder, accordingly, is that he does not dip into the Mozartean possibilities oftener. There are always the three symphonies struck off in the single Summer of 1788—an incomparable incandescence of genius—and one or another of them flows with ingratiating ebullience from the Boston Symphony band when Dr. Muck directs it. But there is more Mozart one does not often hear played and Dr. Muck might do well, in these times of paucity of new scores, to bend his talents to searching it out and revealing it. That, however, would be another story, and one would be quite ungrateful not to accept graciously and thankfully enough what is actually offered.

For the first of the fourth pair of concerts of the Boston Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening, Dr. Muck played the G minor symphony, the second of the wondrous triad. Given the variety, the forcefulness, the veritable surge with which Dr. Muck let the music speak, Mozart sounded as rich and full-bodied and as profound as much of Beethoven and altogether as modern as of all time. The symphony was clearly enunciated, but never touched with the academic; it was thoughtfully revealed in detail of nuance, but never over-elaborated. The orchestra played it with an exquisite fidelity to Dr. Muck's intent, and was called upon to rise in responce to applause after the andante and at the close.

Following Mozart, Dr. Muck played three portions of Berlioz's symphony, "Romeo et Juliette"—the "Queen Mab" scherzo, the "Garden Scene" adagio and the "Grand Fete at Capulet's," the symphony's third movement. Dr. Muck does much to justify those who accord Berlioz a high place as an inventive genius, and the performance of these symphonic excerps continued this justificatoin.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

New York City

FEB 15 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS AT CARNEGIE

Dr. Karl Muck Gives Rare Readings of Mozart Work and Three Berlioz Pieces.

The program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night was shorter than ushal, including only the Mozart G minor symphony and three Berlioz pieces from "Romeo and Juliet." But Dr. Karl Muck's playing of the symphony alone was enough of a musical treat for it was presented with rare beauty. It was a polished performance which brought so much applause that Dr. Muck smiled for the first time in years.

The "Queen Nab," the only one of the Berlioz pieces which merits the distinctive playing given them by the Boston orchestra, was delicately done with great care for detail. The actual work of the players themselves was in many ways remarkable.

Monitor Oct 27, 1917

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, appears in recital in Jordan Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 30, with Harry Spier as his accompanist. He will present the following program:

"L'agnelletta," Sari; "Deh, a me non v'ascordete," Buononcini; "Che fiero costume," Legranzi; "Du bist die Ruh'," "Der Doppelgänger," Schubert; "An den Sonnenschein," Schumann; "Liebesglück," Wolf; "Pauvre martyr obscur," Pandilhe; "Le manoir de Rosemonde," Duparc; "Chanson," Taconet; "Marins d'Islande," Fourdrain; "Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes," Crist; "A Song of France," Treharne; "The Nightingale and I," Engel; "Thus Wisdom Sings," Horsman; "A Home" and "Arab Love Song," Ferrari.

Monitor

EVENING MAIL

New York City

FEB 15 1918

YESTERDAY'S MUSIC.

WHILE other conductors search desperately for new numbers to lend interest to their programmes, Dr. Karl Muck continues on his placid way, interpreting the classics as they should be interpreted. Last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall offered only two compositions, Mozart's G minor symphony, and the "Romeo and Juliet" of Berlioz. But it gave a vast amount of pleasure to the audience.

One might perhaps disagree with the slow tempi of the first and third movements of the Mozart symphony, and in the Berlioz there were certainly one or two lapses on the part of individual players, an unusual event in the Boston ensemble, but why stop to criticise anything so close to perfection?

EVENING GLOBE

New York City

FEB 15 1918

COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER,

Music.

Mozart Beautifully Played—Other Music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to town again and gave in Carnegie Hall last evening another concert before the usual capacity house. The programme, prefaced by the National Anthem, consisted of Mozart's G minor symphony and three orchestral movements from the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony of Berlioz.

The performance set one wondering again whether Mozart's "little" G minor symphony be not the greatest symphony ever written, not excepting the fifth, the seventh, and the ninth of Beethoven. At any rate, the performance was about the greatest any symphony ever had.

One might dwell endlessly on its super-exquisite details, but perhaps the most important single thing to say about it is that the infinitude of fascinating detail never obscured the large design of the piece. Dr. Muck grasped its pattern as a whole no less ardently than he detected its minutest particular, and in like manner and in just perspective he set it before the audience. The audience responded with an ovation for Dr. Muck and his men (the men rising to acknowledge it) after the menuetto and again after the finale.

The "Queen Mab" scherzo, which opened the selection from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" symphony, remains, though composed so long ago as 1839, the supreme achievement in the music of fairie. Never can Mab's train have floated by in lighter filament of sound than yesterday.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, FEBR.

A slip in the programme announced that at to-morrow's concert Goldmark's "Sappho" overture, rarely heard and by some eagerly awaited, will yield its place to the same composer's overworked "Sakuntala" overture, thus removing the chief artistic reason for the concert as originally planned.

EVENING GLOBE

New York City

William Sumner

BAR GERMAN MUSICIANS IN SPRINGFIELD CONCERT

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 15.—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to state what course would be taken relative to its scheduled concert in view of the city property board unanimously voting not to allow the use of the auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion." It is understood the orchestra includes twenty-two Germans and eight Austrians. The board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is a Swiss and to allow him to appear.

BOSTON, Feb. 15. — In connection with the barring of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Washington some time ago because its membership included enemy aliens, representatives of the orchestra in a statement recently said that Dr. Karl Muck was a Swiss citizen. Although he was born in Germany, the statement said, his parents early removed to Switzerland and his father became a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck became of age, it was stated, he took out Swiss citizenship papers.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

FEB 15 1918

OPERAS and CONCERTS

Boston Orchestra Plays at Its Best; "Thais" and "Faust" by Rival Co.s

BY SYLVESTER RAWLING

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra at its fourth evening concert of the season in Carnegie Hall last night dispensed with a soloist. Moreover, only two numbers graced its programme. They were Mozart's second symphony in G minor and three orchestral pieces from Berlioz's dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet." Neither work is hackneyed, and each got such eloquent proclamation by this famous band of musicians that the crowded audience of the elite of New York's music lovers was held spellbound from the first to the last bar. If it had not been my privilege to say in this column many times in the last two decades that this orchestra is unrivalled throughout the world it must have been said now. Such fine balance of the choirs, such exquisite daintiness in the strings, such splendid wholeness of tonality as we were privileged to hear last night may not be forgotten easily. All honor to Dr. Karl Muck, who conducted, but honor, too, to a galaxy of previous conductors, especially to Mr. Gericke, who brought this orchestra to its high state of perfection.

After the third and last movements of the Mozart work and after the "Queen Mab" of the Berlioz excerpts, the whole orchestra was forced to stand in acknowledgment of the applause. At the end there was another demonstration.

... with Geraldine Farrar in ...

EVENING SUN

ss: New York City

Music

The Boston Symphony.

The short and unexceptional programme which Dr. Muck had chosen to be played by his Boston orchestra at its fourth evening concert gave a pleasure to its Carnegie Hall audience last night which has hardly been equalled by any of this year's symphonic music. Such playing comes to New York all too rarely, coming even when it does two blessed times a month.

The simplicity and familiarity of the selections were no possible hindrance in such a case. These were the Mozart C minor symphony and the accustomed trio of orchestral excerpts from the Berlioz "Romeo et Juliette" symphony. Their challenge, which certainly could not lie in any novelty or extraordinary largeness to the works themselves, was nevertheless one which kept the whole hall gratefully keen to listen and applaud. The orchestra had often to rise and bow its thanks in mass formation.

It is difficult to imagine the Mozart played with a more radiant care or more exquisite result. The phrasing of it flirted with, if it did not permanently wed, perfection; and the grace and sure balance with which its gentle melodies were exploited seemed to lift the whole of the first violin section into sublimated, Heifetz realms. To all of it there was a Gobelin beauty which speaks for skilled and delicate fingers at the weaving.

The "Queen Mab" of the Berlioz suite was, too, immense with lightness fancy, thistledown madness, forest fears and follies. The garden scene, in turn, beginning with the "Tristan" languor of a shimmering summer night, spoke with the eloquence of the Bard himself, almost word for note and note for word, while all Verona—and, thanks be to Gounod—crowded whispered, canoed, wrangled and made love at the final fete chez Capulet."

SUN

:: New York City.

FEB 15 1918

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD IN CONCERT

Symphony Selections From Mozart and Berlioz Presented in Carnegie Hall.

The programme of the fourth evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night was simplicity itself. It presented Mozart's C minor symphony, one of the last great trio, and the customary three orchestral excerpts from Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette" symphony. It looked on the printed page like a programme of comparatively small interest, but the large audience appeared to regard it as of absorbing power.

The reason for this result was not difficult to find. For illustration, take the symphony. There was not a single instrumental phrase in its entire score that did not receive its proper value, no more and no less. Not one fragment of Mozart's suave melody was forced into undue prominence, and not one was in the least obscured. The performance was a beautiful exemplification of the mathematical axiom that the whole is equal to the sum of all its parts.

Such a performance betokens a most affectionate care on the part of the conductor in the preparation and a sympathetic response on the part of every man in the orchestra. The Boston Symphony Orchestra persists in giving performances of this kind and exacting from local music lovers admiration of the warmest sort. There has been much excited talk about what might be the fate of this organization before the war ended. But so long as it continues to utter such messages of beauty it is likely to endure.

n EVENING JOURNAL

ress: New York.

e

DR. MUCK PLAYS A MOZART SYMPHONY

Boston Orchestra Gives First of Fourth Pair of Concerts in Carnegie Hall.

Dr. Karl Muck is perhaps never more interesting as a conductor than when he plays Mozart. The intriguing wonder, accordingly, is that he does not dip into the Mozartean possibilities oftener. There are always the three symphonies struck off in the single Summer of 1788—an incomparable incandescence of genius—and one or another of them flows with ingratiating ebullience from the Boston Symphony band when Dr. Muck directs it. But there is more Mozart one does not often hear played and Dr. Muck might do well, in these times of paucity of new scores, to bend his talents to searching it out and revealing it. That, however, would be another story, and one would be quite ungrateful not to accept graciously and thankfully enough what is actually offered.

For the first of the fourth pair of concerts of the Boston Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening, Dr. Muck played the G minor symphony, the second of the wondrous triad. Given the variety, the forcefulness, the veritable surge with which Dr. Muck let the music speak, Mozart sounded as rich and full-bodied and as profound as much of Beethoven and altogether as modern as of all time. The symphony was clearly enunciated, but never touched with the academic; it was thoughtfully revealed in detail of nuance, but never over-elaborated. The orchestra played it with an exquisite fidelity to Dr. Muck's intent, and was called upon to rise in responce to applause after the andante and at the close.

Following Mozart, Dr. Muck played three portions of Berlioz's symphony, "Romeo et Juliette"—the "Queen Mab" scherzo, the "Garden Scene" adagio and the "Grand Fete at Capulet's," the symphony's third movement. Dr. Muck does much to justify those who accord Berlioz a high place as an inventive genius, and the performance of these symphonic excerps continued this justificatoin.

EVENING MAIL

New York City

FEB 15 1918

YESTERDAY'S MUSIC.

WHILE other conductors search desperately for new numbers to lend interest to their programmes, Dr. Karl Muck continues on his placid way, interpreting the classics as they should be interpreted. Last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall offered only two compositions, Mozart's G minor symphony, and the "Romeo and Juliet" of Berlioz. But it gave a vast amount of pleasure to the audience.

One might perhaps disagree with the slow tempi of the first and third movements of the Mozart symphony, and in the Berlioz there were certainly one or two lapses on the part of individual players, an unusual event in the Boston ensemble, but why stop to criticise anything so close to perfection?

EVENING GLOBE

New York City

... COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER,

Music.

Mozart Beautifully Played—Other Music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to town again and gave in Carnegie Hall last evening another concert before the usual capacity house. The programme, prefaced by the National Anthem, consisted of Mozart's G minor symphony and three orchestral movements from the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony of Berlioz.

The performance set one wondering again whether Mozart's "little" G minor symphony be not the greatest symphony ever written, not excepting the fifth, the seventh, and the ninth of Beethoven. At any rate, the performance was about the greatest any symphony ever had.

One might dwell endlessly on its super-exquisite details, but perhaps the most important single thing to say about it is that the infinitude of fascinating detail never obscured the large design of the piece. Dr. Muck grasped its pattern as a whole no less ardently than he detected its minutest particular, and in like manner and in just perspective he set it before the audience. The audience responded with an ovation for Dr. Muck and his men (the men rising to acknowledge it) after the menuetto and again after the finale.

The "Queen Mab" scherzo, which opened the selection from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" symphony, remains, though composed so long ago as 1839, the supreme achievement in the music of faerie. Never can Mab's train have floated by in lighter flament of sound than yesterday.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, FEBRU...

A slip in the programme announced that at to-morrow's concert Goldmark's "Sappho" overture, rarely heard and by some eagerly awaited, will yield its place to the same composer's overworked "Sakuntala" overture, thus removing the chief artistic reason for the concert as originally planned.

POST

ess New York City

FEB 1 1918

RESTRICTIONS ON ORCHESTRA.

Boston Symphony's Enemy Aliens Cannot Play in Springfield, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., February 15 (by A. P.).—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to state what course would be taken relative to the scheduled concert of the orchestra, in view of the conditions attached by the City Property Board to its use of the Auditorium. The Board voted unanimously last night not to allow the use of the Auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion." It is understood the orchestra includes twenty-two Germans and eight Austrians. The Board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck is a Swiss and to allow him to appear.

BOSTON, February 15 (by A. P.).—In connection with the barring of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Washington some time ago, because its membership included a number of enemy aliens, a representative of the orchestra, in a statement recently, said that the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, was a Swiss citizen. Although Dr. Muck was born in Germany, the statement said, his parents early removed to Switzerland, and his father became a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck became of age, it was stated, he took out Swiss citizenship papers for himself. The Swiss legation at Washington has declined to make any comments as to Dr. Muck's status.

rom MORNING TELEGRAPH

ddress: New York City

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS AT CARNEGIE

Dr. Karl Muck Gives Rare Readings of Mozart Work and Three Berlioz Pieces.

The program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night was shorter than ushal, including only the Mozart G minor symphony and three Berlioz pieces from "Romeo and Juliet." But Dr. Karl Muck's playing of the symphony alone was enough of a musical treat for it was presented with rare beauty. It was a polished performance which brought so much applause that Dr. Muck smiled for the first time in years.

The "Queen Nab," the only one of the Berlioz pieces which merits the distinctive playing given them by the Boston orchestra, was delicately done with great care for detail. The actual work of the players themselves was in many ways remarkable.

Monitor Oct 27, 1917

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, appears in recital in Jordan Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Oct. 30, with Harry Spier as his accompanist. He will present the following program:

"L'agnelletta," Sari; "Deh, a me non v'ascordete," Buononcini; "Che fiero costume," Legranzi; "Du bist die Ruh'," "Der Doppelgänger," Schubert; "An den Sonnenschein," Schumann; "Liebesglück," Wolf; "Pauvre martyr obscur," Paladilhe; "Le manoir de Rosemonde," Duparc; "Chanson," Taconet; "Marins d'Islande," Fourdrain; "Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes," Crist; "A Song of France," Treharne; "The Nightingale and I," Engel; "Thus Wisdom Sings," Horsman; "A Home" and "Arab Love Song," Ferrari.

Monitor

EVENING GLOBE

ress New York City

e

William ...

BAR GERMAN MUSICIANS IN SPRINGFIELD CONCERT

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 15.—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to state what course would be taken relative to its scheduled concert in view of the city property board unanimously voting not to allow the use of the auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion." It is understood the orchestra includes twenty-two Germans and eight Austrians. The board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is a Swiss and to allow him to appear.

BOSTON, Feb. 15. In connection with the barring of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Washington some time ago because its membership included enemy aliens, representatives of the orchestra in a statement recently said that Dr. Karl Muck was a Swiss citizen. Although he was born in Germany, the statement said, his parents early removed to Switzerland and his father became a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck became of age, it was stated, he took out Swiss citizenship papers.

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City

FEB 15 1919

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert

Remarkable Tone of String Section Delights Hearers Who Fill Carnegie Hall.

Coming for its next to last pair of concerts, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was heard last night in Carnegie Hall. As usual, the audience was as numerous as the size of the house would permit.

The programme was not of unusual interest. Mozart's G minor symphony was played with beautiful effect. The remarkable tone of the string section was very much in evidence. The remainder of the programme was devoted to three pieces from Berlioz's symphony, "Romeo et Juliet." The first, "Queen Mab," is one of the most effective things that Berlioz ever wrote.

The garden scene and the grand fête at Capulet's were not so interesting, but all were played brilliantly.

From TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

Date

Music

Many an established virtuoso could learn something from the first violin group of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which played at Carnegie Hall last night under Dr. Muck's baton. For in the solo part of many a concerto which New York has heard this season there has been less careful phrasing, less tonal variety, less delicacy of expression than these sixteen amazing men showed, playing through a whole evening as though they were one.

The orchestra, which in all its choirs can play a perfectly controlled pianissimo can do anything. Dr. Muck's men can do this, with such easy mastery that all the rest seems to come without effort.

They played the Mozart "G Minor Symphony" last night as though from the inspiration of the moment, so supple, fresh and joyous did their performance sound. Dr. Muck took the minuet rather more deliberately than is usual with movements of its type and period, but he justified the innovation (as it is not justified by certain New York orchestras, though it is often attemmpted) by emphasizing the pulsating rhythm and the sombre vigor of the piece.

The three movements from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" symphony, though played as admirably as the Mozart work, did not please the audience so much as might have been expected.

TIMES

New York City

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA.

Mozart-Berlioz Program Earns a Double Ovation.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began the last but one of its visits to New York this season before the usual sold-out subscription in Carnegie Hall last night, and, like the blessings that brighten as they take their flight, it earned in a program of two composers a double ovation. An insert in the printed program book noted a change in tomorrow's matinée bill, when Goldmark's overture, "Sakuntala," will be the final number, instead of his "Sappho." The matinée symphony will be Haydn's so-called "Surprise," while last night's opening work was Mozart's genial symphony in G minor, No. 550 in the Koechel catalogue. In Boston recently, Dr. Muck gave both of these in a single evening, and added for good measure the first symphony of Beethoven.

How much warmth of fancy and charm of phrase Dr. Muck and his players brought out of Mozart's music was evident when the audience called the leader back, half way in last evening's performance, and he signaled his men to join him in a rising recall. The same happened after a later group of pieces from Berlioz's dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," where from the mad pace of the "Queen Mab" episode to the sonorous, golden brass of the "Grand Fête at Capulet's," the virtuoso orchestra met the test of its powers on a wholly different order.

Tonight's program in Brooklyn, not previously announced, will include more of the moderns, Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, Liszt's E flat concerto for pianoforte, with Winifred Christie, and the "Death and Transfiguration" of Richard Strauss.

From NORTH AMERICAN

Address Philadelphia, Pa.

Date

CONNIE MACK ANNOUNCES that he will not permit Doctor Muck's orchestra to play at the Shibe Park opening next season. This is final.

1884

From JOURNAL

Address Providence, R. I.

Date FEB 10

Loyal citizens here will be interested in the following extract from "Mephisto's Musings" in Musical America, which seem to require little comment:

"Dr. Muck's troubles seem to be by no means over. The concerts that he was to have given with the Boston Symphony in Providence have been cancelled owing, as the official announcement says, to the hostility of the press and the people there.

"It will be remembered that the first clash with regard to the good doctor's refusal to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' occurred in Providence, and from there spread through the country. The trouble was increased by the unfortunate declaration made by his manager, Mr. C. A. Ellis, of Boston, to the effect that the request to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' had not come from their subscribers but from 'some women' in the town.

"Mr. Ellis's faux pas lay in this, that the women who made the request were the presidents and representatives of the various women's music clubs in Providence, which have a large membership among the best people in the town. Furthermore, these clubs are very active, some of them having reached a high degree of musical proficiency.

"However, if the good people of Providence will no longer support the concerts of the Boston Symphony it may induce them to give more encouragement to their own local Symphony Orchestra, which has considerable merit, but has always suffered from the competition of the great Boston organization.

"Coincident with the trouble in Providence comes the report from Philadelphia to the effect that, while Dr. Muck gave a concert there a few days ago, according to the North American 'for the first time probably in the history of the Boston Symphony's concerts in Philadelphia whole blocks of seats throughout the house remained vacant. In the lower tier boxes were without occupants. The proscenium boxes in the entire orchestra were empty. Empty, too, were the 10 boxes in the balcony.'

"The people through the country have by no means gotten over their resentment with regard to the fuss over the playing of the anthem in which the doctor was involved. Nor is it likely that the matter will soon be forgotten."

* * *

JOURNAL

Address Providence, R. I.

JAN 15 1919

THE LETTER BOX

OUR OWN SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

To the Editor of the Journal:

Now that the Boston Symphony Orchestra have decided not to give their usual series of concerts in Providence, it would seem that the attention of those who enjoy music in its most impressive form should be directed to our own talented peformers, and further, those who have an interest in the culture of our rising generation should help to keep alive in this community an acquaintance with and appreciation of the masterpieces of the great composers.

President Faunce has well said: "No city can properly develop which is dependent mainly on outside talent. We must grow from within or we shall not grow at all."

Our own Providence Symphony Orchestra, which has been in existence since 1891, has grown in strength and ability, especially during the last six years. It has given excellent concerts and received expressions of high appreciation from the press and the musical public.

But concerts by large orchestras are expensive. There is always a deficiency. In most cities that aspire to support symphony music such deficiencies are met by one or more wealthy patrons. In Baltimore the expense is borne by the city as an educational measure.

In this great music-loving community why cannot a sufficiently large number of persons be reached who will not only enjoy the concerts but defray all expenses?

I venture to make the suggestion that those who receive back, in the next three days, the money they have paid for Boston Symphony tickets, turn that money over at once in subscriptions to a series of three concerts to be given as soon as possible by the Providence Symphony Orchestra, or pledge themselves to subscriptions of five or ten dollars toward such concerts. Such subscriptions may be handed to Mr. Seddon, at whose stand the Boston money is to be refunded, or sent to Mr. Hugh F. MacColl, Treasurer, at the Industrial Trust building.

These concerts will not be given unless advance support warrants the attempt. Any money advanced will be returned if the concerts are not given.

ROSWELL B. BURCHARD,
President Providence Symphony Orchestra Association.
Providence, Jan. 12.

To the Editor of the Journal:

Since the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not to be heard here again this season, we have no orchestral concerts to look forward to, which is most unfortunate. Now, why is this not the proper time for our Providence people to support their own local orchestra, which really has very good musicians, and does very creditable and enjoyable work?

It means a great deal musically to our city to have such an organization, and it is really worthy our most loyal support and hearty coöperation.

I trust that you will do all in your power to bring about these results.

FLORA RICHARDS ARNOLD,
Ex-President Chopin Club.
Providence, Jan. 13.

To the Editor of the Journal:

I see in to-day's paper that "the management of the Ellis concerts has decided to withdraw the remaining concerts of the series at Infantry Hall."

Is not this the psychological moment for our own Providence Symphony Orchestra to "step in?"

A goodly number of subscribers in Providence had anticipated attending these Ellis concerts. The concerts are not to be given. Now, then, comes the opportunity for these subscribers to show their independence and back up a highly worthy local organization, which only needs fostering to lift its past efforts from "better" up to "best."

Will not those subscribers allow a portion, if not all, their money to be used for several concerts by the Providence Symphony Orchestra, is the momentous question, which some musicians in this city are asking to-day.

There is no better time to demonstrate loyalty to home musicians (as well as home products, etc.) than now.

I hope you may find time and space in your paper to bring these suggestions to the public of our city.

(Mrs.) EMMA WINSLOW CHILDS,
President, Chopin Club.
Providence, Jan. 13.

To the Editor of the Journal:

I received yesterday a notice saying that owing to "the hostile feeling of a portion of the public and press of Providence towards the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor," the three remaining concerts of the series would be withdrawn. The announcement was most gratifying, the only regret on our part being that Providence did not take the initiative in the matter and say they could not come. As a matter of fact, however, I doubt if they dared try it for fear of a cold reception! Be that as it may, it looks as if we would not have very much in a musical way unless we make it for ourselves, and it seems a most fitting time to bring forward the musicians we have right here in our midst and give them our encouragement and support. Our own Providence Symphony has done fine work, and now if we will help them, I feel sure they will continue.

This seems to be an opportune moment to touch the public just as their money is being refunded, and to ask them to use it in practically a like manner, not only for the benefit of an organization formed and composed of our own citizens, but also for their own profit and enjoyment. I mean to do all in my power to assist in this effort and others of the same kind. I feel assured you will give your support.

ANNE M. H. MATTHEWS,
Chairman, Music Department, Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs.
Providence, Jan. 13.

A DEMOCRAT

To the Editor of the Journal:

JOURNAL

Address Providence, R. I.

JAN 15 1919

The Providence Symphony

As a number of correspondents point out elsewhere on this page, the community should rally to the support of the Providence Symphony Orchestra.

The cancellation of the Boston orchestra's dates in this city opens the way for a series of concerts by the Providence organization with a better financial outlook than ever before.

Many subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts will have a substantial sum returned to them through the decision of the management not to continue the concerts here this season. The suggestion is made that this money can be profitably used in subscribing to three concerts by the local orchestra, which has done good work for many years and has lately increased its technical reputation.

The Providence Symphony Orchestra should receive, in view of the failure of the Boston organization to appear in this city, a heartier support than heretofore. There ought to be no doubt of the success of the plan to enable it to carry through a three-concert programme in Providence during the present winter.

Our home orchestra is no mean rival to any similar organization in the country. And it lacks both the jelly fish management and insolent Prussian leadership that has given us good riddance of the Boston Symphony.

From SUN

Address: Baltimore, Md.

The question of why Baltimore music lovers (?) fail to attend the magnificent concerts that are being given here this season by the Philadelphia Orchestra continues to remain unanswered. The Philadelphia Orchestra, an organization absolutely of the first class, now holds its place among the great orchestras of the world. It is directed by a young and magnetic conductor of the greatest distinction. Its intonation leaves little if anything, to be desired. But more than all else, it is one of the very few of the larger and important orchestras now playing in the East that comes to Baltimore. Yet the Lyric is barely half-filled when it plays here.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has ceased to exist, as far as Baltimore is concerned. The Philharmonic, which is by no means as interesting an association as the Philadelphia one, has long since "side-tracked" the Monumental City. The number of concerts given here by orchestras of the first class, therefore, has been reduced to a minimum, Mr. Stokowsky and Mr. Damrosch holding the fort. Yet when Mr. Stokowsky brings his men here but a corporal's guard assembles to hear them. Just why is this?

The explanation offered earlier in the season (when the Philadelphia Orchestra gave a Russian program) by a correspondent who stated that no one wished to hear Slavic music is scarcely a satisfactory one! For the audience that came to enjoy the Russian program was very much larger than that assembled last Wednesday evening to hear Brahms and Beethoven. One very naturally expected that when the Boston Orchestra canceled its dates everyone would flock to hear the Philadelphia Orchestra and that the tremendous enthusiasm of the few interested patrons would immediately spread to the masses. But this has not proved to be the case at all. Why is it?

It is a discouraging commentary, but one is obliged to admit that there are very few real music-lovers in Baltimore after all, just a large group of people who crowded to hear Dr. Muck's players because their friends were going and they were ashamed to stop away. Another explanation of the Philadelphia orchestra's failure to attract more attention may be found in the question of soloists. Those appearing with the Philadelphia Orchestra are less celebrated than those which Mr. Damrosch, for instance, brings here, and this seems to prove the oft-reiterated contention that Baltimoreans care nothing for orchestra music as such, but merely for the "extra added attractions," to borrow a phrase from vaudeville. We all know that few Baltimoreans can be induced to attend the annual exhibition of contemporary art at the Peabody unless they are given a cup of tea "on the side." It now seems that no one here will listen to music unless a celebrity is produced at the same time. It is all rather disgraceful, a situation that must give Leopold Stokowsky, the man of the hour in orchestral instances, much food for sardonic reflection.

J. O. L.

m EVENING SUN
dress: Baltimore, Md.

Some of the programs that are being presented by the Boston Orchestra at their Boston concerts contain interesting features. Last Saturday the orchestra played "Villon," William Wallace's sixth symphonic poem, Mr. Walace being the son of the late Dr. James Wallace, a distinguished Scottish surgeon. He was born in 1860 and is still living. All of his early life was devoted to the study of surgery and it was not until he was graduated in this profession with honors at the Glasgow University in 1888 that he decided to make music his calling. He is the composer of two symphonies, six symphonic suites, four orchestral suites, numerous song cycles and minor works.

The same program included the third symphony, the one in E major, by Hugo Alfven, who was born in Stockholm in 1872, and who, like Mr. Wallace, is still living. Alfven has had a very interesting career. He entered the Stockholm Conservatory when he was 15 years old, and there studied the violin with L. Zitterquist, the concert master of the Royal Court Orchestra, and theory and compostiion with Adolf Lindgren. From 1896 to 1899 he received a subsidy from the Government. He also studied the violin with the famous Cesar Thomson at Brussels. During these years he was tremendously interested in painting, and in this he was encouraged by his uncle, the landscape painter, Oscar Toerna, but he finally decided to adopt music for his profession. In 1900 he was awarded the Jenny Lind pension, which gave him a sum equivalent to about $850 a year for three years. In 1904 he was appointed professor of counterpoint and composition at the Stockholm Conservatory. He conducted the symphony concerts at the Royal Opera House and in 1910 he was chosen to fill the chair of music at the University of Upsula, where there is a very famous chorus with which he gave concerts in Russia, Finland, Germany and Austria. He has also conducted orchestral concerts at Dortmund, Stuttgart and Vienna. Had it not been for the war he would have come to this country as conductor of the Upsula chorus. Many of his more important works have been played by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, but I recall no presentations of them in Baltimore. At the Boston concerts (in Boston) this week Ethel Leginska will play a piano concerto in E flat minor, Opp. 4, by Liapounoff. All this is interesting music which it would be nice to hear. J. O. L.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

There has been general rejoicing among the musical public of Springfield over the news that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to give its scheduled concert here in the Auditorium on Wednesday evening, Feb. 27. This will be the final concert of the Ellis series and will bring this notable series to a brilliant end. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to all newspaper accounts and to the verdict of the public before which it has appeared, has reached hights of brilliancy in its performances this season which surpass any achievements it has had in former years. More than ever it has established itself as one of the finest orchestras in the world.

A brilliant miscellaneous program will be given at this concert with Mme. Ethel Leginska, the pianist, as soloist. Mme. Leginska is an English woman, despite her Russian name, and has lived in the country for the past several years. She stands in the front rank of the woman pianists now before the public—a little woman with extraordinary strength and with remarkable powers of interpretation. Her art in many ways reminds one of the late Teresa Carreno, and in others of the day of Essipoff. In the program, further details of which will be announced later, she will play the first piano concerto by the little-heard Russian, Liapounoff.

RECORD
FEB. 3, 1918

The the Symphony Concerts, next week, the Symphony will be the third by the Scandanavian composer, Hugo Alfven. This will be its first performance in Boston. It has been played successfully in Chicago and Minneapolis. It is said to be bright, cheery and melodious.

REPUBLICAN
Springfield, Mass.
FEB 13 1918

DEFENDS DR KARL MUCK

Edward H. Marsh, Local Manager For Boston Orchestra Concert, Answers Some "Malicious Statements"

Information about Dr Karl Muck and the Boston symphony orchestra which are scheduled to give a concert in the Auditorium the 27th was given yesterday by Edward H. Marsh, local representative of the Ellis concerts. Three members of the city property committee are said to be open-minded on the question of giving the use of the Auditorium for this purpose, and two are out and out against it. Councilman William H. Grady is the only member of the committee who was on last year's committee, which refused to let Fritz Kreisler appear here.

Mr Marsh's statement follows:—

"Inasmuch as the city property committee seek an expression of opinion from the citizens of Springfield as to the propriety of allowing Dr Karl Muck to conduct the concert by the Boston symphony orchestra in the Auditorium February 27, it seems only fair, in view of the many erroneous and malicious statements which have been given wide publicity, that these facts should be made known, the truth of which is vouched for by C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston symphony orchestra since its organization, and recognized as the head of his profession in America.

"Dr Muck is not a Prussian. He is not an official of the German government. He is not even a citizen of Germany. He was born in Hesse but he has been for many years a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father before him.

"Dr Muck has never refused to play the 'Star Spangled Banner.' In fact he played it willingly at each of the 'pop' concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra at Symphony hall all last season. After the most searching investigation the federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.

"For three years of the war Dr Muck has directed this great cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among these musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston symphony orchestra comprises: 51 American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians, two Bohemians.

"On December 16, last, the Boston symphony orchestra, Dr Muck conducting, with Fritz Kreisler and Mme Melba, gave their services in a concert in Symphony hall for the benefit of the Massachusetts Halifax relief committee and as a result Mr Ellis turned over to Robert Winsor, treasurer of the committee, a check for $10,539.26."

---

m dress
te

Springfield music lovers should see that they are well represented at the meeting to-night of the city property committee, who will decide whether or not to grant the use of the municipal Auditorium for a concert by the Boston symphony orchestra. It is difficult to see why there should be any agitation over the matter. The Boston symphony orchestra is not a German organization and its conductor is not a citizen of Germany. It is an American institution, founded and maintained by Maj Henry L. Higginson. The orchestra continues to play in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia. The only legitimate disturbance occasioned by the orchestra was due to the entirely unfounded report that Dr Muck had refused to put "The Star Spangled Banner" on his programs. One cannot think that Springfield will stultify itself by refusing to hear an organization of musicians to which the great cities of the East continue to listen without tarnishing their patriotism.

m PUBLIC LEDGER
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

DOCTOR MUCK with his reconstructed orchestra and the establishment of his Swiss citizenship seems to have acquired a chastened spirit, whereof the simplified version of the "Star Spangled Banner" used at last Monday's concert might be accepted as a token. It seems that the "jazz band" way of playing the national air, with the mad obbligato scurrying of the first violins, was a Victor Herbert summer garden version snatched up when the hurry call came and no orchestration was at hand. The Boston Orchestra mismanagement has proved one thing conclusively—that whether it is railway administration or coal supply or musical performance one cannot in these times adopt the "public-be-damned" attitude and expect to "get away with it," marching off like heroes triumphant to the tune of popular discontent. To dare loneliness when a great principle is at stake, and the prophet to save his soul must stand on high above the multutudes in the valley of decision, is one thing; but a mere stupid persistence in defying the public demand that one shall show his colors, whether they be those of patriotism or of treason, has naught commendable about it.

---

m PRESS
dress Philadelphia, Pa.

SAYS BOSTON SYMPHONY IS GRATEFUL FOR COURTESY

Denial of statements that the Boston Symphony Orchestra believed itself "humiliated" by the obligation to report its twenty-two members of enemy alien birth to United States Marshal Noonan, is made by William E. Walters, press representative of the orchestra, who says:—

"In 'The Press' this morning the following statement is attributed to a representative of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: 'But Philadelphia is humiliating us by demanding that we register as we arrive and by requiring that none of the aliens of enemy birth visit the water front. We are lucky to be allowed to stay here over night.'

"It was I who saw your reporter and was so quoted. I beg to assure you that not only did I make no such statement as this, but nothing could be further from my thoughts than that the Boston Symphony Orchestra was humiliated in Philadelphia. On the contrary, the management is most grateful to United States Marshal Noonan for his courtesy and kindliness, in giving us the necessary permits for such of our men as needed them, and certainly that they had to report on arrival according to law was neither a hardship nor a humiliation. May I ask you to correct the wrong impression conveyed by your story?"

STANDARD UNION
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
FEB 14 1918

INSTITUTE LECTURES.

The programme that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play tomorrow evening at the fourth concert in the series at the Academy of Music was considered in a lecture-recital yesterday afternoon by Prof. John C. Griggs, of Vassar College, at the Brooklyn Institute. Before taking up the programme Prof. Griggs read a paper on appreciation of music due to a knowledge of color, tone and harmony, and delight in virtuosity. Music, he insisted, is something to be appreciated by human ears and not something to be haggled about, and he expressed sympathy for those who get discouraged because they try to see in music the things they think they ought to see and do not understand.

Prof. Griggs took up the fourth symphony of Tschaikowsky, which he commented on in detail, and a young woman assistant played the principal themes. The Strauss tone poem "Death and Transfiguration," which will be the concluding number on the orchestra's programme, was similarly discussed.

Continuing the course of lecture-recitals, arranged by the Brooklyn Institute for five consecutive Monday evenings, and interrupted because of the Monday closing order of the Fuel Administration, Nicholas Douty, tenor, gave a programme of French songs last evening in the music hall of the Academy of Music. It was an interesting arrangement of the compositions by the more modern French writers, and the style of each composer was aptly represented in the selections chosen.

NORTH AMERICAN
s Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW PIANIST WITH BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Winifred Christie Will Play Liszt Concerto With Muck Band

MOZART SYMPHONY

Philadelphia Orchestra to Play Three Days With Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in the Academy of Music tomorrow evening. The soloist will be Winifred Christie, the young Scotch woman who played with some success in this country during the last three seasons.

Miss Christie is an extraordinarily well equipped pianist. She has already played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times. At the concert tomorrow evening she will play Liszt's "Concerto in E Minor." Doctor Muck has arranged a program beginning with Mozart's "Symphony in G Minor," by many considered the most beautiful of the three "big" symphonies Mozart wrote.

Immediately after intermission will come Rachmaninoff's vividly picturesque symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead." This, of course, was inspired by the well-known picture of the Swiss artist, Arnold Boecklin. It is not new here. Then will come the Liszt Concerto and finally Beethoven's overture, "Egmont."

NEW PIANIST HERE
Winifred Christie, a new Scotch pianist, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert in the Academy of Music tomorrow night.

PUBLIC LEDGER
ss Philadelphia, Pa.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its regular concert in the Academy of Music tomorrow evening at 8:15. The soloist at this concert will be Winifred Christie, the young Scotchwoman who has made such a remarkable success in this country during the last three seasons. Miss Christie is an extraordinarily well-equipped pianist. She has excellent technique. She is very musical and she is able to draw a very rich, mellow tone from her instrument. She has already played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times. At the concert tomorrow (Monday) evening she will play Liszt's Concerto in E minor.

Doctor Muck has arranged a very interesting program. It begins with Mozart's Symphony in G minor, by many considered the most beautiful of the three "big" symphonies Mozart wrote.

Immediately after intermission will come Rachmaninoff's vividly picturesque symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead." This, of course, was inspired by the well-known picture of the Swiss artist, Arnold Boecklin. It is not new to the Boston Symphony patrons in Philadelphia. Then will come the Liszt concerto and finally Beethoven's overture, "Egmont."

ENQUIRER
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.
FEB 10 1918

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its regular concert in the Academy of Music tomorrow evening, Monday,

MISS WINIFRED CHRISTIE

To play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow evening.

February 11, at 8.15. The soloist at this concert will be Winifred Christie, the young Scotch woman who has made such a remarkable success in this country during the past three seasons. Miss Christie is an extraordinarily well equipped pianist. She has excellent technique. She is very musical and she is able to draw a very rich, mellow tone from her instrument. She has already played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times. At the concert tomorrow (Monday) evening, she will play Liszt's "Concerto in E minor."

Dr. Muck has arranged a very interesting programme. It begins with Mozart's "Symphony in G minor," by many considered the most beautiful of the three "big" symphonies Mozart wrote

Immediately after intermission will come Rachmaninoff's vividly picturesque symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead." This, of course, was inspired by the well-known picture of the Swiss artist, Arnold Boecklin. It is not new to the Boston Symphony patrons in Philadelphia. Then will come the Liszt concerto and, finally Beethoven's overture, "Egmont."

EAGLE
ss: Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOSTON SYMPHONY; CARNEGIE.

The Boston Symphony program at Carnegie Hall, Manhattan, last evening had but two numbers. The first half of it was devoted to the Mozart G Minor Symphony; the second half to three orchestral pieces from Berlioz's stupendous dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." The numbers played were the "Queen Mab," the "Garden Scene" and the "Grand Fete at Capulet's." Dr. Muck conducted with his usual compelling manner, revealing every bit of the aristocratic beauty of the Mozart score, and finding apt expression for the programatic material of the Berlioz. Under him the band played with rare range of tonal color and dynamics and at times with a sheer virtuosity that amazed.

EAGLE
ddress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
FEB
ate

BOSTON SYMPHONY PROGRAM.

Prof. Griggs Precedes Review With Paper on Music Appreciation.

The program that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play tomorrow evening, at the fourth concert in the series at the Academy of Music, was considered in a lecture-recital yesterday afternoon by Professor John C. Griggs of Vassar College, at the Brooklyn Institute. Before taking up the program he read a paper on appreciation of music due to a knowledge of color, tone and harmony, and delight in virtuosity music, he insisted is something to be appreciated by human ears, and not something to be haggled about, and he expressed sympathy for those who get discouraged because they try to see in music the things they think they ought to see and do not understand.

Professor Griggs then took up the Fourth Symphony of Tschaihowsky, which he commented on in detail, and a young woman assistant played the principal themes. The Strauss tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration," which will be the concluding number on the orchestra's program, was similarly discussed.

From RECORD
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

BOSTON SYMPHONY OFFERS MOZART WORK

Winifred Christie, as Soloist, Will Play the Liszt Concerto in E-Minor.

HUNTER WELSH IN RECITAL

Orpheus Club at Academy. Frances Starr to Recite "Carillon" at a Concert.

—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its regular concert in the Academy of Music tomorrow evening. The soloist will be Winifred Christie, a young Scotch pianist, who has made a remarkable success in this country during the past three seasons. She has already played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra a number of times. She will play Liszt's Concerto in E minor.

WINIFRED CHRISTIE

The program begins with Mozart's "Symphony in G Minor," by many considered the most beautiful of the three "big" symphonies Mozart wrote. Immediately after intermission will come Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead," inspired by a picture. Finally will be heard Beethoven's overture, "Egmont."

* * *

TIMES
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOSTON SYMPHONY.

Winifred Christie Soloist at the Academy of Music.

With a beauty and splendor of tone that seemed to surpass even its own high high standard, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the next to the last of its seasonal series of five concerts at the Academy of Music last night. Winifred Christie was the soloist.

Both the orchestral numbers on the program, the Tschaikowsy Symphony No. 4 in F minor and tone-poem of Strauss, "Death and Transfiguration," were played with the most exquisite finish. The tonal beauty of every group of instruments was conspicuous, but most of all, that of the string section. So matchlessly did the strings play that laughing, lovely pizzicato scherzo of the third movement that Dr. Karl Muck had to cause the players to rise to acknowledge the applause. It was inimitable playing even for the Boston Symphony.

The broken, fluctuating rhythms of the andate sostenuto, with its sensuous 'cello parts and its oboe melodies; the march-like motive of the andantic, and the folk-tune of the finale, ending with the fate motive blasted out double fortissimo by the wind instruments, were alike interpreted with fine discrimination and dignity.

Miss Christie played Liszt's Concerto No. 1 in E-flat major. Her tone was large and very well managed against the finely played accompaniment of the orchestra.

The clearness and delicacy of her work in the cadenzas and the really distinguished clarity and singing quality of her tone in the softer passages were noteworthy. The unusual third theme, with the rhythmic beats of the triangle, was particularly well played, both by soloist and orchestra and the final presto was a revelation.

Strauss' tone poem is based on the sad theme of a dying man and picturing alternately his delirium and his dreams and ending with his death and transfiguration. Through every phrase Dr. Muck's interpretation was distinguished for its subtlety and good taste.

om CITIZEN
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
e

SCOTCH PIANIST WILL PLAY HERE

Miss Christie to Appear With Boston Orchestra.

The fourth concert this season in Brooklyn by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Academy of Music, under Institute auspices, next Friday evening, Feb. 15, at 8:15. The soloist will be Winifred Christie, that most interesting young Scotch woman, who has had such notable success as a pianist in this country during the past three seasons. Miss Christie is one of the most richly-endowed women pianists of our time. She has abundant technique, fancy and imagination, a profound musical knowledge and appreciation, and, moreover, is able to draw from her instrument a tone of unusual beauty. She has already played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra several times with much success. Here she will play Liszt's Concerto for piano and orchestra in E flat, No. 1.

The orchestra numbers are very interesting. The symphony will be Tschaikowsky's Fourth, in F minor. Generally speaking, this is the most Russian of all of Tschaikowsky's symphonies, and it is a question whether, in this, Tschaikowsky's imagination did not reach even a higher point than it did in the more popular "Pathetic." At any rate, it is far superior to all the other symphonies that the great Russian left. Moreover, it contains the fascinating Scherzo, in which the composer turns the string section of the orchestra into a huge guitar.

The final number will be the greatest of Richard Strauss' tone poems, "Death and Transfiguration."

A Beethoven-Wagner programme will be offered to Brooklyn subscribers to the concerts of the Symphony Society of New York (Walter Damrosch, conductor) on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 16, in the Academy of Music. This concert, the fourth in the series under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, will afford Wagnerites the opportunity of hearing the following excerpts from Wagner's operas: Prelude to Act III., "Lohengrin"; Good Friday Spell, "Parsifal"; Sounds of the Forest, "Siegfried," and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Part I. of the programme consists of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica," a work which has graced three programmes of the Symphony Society in New York this season. A proof that racial prejudice in art is not as marked as most people seem to believe, is evidenced by the fact that Carnegie Hall was packed on Thursday afternoon, Jan. 31, and Saturday evening, Feb. 2, when Mr. Damrosch presented the same Beethoven-Wagner programme to his New York subscribers.

The recital by Mischa Elmen, violinist, under Institute auspices, postponed from Jan. 20, will be given at the Academy of Music on the afternoon of Lincoln's Birthday, Tuesday, Feb. 12, at 3 o'clock. The full programme for the recital follows: Concerto, G minor (Vivaldi-Nachez); Symphonic Espagnole (Lalo); Sonata II., E major (Handel); Deep River (Elmen); Tango (Albaniz-Elman); Nocturnes (Chopin-Wilhelmj); Hungarian Dance, No. 7 (Brahms-Joachim); I Palpiti (Paganini). The accompanist for the afternoon will be Philip Gordon. The vast audience assembled to hear this noted violinist on the earlier date is susficient indication that Brooklyn looks upon an Elman recital as one of the musical events of the season. The manifest disappointment on the part of those present when announcement was made that the railroads had failed to bring Elman to this borough on time gave added testimony to his hold upon those who have heard him. A capacity house will no doubt greet him on Feb. 12.

A joint recital by Horatio Connell, baritone, and Hans Kindler, 'cellist, will be given at the Academy of Music, under Institute auspices, Thursday evening Feb. 21. Horatio Connell, a native American, who first made his reputation abroad, has, since his return, fully justified the warm recognition accorded him in Europe. Hans Kindler was born in Holland, but previous to the war played as 'cellist with some of the leading orchestras in Berlin. He had come to America on a visit during the tragic summer of 1914, and the outbreak of the war automatically cancelled the ten years' engagement he had with the Deutsches Oernhaus, in Berlin-Charlottenburg. His present engagement in this country is as solo 'cellist with the Philadelphia Orchestra. A recital by these artists, whose talent has been so widely appreciated in musical circles, should afford genuine satisfaction and delight to all who are privileged to hear it.

American
- Feb. 3, 1918 -

5

To Give Mahler Symphony Today

American 2/3

THE second and last performance of Gustav Mahler's stupendous "Resurrection" Symphony will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon, February 3. There were practically no refusals to take part in this second performance, so that the forces to all intents and purposes will be the same as those which gave the very remarkable performance of the Symphony on Tuesday evening, January 22.

With Dr. Muck the performance of this Symphony is largely a labor of love. He had profound admiration and affection for Mahler, whom he knew well for twenty-five years. So these performances have a very sentimental interest for the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The management has secured the same soloists who had such success in the first performance. Merle Alcock, the contralto, is one of the stars of the performance. May Peterson's part in the work was not so exacting, but the beauty of her voice added much to the enjoyment of the Symphony.

TRANSCRIPT
FEB. 20, 1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

WHY NOT CONCERTOS FOR THE WOOD-WINDS?

A Neglected Field at the Symphony Concerts—The Noted Auer Descends Upon New York — As Galli-Curci Describes Herself—"Puritani" Revived at the Metropolitan—Mr. Kreisler's New Commission

YEAR by year, Mr. Witek and Mr. Noack, as the first violins of the orchestra, have opportunity, as they deserve and as custom prescribes, to play a concerto at the Symphony Concerts. Year by year, Mr. Warnke and Mr. Malkin as the first violoncellists, have like privilege. Once within relatively recent recollection, Mr. Longy of the wood-wind choir played a concerto for oboe; once, likewise, Mr. Maquarre and Mr. Holy joined their voices in a piece by Mozart for flute, harp and orchestra. Never since Mr. Sand joined the band as first clarinetist, has he been heard as "soloist," except in incidental passages in symphony or tone-poem, though beyond question he is the foremost virtuoso of his instrument today in America, if not also in Europe. Since the distant years of the lamented Pourteau, no such clarinet-playing as his has been heard in Symphony Hall; while behind him sits weekly only a little less skilful and sensitive master of the English horn, Mr. Mueller.

Admittedly, concertos or other pieces with orchestral accompaniment for these wood-wind instruments are relatively few and scanty in musical or technical interest beside the abounding stuff for violins and violoncellos. Admittedly the flute fares ill as a solo instrument, while the ear wearies soon of the oboe or the English horn and endures none too patiently the wider range of the clarinet. Yet Mozart and many another composer of the eighteenth century wrote playable and by no means tedious pieces for virtuosi of the wind choir, while Beethoven himself condescended to a set of variations for English horn. Last Sunday in New York, Mr. Langenus, the first clarinet of Mr. Damrosch's orchestra, played a concerto by Mozart and charmed his hearers. Next Friday and Saturday in Chicago Mr. Barthel, the first oboe of Mr. Stock's orchestra, will be heard, likewise, in a concerto of the Parisian Guilhaud. By these precedents, as well as by intrinsic desert, why should not "our" Mr. Sand in particular, "our" Mr. Longy or "our" Mr. Mueller have their occasional turn, here in Boston, at similar concertos for their instruments? Such pieces, played not too often or for too long, would freshen the concerts and give opportunity for a familiar virtuosity that the public of Symphony Hall would gladly hear by itself. If oboe or clarinet as solo instrument risks monotony, so also does the "recognized" violoncello of many a con-

GLOBE
FEB. 4, 1918

MAHLER SYMPHONY WITH CHORUS REPEATED

Mahler's second or "Resurrection" Symphony, performed for the first time in Boston a week ago last Tuesday, was repeated at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Another large audience heard an excellent performance by the same forces which gave the first; the enlarged Symphony Orchestra, the fine chorus, May Peterson and Merle Alcock, respectively solo soprano and contralto, and Dr Muck, under whose direction all was given.

TRANSCRIPT
FEB. 1, 1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

Soles and Song

A SENSITIVE listener to recent concerts of choral music in Boston—or for that matter anywhere else—sends to this department a veritable counsel of perfection. In his view the banked singers of such occasions, especially when they number two or three hundred, should be schooled not only to pianissimi in their song but also to turn the leaves of their music-books so that the sound shall not cross the hall like the rustle of a forest in a breeze. Furthermore, he would forbid such women-singers to wear skirts of any cloth that crackles; while he would compel them and the singing-men as well to set rubber heels and soles to their shoes. He is moved, it seems, to this extravagant suggestion by a disappointment recent and bitter. He is a frequent, ardent and deeply engrossed listener to music. As often as he may he hears a choral piece. Once and again, it wraps him close in illusion of the music and the text. Then, of a sudden, three hundred-odd choristers rise in their places at the conductor's signal; rise by no means noiselessly and so tramp his illusion under foot. With difficulty he regains it, only to find it threatened again, when simultaneously the three hundred-odd turn a leaf in as many music-books before them.

Being a speculative and whimsical person, our correspondent has now and then visioned idly a chorus as still in down-sittings and uprisings, in the turning of leaves, as it was sonorous in song. Ten days ago, at the first performance of Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony," he believed his vision fulfilled. For when the chorus first entered the Finale, in its chairs it sat and sang, while no contacts of foot with floor, no rustling of skirts disturbed his absorption in a truly beautiful music. But before long, when more was required of the singers than soft, sustained phrases, up they rose, and harsh and disillusioning upon his ears fell the inevitable sounds of their uprising, while once at least he heard them turn three hundred leaves. Spoiled was the fullness and the fineness of his pleasure. Wherefore he entreats Mr. Townsend and Dr. Muck to enjoin soundless skirts, slippers and boots upon their chorus and to train it so that the turning of a leaf shall be as noiseless as the fall of one in the woods. If they cannot do it with such a devoted chorus, alike to leaders and music, who, as he truly says, can? On the other hand, both those conductors have learned, out of long and hard experience, to walk warily with the limitations of human nature.

TRANSCRIPT
FEB. 2, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A New Symphony by the Swedish Composer, Alfven, and an Unfamiliar Tone-Poem by the Scotsman, Wallace, on Dr. Muck's Next Programme — Mahler's Choral Symphony—The Second of Mr. Kreisler's Chamber Concerts

A NEW symphony written by a composer, none of whose music has hitherto been heard in Boston, stands on Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday and Saturday—the symphony in E major, No. 3, of Hugo Alfvén, Swedish composer of Stockholm and Upsala. He is now a man of forty-five who made his studies in Sweden and with César Thomson, in Brussels, who began his career as a violinist, but is now pursuing it as composer and teacher. The symphony to be heard next week dates from 1905 and made its way to the United States through the Minneapolis and the Chicago Orchestras. It runs in fairly orthodox form through the appointed four movements: Allegro con Brio; Andante; Presto and Allegro con Brio, and it is written for full modern orchestra with numerous wind choir and plentiful brass. Throughout it is a warmly imagined, animated, highly colored music.

Another piece on Dr. Muck's list will sound almost as new, the tone-poem, "Villon," heard at a pair of Symphony Concerts in the spring of 1912 and thereafter left on the library shelves. The Scotsman, William Wallace, wrote it in the years when he preferred the making of music to the philosophizing about it which more recently has occupied his pen. The tone-poem, composed for full orchestra, reflects the moods of Villon's wild life as versifier and vagabond of mediæval Paris, taking as texts, so to say, lines from his more familiar pieces. For familiar music, between symphony and symphonic poem, Mr. Witek, the concert-master of the orchestra, whose quality the public of the concerts has long known and applauded, will play Bruch's songful concerto in G minor for

HERALD
FEB. 4, 1918

MAHLER SYMPHONY HEARD SECOND TIME

Large Audience Enjoys Repetition of Stupendous Composition

Gustav Mahler's mighty Symphony in C minor, No. 2, was given its second performance in Boston yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall by a chorus of 350, trained by Stephen Townsend, the Boston Symphony orchestra; May Peterson, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto, and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor. There was a large and appreciative audience.

A second hearing of the work deepened the impression made by the first and heightened the appreciation of a superb performance. In whatever spirit the hearer approaches the work, whether it be accepted as absolute music or according to the interpretative programs of various commentators, there is in the mind of the listener the inevitable thought of humanity's struggle with existence; man striving blindly after this or that ideal only to learn in time the futility of the struggle. Moods of doubt, bitterness, despair, anguish, irony, passion, religious contemplation and poignantly expressed. Then comes comfort and ultimate peace embracing all humanity, with the reassurances of immortality voiced in the stupendous final movement.

Mahler used every conceivable orchestral color with genius on a colossal canvas. The work is not, however, without its weak spots. There are moments of distinctive reiteration in the first movement. There are other instances when orchestral anticlimaxes disturb the continuity of thought and momentarily lessen the grandeur of the whole. Yet the main impression is dramatic, striking, overpowering.

The performance has already been justly and superlatively praised. Extraordinary orchestral eloquence rivalled the beauty of timbre and fine spirit displayed by the chorus. The controlling genius of Dr. Muck has never shone brighter. There was hearty applause for him and for orchestra, chorus and soloists.

RECORD
FEB. 1, 1918

On Sunday afternoon Dr. Muck repeats the Mahler "Resurrection" Symphony with the same large orchestra, chorus and soloists, Mae Peterson and Merle Alcock, who appeared at the first performance some time ago.

It is not generally known that Dr. Muck was constantly consulted by Mahler during the years that Mahler was at work on the Symphony. When he began to write it he was Dr. Muck's assistant at Prague, and it was largely on account of Dr. Muck's advice that it was cut from seven movements to the present five.

With Dr. Muck the performance of this Symphony is largely a labor of love. He had profound admiration and affection for Mahler, whom he knew well for 25 years. He regarded him not only as one of the greatest conductors of the world, but as one of the great composers of our time, a man of great visions, of great imagination and tremendous ability.

POST
FEB. 17, 1918

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Muck, will give its regular concert in Saunders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, next Thursday night, Feb. 21. Here the soloist will be Ethel Leginska, who is playing in Boston on the two following days. She will play the same work she is to play in Boston, Liapounoff's Concerto in E-flat minor. The symphony will be the bright, attractive work by the Swedish composer, Alfven, which was played for the first time in Boston 10 days ago. The other number on the programme will be Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration."

POST
FEB. 17, 1918

Ethel Leginska will make her first appearance in Boston as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at the 15th pair of concerts next Friday afternoon, Feb. 22, and Saturday evening, Feb. 23. Madame Leginska has played at one of the out-of-town concerts with the orchestra last year with much success. Here she will play a work new to Boston, the Concerto in E-flat Major by the Russian composer, Liapounoff. Fritz Delius, "In a Summer Garden," has appeared on the Symphony programme but once, at the pair of concerts April 19 and 20, 1912, Mr. Fiedler conducting. The work was composed in the spring of 1908 and had its first appearance in December of that year in London. It may be said that this music is an impressionistic landscape. The prevailing tone color is sombre and there are two principal themes, the second of which is expressive of tender yearning. The symphony will be Brahms' in F-major No. 3.

ADVERTISER
FEB. 4, 1918

MAHLER SYMPHONY IS REPEATED HERE

Symphony Hall Filled for Concert of Orchestra and Chorus

Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony, which made such a favorable impression at its first performance, January 22, was repeated yesterday afternoon before an audience that filled Symphony Hall, the work being given, as at the first concert, by the Symphony Orchestra, the Townsend Chorus. The solo artists were Miss May Peterson, soprano; Miss Merle Alcock, contralto, and Dr. Muck, conductor.

A second hearing of this composition confirms the opinion that it is a work of the most extraordinary contrasts, and of amazingly unequal merit, for the heavens are rent in twain, and the depths are broken up by cyclonic outbursts of pure, unadulterated noise, followed by passages of tender beauty and much melodic charm. The second movement would make an excellent number for a "Pop" concert; the Scherzo leaves nothing for the future to say concerning bizarre effects and unearthly combinations of orchestral sound.

The alto voice declaims a quiet passage and the orchestral forces are again let loose for a final trial of strength, when occurs the most effective point in the entire work, namely, the entrance of the chorus in a hushed and simple chorale-like strain, which is supremely beautiful and a welcome relief after the athletic contests between the brass and the kettle-drums.

The final chorus with orchestra and organ, works up to a wonderful climax, thrilling in its intensity, and an overpowering emphasis is thus placed on the closing text, "Death, oh, take me, Life restoring!"

In brief, the last ten minutes of the symphony are worth all the balance and one is reminded of Southey's famous lines:

"But what good came of it at last?"
quoth little Peterkin.
"Why, that I cannot tell," said he,
"But 'twas a famous victory."

HERALD FEB. 16, 1918

at the min.

SYMPHONY WILL NOT PLAY IN SPRINGFIELD

[Special Dispatch to the Herald.]

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 16—Dr. Karl Muck and his musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have cancelled their concert engagement in Springfield. They were to appear in the Municipal Auditorium Feb. 27.

Notice was served by the city property committee, in charge of the rental of the structure, that the orchestra and Dr. Muck would be allowed to give their concert providing all German and Austrian members were eliminated. This decision barred 22 Germans and 8 Austrians.

[illegible] this took away one-third of the orchestra membership and prevented a finished performance, the rest refused to play, fearing a poorly given program would endanger the organization's reputation. A special concert plan was refused.

TRANSCRIPT
FEB. 14, 1918

Items and Announcements

At the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge on Thursday evening, of next week, Dr. Muck will repeat Alfvén's symphony, lately heard in Boston, for which, seemingly, the conductor has a singular affection, and Strauss's tone-poem, "Death and Transfiguration," as yet unheard this season at Symphony Hall. Between these two numbers, Mme. Leginska, the pianist, will play for the first time hereabouts, the brilliant and intricate concerto in E-flat minor of Lyapunov.

HERALD, FEB. 17, 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Ethel Leginska, one of the most interesting of women pianists of our time, will make her first appearance in Boston as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at the 15th pair of concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mme. Leginska has played at one of the out of town concerts with the orchestra last year with much success. Here she will play a work new to Boston, the Concerto in E flat minor by Liapounoff. Delius's symphonic poem (if such it may be called), entitled "In a Summer Garden," will be performed. It appeared on the Symphony program but once, at the pair of concerts April 19 and 20, 1912, Mr. Fiedler conducting. The work was composed in the spring of 1908 and had its first performance in December of that year in London. It may be said that the work is an impressionistic landscape, the prevailing tone color is sombre and there are two principal themes—the second of which is expressive of tender yearning. The symphony will be Brahms's in F major No. 3.

POST FEB. 1918

HEAR COPELAND IN NEW PIECES

Pianist Excels Himself in Masterly Recital

BY OLIN DOWNES

The performances given by George Copeland, pianist, last night in Jordan Hall were in certain particulars unique, even for this remarkable artist. The programme was refreshing for its balance as well as its novelty. It contained new works by modern French and Spanish composers, and it contained works of the standard repertoire, which had not been played in public by Mr. Copeland for at least many seasons. In both groups the pianist excelled himself.

The reproach of a lack of breadth or of virility in performance would have fallen flat before the playing of the Chopin Fantasie and the Schumann "Faschingschwank aus Wien," in which the composer eluded the dictum of the police of Vienna by incorporating the tune of the "Marseillaise," then forbiden public performance, in his opening movement. But why Mr. Copeland should have elected to cut the Fantasy in half is beyond us.

This was unfortunate. Otherwise, it has been seldom in the memory of the writer that Mr. Copeland has displayed so impressively the gifts which set him apart from, and in some respects beyond, any other pianist known to the American public.

It is difficult to describe the fascination of his art. To say he has exquisite rhythm, a command of tone values that is little short of miraculous, a technic which is so much a part of the musical thought that one listens, mystified, while the thing is being done which utterly eludes examination or analysis—is to define, but not to convey.

This art is felt, rather than seen, to be supremely logical, and incomparably just and subtle in its values. Also, it has a strange flavor of the antique.

Most happily was this particular quality shown in the first "Gnossienne" of that "fantasiste," Eric Satie, whose name is not Eric Satie, but who prefers that name, as he once informed the writer, because it is "more Norman, more Scandinavian." The spirit of the antique pervades this little piece, with its strange and fantastical variants on the simplest of themes. This piece Mr. Copeland had to repeat. Also the "Dance of Daphnis," presumably from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Cloe," which sounded more like a zephyr than the noise of a piano. The "Bourree" of Roger-Ducasse, a gay piece, found favor. Mr. Engel's "Peau d'Espagne" is based on a cheap, inherently commonplace theme, decked out with odd and extraneous harmonies. Far better, far more of a piece, and more individual in harmony and mood, is his "Somras." De Falla's "Andalusia" is noisy and exciting, and was so performed. But Grovlez' Reverie—at least as played by Mr. Copeland—is an exquisite composition.

The audience was numerous, and tardy. So was the pianist, who did not begin playing till half-past eight. At the last Mr. Copeland played a number of encores. The audience was wildly enthusiastic, and loath to let him go.

[illegible]
continue its [illegible] bridge. The pre[illegible]
Symphony in E-[illegible] certo in F minor for [illegible] and the Scotsman, W[illegible] and well-charactered tone-po[illegible] wherein he would recall in music th[illegible] bond versifier of the mediæval Par[illegible]
Louis XI. In the Concerto, a new piano [illegible]
Miss Alice Allen, will play the piano par[illegible]

The Matthew-Passion Again

As originally proposed, the remarkable performance of Bach's "Passion-Music according to Matthew," achieved on Tuesday last in Symphony Hall, will be repeated on Tuesday of next week. Again the music will be sung and played without omission—no; not of a single decorative air—the first part between four and six in the afternoon; the second between eight and ten in the evening. As before, the version used will be that made by Dr. Muck which restores or approximates the orchestral accompaniments or obligati of Bach. The two bands, with Mr. de Voto as pianist and Mr. Marshall as organist, will come from the Symphony Orchestra; while the dou[illegible] chorus is the body of singe[illegible] within many years in thi[illegible] by Mr. Townsend and [illegible] Muck. The solo-singers [illegible] anew, viz., Mr. Murp[illegible] genuine "Bac[illegible] of the Evang[illegible] Mrs Hi[illegible]

GLOBE
FEB. 4, 1918

MAHLER SYMPHONY WITH CHORUS REPEATED

Mahler's second or "Resurrection" Symphony, performed for the first time in Boston a week ago last Tuesday, was repeated at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Another large audience heard an excellent performance by the same forces which gave the first; the enlarged Symphony Orchestra, the fine chorus, May Peterson and Merle Alcock, respectively solo soprano and contralto, and Dr Muck, under whose direction all was given.

TRANSCRIPT
FEB. 7, 1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

Soles and Song

A SENSITIVE listener to recent concerts of choral music in Boston—or for that matter anywhere else—sends to this department a veritable counsel of perfection. In his view the banked singers of such occasions, especially when they number two or three hundred, should be schooled not only to pianissimi in their song but also to turn the leaves of their music-books so that the sound shall not cross the hall like the rustle of a forest in a breeze. Furthermore, he would forbid such women-singers to wear skirts of any cloth that crackles; while he would compel them and the singing-men as well to set rubber heels and soles to their shoes. He is moved, it seems, to this extravagant suggestion by a disappointment recent and bitter. He is a frequent, ardent and deeply engrossed listener to music. As often as he may he hears a choral piece. Once and again, it wraps him close in illusion of the music and the text. Then, of a sudden, three hundred-odd choristers rise in their places at the conductor's signal; rise by no means noiselessly and so tramp his illusion under foot. With difficulty he regains it, only to find it threatened again, when simultaneously the three hundred-odd turn a leaf in as many music-books before them.

Being a speculative and whimsical person, our correspondent has now and then visioned idly a chorus as still in down-sittings and uprisings, in the turning of leaves, as it was sonorous in song. Ten days ago, at the first performance of Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony," he believed his vision fulfilled. For when the chorus first entered the Finale, in its chairs it sat and sang, while no contacts of foot with floor, no rustling of skirts disturbed his absorption in a truly beautiful music. But before long, when more was required of the singers than soft, sustained phrases, up they rose, and harsh and disillusioning upon his ears fell the inevitable sounds of their uprising, while once at least he heard them turn three hundred leaves. Spoiled was the fullness and the fineness of his pleasure. Wherefore he entreats Mr. Townsend and Dr. Muck to enjoin soundless skirts, slippers and boots upon their chorus and to train it so that the turning of a leaf shall be as noiseless as the fall of one in the woods. If they cannot do it with such a devoted chorus, alike to leaders and music, who, as he truly says, can? On the other hand, both those conductors have learned, out of long and hard experience, to walk warily with the limitations of human nature.

TRANSCRIPT
FEB. 2, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A New Symphony by the Swedish Composer, Alfven, and an Unfamiliar Tone-Poem by the Scotsman, Wallace, on Dr. Muck's Next Programme — Mahler's Choral Symphony—The Second of Mr. Kreisler's Chamber Concerts

A NEW symphony written by a composer, none of whose music has hitherto been heard in Boston, stands on Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday and Saturday—the symphony in E major, No. 3, of Hugo Alfvén, Swedish composer of Stockholm and Upsala. He is now a man of forty-five who made his studies in Sweden and with César Thomson, in Brussels, who began his career as a violinist, but is now pursuing it as composer and teacher. The symphony to be heard next week dates from 1905 and made its way to the United States through the Minneapolis and the Chicago Orchestras. It runs in fairly orthodox form through the appointed four movements: Allegro con Brio; Andante: Presto and Allegro con Brio, and it is written for full modern orchestra with numerous wind choir and plentiful brass. Throughout it is a warmly imagined, animated, highly colored music.

Another piece on Dr. Muck's list will sound almost as new, the tone-poem, "Villon," heard at a pair of Symphony Concerts in the spring of 1912 and thereafter left on the library shelves. The Scotsman, William Wallace, wrote it in the years when he preferred the making of music to the philosophizing about it which more recently has occupied his pen. The tone-poem, composed for full orchestra, reflects the moods of Villon's wild life as versifier and vagabond of mediæval Paris, taking as texts, so to say, lines from his more familiar pieces. For familiar music, between symphony and symphonic poem, Mr. Witek, the concert-master of the orchestra, whose quality the public of the concerts has long known and applauded, will play Bruch's songful concerto in G minor for

HERALD
FEB. 4, 1918

MAHLER SYMPHONY HEARD SECOND TIME

Large Audience Enjoys Repetition of Stupendous Composition

Gustav Mahler's mighty Symphony in C minor, No. 2, was given its second performance in Boston yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall by a chorus of 350, trained by Stephen Townsend, the Boston Symphony orchestra; May Peterson, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto, and Dr. Karl Muck, conductor. There was a large and appreciative audience.

A second hearing of the work deepened the impression made by the first and heightened the appreciation of a superb performance. In whatever spirit the hearer approaches the work, whether it be accepted as absolute music or according to the interpretative programs of various commentators, there is in the mind of the listener the inevitable thought of humanity's struggle with existence; man striving blindly after this or that ideal only to learn in time the futility of the struggle. Moods of doubt, bitterness, despair, anguish, irony, passion, religious contemplation and poignantly expressed. Then comes comfort and ultimate peace embracing all humanity, with the reassurances of immortality voiced in the stupendous final movement.

Mahler used every conceivable orchestral color with genius on a colossal canvas. The work is not, however, without its weak spots. There are moments of distinctive reiteration in the first movement. There are other instances when orchestral anticlimaxes disturb the continuity of thought and momentarily lessen the grandeur of the whole. Yet the main impression is dramatic, striking, overpowering.

The performance has already been justly and superlatively praised. Extraordinary orchestral eloquence rivalled the beauty of timbre and fine spirit displayed by the chorus. The controlling genius of Dr. Muck has never shone brighter. There was hearty applause for him and for orchestra, chorus and soloists.

RECORD
FEB. 1, 1918

On Sunday afternoon Dr. Muck repeats the Mahler "Resurrection" Symphony with the same large orchestra, chorus and soloists, Mae Peterson and Merle Alcock, who appeared at the first performance some time ago.

It is not generally known that Dr. Muck was constantly consulted by Mahler during the years that Mahler was at work on the Symphony. When he began to write it he was Dr. Muck's assistant at Prague, and it was largely on account of Dr. Muck's advice that it was cut from seven movements to the present five.

With Dr. Muck the performance of this Symphony is largely a labor of love. He had profound admiration and affection for Mahler, whom he knew well for 25 years. He regarded him not only as one of the greatest conductors of the world, but as one of the great composers of our time, a man of great visions, of great imagination and tremendous ability.

POST
FEB. 17, 1918

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Muck, will give its regular concert in Saunders Theatre, Harvard University, Cambridge, next Thursday night, Feb. 21. Here the soloist will be Ethel Leginska, who is playing in Boston on the two following days. She will play the same work she is to play in Boston, Liapounoff's Concerto in E-flat minor. The symphony will be the bright, attractive work by the Swedish composer, Alfven, which was played for the first time in Boston 10 days ago. The other number on the programme will be Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration."

POST
FEB. 17, 1918

Ethel Leginska will make her first appearance in Boston as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at the 15th pair of concerts next Friday afternoon, Feb. 22, and Saturday evening, Feb. 23. Madame Leginska has played at one of the out-of-town concerts with the orchestra last year with much success. Here she will play a work new to Boston, the Concerto in E-flat Major by the Russian composer, Liapounoff. Fritz Delius, "In a Summer Garden," has appeared on the Symphony programme but once, at the pair of concerts April 19 and 20, 1912, Mr. Fiedler conducting. The work was composed in the spring of 1908 and had its first appearance in December of that year in London. It may be said that this music is an impressionistic landscape. The prevailing tone color is sombre and there are two principal themes, the second of which is expressive of tender yearning. The symphony will be Brahms' in F-major No. 3.

ADVERTISER
FEB. 4, 1918

MAHLER SYMPHONY IS REPEATED HERE

Symphony Hall Filled for Concert of Orchestra and Chorus

Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony, which made such a favorable impression at its first performance, January 22, was repeated yesterday afternoon before an audience that filled Symphony Hall, the work being given, as at the first concert, by the Symphony Orchestra, the Townsend Chorus. The solo artists were Miss May Peterson, soprano; Miss Merle Alcock, contralto, and Dr. Muck, conductor.

A second hearing of this composition confirms the opinion that it is a work of the most extraordinary contrasts, and of amazingly unequal merit, for the heavens are rent in twain, and the depths are broken up by cyclonic outbursts of pure, unadulterated noise, followed by passages of tender beauty and much melodic charm. The second movement would make an excellent number for a "Pop" concert; the Scherzo leaves nothing for the future to say concerning bizarre effects and unearthly combinations of orchestral sound.

The alto voice declaims a quiet passage and the orchestral forces are again let loose for a final trial of strength, when occurs the most effective point in the entire work, namely, the entrance of the chorus in a hushed and simple chorale-like strain, which is supremely beautiful and a welcome relief after the athletic contests between the brass and the kettle-drums.

The final chorus with orchestra and organ, works up to a wonderful climax, thrilling in its intensity, and an overpowering emphasis is thus placed on the closing text, "Death, oh, to me, Life restoring!"

In brief, the last ten minutes of the symphony are worth all the balance and one is reminded of Southey's famous lines:

"But what good came of it all," quoth little Peterkin.
"Why, that I cannot tell," said he.
"But 'twas a famous victory."

HERALD FEB. 16, 1918

at the mill

SYMPHONY WILL NOT PLAY IN SPRINGFIELD

[Special Dispatch to the Herald.]

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 16—Dr. Karl Muck and his musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have cancelled their concert engagement in Springfield. They were to appear in the Municipal Auditorium Feb. 27.

Notice was served by the city property committee, in charge of the rental of the structure, that the orchestra and Dr. Muck would be allowed to give their concert providing all German and Austrian members were eliminated. This decision barred 22 Germans and 8 Austrians.

Since this took away one-third of the orchestra membership and prevented a finished performance, the rest refused to play, fearing a poorly given program would endanger the organization's reputation. A special concert plan was refused.

TRANSCRIPT
FEB. 14, 1918

Items and Announcements

At the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Cambridge on Thursday evening, of next week, Dr. Muck will repeat Alfvén's symphony, lately heard in Boston, for which, seemingly, the conductor has a singular affection, and Strauss's tone-poem, "Death and Transfiguration," as yet unheard this season at Symphony Hall. Between these two numbers, Mme. Leginska, the pianist, will play for the first time hereabouts, the brilliant and intricate concerto in E-flat minor of Lyapunov.

HERALD, FEB. 17, 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Ethel Leginska, one of the most interesting of women pianists of our time, will make her first appearance in Boston as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at the 15th pair of concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Mme. Leginska has played at one of the out of town concerts with the orchestra last year with much success. Here she will play a work new to Boston, the Concerto in E flat minor by Liapounoff. Delius's symphonic poem (if such it may be called), entitled "In a Summer Garden," will be performed. It appeared on the Symphony program but once, at the pair of concerts April 19 and 20, 1912, Mr. Fiedler conducting. The work was composed in the spring of 1908 and had its first performance in December of that year in London. It may be said that the work is an impressionistic landscape, the prevailing tone color is sombre and there are two principal themes—the second of which is expressive of tender yearning. The symphony will be Brahms's in F major No. 3.

POST FEB 1918

HEAR COPELAND IN NEW PIECES

Pianist Excels Himself in Masterly Recital

BY OLIN DOWNES

The performances given by George Copeland, pianist, last night in Jordan Hall were in certain particulars unique, even for this remarkable artist. The programme was refreshing for its balance as well as its novelty. It contained new works by modern French and Spanish composers, and it contained works of the standard repertoire, which had not been played in public by Mr. Copeland for at least many seasons. In both groups the pianist excelled himself.

The reproach of a lack of breadth or of virility in performance would have fallen flat before the playing of the Chopin Fantasie and the Schumann "Faschingschwank aus Wien," in which the composer eluded the dictum of the police of Vienna by incorporating the tune of the "Marseillaise," then forbiden public performance, in his opening movement. But why Mr. Copeland should have elected to cut the Fantasy in half is beyond us.

This was unfortunate. Otherwise, it has been seldom in the memory of the writer that Mr. Copeland has displayed so impressively the gifts which set him apart from, and in some respects beyond, any other pianist known to the American public.

It is difficult to describe the fascination of his art. To say he has exquisite rhythm, a command of tone values that is little short of miraculous, a technic which is so much a part of the musical thought that one listens, mystified, while the thing is being done which utterly eludes examination or analysis—is to define, but not to convey.

This art is felt, rather than seen, to be supremely logical, and incomparably just and subtle in its values. Also, it has a strange flavor of the antique.

Most happily was this particular quality shown in the first "Gnossienne" of that "fantasiste," Eric Satie, whose name is not Eric Satie, but who prefers that name, as he once informed the writer, because it is "more Norman, more Scandinavian." The spirit of the antique pervades this little piece, with its strange and fantastical variants on the simplest of themes. This piece Mr. Copeland had to repeat. Also the "Dance of Daphnis," presumably from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Cloe," which sounded more like a zephyr than the noise of a piano. The "Bourree" of Roger-Ducasse, a gay piece, found favor. Mr. Engel's "Peau d'Espagne" is based on a cheap, inherently commonplace theme, decked out with odd and extraneous harmonies. Far better, far more of a piece, and more individual in harmony and mood, is his "Somras." De Falla's "Andalusia" is noisy and exciting, and was so performed. But Grovlez' Reverie—at least as played by Mr. Copeland—is an exquisite composition.

The audience was numerous, and tardy. So was the pianist, who did not begin playing till half-past eight. At the last Mr. Copeland played a number of encores. The audience was wildly enthusiastic, and loath to let him go.

TRANSCRIPT, FEB. 9, 1918 -

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

THREE PIECES, TWO NOVEL AND ONE TRANSFIGURED

A Swedish Symphony of Alfven with Little to Commend It Except a Timely Cheerfulness and Energy—The Scotsman's, Wallace, Excellent Tone-Poem of Vagabond Villon—For Wonder of the Day, a Concerto of Bruch, Played by Mr. Witek and Transfigured

WHATEVER the intrinsic merit of Hugo Alfvén's symphony in E major—and even Dr. Muck and his orchestra could not make it seem large or individual—the music was good to hear in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. It sounded cheerful and so small a part of this town as was shut within the walls of that auditorium needed, like the rest of it, such a tonic. It sounded energetic, which virtue was antidote to a sort of lethargic discomfort also discoverable without these walls. It even sounded youthful and gay, which qualities are excellent medicine for perceptible moods of the present hereabouts; while, best of all, it was the music of a man doing the job he had set for himself and letting no circumstance check his zest for it. So did the chances—and perhaps the fancies—of the day favor Hugo Alfvén, composer of Stockholm and Upsala, when for the first time one, and presumably the best-liked, of his symphonies was heard in Boston. He wrote it twelve years ago when he was a relatively young man in his early thirties, doubtless without the remotest notion that it would ever be played four thousand mlies away and at a moment when it would sound twenty times more likable than it really is--so high-spirited and pleasure-giving in fact that one cynic of the lobby was sure that the Storrovian bureaucracy would promptly "close it up."

The shortcoming of the symphony is the lack in the music of much that even those high spirits do not offset. The motives from which Alfvén expands and upbuilds it are conventionally songful—quick-paced and stoutly rhythmed in the first Allegro; thick-voiced and vanilla-flavored in the Andante; brisk and perky in the Scherzo; full-mouthed and ardent in the Finale. They are serviceable motives; they give a short and surface-pleasure to the ear; but they yield little trace of individual and fertile imagination. So, equally, with the invention and the handling Alfvén exercises upon them. He is ready enough; he is energetic almost to a fault; he surrenders himself wholly to the conventional mood of the movement—vigorous in the two Allegros, pensive in the Andante, fanciful in the Presto, he has besides a quick sense of ways and means.

For outcome the music flows forward in commonplace period upon commonplace period with little but sheer exuberance in such process to commend it. Alfven is not imaginative with harmonic backgrounds or play of instrumental voices; he is no more than an expert artisan in the manipulation of his themes; he is prone to energetic repetitions which are seldom Beethovenish; his prompting moods are not elastic or enkindling; he has a retentive memory for the operas—say of Wagner and Bizet—that he has heard; sometimes even, he pads until he can discover the next thing to do with his materia musica; self-criticism he knows not.

Occasionally, as at the end of the first movement and in the return of the fanfare of trumpets in the Finale, there are signs of individual imagination and procedure; but elsewhere the symphony indicates in him no other distinguishing trait than an unquenchable exuberance in music-making. The piece is not in the least Swedish, as much of Alfvén's other music is reported to be; any composer like-minded and like-talented with him might have written it anywhere. Yet beside the inert and groping self-consciousness of many a young composer, that exuberance yields a momentary pleasure—especially when conductor and orchestra take such an Alfvén at his word and rattle off a symphony, as they did yesterday, as though the playing was as much fun to them as the writing was to him. Whether the audience had quite so good a time in the listening was somewhat doubtful. There has been warmer applause in Symphony Hall for a new piece.

Vitality, indeed, was the order of the day with the orchestra not only in the performance of Alfven's symphony, but also in that of Bruch's concerto in G Minor, with Mr. Witek rising from his place as concert-master and returning to it (as his good custom is) to play the part for "solo violin." The piece is sixty years old now; and though the composer still drags out a senile existence in the suburbs of Berlin, he and his music seem to belong to another tonal generation than ours. Yet, if ever "Be thou perpetual" was writen over violin pieces, it stands above Bruch's two concertos—there is a third which Mr. Heifetz lately played—and his "Scottish Fantasia," because, as the virtuoso-dialect puts it, they are so "violinistic." Being interpreted the word signifies that they invite the songful voice of the violin, give the violinist opportunity for displayful "passage-work," "lie well" for bow and strings; and on the instant, if the player half improves his opportunity, please the average hearer. Whether they, and this first concerto in particular, are anything more is dubious, especially when incessant repetition by the half-trained or the irredeemably mediocre has made them sound hackneyed even from an Ysaye or a Kreisler. Of course they outshine in uality of invention and interest of procedure the merely virtuoso concertos that Wieniawski, Vieuxtemps, Ernst and other illustrious fiddlers wrote out of the technique of the violin in that same vanished day; but they remain none the less of the music for violin that depends for interest chiefly upon the playing.

With one mind, yesterday, Mr. Witek, Dr. Muck and the orchestra with them, seemed resolved to make Bruch's concerto "sound"—with tonal life, color, imagination, even ardor. They gave to the prelude the voice of stirred, expectant declamation; the nicely calculated "passage-work" of the succeeding movement came from Mr. Witek like spirited improvisation in which the orchestra eagerly joined; warm and rich ran the passages of instrumental song. Akin was the Adagio, sustained in flawless flow by both violinist and orchestra, expanding into more and more ardent melody, phrased and paragraphed as though it were of Mozartean aptness of division and loveliness of progress, touched with quick, sincere sentiment but never droned into sentimentality, luminous against the finely shaded background of the assisting choirs. It was indeed Bruch transfigured above his usual commonplace by sheer intensive beauty of voice and handling. Yet again with the Finale. Not in long recollection has it moved with such snap of rhythm, zest of progress, with such return of the solo voice, each time in more fiery accent If the slow movement were Bruch transfigured, the Finale was Bruch revivified Hardly before in his eight years in Boston has Mr. Witek played with so large, lustrous tone, with Elman-like and communicating zest in measures of violinistic skill and ornament, with Ysaye-like richness of voice and intensity of curve in sustained song, with Kreisler-like alertness to rhythm and return. For once Mr. Witek struck technical, musical, emotional fire. The Czech blood in him seemed to tell in spite of long years in Berlin; the American air he has breathed since 1910 may have lent stirring aid. The freedom, the ardor that he has been gaining for long in his work as leader of the strings, now spoke clear and bright out of the concerto. Though he sits within an orchestra, he is an eminent violinist. With reason a friendly and familiar audience applauded him.

For preface to concerto and symphony stood the tone-poem, "Villon" by the Scotsman, William Wallace, who long since forsook the composition of music for the writing of philosophic treatises about it, perhaps believing with reason that meditation and research would carry him farther on the printed page than would imagination and handiwork in tones upon ruled and lithographed staves. Those that have heard other music by Mr. Wallace report him limited and mannered in melodic thought, rhythmic range, harmonic diversity. He has but one voice, they say, yet that voice heard in an isolated piece, like the tone-poem of yesterday, both serves the composer's purpose and interests his hearers. After the fashion of our musical time he has tried to characterize Villon in his measures, bidding us hear with the ear of the imagination, the vagabond poet roistering among the taverns of mediæval Paris, singing the praises of the trulls and thieves who are his companions, or else mournfully meditating over their vanished ghosts, hymning Our Lady for his poor old mother, vanishing finally into the mists of poetry and romance. Wherefore Mr. Wallace has set appropriate fragments of Villon's verses over the divisions of his music.

With this stimulating hint, the piece speaks readily for itself. It does suggest in tones the Villon who loved his vagabondage, who had his zest for tavern bouts and routs, who being poet, idealized his fellow-roisterers, who could turn mystic and pitiful, and who comes and goes in our latter-day imagination, with his troop of youth, through the lights and shadows of the Paris of Louis XI., to the rhythms and the echoes of romance. Mr. Wallace has been happy musically in the expression of these things; he has been truly poetic in the suggestion, at the end, of the final vision of Villon. He has written music that develops and unites itself symphonically and yet bears his imaginings of Villon upon its course. He is apt with the characterizing and intensive phrase, with the heightening touch of instrumental color. He is not so individual in his broader melody; it moves too steadily in large progressions to square-toed rhythms. It suggests the fulness of body, the amplitude of march that are already among the conventions, from Strauss downward, of much contemporary music. This melody is almost too amply, too securely songful, too "effective" for such a reckless and moody figure as Villon. Yet for most ears, that do not hear it too often, there is no resisting its largeness.

H. T. P.

-HERALD, FEB. 23, 1918-

SYMPHONY GIVES 15TH CONCERT

Mme. Leginska, Pianiste, Makes First Appearance with Orchestra

PROGRAM WILL BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE

The 15th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Brahms, Symphony No. 3; Liapounoff, Concerto for piano, No. 1, op. 4; Delius, "In a Summer Garden."

Dr. Muck and the orchestra gave a very fine performance of the symphony, which some justly prefer to the other three. It has no pages equal in imagination to the wonderful introduction to the finale of the first; it has nothing in it like the architectural grandeur of the fourth's finale; but as a whole, it is the most poetic of the four. Brahms wrote nothing more commanding than the opening of the first movement. Page after page thereafter might be cited in praise. And in this symphony the natural austerity of the composer is mellowed, his melancholy, as in the third movement, is tender, wistful, not pessimistic.

Mme. Leginska, favorably known here through her recitals, played in Boston for the first time with the orchestra. Liapounoff's concerto was heard here for the first time, although it is nearly 30 years old. It is a singular composition, first of all a parade piece for a pianist, without impressive or emotional contents. No one, hearing it, would at once name the composer a Russian. The influence of Liszt is observable. Liapounoff must have had the Hungarian abbe's concerto in E flat major in mind, but his own is far inferior to that dazzling composition. The most noticeable feature of Liapounoff's is the use of stormy brass as a background for solo bravura. The mild episodes in the concerto are a diluted blend of Liszt and Chopin.

Mme. Leginska, to use an expression of the street, played the concerto "like a house a-fire." Her performance was forcible and brilliant, but she also displayed delicacy and refinement and gave some soul to the pages of thin sentiment. The notes were on the rack, and this surprised those who were unaware of causes for her nervousness. She evidently did not need the engraved assurance. Vladimir de Pachmann and Raoul Pugno were at ease with a concerto only when the piano part was on the rack. We remember hearing Clara Schumann play in like manner.

The music of Frederick Delius is still comparatively unknown in Boston. "Paris" and "Brigg Fair" have been played at Symphony concerts but Mr. Fiedler was not the man to interpret them. He acquainted us with the piece played yesterday. Until yesterday the peculiar idiom of Delius was foreign to us. Surely there are beautiful things in this "Summer Garden"—witness the pages beginning with the cantilena for the violas; the pages of the approach to the emotional climax; the subtle charm of the ending. It has been said that Delius is strongly influenced by Brahms. We believe the accusation to be unjust. By this "Summer Garden" Delius is allied to the modern French, Debussy and the others, although his "impressionism" has substance as well as poetic finesse.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Dukas, Symphony in Three Parts (first time); Saint-Saens, Concerto for violin No. 3 (Irma Seydel, violinist); Sibelius, "Pojhola's Daughter" and "Nightride and Sunrise."

American
- Feb. 23, 1918 -

IRMA SEYDEL SOLOIST WITH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Irma Seydel, the much admired violinist of this city, will make her first appearance as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at its Boston concerts next Friday afternoon, March 1, and Saturday evening, March 2. She will play Saint-Saens' concerto in B minor, No. 3.

Dr. Muck has placed on this program one of the important novelties of the season, the symphony of the Frenchman, Dukas, which is entitled "Symphonie en trois partes."

Transcript
Nov. 19, 1917

Globe
FEB. 23, 1918

LEGINSKA SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Mme Ethel Leginska, the English pianist, appeared yesterday for the first time in Boston as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra, playing Liapounoff's fourth piano concerto, its first performance in this city. Dr Muck's program opened with the third Symphony by Brahms, the closing number being "In a Summer Garden," the seldom-played composition by Frederick Delius.

The concerto by the Russian Liapounoff is in one movement, the various moods being frequently contrasted by bizarre orchestration, which, of course, is considered typical of the Slav style of writing. Some of the thematic material, that in the gentler mood, is expressed in charming bits of melody, and there is a rushing finale in fortissimo that taxes the pianist heavily.

Mme Leginska, who has established an excellent reputation by her artistry shown in some half-dozen recitals here, performed her task as soloist with commendable zeal. Her technical competency was again in pleasing evidence, her runs in chord passages were brilliant and very rapid and her performance was one of well-sustained merit. She was quite equal to sustaining the piano part in the thunderous finale. The artist was recalled many times.

The Brahms Symphony and the somewhat somber "In a Summer Garden" were given the effective interpretations expected of the orchestra.

The young Boston violinist, Irma Seydel, will be the soloist next week.

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 25th, at 3.30
Mme. SCHUMANN - HEINK
ONLY RECITAL THIS SEASON
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c.
ThFM(A) n 15

JORDAN HALL
MONDAY EVENING, NOV. 19th, at 8.15
PERCY GRAINGER
The Australian Pianist in Recital
BENEFIT BOSTON MET. CHAPTER RED CROSS
Tickets 50c to $2.00, Symphony Hall.
FM(A) n 16

JORDAN HALL
WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOV. 21, at 8.15
GEORGE
COPELAND
THE EMINENT PIANIST
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 50c, Symphony Hall.
ThFM(A) n 15

JORDAN HALL
NEXT THURSDAY EVE., NOV. 22, at 8.15
First Concert
THE FLONZALEY QUARTET
Program—Quartet A major (Kochel 464). Mozart; Quartet D-flat major, op. 15, Dohnanyi; Quartet D major No. 4, Haydn.
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c, at Symphony Hall.

JORDAN HALL
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 24, at 3
HELEN ALLEN HUNT
MEZZO-CONTRALTO
ISIDORE LUCKSTONE, Pianist.
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 50c, Symphony Hall.
FM(A) n 16

JORDAN HALL
MONDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 26, AT 3
SOCIETE DES INSTRUMENTS ANCIENS
AND
MME. GABRIELLE GILLS
The Brilliant French Soprano
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 50c, Symphony Hall.

TRANSCRIPT, FEB. 9, 1918 -

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

THREE PIECES, TWO NOVEL AND ONE TRANSFIGURED

A Swedish Symphony of Alfven with Little to Commend It Except a Timely Cheerfulness and Energy—The Scotsman's, Wallace, Excellent Tone-Poem of Vagabond Villon—For Wonder of the Day, a Concerto of Bruch, Played by Mr. Witek and Transfigured

WHATEVER the intrinsic merit of Hugo Alfvén's symphony in E major—and even Dr. Muck and his orchestra could not make it seem large or individual—the music was good to hear in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. It sounded cheerful and so small a part of this town as was shut within the walls of that auditorium needed, like the rest of it, such a tonic. It sounded energetic, which virtue was antidote to a sort of lethargic discomfort also discoverable without these walls. It even sounded youthful and gay, which qualities are excellent medicine for perceptible moods of the present hereabouts; while, best of all, it was the music of a man doing the job he had set for himself and letting no circumstance check his zest for it. So did the chances—and perhaps the fancies—of the day favor Hugo Alfvén, composer of Stockholm and Upsala, when for the first time one, and presumably the best-liked, of his symphonies was heard in Boston. He wrote it twelve years ago when he was a relatively young man in his early thirties, doubtless without the remotest notion that it would ever be played four thousand mlies away and at a moment when it would sound twenty times more likable than it really is—so high-spirited and pleasure-giving in fact that one cynic of the lobby was sure that the Storrovian bureaucracy would promptly "close it up."

The shortcoming of the symphony is the lack in the music of much that even those high spirits do not offset. The motives from which Alfvén expands and upbuilds it are conventionally songful—quick-paced and stoutly rhythmed in the first Allegro; thick-voiced and vanilla-flavored in the Andante; brisk and perky in the Scherzo; full-mouthed and ardent in the Finale. They are serviceable motives; they give a short and surface-pleasure to the ear; but they yield little trace of individual and fertile imagination. So, equally, with the invention and the handling Alfvén exercises upon them. He is ready enough; he is energetic almost to a fault; he surrenders himself wholly to the conventional mood of the movement—vigorous in the two Allegros, pensive in the Andante, fanciful in the Presto, he has besides a quick sense of ways and means.

For outcome the music flows forward in commonplace period upon commonplace period with little but sheer exuberance in such process to commend it. Alfven is not imaginative with harmonic backgrounds or play of instrumental voices; he is no more than an expert artisan in the manipulation of his themes; he is prone to energetic repetitions which are seldom Beethovenish; his prompting moods are not elastic or enkindling; he has a retentive memory for the operas—say of Wagner and Bizet—that he has heard; sometimes even, he pads until he can discover the next thing to do with his materia musica; self-criticism he knows not.

Occasionally, as at the end of the first movement and in the return of the fanfare of trumpets in the Finale, there are signs of individual imagination and procedure; but elsewhere the symphony indicates in him no other distinguishing trait than an unquenchable exuberance in music-making. The piece is not in the least Swedish, as much of Alfvén's other music is reported to be; any composer like-minded and like-talented with him might have written it anywhere. Yet beside the inert and groping self-consciousness of many a young composer, that exuberance yields a momentary pleasure—especially when conductor and orchestra take such an Alfvén at his word and rattle off a symphony, as they did yesterday, as though the playing was as much fun to them as the writing was to him. Whether the audience had quite so good a time in the listening was somewhat doubtful. There has been warmer applause in Symphony Hall for a new piece.

Vitality, indeed, was the order of the day with the orchestra not only in the performance of Alfven's symphony, but also in that of Bruch's concerto in G Minor, with Mr. Witek rising from his place as concert-master and returning to it (as his good custom is) to play the part for "solo violin." The piece is sixty years old now; and though the composer still drags out a senile existence in the suburbs of Berlin, he and his music seem to belong to another tonal generation than ours. Yet, if ever "Be thou perpetual" was writen over violin pieces, it stands above Bruch's two concertos—there is a third which Mr. Heifetz lately played—and his "Scottish Fantasia," because, as the virtuoso-dialect puts it, they are so "violinistic." Being interpreted the word signifies that they invite the songful voice of the violin, give the violinist opportunity for displayful "passage-work," "lie well" for bow and strings; and on the instant, if the player half improves his opportunity, please the average hearer. Whether they, and this first concerto in particular, are anything more is dubious, especially when incessant repetition by the half-trained or the irredeemably mediocre has made them sound hackneyed even from an Ysaye or a Kreisler. Of course they outshire in uality of invention and interest of procedure the merely virtuoso concertos that Wieniawski, Vieuxtemps, Ernst and other illustrious fiddlers wrote out of the technique of the violin in that same vanished day; but they remain none the less of the music for violin that depends for interest chiefly upon the playing.

With one mind, yesterday, Mr. Witek, Dr. Muck and the orchestra with them, seemed resolved to make Bruch's concerto "sound"—with tonal life, color, imagination, even ardor. They gave to the prelude the voice of stirred, expectant declamation; the nicely calculated "passage-work" of the succeeding movement came from Mr. Witek like spirited improvisation in which the orchestra eagerly joined; warm and rich ran the passages of instrumental song. Akin was the Adagio, sustained in flawless flow by both violinist and orchestra, expanding into more and more ardent melody, phrased and paragraphed as though it were of Mozartean aptness of division and loveliness of progress, touched with quick, sincere sentiment but never droned into sentimentality, luminous against the finely shaded background of the assisting choirs. It was indeed Bruch transfigured above his usual commonplace by sheer intensive beauty of voice and handling. Yet again with the Finale. Not in long recollection has it moved with such snap of rhythm, zest of progress, with such return of the solo voice, each time in more fiery accent. If the slow movement were Bruch transfigured, the Finale was Bruch revivified. Hardly before in his eight years in Boston has Mr. Witek played with so large, lustrous tone, with Elman-like and communicating zest in measures of violinistic skill and ornament, with Ysaye-like richness of voice and intensity of curve in sustained song, with Kreisler-like alertness to rhythm and return. For once Mr. Witek struck technical, musical, emotional fire. The Czech blood in him seemed to tell in spite of long years in Berlin; the American air he has breathed since 1910 may have lent stirring aid. The freedom, the ardor that he has been gaining for long in his work as leader of the strings, now spoke clear and bright out of the concerto. Though he sits within an orchestra, he is an eminent violinist. With reason a friendly and familiar audience applauded him.

For preface to concerto and symphony stood the tone-poem, "Villon" by the Scotsman, William Wallace, who long since forsook the composition of music for the writing of philosophic treatises about it, perhaps believing with reason that meditation and research would carry him farther on the printed page than would imagination and handiwork in tones upon ruled and lithographed staves. Those that have heard other music by Mr. Wallace report him limited and mannered in melodic thought, rhythmic range, harmonic diversity. He has but one voice, they say, yet that voice heard in an isolated piece, like the tone-poem of yesterday, both serves the composer's purpose and interests his hearers. After the fashion of our musical time he has tried to characterize Villon in his measures, bidding us hear with the ear of the imagination, the vagabond poet roistering among the taverns of mediæval Paris, singing the praises of the trulls and thieves who are his companions, or else mournfully meditating over their vanished ghosts, hymning Our Lady for his poor old mother, vanishing finally into the mists of poetry and romance. Wherefore Mr. Wallace has set appropriate fragments of Villon's verses over the divisions of his music.

With this stimulating hint, the piece speaks readily for itself. It does suggest in tones the Villon who loved his vagabondage, who had his zest for tavern bouts and routs, who being poet, idealized his fellow-roisterers, who could turn mystic and pitiful, and who comes and goes in our latter-day imagination, with his troop of youth, through the lights and shadows of the Paris of Louis XI., to the rhythms and the echoes of romance. Mr. Wallace has been happy musically in the expression of these things; he has been truly poetic in the suggestion, at the end, of the final vision of Villon. He has written music that develops and unites itself symphonically and yet bears his imaginings of Villon upon its course. He is apt with the characterizing and intensive phrase, with the heightening touch of instrumental color. He is not so individual in his broader melody; it moves too steadily in large progressions to square-toed rhythms. It suggests the fulness of body, the amplitude of march that are already among the conventions, from Strauss downward, of much contemporary music. This melody is almost too amply, too securely songful, too "effective" for such a reckless and moody figure as Villon. Yet for most ears, that do not hear it too often, there is no resisting its largeness.

H. T. P.

HERALD, FEB. 23, 1918 -

SYMPHONY GIVES 15TH CONCERT

Mme. Leginska, Pianiste, Makes First Appearance with Orchestra

PROGRAM WILL BE REPEATED TONIGHT

By PHILIP HALE

The 15th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Brahms, Symphony No. 3; Liapounoff, Concerto for piano, No. 1, op. 4; Delius, "In a Summer Garden."

Dr. Muck and the orchestra gave a very fine performance of the symphony, which some justly prefer to the other three. It has no pages equal in imagination to the wonderful introduction to the finale of the first; it has nothing in it like the architectural grandeur of the fourth's finale; but as a whole, it is the most poetic of the four. Brahms wrote nothing more commanding than the opening of the first movement. Page after page thereafter might be cited in praise. And in this symphony the natural austerity of the composer is mellowed, his melancholy, as in the third movement, is tender, wistful, not pessimistic.

Mme. Leginska, favorably known here through her recitals, played in Boston for the first time with the orchestra. Liapounoff's concerto was heard here for the first time, although it is nearly 30 years old. It is a singular composition, first of all a parade piece for a pianist, without impressive or emotional contents. No one, hearing it, would at once name the composer a Russian. The influence of Liszt is observable. Liapounoff must have had the Hungarian abbe's concerto in E flat major in mind, but his own is far inferior to that dazzling composition. The most noticeable feature of Liapounoff's is the use of stormy brass as a background for solo bravura. The mild episodes in the concerto are a diluted blend of Liszt and Chopin.

Mme. Leginska, to use an expression of the street, played the concerto "like a house a-fire." Her performance was forcible and brilliant, but she also displayed delicacy and refinement and gave some soul to the pages of thin sentiment. The notes were on the rack, and this surprised those who were unaware of causes for her nervousness. She evidently did not need the engraved assurance. Vladimir de Pachmann and Raoul Pugno were at ease with a concerto only when the piano part was on the rack. We remember hearing Clara Schumann play in like manner.

The music of Frederick Delius is still comparatively unknown in Boston. "Paris" and "Brigg Fair" have been played at Symphony concerts but Mr. Fiedler was not the man to interpret them. He acquainted us with the piece played yesterday. Until yesterday the peculiar idiom of Delius was foreign to us. Surely there are beautiful things in this "Summer Garden"—witness the pages beginning with the cantilena for the violas; the pages of the approach to the emotional climax; the subtle charm of the ending. It has been said that Delius is strongly influenced by Brahms. We believe the accusation to be unjust. By this "Summer Garden" Delius is allied to the modern French, Debussy and the others, although his "impressionism" has substance as well as poetic finesse.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of the concerts next week will be as follows: Dukas, Symphony in Three Parts (first time); Saint-Saens, Concerto for violin No. 3 (Irma Seydel, violinist); Sibelius, "Pojhola's Daughter" and "Nightride and Sunrise."

American - Feb. 23, 1918 -

IRMA SEYDEL SOLOIST WITH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Irma Seydel, the much admired violinist of this city, will make her first appearance as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra at its Boston concerts next Friday afternoon, March 1, and Saturday evening, March 2. She will play Saint-Saens' concerto in B minor, No. 3.

Dr. Muck has placed on this program one of the important novelties of the season, the symphony of the Frenchman, Dukas, which is entitled "Symphonie en trois partes."

Transcript Nov. 19, 1917

SYMPHONY HALL
SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 25th, at 3.30
Mme. SCHUMANN - HEINK
ONLY RECITAL THIS SEASON
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c.
ThFM(A) n 15

JORDAN HALL
MONDAY EVENING, NOV. 19th, at 8.15
PERCY GRAINGER
The Australian Pianist in Recital
BENEFIT BOSTON MET. CHAPTER RED CROSS
Tickets 50c to $2.00, Symphony Hall.
FM(A) n 16

JORDAN HALL
WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOV. 21, at 8.15
GEORGE COPELAND
THE EMINENT PIANIST
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 50c, Symphony Hall.
ThFM(A) n 15

JORDAN HALL
NEXT THURSDAY EVE., NOV. 22, at 8.15
First Concert
THE FLONZALEY QUARTET
Program—Quartet A major (Kochel 464), Mozart; Quartet D-flat major, op. 15, Dohnanyi; Quartet D major No. 4, Haydn.
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 75c, at Symphony Hall.

JORDAN HALL
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 24, at 3
HELEN ALLEN HUNT
MEZZO-CONTRALTO
ISIDORE LUCKSTONE, Pianist.
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 50c, Symphony Hall.
FM(A) n 16

JORDAN HALL
MONDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 26, AT 3
SOCIETE DES INSTRUMENTS ANCIENS
AND
MME. GABRIELLE GILLS
The Brilliant French Soprano
Tickets $1.50, $1.00, 50c, Symphony Hall.

Globe FEB. 23, 1918

LEGINSKA SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

Mme Ethel Leginska, the English pianist, appeared yesterday for the first time in Boston as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra, playing Liapounoff's fourth piano concerto, its first performance in this city. Dr Muck's program opened with the third Symphony by Brahms, the closing number being "In a Summer Garden," the seldom-played composition by Frederick Delius.

The concerto by the Russian Liapounoff is in one movement, the various moods being frequently contrasted by bizarre orchestration, which, of course, is considered typical of the Slav style of writing. Some of the thematic material, that in the gentler mood, is expressed in charming bits of melody, and there is a rushing finale in fortissimo that taxes the pianist heavily.

Mme Leginska, who has established an excellent reputation by her artistry shown in some half-dozen recitals here, performed her task as soloist with commendable zeal. Her technical competency was again in pleasing evidence, her runs in chord passages were brilliant and very rapid and her performance was one of well-sustained merit. She was quite equal to sustaining the piano part in the thunderous finale. The artist was recalled many times.

The Brahms Symphony and the somewhat somber "In a Summer Garden" were given the effective interpretations expected of the orchestra.

The young Boston violinist, Irma Seydel, will be the soloist next week.

FEB. 22, 1918
TRANSCRIPT

A CHILLED CONCERT

None Too Interesting a Programme, a Cool Audience and a Colder Auditorium for the Symphony Orchestra at Cambridge—Alfven Again, a Russian Concerto with Mme. Leginska and the Triumphant Strauss of "Death and Transfiguration"

A CHOICE soloist and a choice programme will be greeted by the Cambridge public of the Symphony Orchestra almost as vociferously as any audience you might name. But last evening marked an "off night" at Sanders Theatre; Mme. Leginska was not at her best, and the Cambridgites who look for solid fare were ill-pleased at the superficialties of Lyapunov and Alfvén That species of Scandinavian music may delight Chicago; Boston may mildly tolerate it for a passing trial and taste, but, probing further to Cambridge, it met with boredom, and the merest ripple of applause. Mme. Leginska, feeling that she had not done herself or her music justice, was reluctant to bow, so again applause was curtailed. Having arrived at the more uplifting "Death and Transfiguration" of Strauss, the audience was definitely out of the mood, and at the close, was too busy with wraps.

The exceedingly low temperature of the auditorium may have had something to do with it, for it takes only a little physical discomfort to mar musical enjoyment. Certainly cold keys were a partial cause of Mme. Leginska's rather nervous and faltering start. At any rate, the clean and sharp-set accuracy and the tonal vividness which usually underlie and heighten Mme. Leginska's fiery style were notably lacking. The much needed confidence and poise of the virtuoso gave way to the anxieties of the performer. Then again, as an "early work" by a third-rate composer, the music in itself was often more brilliant in intention than in effect. Lyapunov undoubtedly understood the piano, but he was as undoubtedly a novice with the orchestra. As a result, the reverberating and impressive sounds which Mme. Leginska powerfully made with galloping octaves and thunderous runs were despoiled acoustically by the "tutti." The would-be glamorous tone of the melodic portions, in the typical romantic manner, evaporated by the same fault. In theme and episode the piece was equally undistinguished; the orchestral writing commonplace and coarse-fibred.

In this respect, Alfvén was, by comparison, well informed, apt, lucid, clever. The whimsical tricks were well conceive and well placed. What is more, no conductor can have given the symphony a more vivacious, deft and agile performance. Dr. Muck allows no frigidity of atmosphere to alter the slightest inflection of his hand, or the scrupulous alertness of his attention. Despite the lightness and commonness of the music, the rhythmic incision, the swift contrapuntal play of parts in the first and third movements, befell with as delicate exactitude as if Mozart himself were under way. The fanfares of brass were in the Finale engaging and decidedly above the ordinary; in many incidents of the symphony there was matter for genuine pleasure. But the sugar-coating quickly wore off with every repetition, the Andante was too trivial to merit the time and effort of a large orchestra, while the horse that galloped through the last movement has too often galloped before. Strauss's tone-poem rose mighty and majestic out of mediocrity; seldom has it sounded more important. Where the other two composers came almost immediately to the end of their tether in orchestral variety, Strauss drew richly and deeply from untrammeled sources. Never did the sonorities of his brass sound more stirring, the swift ascending figures of the 'cellos more terrifying, the great orchestral convulsions more huge and more appalling. It is indeed time that the more magnificent orchestral forces of Strauss were presented to Boston in a season so far barren of them. J. N. B.

TRANSCRIPT
FEB. 23, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A Symphony of Dukas, for the First Times in Boston, on Dr. Muck's Programme—Miss Hempel in Ornate Operatic Airs and Light Songs—A New String Quartet—Miss Wyman at Harvard

FOR once, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the name of the Parisian, Dukas, will stand on the programme of a pair of Symphony Concerts and not appended to the rather hackneyed "Sorcerer's Apprentice." For on those days Dr. Muck and the orchestra purpose to play the symphony in C major and three parts that Dukas wrote in the nineties and that has already been played in the United States at Philadelphia and Chicago. It runs in three movements: an opening Allegro, which a biographer of Dukas judges rich of musical substance, ingenious of workmanship and vigorous of march; an intermediate Andante that now charms and again stirs the hearer; and an "impetuous, firm-footed and highly colored" Finale. At the other end of Dr. Muck's list are the two tone-poems of Sibelius that the conductor added to the repertory of the orchestra last year—"Pohjola's Daughter," the icy wanton of the moon who ensnared wayfarers with the fascination of winter-light, and "Night-Ride and Sunrise," graphic exercise in the contrasts of figures, melodies and moods. Between Dukas and Sibelius, Miss Seydel, the young violinist, to whom for long the orchestra has been a kind of foster-father, will play with it in Boston. Her piece is Saint-Saëns's neat concerto in B minor.

FEB. 23, 1918
Advertiser

RUSSIAN CONCERTO SYMPHONY FEATURE

Mme. Leginska, the Pianist, Gives Splendid Entertainment in Holiday Concert

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.
Brahms. Symphony No. 3. F major.
Liapounoff. Piano Concerto. E flat minor.
Delius. "In a Summer Garden."

After a succession of outside banquets one is always glad to return to the home table. We have been dining out with the Chicagoans, on opera, for nearly a week; yesterday afternoon we were glad to return to the symphonic feast. We are gradually coming to believe in Rubinstein's opinion that symphony is a finer musical form than opera.

There is a stronger appeal to the intellect in Brahms' symphony than in a combination of dramatic action, scenic display and other adjuncts, and this was thoroughly borne home in the excellent performance of yesterday afternoon.

MOVEMENT CONSERVATIVE.

Brahms' third symphony is not an abstruse work. Richter once called it the "Heroic," but its second and third movements are the reverse of this, only the first and last presenting strife in abundance. Once upon a time this first movement was considered boldly dissonant, but today it seems conservative enough, although the struggle between major and minor is as effective as ever.

Dr. Muck made an excellent contrast between the turbulence of the chief theme and the idyllic, pastoral character of the second theme, and horns and contra-bassoon did good work in the return of the chief theme.

In the second movement the antiphonal effect between wind instruments and deep strings was well brought out. The allegretto, which here takes the place of a Scherzo showed what beauty a good composer can draw from very limited scoring, for its orchestration is very meagre compared with most modern symphonies. Here and in the Finale there was some exquisite horn-playing.

The Finale is, as is usual with Brahms, the great movement, and it was given a great reading. The playing of muted violins and violas in the ending, and the return of the opening theme of the symphony here, were beautiful points to note. At the end Peace comes, the storm is over and the stars are shining, and the symphony closes in the opposite vein from the usual grand climax of symphonic form; but it makes a most impressive ending nevertheless, a vein which Tschaikowsky followed in his Pathetic Symphony. The work was deeply appreciated by the audience, which showed considerable enthusiasm, recalling Dr. Muck twice.

Mme. Ethel Leginska won an emphatic success with Liapounoff's Piano Concerto in E flat minor. Liapounoff is not one of the greatest upon the Russian list, but he belongs to that estimable Muscovite school which builds on native themes and which does not disdain melody and intelligibility. His concerto in rhapsodical, a la Liszt, and tremendously virile, and Mme. Leginska played it with leonine power.

It is in one movement, but the essence and contrast of the regular three movements is preserved.

SCORING IS BRILLIANT.

The scoring is spicy and brilliant even to cymbols and triangle, and the work plunges into "medias res" even in the opening orchestral section (Tutti) which is sensibly brief, after which the piano enters with fortissimo work.

Mme. Leginska played from notes, which is not often done in these concerts; yet it is a sensible proceeding, for it is surely better to have the music than the pianist on the rack. She won an absolute triumph for the work, and for her own interpretation of it. Her chord and octave playing was as brilliant as that of a d'Albert or Rosenthal, and the coda was a perfect whirlwind of bravura.

It was no wonder that there was a frenzy of enthusiasm at the end; Mme. Leginska deserved it, and the concerto deserved it, and we thank Liapounoff for avoiding the vagaries of Stravinsky or Seriabine and writing comprehensible music. Fritz Delius, a mixture of Englishman and German, a man who studied almost alone on a Florida orange plantation (helped by a New York organist), who went to the Leipsic Conservatory, rather to meet musicians than to study, has all the merits and defects of the self-made composer.

He does not always express himself clearly, nor choose the best possible scoring for his ideas, but the ideas themselves are generally very striking and original, filled with virility and native power. His "In a Summer Garden," played yesterday, is a companion piece to his "Brigg Fair," performed at these concerts seven years ago.

It is, of course, much less vivacious than that composition. We thought highly of "Brigg Fair," and we think that "In a Summer Garden" is also a worthy addition to the modern repertoire. It made a better impression than when given by Fiedler a few years ago.

TRANSCRIPT, FEB. 23, 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

BRAHMS, MME. LEGINSKA AND TWO OTHERS

The Contrasts of a Familiar Music Called Again to Characteristic Life—Lyapunov's Showy Concerto as "Vehicle" for a Fervid and Applauded Pianist—The Labors of Delius in a Summer Garden

THE programme of yesterday's Symphony Concert was mapped upon an entirely orthodox plan: a "classic" symphony to begin, a concerto, and to close, a tone poem of our own century. After the F major Symphony of Brahms, in fine and flawless performance, the best and the most was over—Lyapunov proved typical of a very large number of uniformly minor composers in Russia, Delius of a group almost as numerous in Great Britain. It would be difficult to say whether Delius's "In a Summer Garden" or Lyapunov's Concerto was the more mediocre; Mme. Ethel Leginska was the saving grace of the latter as well as its cause. But many are the Bostonians whose presence may be counted on with a symphony of Brahms in hand, and many are those who delight in the playing of Mme. Leginska. For one or the other, there were virtually none of the empty seats which sometimes mark a lagging of the season, and both brought vociferous applause.

It is to be wondered whether the sharp division of opinion over the music of Brahms will ever cease; whether the Latin peoples will always contemn its placid control and deliberate will power, whether the more self-continent peoples of the north will always over-esteem it. In Boston there are two pretty distinct kinds; those who feel their ancestry and love their Brahms, and those who are reacting against moribund puritanism and impatient of all Brahms. But the Brahmsians comprise the majority of the subscribers—there is little doubt of that. Dr. Muck, sometimes giving his audiences what they seem to need rather than what they seek, is yet lavish with his Brahms. Turning once more to the third, the least played of the four symphonies, one is inclined to surprise at its comparative neglect, for it so intimately and finely reflects its composer's nature and personality. As such, it must have been dearly loved by Brahms's friends. Its more reposeful depths seem to breathe the tender and staunch friendship of Brahms for Clara Schumann which she so dearly prized, which was her solace and support in the grief over her husband's illness. And then the sudden stern repression of sentiment which hurt her and brought her quiet reproach: that is in the music too. Music indeed worked a miracle when it made this rigorous disciplinarian lay bare his inmost heart almost in spite of himself. Two distinct traits are ingrafted into the Symphony: the energetic Brahms, his once boyish, ruddy, frank overflow of spirits tempered, modified, and enriched in maturity; and the affectionate Brahms, contemplative, shut up within himself.

The first trait pervades the two outer movements, brave, noble, heroic, in the chaste chivalric sense of Walter Scott, the very antithesis of the shouting, exulting and superlative Siegfried, stamped with graceful and contained curves of melody, and a golden effulgence of harmony, proud in progression, but innocuous, without a dissonant sting. And the two inner movements commemorate the inner Brahms, subdued, delicate, lovely in the reedy eloquence of the wood-wind variously intertwined. Dr. Muck spread a hushed pianissimo through the Andante—the strings giving whispered answer to the woodwind at its opening were hushed, scarcely audible, like a far-off religious choir. And the simple melody of the Allegretto, the rare sort which two geniuses in a century can conceive and which Brahms never exceeded, was taken up successively by the virtuosi of the orchestra with the finest subtlety of poetic inflection against the faultlessly shaped pianissimo of the accompaniment. Over the whole, Dr. Muck succeeded remarkably in infusing the restful placidity, the sustained illusion, the sense of reticence, moderation, mental and formal equipoise, which is the heart and soul of the symphony. Such music temporarily excludes all thought of the heroic or the amorous Wagner. It appeals to an entirely different side of human nature, if a side with generally less artistic propensity. Not to enjoy it is beyond doubt a limitation. But to exalt it above its generation—that is also a limitation.

The admirers of Mme. Leginska know her as a fiery tornado who can assault the piano with a vim to take one's breath away, who understands her acoustics, can pile up tone in most glorious fashion, and, making a virtue of extravagance, take her audience by storm. Those of her admirers who followed her to Symphony Hall yesterday must have been disappointed to find their hitherto uncontrolled steed decidedly restive and nervous under the stern, disciplinary baton of Dr. Muck; to find her former self-sufficiency and dominating assertion ill-suited to the reins of outer exaction and coöperation. Her remarkable strength was there, her vivid chords, excitingly pounced upon, but, not to mince matters, she failed of Dr. Muck's speed, could not under it maintain clarity of detail and unanimity of statement. Again, Lyapunov's Concerto was against her. If was of the brilliant and dashing sort she must inevitably have chosen—an accommodating vehicle for stupendous "octave-work," for large-voiced sweeping of the keyboard, with a relieving middle section of rhapsodic melody. All that was provided conveniently enough. But the Concerto was a lesser edition of a dozen more finely wrought pieces gone before—a Lisztian work to the core by an ardent disciple of Liszt, yet with none of his master's individual power and heightening genius. Mme. Leginska might have done far better with the Liszt which she plays so magnificently, with music to lift her on its current and carry her to its close by its very impetus, less mindful of anxieties—but the other choice has been made and played. Lyapunov's themes were worthy of a student's exercise, his orchestral writing was entirely commonplace, no slightest trace of his nationality was observable beyond the name of the composer. It was obviously unfair to set the pianist's utmost against an imposing row of strong-lunged trombones. But against even these odds Mme. Leginska may be said to have triumphed—in a sense. Are musicians ever judged by purely musical standards? If the same performance had come from a massive and unprepossessing man from a strange city, in the usual uninteresting cutaway, instead of a slim-fingered young woman in a velvet costume, with an impulsive manner, violently expressive gestures, and a "following," the resultant prolonged applause and the six or seven acknowledgments would be decidedly doubtful. But Mme. Leginska's applause is her own personal triumph, and not to be begrudged.

The London reviewers of 1905 called Delius's "In a Summer Garden" in first performance "unusual," "formless," "surprising without reason." Comments such as might be expected to usher a masterpiece into the world. To revert to it in 1918 is to realize that no such expectations are justified. It has the quality of a "local" work to be performed by courtesy in its immediate district—surely not one that you would expect to cross the Atlantic. If it once surprised, it does not surprise now. It bespeaks the musician who has no daring in his soul; the musician who desires sincerely to be up with the times, to "evolve," but who chews his pen in vain for that rarest of treasures, a new music idea, who tries to be strange and is muddy instead, while inevitably echoing Wagner. For this work repeatedly recalls Wagner's summer nights, his forests and his birds, and trying to be a little "queer," Delius was visitated by the ghost of Beckmesser. The general impression is a rather conglomerate orchestral body with incessant bird-pipings from the wood-wind, a surging but undistinguished melody for the 'cellos, and a climax towards the end, not too new. The course of it is limp and monotonous, the close, lame. It is conspicuous neither for poetic eloquence, nor the painter's skill. It does not mark the technically equipped experimentalist; there is nothing of the fresh, tingling wonder of new vistas opened up. For it takes an orchestral creator to do that—a composer with a fine appreciation of the latent possibilities in new instruments and new groupings, a composer who can manipulate their newly improved mechanisms to eloquent and colorful advantage. And Delius could not do this because he had not the creative orchestral sense. Consequently, he more than once loses himself among his instruments, and the elaborate additional ones of his full modern orchestra go for naught.

J. N. B.

Post, FEB. 23, 1918

LEGINSKA SURPRISES SYMPHONY

Pianiste Gives Sensational Performance of Concerto

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall consisted of Brahms' third symphony; a little known piano concerto of Napravnik, played by Miss Ethel Leginska, and Fritz Delius' orchestral rhapsody, "In a Summer Garden." The poetry and rugged power of Brahms' symphony were admirably realized in the performance, after which the orchestra rose to its feet to acknowledge the audience's applause.

MISS LEGINSKA'S PLAYING

Then Miss Leginska gave a sensational performance of the concerto. We use the word "sensational" with deliberation. The performance was sensational in its dashing spirit, its masterly conception and physical power. At a first hearing it did not, considered as a work of art, make much of an impression, but it did provide Miss Leginska with a vehicle for pianistic display, an opportunity of which she made the most.

Some will think it a pity that she did not choose a work more worthy of her fast maturing gifts, but pianists and all the rest of us are human, and Miss Leginska, a young artist of astonishing capacities, can hardly be blamed if for once she decided to do a "stunt" with all the fire and self-confidence of a ripening virtuoso.

Dr. Muck Accompanies

This, too, should be said: Her performance was not only conspicuous for its physical resource, but for her mastery in interpretation. She sang the lyrical themes as passionately and colorfully as she declaimed the more dramatic passages for the solo instrument. She was fully the equal of the orchestra, not only as regards her hands, but also her brains. Usually Dr. Muck conducts the performance of a concerto. Yesterday he accompanied. It is not a small distinction. Miss Leginska had the situation and the orchestra in the palm of her hand, and good it was, after the host of ordinarily successful pianists who gradually gain a public following, to listen to a player who had the big mental grip, the free and unassailable authority of her temperament. It was big playing. The piano thundered or whispered, or shouted or sang. One forgot that it was a box of keys and wires. It was now a singing voice, and now a second orchestra, entirely the match of the first.

At the end, as though having enjoyed and been amused alike by her own feat, the pianist, short-haired and garbed in customarily artistic simplicity, was laughing as she bowed and shook Dr. Muck's hand, then faced the audience. That astute gentleman eyed her quizzically, as though hesitating between a shocked sense of her freedom before an audience and a real pleasure in a performer who had been able, without his fatherly assistance at the baton, to take care of herself. Miss Leginska was recalled at least half a dozen times.

Delius' Tone Poem

But for many the climax of the concert was the tone poem of Delius. It was heard for the second time here, and it made yesterday a lasting impression. It is music of true imagination and of a distinctive idiom which does not confess its indebtedness to some favorite composer or school of today. Plainly the man says his say regardless of the fashions and the public. His music is modern and highly colored.

There is no particular explanation of what he had in mind when he composed "In a Summer Garden," but the suggestion, if you like, of murmuring trees and sunshine that flecks the flowers, and then the passionate sweep of what can only be love music of a very poignant quality, need no programmatic explanation. The man is a poet. Each hearer can retire into his own summer garden and enjoy it with him. More could be heard of Delius without injury to the Boston Symphony programmes.

HERALD FEB. 17, 1918

MUSICAL COURIER FEB, 21, 1918

ABELL ON BOSTON SYMPHONY

Arthur M. Abell, for many years Berlin representative of the MUSICAL COURIER, arrived in this country recently from Holland, where he spent the past year or so. Mr. Abell has much of interest to say regarding the situation abroad, and his views were set forth amply in a column interview given him by the New York Tribune in its Sunday issue of February 10, 1918. After a short visit to Washington, Mr. Abell will return to New York and write a special series of articles for the MUSICAL COURIER, on European musical topics in relation to the war.

In the meantime, the MUSICAL COURIER delegated Mr. Abell to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Carnegie Hall concert here last Thursday evening, February 14, and to tell our readers how the organization compares with similar bodies abroad. Mr. Abell reports:

"It was more than fourteen years ago, or in December, 1903, that I last heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the intervening years I have traveled extensively in Europe and have heard all the great orchestras of London, Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Dresden, Vienna, Budapest, Petrograd, Moscow, Milan, Rome, The Hague and Amsterdam. Certainly no other American musical writer has had such opportunities in this respect in recent years. The last orchestra I heard abroad was the 'Concertgebouw' Orchestra of Amsterdam under Willem Mengelberg, only a few days before sailing on the "New Amsterdam" recently. This is one of the finest orchestras in Europe and Mengelberg is one of the most interesting, forceful and individual conductors now active on the other side.

"As to comparisons, I do not agree with the time worn adage. On the contrary, I find comparisons very interesting and they certainly are the best means of building up standards of excellence. At any rate I formed my estimate of this great American orchestra at Carnegie Hall by comparisons with the best that Europe has to offer.

"I frankly confess that the palm must be awarded to Boston. Taken all in all this is the world's premier symphony orchestra. I do not say this from patriotic motives but from sincere artistic convictions. I will not attempt to make detailed comparisons with the great European orchestras as that would lead too far. Suffice it to say that in beauty of tone production, perfection of ensemble, balance of tone volume, blending of tone colors among the various groups of instruments, and in general finish of execution the Boston Symphony Orchestra is just a little better than the best of Europe. True, some of the orchestras on the other side play with more warmth, more passion, more glowing colors; they produce a greater thrill in the listener, but none has such a remarkable combination of superqualities, none, wonderful though some of them are in parts, form such a perfect whole. The playing of the Boston Symphony is like the playing of Jascha Heifetz on the violin—it is perfection.

"What seemed to me particularly noteworthy was the wonderful adjustment in tonal balance, not only between the different groups of instruments but within the groups themselves. For instance, the strings blend so admirably that there is perfect harmony between the violins, violas, celli and basses, i. e., no one group of strings in any way predominates, and the result is an extraordinary string ensemble. One rarely finds this in even the best of orchestras. Often the second violins or the violas are weaker than the rest.

"I could name European orchestras that have more brilliant first violins, more passionate celli, but I have heard no such perfect string ensemble.

"And the same can be said in praise of the wind players. The woodwind of the Boston band, in particular, was a source of sheer delight true throughout the evening. The oboe always has had a special fascination for me, and never have I heard such a ravishing tone, such satisfying cantabile, such beauty of phrasing on the oboe as in Mr. Longy's solo, in the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony. Not even M. Guidé in his palmy days with the Ysaye Orchestra in Brussels ever played quite like that. "But the woodwind ensemble was no less remarkable than that of the strings. The tones of the oboe, flute, clarinet and bassoon blended so exquisitely that it seemed as if the performers had been born for each other. Their absolute fidelity to the pitch was another striking feature of their playing—and this is a weak spot in most orchestras.

"The tonal balance in the subduced yet sonorous brass, too, was most satisfying. The soft mellow tones of the horns conjured up the scene in Capulet's garden and 'yonder moon that tips with silver all these fruit tree tops.' In the Queen Mab scherzo their virtuosity was surprising. The performance of this number was one of the most remarkable achievements in the way of orchestral execution I ever heard. Muck took it at a mad pace, as it ought to be taken, but every note of the score was brought out with extraordinary clearness.

"In short, the orchestra is a wonder. And its present high standards must be due in large part to Dr. Muck's régime, for when I last heard it in 1903 it was not the organization it is today. Far from it. Gericke was then the conductor, that being the close of his second period.

"I was familiar with Dr. Muck's activities on the other side for nearly a quarter of a century (I went to Europe in 1890). The recollections of his magnificent performances at the Berlin Royal Opera in the old days are still vivid, and his 'Parsifal,' at Bayreuth will ever loom up as one of the milestones along the highway of my twenty-seven and a half years of European musical memories. On rare occasions, also, I heard Muck in symphonic programs, and it was interesting to note last night how he has grown and matured.

"True, he has had exceptional opportunities at the head of the world's greatest orchestra, but it is patent that the growth of the orchestra has kept pace with that of its leader.

"It was good to see my old friend Anton Witek and Joseph Malkin, of whom I have so many pleasant European antebellum recollections, at the head of the violins and celli. Witek I have known for twenty-four years. I will recall the splendid impression he made the first time I heard him in solo in the Mendelssohn concerts. That was—with the Berlin Philharmonic's Orchestra—1894.

The program last night consisted of Mozart's G minor symphony and three movements from Berlioz's 'Romeo and Juliet' symphony, 'Queen Mab,' the 'Garden Scene' and the 'Grand Fête at Capulet's.'

"The exquisite performance of Mozart's G minor symphony earned for Muck such applause that he signalled also his men to acknowledge it by rising. Berlioz's music was no less impressive as rendered by this wonderful band.

"Carnegie Hall audiences, however, evidently are not as demonstrative as the audiences I have been familiar with for so many years on the other side."

PUBLIC LEDGER
...ss Philadelphia. Pa. FEB 1...
...ey and Edward J. Ryan.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN INSPIRED MOOD

Muck's Men Attain Rare Heights of Artistry in Academy Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in midseason, when the flexibility of this superb organization has reached the maximum, when its authoritative command of exquisite nuances and glowing tonal splendor has been developed anew by frequent performances, is ever an instrument of profound and signal artistic import. It was such a factor in the musical life of this city last evening in the Academy of Music.

The concert was the third given here this year by Doctor Muck's men. The two predecessors had revealed elements or ennobling beauty, but somehow last night's performance surpassed them, and not so much in impeccable interpretative precision—for that feature is always present in the orchestra—as in depth of feeling and proper adjustment of musical mood to each composer's intent.

The program was of familiar yet majestic design. Modernism was represented by Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Isle of the Dead," but the balance of the roster paid tribute solely to acknowledged masters, Mozart, Liszt, Beethoven. The first named was glorified with a pellucid reading of his radiant G-minor symphony, a composition which Doctor Muck handled with a classicism that was never rigid and a dignity that was never hard. The work sparkled in the tripping opening movement and sang with more passionate poetry in the sincere eloquence of the finale, which seems to envisage the musical future.

The "Egmont" Overture of Beethoven had all the vital power of high tragedy. The romantic loveliness of the Liszt concerto was so resplendently expressed by the orchestra that the virtuoso contributions of Winifred Christie, the soloist, were fairly overshadowed. Miss Christie, who hails from Scotland, is a competent pianiste wtih a sound technique—an asset, by the way, of virtually all concert performers nowadays—but her individual performance, on the whole, was somewhat commonplace. She lingered over many of her solo passages with a rather freakish sentimentality. Her pyrotechnics in the brilliant finale were conventionally effective, never suggestive of exceptional interpretative gifts.

In Doctor Muck's hands the Rachmaninoff number has something of the aspect of a tour de force. This is ultra-modern impressionistic music, in which one atmosphere is preserved to the exclusion of all others throughout the entire score. Interest in such a work is only sustained by a masterly reading, but this "The Isle of the Dead" triumphantly received. A veritable tone picture was presented, a fitting and spiritually congenial compliment to Boecklin's eerie painting.

"The Star-Spangled Banner," played a shade more fervidly than on the conductor's last appearance here, opened the concert.

H. T. C.

MARCH 2, 1918

9

— Post, FEB. 23, 1918 —

LEGINSKA SURPRISES SYMPHONY

Pianiste Gives Sensational Performance of Concerto

BY OLIN DOWNES

The programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall consisted of Brahms' third symphony; a little known piano concerto of Napravnik, played by Miss Ethel Leginska, and Fritz Delius' orchestral rhapsody, "In a Summer Garden." The poetry and rugged power of Brahms' symphony were admirably realized in the performance, after which the orchestra rose to its feet to acknowledge the audience's applause.

MISS LEGINSKA'S PLAYING

Then Miss Leginska gave a sensational performance of the concerto. We use the word "sensational" with deliberation. The performance was sensational in its dashing spirit, its masterly conception and physical power. At a first hearing it did not, considered as a work of art, make much of an impression, but it did provide Miss Leginska with a vehicle for pianistic display, an opportunity of which she made the most.

Some will think it a pity that she did not choose a work more worthy of her fast maturing gifts, but pianists and all the rest of us are human, and Miss Leginska, a young artist of astonishing capacities, can hardly be blamed if for once she decided to do a "stunt" with all the fire and self-confidence of a ripening virtuoso.

Dr. Muck Accompanies

This, too, should be said: Her performance was not only conspicuous for its physical resource, but for her mastery in interpretation. She sang the lyrical themes as passionately and colorfully as she declaimed the more dramatic passages for the solo instrument. She was fully the equal of the orchestra, not only as regards her hands, but also her brains. Usually Dr. Muck conducts the performance of a concerto. Yesterday he accompanied. It is not a small distinction. Miss Leginska had the situation and the orchestra in the palm of her hand, and good it was, after the host of ordinarily successful pianists who gradually gain a public following, to listen to a player who had the big mental grip, the free and unassailable authority of her temperament. It was big playing. The piano thundered or whispered, or shouted or sang. One forgot that it was a box of keys and wires. It was now a singing voice, and now a second orchestra, entirely the match of the first.

At the end, as though having enjoyed and been amused alike by her own feat, the pianist, short-haired and garbed in customarily artistic simplicity, was laughing as she bowed and shook Dr. Muck's hand, then faced the audience. That astute gentleman eyed her quizzically, as though hesitating between a shocked sense of her freedom before an audience and a real pleasure in a performer who had been able, without his fatherly assistance at the baton, to take care of herself. Miss Leginska was recalled at least half a dozen times.

Delius' Tone Poem

But for many the climax of the concert was the tone poem of Delius. It was heard for the second time here, and it made yesterday a lasting impression. It is music of true imagination and of a distinctive idiom which does not confess its indebtedness to some favorite composer or school of today. Plainly the man says his say regardless of the fashions and the public. His music is modern and highly colored.

There is no particular explanation of what he had in mind when he composed "In a Summer Garden," but the suggestion, if you like, of murmuring trees and sunshine that flecks the flowers, and then the passionate sweep of what can only be love music of a very poignant quality, need no programmatic explanation. The man is a poet. Each hearer can retire into his own summer garden and enjoy it with him. More could be heard of Delius without injury to the Boston Symphony programmes.

HERALD FEB. 17, 1918 -

MUSICAL COURIER FEB, 21, 1918 —

ABELL ON BOSTON SYMPHONY

Arthur M. Abell, for many years Berlin representative of the MUSICAL COURIER, arrived in this country recently from Holland, where he spent the past year or so. Mr. Abell has much of interest to say regarding the situation abroad, and his views were set forth amply in a column interview given him by the New York Tribune in its Sunday issue of February 10, 1918. After a short visit to Washington, Mr. Abell will return to New York and write a special series of articles for the MUSICAL COURIER, on European musical topics in relation to the war.

In the meantime, the MUSICAL COURIER delegated Mr. Abell to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Carnegie Hall concert here last Thursday evening, February 14, and to tell our readers how the organization compares with similar bodies abroad. Mr. Abell reports:

"It was more than fourteen years ago, or in December, 1903, that I last heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the intervening years I have traveled extensively in Europe and have heard all the great orchestras of London, Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Dresden, Vienna, Budapest, Petrograd, Moscow, Milan, Rome, The Hague and Amsterdam. Certainly no other American musical writer has had such opportunities in this respect in recent years. The last orchestra I heard abroad was the 'Concertgebouw' Orchestra of Amsterdam under Willem Mengelberg, only a few days before sailing on the "New Amsterdam" recently. This is one of the finest orchestras in Europe and Mengelberg is one of the most interesting, forceful and individual conductors now active on the other side.

"As to comparisons, I do not agree with the time worn adage. On the contrary, I find comparisons very interesting and they certainly are the best means of building up standards of excellence. At any rate I formed my estimate of this great American orchestra at Carnegie Hall by comparisons with the best that Europe has to offer.

"I frankly confess that the palm must be awarded to Boston. Taken all in all this is the world's premier symphony orchestra. I do not say this from patriotic motives but from sincere artistic convictions. I will not attempt to make detailed comparisons with the great European orchestras as that would lead too far. Suffice it to say that in beauty of tone production, perfection of ensemble, balance of tone volume, blending of tone colors among the various groups of instruments, and in general finish of execution the Boston Symphony Orchestra is just a little better than the best of Europe. True, some of the orchestras on the other side play with more warmth, more passion, more glowing colors; they produce a greater thrill in the listener, but none has such a remarkable combination of superqualities, none, wonderful though some of them are in parts, form such a perfect whole. The playing of the Boston Symphony is like the playing of Jascha Heifetz on the violin—it is perfection.

"What seemed to me particularly noteworthy was the wonderful adjustment in tonal balance, not only between the different groups of instruments but within the groups themselves. For instance, the strings blend so admirably that there is perfect harmony between the violins, violas, celli and basses, i. e., no one group of strings in any way predominates, and the result is an extraordinary string ensemble. One rarely finds this in even the best of orchestras. Often the second violins or the violas are weaker than the rest.

"I could name European orchestras that have more brilliant first violins, more passionate celli, but I have heard no such perfect string ensemble.

"And the same can be said in praise of the wind players. The woodwind of the Boston band, in particular, was a source of sheer delight true throughout the evening. The oboe always has had a special fascination for me, and never have I heard such a ravishing tone, such satisfying cantabile, such beauty of phrasing on the oboe as in Mr. Longy's solo, in the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony. Not even M. Guidé in his palmy days with the Ysaye Orchestra in Brussels ever played quite like that. "But the woodwind ensemble was no less remarkable than that of the strings. The tones of the oboe, flute, clarinet and bassoon blended so exquisitely that it seemed as if the performers had been born for each other. Their absolute fidelity to the pitch was another striking feature of their playing—and this is a weak spot in most orchestras.

"The tonal balance in the subduced yet sonorous brass, too, was most satisfying. The soft mellow tones of the horns conjured up the scene in Capulet's garden and 'yonder moon that tips with silver all these fruit tree tops.' In the Queen Mab scherzo their virtuosity was surprising. The performance of this number was one of the most remarkable achievements in the way of orchestral execution I ever heard. Muck took it at a mad pace, as it ought to be taken, but every note of the score was brought out with extraordinary clearness.

"In short, the orchestra is a wonder. And its present high standards must be due in large part to Dr. Muck's régime, for when I last heard it in 1903 it was not the organization it is today. Far from it. Gericke was then the conductor, that being the close of his second period.

"I was familiar with Dr. Muck's activities on the other side for nearly a quarter of a century (I went to Europe in 1890). The recollections of his magnificent performances at the Berlin Royal Opera in the old days are still vivid, and his 'Parsifal,' at Bayreuth will ever loom up as one of the milestones along the highway of my twenty-seven and a half years of European musical memories. On rare occasions, also, I heard Muck in symphonic programs, and it was interesting to note last night how he has grown and matured.

"True, he has had exceptional opportunities at the head of the world's greatest orchestra, but it is patent that the growth of the orchestra has kept pace with that of its leader.

"It was good to see my old friend Anton Witek and Joseph Malkin, of whom I have so many pleasant European antebellum recollections, at the head of the violins and celli. Witek I have known for twenty-four years. I will recall the splendid impression he made the first time I heard him in solo in the Mendelssohn concerts. That was—with the Berlin Philharmonic's Orchestra—1894.

The program last night consisted of Mozart's G minor symphony and three movements from Berlioz's 'Romeo and Juliet' symphony, 'Queen Mab,' the 'Garden Scene' and the 'Grand Fête at Capulet's.'

"The exquisite performance of Mozart's G minor symphony earned for Muck such applause that he signalled also his men to acknowledge it by rising. Berlioz's music was no less impressive as rendered by this wonderful band.

"Carnegie Hall audiences, however, evidently are not as demonstrative as the audiences I have been familiar with for so many years on the other side."

PUBLIC LEDGER

ss Philadelphia. Pa.

and Edward J. Ryan.

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN INSPIRED MOOD

Muck's Men Attain Rare Heights of Artistry in Academy Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in midseason, when the flexibility of this superb organization has reached the maximum, when its authoritative command of exquisite nuances and glowing tonal splendor has been developed anew by frequent performances, is ever an instrument of profound and signal artistic import. It was such a factor in the musical life of this city last evening in the Academy of Music.

The concert was the third given here this year by Doctor Muck's men. The two predecessors had revealed elements or ennobling beauty, but somehow last night's performance surpassed them, and not so much in impeccable interpretative precision—for that feature is always present in the orchestra—as in depth of feeling and proper adjustment of musical mood to each composer's intent.

The program was of familiar yet majestic design. Modernism was represented by Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Isle of the Dead," but the balance of the roster paid tribute solely to acknowledged masters, Mozart, Liszt, Beethoven. The first named was glorified with a pellucid reading of his radiant G-minor symphony, a composition which Doctor Muck handled with a classicism that was never rigid and a dignity that was never hard. The work sparkled in the tripping opening movement and sang with more passionate poetry in the sincere eloquence of the finale, which seems to envisage the musical future.

The "Egmont" Overture of Beethoven had all the vital power of high tragedy. The romantic loveliness of the Liszt concerto was so resplendently expressed by the orchestra that the virtuoso contributions of Winifred Christie, the soloist, were fairly overshadowed. Miss Christie, who hails from Scotland, is a competent pianiste with a sound technique—an asset, by the way, of virtually all concert performers nowadays—but her individual performance, on the whole, was somewhat commonplace. She lingered over many of her solo passages with a rather freakish sentimentality. Her pyrotechnics in the brilliant finale were conventionally effective, never suggestive of exceptional interpretative gifts.

In Doctor Muck's hands the Rachmaninoff number has something of the aspect of a tour de force. This is ultra-modern impressionistic music, in which one atmosphere is preserved to the exclusion of all others throughout the entire score. Interest in such a work is only sustained by a masterly reading, but this "The Isle of the Dead" triumphantly received. A veritable tone picture was presented, a fitting and spiritually congenial compliment to Boecklin's eerie painting.

"The Star-Spangled Banner," played a shade more fervidly than on the conductor's last appearance here, opened the concert.

H. T. C.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

10

WEEK-END CONCERTS

Times and Fashions in a Symphony and a Tone-Poem—Mr. McCormack, Bach and Classical Lieder—Mr. Kreisler and His Companions Rise High in Chamber Music

Transcript 11/11

ALFVEN'S symphony was played for the second time in Boston at the Symphony Concert on Saturday evening and Wallace's tone-poem, "Villon," for the second time in six years. They were both "novelties," according to the formula and the dialect of the concert-room, yet each in a sense sounded old-fashioned. The Swede's symphony dates from 1905; the Scotsman's tone-poem from 1905; which is to say that both were written at a time when the younger composers of Scandinavia and of Britain both kept eyes firmly fixed on the Straussian model. Accordingly they court large progressions and swelling climaxes; ample harmonies, rich play of instrumental voices; full-throated melodies; the power or the incisiveness of the orchestra. Plainly, they are seeking to do a big thing in a big way to big impression upon hearers.

Now, in February of 1918, the goal and the procedure alike seem somewhat old-fashioned. The Straussian model is no longer the model à la mode with either composers or audiences. Newer fashions, half Parisian and half Russian, now bid both to a more transparent and pliant tonal web, to more vivid but less lush harmonies, to more open and subtle instrumental coloring, to less obvious melodies, sonorous march and strepitous climax. Symphonic music, alike in symphony and tone-poem, has become less stout-bodied and heavy-handed. It seeks now less to sway the hearer by power and a large and emphatic beauty than to persuade him by felicity of invention, process and detail, by a fine aptness of imagination with ends and means. Thus, Alfven's symphony, in spite of its exuberant energy seems to belong to a vanished musical day; while Wallace's tone-poem, in spite of deference to an outmoded model, bridges its way into other times and other fashions by a recurring finesse and fancy in harmonic and instrumental stroke.

Transcript Nov 3, 1917

CONCERT CALENDAR

Dr. Muck's First Choral Concert with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony—Mme. Guilbert Once Only—Mr. Elman and Mr. Kreisler for Violinists—The Return of "The Flonzaleys"—Mr. Grainger, Mr. Copeland and Other Pianists—Mr. Fox's Notable Programme—Chamber Music

SUNDAY afternoon, Nov. 11, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Mr. Elman, the notable violinist of opulent technique, breadth and warmth of tone, propulsive power and songfully sentimental feeling. He will play a concerto by Vivaldi; a sonata by Händel; three movements of Lalo's "Spanish Symphony"; and sundry songful or bravura pieces.

Advertiser Dec 16, 1917

* * *

The story of the "Messiah" will again be told in music by chorus, soloists and orchestra, Sunday evening, December 23, and Monday evening, December 24, at Symphony Hall, when the Handel and Hayden Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, will give its oratorio. The soloists are Marie Stoddart, soprano; Alma Beck, alto; Reed Miller, tenor, and Henri Scott, bass, the Boston Festival Orchestra assisting.

* * *

HERALD FEB. 3, 1918

THE "RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY

The second and last performance of Gustav Mahler's stupendous "Resurrection" symphony will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon, Feb. 3, at 3:30. In order to make this second performance possible, it was necessary to put Mr. Elman's violin recital on last Thursday evening. This appeared to be warranted by the many requests received by the management of the Symphony orchestra to have the "Resurrection" symphony repeated. It speaks loudly for the enthusiasm of the chorus that there were practically no refusals to take part in this second performance, so that the forces to all intents and purposes, will be the same as those that gave the remarkable performance of the symphony on Tuesday evening, Jan. 22.

It is not generally known that Dr. Muck was constantly consulted by Mahler during the years that Mahler was at work on the symphony. It was largely on account of Dr. Muck's advice that seven movements were reduced to five. The performances in Boston have had, in a sense, a sentimental interest for Dr. Muck.

The management has secured the soloists that were successful in the first performance. No contralto singer in many years has revealed to Boston a voice of such beauty as that of Merle Alcock, an accomplished musician. Miss Peterson's part in the work was not so exacting, but the beauty of her voice added much to the enjoyment of the symphony. The performance of the symphony requires about an hour and a half, so that the concert will be over about 5 o'clock.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The regular course of Symphony concerts will be resumed next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Anton Witek, concertmaster, will make his annual appearance as soloist and will play Bruch's First Concerto in G minor. There will be two orchestral numbers; one a semi-novelty, the other entirely new to Boston. The first is the symphonic poem, "Villon," by the English composer, William Wallace. It was played in the season of 1911-12 by Mr. Fiedler and made a decided sensation. Previous to that performance Wallace's name was unknown to Symphony audiences. A rehearing of the work will be welcomed. The symphony will be the third in E major by the Swedish composer, Hugo Alfven. This will have its first hearing in Boston. It was first played in this country in Minneapolis in 1914. Since then it has become a regular repertoire piece of the Chicago orchestra, and a great favorite in that city. It is said to be bright, cheerful and melodious.

Globe Feb 13

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT OPPOSED IN SPRINGFIELD

SPRINGFIELD, Feb 12—A majority of the City Council committee that has charge of city property, it was announced today, is opposed to renting the Municipal Auditorium for the scheduled appearance this month of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr Karl Muck.

The board is seeking an expression of public opinion in reaching a decision.

Last year's board refused the use of the hall to Fritz Kreisler.

Amusements

Boston Symphony Orchestra

SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
IRMA SEYDEL, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
f28mh2

Record Feb 28, 1918

Post. Nov 4, 1917

Thursday evening in Jordan Hall a song recital by Rosamond Young, soprano. Programme:

"My Heart Ever Faithful" ..... Bach
"La Partenza" ..... Beethoven
"Come Raggio di Sol" ..... Caldara
"Che Fiero Costume" ..... Legrenzi
"La Procession" ..... Franck
"Clair de Lune" ..... Saint-Saens
"L'Amour" ..... Godard
"Bergere Legere" .. Old French: arr. Weckerlin
"L'Inutile Defence" . Old French: arr. Ferrari
"Maman, dites-moi" . Old French: arr. Weckerlin
"Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer" . Brahms
"Waldeinsamkeit" ..... Reger
"Mausfallensprüchlein" ..... Wolf
"Erstes Begegnen" ..... Grieg
"Zur Johannesnacht" ..... Grieg
"The Rock" ..... Hunt
"Cherry Ripe" ..... Horn
"Japanese Death Song" ..... Sharp
"Deserted" ..... MacDowell
"The Blue Bell" ..... MacDowell

Herbert Ringwall, accompanist.

Next Saturday afternoon in Jordan Hall a piano recital will be given by Mischa Levitzki: Programme:

Variations, C minor ..... Beethoven
Andante, F major ..... Beethoven
Ecossaises, E flat major ..... Beethoven
Sonata, op. 57, F minor (apassionata) .... Beethoven
Impromptu, B flat major ..... Schubert
Erlking ..... Schubert-Liszt
Two Moments Musicals ..... Schubert
Soirees de Vienne, No. 4 (valses-caprices) Schubert-Liszt
March-gallop (Reitermarsch) .. Schubert-Liszt

Record Dec 20, 1917

WASHINGTON CONCERTS ARE CANCELLED

Symphony Orchestra Is Denied Admission to Capital

As a result of the Federal order prohibiting the entry of Germans to the District of Columbia, all concerts scheduled by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been cancelled and subscribers will be refunded the money paid for tickets, according to an announcement today by C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra.

The orchestra cannot visit the capital because of its 22 German members and because of the claim that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, is an alien enemy. He contends he is a Swiss citizen.

Complaints have been made that the local agents conducting the concerts had refused money paid by music lovers, but Mr. Ellis today said that all money would be returned and all future concerts cancelled until after the war.

It was announced by the Department of Justice that they held Dr. Muck to be an alien enemy, and if he attempted to enter the district would be immediately arrested and held until the end of the war.

Subscribers refused to attend the concerts without Dr. Muck directing and without the services of the 22 musicians of German citizenship.

WITEK SYMPHONY CHARMS AUDIENCE

Genius of Violinist Ably Supported by Boston Orchestra

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAMME.

Wallace, Symphonic poem, "Villon."
Bruch, violin concerto, G minor.
Soloist, Anton Witek.
Alfven, Third Symphony, E major.

In spite of these wheatless, heatless, eatless, meatless, sweetless days, the symphony concerts go on uninterruptedly, at least in Boston, and a host of other important musical events (McCormack, opera, etc.), looms up on the horizon.

If a Scotchman (Robert Louis Stevenson) wrote the best English essay on "Villon," we presume that another Scot may venture to set the "mad, mad, bad, glad poet" to music, although we feel that only his brother Frenchman, Bizet, could have done all justice to this vagabond of the fifteenth century. Wallace makes him too much of a "Till Eulenspiegel." Of course there was plenty of spice in the portrayal of the wild Bohemian, possibly picturing him dissiting his stealings—

"All to Taverns and to Wenches."

A short bassoon solo gives a touch of trickiness to another portion of the work, and there is a joyous climax which is too lofty for the ignoble subject. The sweet theme for English horn in the centre may suggest the pathos of the line—

"Where are the snows of yesteryear?"

The odd little Carillon (chimes) of the end certainly illustrates the lines—

"I hear the soft-toned Sorbonne bell,
Which at the hour of nine would tell
Th' Angelic Salutation."

EXCELLENT PERFORMANCE.

But in spite of all this, and an excellent performance to boot, we could not find in the music a graphic portrayal of the fearfully sarcastic reviler of, and scoffer at, all respectability.

There are very few really great violin concertos, but Bruch's G minor is of them—and his other two are not. It was refreshing to have our great violinist, Anton Witek, leave for a time the classic heights of Beethoven and Brahms and enter the more romantic field of the modern style. There was not the stupendous technique here that Brahms demands, nor the tremendous power of the Beethoven concerto, but the freedom and abandon of the movement, seeming almost improvisational, the tenderness and sympathetic quality of the slow movement, and the leonine power of the Finale, left nothing to be desired, and Mr. Witek was recalled over and over again with enthusiasm. The work was most refreshing in its clearness and did not make music a penance, as too many of the long concertos do. We have never heard Mr. Witek excel the tenderness of this adagio or the breadth of the Ossianic finale.

Hugo Alfven is a Swede, whose work is new to Boston. He wrote this symphony in Italy a dozen years ago. Both this and Wallace's "Villon" were for the large modern orchestra, but Alfven's does not follow the modern will-o'-the-wisp by being extremely long, nor by casting all forms to the winds. It is shapely and intelligigle. The first movement is a very definite sonata-allegro form, such as might have been written by even a Mendelssohn, although the treatment is much bolder than that composer would have given. The slow movement is a clear rondo, and here the clarinets and the flutes did some excellent work.

WORK FREE FROM MORBIDNESS.

The whole work is free from the morbidness to which Sibelius and other Scandinavians tend, and the Scherzo is especially sunshiny. But there is much contrast in the Finale, a martial trumpet call, which plays a prominent part all through the movement, and some darkly dramatic passages, yet even these latter are not in the ascendant and the impression left by the symphony is one of clearness, melodic beauty and sensible development. The composition is a good proof that the classical lemon is not yet squeezed dry. One can use the Mozart form and yet say something quite modern. One can still put new wine into the old bottles.

Although the orchestration is essentially modern, there were no extreme difficulties in the score (save in a few string passages), no excessive rhythmic jugglerie, and the reading was virile. The work gave somewhat the impression of Mahler's dramatic and melodic style, at his best; the Scherzo left a pleasant taste of dance rhythms, and the finale might have been a triumphant cavalry charge. The symphony made a decidedly popular success, and by legitimate means.

Record Nov 9, 1917

plays, all of which is guided by Mr. Tietjens' experienced baton.

The Coming Concerts

Among the more prominent concerts, which will soon be given in Boston, are the following:—

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 10, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mischa Levitzki, pianist.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11, Symphony Hall, a concert by Mischa Elman, the violinist.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 13, Symphony Hall, concert by the Apollo Club, Miss Stoddart, soprano, and Mr. Alberini, baritone, are the soloists.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 14, Mme. Yvette Guilbert, the French diseuse.

Thursday afternoon, Nov. 15, Jordan Hall, concert by Felix Fox, pianist, and Emil Ferir, first viola-player of the Symphony Orchestra.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, the second of the annual series of concerts by the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, Symphony Hall, a concert by Roland Hayes, the colored tenor, assisted by H. T. Burleigh, the colored composer.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, Jordan Hall, a concert by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, the pianist and composer, and Mrs. Lafayette Goodbar, soprano.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 17, Jordan Hall, a concert by Moses Boguslawski, Russian pianist.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18, Symphony Hall, a concert by Fritz Kreisler.

Monday evening, Nov. 19, Jordan Hall, a concert by Percy Grainger, for the Boston Chapter of the Red Cross.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, Symphony Hall, the first of the series of three concerts, by the Symphony Orchestra and a new choral society. Dr. Muck will conduct Beethoven's Choral Symphony.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, Steinert Hall, concert by Leila Holterhoff, colorating soprano.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 21, Jordan Hall, a concert by George Copeland, the pianist.

Thursday evening, Nov. 22, Jordan Hall, the first of the series of chamber concerts by the Flonzaley Quartet.

Friday evening, Nov. 23, Steinert Hall, concert by Evelyn Jeane, Willard Flint and Malcolm Long.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 24, Jordan Hall, a concert by Mrs. Helen Allen Hunt.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 25, Symphony Hall, recital by Mme. Schumann-Heink.

Monday evening, Nov. 26, Steinert Hall, concert by Boston Symphony Brass Quartet.

Saturday afternoon, Dec. 1, Jordan Hall, recital by Samuel Gardner, violinist.

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 2, Harvard Club, piano recital by Heinrich Gebhard.

Tuesday evening, Dec. 4, Jordan Hall, song recital by Mrs. Laura Littlefield, the Boston soprano.

Saturday afternoon, Dec. 8, Jordan Hall, song recital by Rosalie Wirthlin, the soprano.

Monday evening, Dec. 10, Jordan Hall, annual song recital by Evan Williams.

Saturday afternoon, Dec. 15, Jordan Hall, song recital by Greta Torpadie, the young soprano.

Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 18, Steinert Hall, concert by Yolande Mero, pianist.

Thursday afternoon, Dec. 20, Jordan Hall, concert by the Kneisel players, Fritz Kreisler, first violin.

MAIL CLERKS TO

INFORMATION OBSCURED

10

WEEK-END CONCERTS

Times and Fashions in a Symphony and a Tone-Poem—Mr. McCormack, Bach and Classical Lieder—Mr. Kreisler and His Companions Rise High in Chamber Music

Transcript 2/11

ALFVEN'S symphony was played for the second time in Boston at the Symphony Concert on Saturday evening and Wallace's tone-poem, "Villon," for the second time in six years. They were both "novelties," according to the formula and the dialect of the concert-room, yet each in a sense sounded old-fashioned. The Swede's symphony dates from 1905; the Scotsman's tone-poem from 1905; which is to say that both were written at a time when the younger composers of Scandinavia and of Britain both kept eyes firmly fixed on the Straussian model. Accordingly they court large progressions and swelling climaxes; ample harmonies, rich play of instrumental voices; full-throated melodies; the power or the incisiveness of the orchestra. Plainly, they are seeking to do a big thing in a big way to big impression upon hearers.

Now, in February of 1918, the goal and the procedure alike seem somewhat old-fashioned. The Straussian model is no longer the model à la mode with either composers or audiences. Newer fashions, half Parisian and half Russian, now bid both to a more transparent and pliant tonal web, to more vivid but less lush harmonies, to more open and subtle instrumental coloring, to less obvious melodies, sonorous march and strepitous climax. Symphonic music, alike in symphony and tone-poem, has become less stout-bodied and heavy-handed. It seeks now less to sway the hearer by power and a large and emphatic beauty than to persuade him by felicity of invention, process and detail, by a fine aptness of imagination with ends and means. Thus, Alfven's symphony, in spite of its exuberant energy seems to belong to a vanished musical day; while Wallace's tone-poem, in spite of deference to an outmoded model, bridges its way into other times and other fashions by a recurring finesse and fancy in harmonic and instrumental stroke.

Transcript Nov 3, 1917

CONCERT CALENDAR

Dr. Muck's First Choral Concert with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony—Mme. Guilbert Once Only—Mr. Elman and Mr. Kreisler for Violinists—The Return of "The Flonzaleys"—Mr. Grainger, Mr. Copeland and Other Pianists—Mr. Fox's Notable Programme—Chamber Music

SUNDAY afternoon, Nov. 11, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Mr. Elman, the notable violinist of opulent technique, breadth and warmth of tone, propulsive power and songfully sentimental feeling. He will play a concerto by Vivaldi; a sonata by Händel; three movements of Lalo's "Spanish Symphony"; and sundry songful or bravura pieces.

Advertiser Dec 16, 1917

* * *

The story of the "Messiah" will again be told in music by chorus, soloists and orchestra, Sunday evening, December 23, and Monday evening, December 24, at Symphony Hall, when the Handel and Hayden Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, will give its oratorio. The soloists are Marie Stoddart, soprano; Alma Beck, alto; Reed Miller, tenor, and Henri Scott, bass, the Boston Festival Orchestra assisting. Advertiser 12/16

* * *

HERALD FEB. 3, 1918

THE "RESURRECTION" SYMPHONY

The second and last performance of Gustav Mahler's stupendous "Resurrection" symphony will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon, Feb. 3, at 3:30. In order to make this second performance possible, it was necessary to put Mr. Elman's violin recital on last Thursday evening. This appeared to be warranted by the many requests received by the management of the Symphony orchestra to have the "Resurrection" symphony repeated. It speaks loudly for the enthusiasm of the chorus that there were practically no refusals to take part in this second performance, so that the forces to all intents and purposes, will be the same as those that gave the remarkable performance of the symphony on Tuesday evening, Jan. 22.

It is not generally known that Dr. Muck was constantly consulted by Mahler during the years that Mahler was at work on the symphony. It was largely on account of Dr. Muck's advice that seven movements were reduced to five. The performances in Boston have had, in a sense, a sentimental interest for Dr. Muck.

The management has secured the soloists that were successful in the first performance. No contralto singer in many years has revealed to Boston a voice of such beauty as that of Merle Alcock, an accomplished musician. Miss Peterson's part in the work was not so exacting, but the beauty of her voice added much to the enjoyment of the symphony. The performance of the symphony requires about an hour and a half, so that the concert will be over about 5 o'clock.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS

The regular course of Symphony concerts will be resumed next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Anton Witek, concertmaster, will make his annual appearance as soloist and will play Bruch's First Concerto in G minor. There will be two orchestral numbers; one a semi-novelty, the other entirely new to Boston. The first is the symphonic poem, "Villon," by the English composer, William Wallace. It was played in the season of 1911-12 by Mr. Fiedler and made a decided sensation. Previous to that performance Wallace's name was unknown to Symphony audiences. A rehearing of the work will be welcomed. The symphony will be the third in E major by the Swedish composer, Hugo Alfven. This will have its first hearing in Boston. It was first played in this country in Minneapolis in 1914. Since then it has become a regular repertoire piece of the Chicago orchestra, and a great favorite in that city. It is said to be bright, cheerful and melodious.

Globe Feb 13

Post. Dec 4, 1917

Thursday evening in Jordan Hall a song recital by Rosamond Young, soprano. Programme:

"My Heart Ever Faithful" ..... Bach
"La Partenza" ..... Beethoven
"Come Raggio di Sol" ..... Caldara
"Che Fiero Costume" ..... Legrenzi
"La Procession" ..... Franck
"Clair de Lune" ..... Saint-Saens
"L'Amour" ..... Godard
"Bergere Legere" .. Old French: arr. Weckerlin
"L'Inutile Defence" . Old French: arr. Ferrari
"Maman, dites-moi" . Old French: arr. Weckerlin
"Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer" . Brahms
"Waldeinsamkeit" ..... Reger
"Mausfallensprüchlein" ..... Wolf
"Erstes Begegnen" ..... Grieg
"Zur Johannesnacht" ..... Griez
"The Rock" ..... Hunt
"Cherry Ripe" ..... Horn
"Japanese Death Song" ..... Sharp
"Deserted" ..... MacDowel
"The Blue Bell" ..... MacDowell

Herbert Ringwall, accompanist.

Next Saturday afternoon in Jordan Hall a piano recital will be given by Mischa Levitzki: Programme:

Variations, C minor ..... Beethoven
Andante, F major ..... Beethoven
Ecossaises, E flat major ..... Beethoven
Sonata, op. 57, F minor (apassionata) .... Beethoven
Impromptu, B flat major ..... Schubert
Erlking ..... Schubert-Liszt
Two Moments Musicals ..... Schubert
Soirees de Vienne, No. 4 (valses-caprices) Schubert-Liszt
March-gallop (Reitermarsch) .. Schubert-Liszt

...TON SYMPHONY CON... ...OPPOSED IN SPRINGF...

SPRINGFIELD, Feb 12—A majo... the City Council committee tha... charge of city property, it wa... nounced today, is opposed to rentin... Municipal Auditorium for the sche... appearance this month of the B... Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr... Muck.

The board is seeking an expressio... ...blic opinion in reaching a decision. ...st year's board refused the use ...ll to Fritz Kreisler.

DIIV

Amusements

Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
Friday Afternoon at 2.30
Saturday Evening at 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
IRMA SEYDEL, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
f28mh2

Record Feb 28, 1918

Record Dec 20, 1917

WASHINGTON CONCERTS ARE CANCELLED

Record 12/20

Symphony Orchestra Is Denied Admission to Capital

As a result of the Federal order prohibiting the entry of Germans to the District of Columbia, all concerts scheduled by the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been cancelled and subscribers will be refunded the money paid for tickets, according to an announcement today by C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra.

The orchestra cannot visit the capital because of its 22 German members and because of the claim that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, is an alien enemy. He contends he is a Swiss citizen.

Complaints have been made that the local agents conducting the concerts had refused money paid by music lovers, but Mr. Ellis today said that all money would be returned and all future concerts cancelled until after the war.

It was announced by the Department of Justice that they held Dr. Muck to be an alien enemy, and if he attempted to enter the district would be immediately arrested and held until the end of the war.

Subscribers refused to attend the concerts without Dr. Muck directing and without the services of the 22 musicians of German citizenship.

Record Nov 9, 1917

WITEK SYMPHONY CHARMS AUDIENCE

Genius of Violinist Ably Supported by Boston Orchestra

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAMME.

Wallace, Symphonic poem, "Villon."
Bruch, violin concerto, G minor.
Soloist, Anton Witek.
Alfven, Third Symphony, E major.

In spite of these wheatless, heatless, eatless, meatless, sweetless days, the symphony concerts go on uninterruptedly, at least in Boston, and a host of other important musical events (McCormack, opera, etc.), looms up on the horizon.

If a Scotchman (Robert Louis Stevenson) wrote the best English essay on "Villon," we presume that another Scot may venture to set the "sad, mad, bad, glad poet" to music, although we feel that only his brother Frenchman, Bizet, could have done full justice to this vagabond of the fifteenth century. Wallace makes him too much of a "Till Eulenspiegel."

Of course there was plenty of spice in the portrayal of the wild Bohemian, possibly picturing him dissipating his stealings—

"All to Taverns and to Wenches."

A short bassoon solo gives a touch of trickiness to another portion of the work, and there is a joyous climax which is too lofty for the ignoble subject. The sweet theme for English horn in the centre may suggest the pathos of the line—

"Where are the snows of yesteryear?"

The odd little Carillon (chimes) of the end certainly illustrates the lines—

"I hear the soft-toned Sorbonne bell,
Which at the hour of nine would tell
Th' Angelic Salutation."

EXCELLENT PERFORMANCE.

But in spite of all this, and an excellent performance to boot, we could not find in the music a graphic portrayal of the fearfully sarcastic reviler of, and scoffer at, all respectability.

There are very few really great violin concertos, but Bruch's G minor is of them—and his other two are not. It was refreshing to have our great violinist, Anton Witek, leave for a time the classic heights of Beethoven and Brahms and enter the more romantic field of the modern style. There was not the stupendous technique here that Brahms demands, nor the tremendous power of the Beethoven concerto, but the freedom and abandon of the movement, seeming almost improvisational, the tenderness and sympathetic quality of the slow movement, and the leonine power of the Finale, left nothing to be desired, and Mr. Witek was recalled over and over again with enthusiasm. The work was most refreshing in its clearness and did not make music a penance, as too many of the long concertos do. We have never heard Mr. Witek excel the tenderness of this adagio or the breadth of the Ossianic finale.

Hugo Alfven is a Swede, whose work is new to Boston. He wrote this symphony in Italy a dozen years ago. Both this and Wallace's "Villon" were for the large modern orchestra, but Alfven's does not follow the modern will-o'-the-wisp by being extremely long, nor by casting all forms to the winds. It is shapely and intelligigle. The first movement is a very definite sonata-allegro form, such as might have been written by even a Mendelssohn, although the treatment is much bolder than that composer would have given. The slow movement is a clear rondo, and here the clarinets and the flutes did some excellent work.

WORK FREE FROM MORBIDNESS.

The whole work is free from the morbidness to which Sibelius and other Scandinavians tend, and the Scherzo is especially sunshiny. But there is much contrast in the Finale, a martial trumpet call, which plays a prominent part all through the movement, and some darkly dramatic passages, yet even these latter are not in the ascendant and the impression left by the symphony is one of clearness, melodic beauty and sensible development. The composition is a good proof that the classical lemon is not yet squeezed dry. One can use the Mozart form and yet say something quite modern. One can still put new wine into the old bottles.

Although the orchestration is essentially modern, there were no extreme difficulties in the score (save in a few string passages), no excessive rhythmic juggleries, and the reading was virile. The work gave somewhat the impression of Mahler's dramatic and melodic style, at his best; the Scherzo left a pleasant taste of dance rhythms, and the finale might have been a triumphant cavalry charge. The symphony made a decidedly popular success, and by legitimate means.

plays, all of which is guided by M... Tietjens' experienced baton.

The Coming Concerts

Among the more prominent concerts, which will soon be given in Boston, are the following:—

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 10, in Jordan Hall, a concert by Mischa Levitzki, pianist.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11, Symphony Hall, a concert by Mischa Elman, the violinist.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 13, Symphony Hall, concert by the Apollo Club, Miss Stoddart, soprano, and Mr. Alberini, baritone, are the soloists.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 14, Mme. Yvette Guilbert, the French diseuse.

Thursday afternoon, Nov. 15, Jordan Hall, concert by Felix Fox, pianist, and Emil Ferir, first viola-player of the Symphony Orchestra.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, the second of the annual series of concerts by the Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Muck.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, Symphony Hall, a concert by Roland Hayes, the colored tenor, assisted by H. T. Burleigh, the colored composer.

Thursday evening, Nov. 15, Jordan Hall, a concert by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, the pianist and composer, and Mrs. Lafayette Goodbar, soprano.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 17, Jordan Hall, a concert by Moses Boguslawski, Russian pianist.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18, Symphony Hall, a concert by Fritz Kreisler.

Monday evening, Nov. 19, Jordan Hall, a concert by Percy Grainger, for the Boston Chapter of the Red Cross.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, Symphony Hall, the first of the series of three concerts, by the Symphony Orchestra and a new choral society. Dr. Muck will conduct Beethoven's Choral Symphony.

Tuesday evening, Nov. 20, Steinert Hall, concert by Leila Holterhoff, colorating soprano.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 21, Jordan Hall, a concert by George Copeland, the pianist.

Thursday evening, Nov. 22, Jordan Hall, the first of the series of chamber concerts by the Flonzaley Quartet.

Friday evening, Nov. 23, Steinert Hall, concert by Evelyn Jeane, Willard Flint and Malcolm Long.

Saturday afternoon, Nov. 24, Jordan Hall, a concert by Mrs. Helen Allen Hunt.

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 25, Symphony Hall, recital by Mme. Schumann-Heink.

Monday evening, Nov. 26, Steinert Hall, concert by Boston Symphony Brass Quartet.

Saturday afternoon, Dec. 1, Jordan Hall, recital by Samuel Gardner, violinist.

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 2, Harvard Club, piano recital by Heinrich Gebhard.

Tuesday evening, Dec. 4, Jordan Hall, song recital by Mrs. Laura Littlefield, the Boston soprano.

Saturday afternoon, Dec. 8, Jordan Hall, song recital by Rosalie Wirthlin, the soprano.

Monday evening, Dec. 10, Jordan Hall, annual song recital by Evan Williams.

Saturday afternoon, Dec. 15, Jordan Hall, song recital by Greta Torpadie, the young soprano.

Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 18, Steinert Hall, concert by Yolande Mero, pianist.

Thursday afternoon, Dec. 20, Jordan Hall, concert by the Kneisel players, Fritz Kreisler, first violin.

MAIL CLERKS TO

EAGLE

Brooklyn, N. Y.

, 1918.

Boston Symphony Gives Brilliant Performance

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its fourth concert of the present season in the Academy of Music last evening. Apparently the opposition to Dr. Muck which was so perplexing a problem in the beginning of the year has died down altogether, for last evening the house was full even to a great number of standees. There were some empty seats but they were subscribers, and of course could not be resold. And as long as Dr. Muck and his men continue to furnish us with such music as they did last evening there will be few among the music lovers who will allow their patriotism to be charged with chauvinism.

The program as arranged by Dr. Muck contained nothing that was novel or apt to destroy the calm demeanor of those who love the accepted forms of music. He began with the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky, that musical message of gratitude on the composer's part to his benefactor, Nadejda von Meck. While classical in its outline, the conductor's reading of the work was surcharged with emotional vigor. As ever, the Scherzo was a "tour de force" on the band's part and given with a virtuosity and unanimity of pizzicato utterance that revealed above all the amazing technical skill of these players. But more than that, it was an admirable revelation of the spirit of gayety that must have been in the composer's mind at the time of its composition.

In the final number Dr. Muck turned to the modern Strauss, that same Richard whose works aroused so much discussion at the time of their birth but which are now accepted classics. One never thinks of Strauss today as a revolutionist; for his successors have moved so far beyond him that the extravagances of his youth have become the conventions of his age. Of all the tone-poems the "Tod und Verklaerung" is probably the most popular, and indeed as a musical composition it is more closely knit and has less extraneous matter than any of the others. Furthermore, its thematic material is every apt, does not cloy with the passing years, and in the finale the composer has risen to his greatest heights. Last evening Dr. Muck probed deep into its emotional depths and revealed through the all-powerful revealing force at his command the work's every beauty. So stirring a performance of this extraordinarily beautiful composition has been vouchsafed us but few times.

Between the two purely orchestral numbers the band played, with the assistance of the pianist, Winifred Christie, the First Piano Concerto of Liszt, that in E-flat major. Miss Christie has long been recognized as a pianist of excellent attainments, but unfortunately the public has been slow to realize the talent of this young Scotch girl. Last evening she gave a stirring performance of the Liszt composition. There is no lack of technical difficulties, but Miss Christie met them all with a sureness and facility that would have done credit to many an older artist. Unfortunately, in the composition is no great wealth of poetic content. Whatever there is, however, found revealment in the happy co-ordination of soloist and orchestra.

EAGLE

Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA PLAYS BRILLIANTLY

Dr. Muck and Band Gives Memorable Reading of Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony.

For the fourth of the Saturday matinee series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall, Dr. Muck again followed the procedure he has gloried in this year and gave only old and popular numbers. The first half was devoted to a masterly interpretation of the Haydn Symphony in G major, more familiarly known as the "Surprise." The performance was remarkable for its clarity and delicacy. Haydn scored this work for the small orchestra of his own generation and frequently when played by the modern orchestra it is heavy and without the lightness so necessary for the full manifestation of its aristocratic beauty. Yesterday afternoon although he made use of the enlarged band, Dr. Muck was careful to tone down the ensemble until he was able to keep all the delicacy and lightness the composition requires.

For the second part of the program the compositions were the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings and the Goldmark overture "Sakuntala." If ever the virtuosity of the string section of the Boston band was revealed to the full it was in yesterday afternoon's performance of the serenade. The various divisions played as one man and with an orchestral color and texture of velvet, with a unanimity of utterance supreme in its excellence.

Herald Dec 9 1917

REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass.

FEB 17 1918

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S CASE

Mistake Made in the City's Treatment of It

To the Editor of The Republican:—

I think the time will come when Springfield will be thoroughly ashamed of the action taken in regard to the Boston symphony orchestra. The argument that American musicians would not be allowed to appear in Germany is entirely beside the mark.

No gentleman will regulate his conduct by that of a ruffian, and I don't think this nation needs to govern its action by that of the one which murdered Belgium and sunk the Lusitania.

Such actions as this will play directly into the hands of our enemies as it will tend to embitter thousands of Germans who have very little sympathy with the present course of the German government, and will make the words of the president that we have no quarrel with the German people, but only with their military rulers, sound very hollow indeed.

It should be remembered that the man who is responsible for the orchestra is Maj Higginson, who has proved his patriotism beyond all question, and I don't believe any one will think he would allow any man to remain with the orchestra at this time whose actions were at all questionable.

This war will be over some time and then will come the work of reconstruction, and we should be very careful now about adopting any course which will tend to make that work more difficult. XXX.

Springfield, February 15, 1918.

n RECORD

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Winifred Christie, Pianist, Heard as Soloist at Concert.

The last concert but one of the Boston Orchestra series for this season was heard in the Academy of Music last night by an audience that filled every available seat and that included the proscenium boxes with boys attired in khaki.

Dr. Muck's program was varied and enjoyable, comprising the Mozart G minor symphony, Rachmaninoff's highly picturesque symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead," the Liszt E flat major concerto for piano and orchestra, in which Winfred Christie was the soloist, and the Beethoven "Egmont" overture.

The Mozart work had an especially happy reading, the strength and vitality of the music being wonderfully brought out, while the many delicate phases were equally well presented.

The Rachmaninoff poem, if not enjoyable as a painting of a definite object, is nevertheless, fascinating as an orchestral medium of display. The rhythmic possibilities of the various instruments is a constant study and the tone and power of the orchestra find continual employment in unusual and diverse combinations.

Miss Christie, an English pianist, was shown overwhelming appreciation of her performance of the thread-bare Liszt Concerto, being recalled many times. Miss Christie played with fluent technique but the effort she labored under was so distressing that it destroyed much of the really good work she accomplished. She would be more enjoyable if she would cultivate a measure of repose. Another very serious fault lay in her wretched pedalling, the reverberation frequently blurring all tone. Her tone was constantly reinforced by the pedal, which formed anything but an artistic or satisfying combination. The Beethoven Overture completed the program.

REPUBLICAN

Springfield, Mass

FEB 17 1918

NO CONCERT HERE BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

C. A. Ellis Cancels Engagement Owing to City Property Committee's Action

The Boston symphony orchestra will not play in this city on the 27th. C. A. Ellis, under whose management the orchestra was to have appeared, yesterday canceled the engagement through his local representative, Edward H. Marsh. Mr Ellis's action was due to the decision of the city property committee to wthhold the use of the Auditorium unless the orchestra eliminated those members who are enemy aliens. As there are 30 Germans and Austrians playing in the Boston symphony, it was thought that this diminution would seriously handicap its performance, a condition that Mr Ell's refused to tolerate. The Auditorium is the only place in the city adapted to the holding of the concert.

PUBLIC LEDGER

ress Philadelphia, Pa.

WINIFRED CHRISTIE WITH ORCHESTRA

English Pianist Performs at Excellent Concert of the Boston Symphony

PROGRAM

Mozart.....G Minor Symphony
Rachmaninoff.....Symphonic Poem "Island of the Dead"
Liszt.....Concerto No. 1, E flat For piano and orchestra
Beethoven.....'Egmont" Overture

Miss Winifred Christie, the English pianist, played Liszt's E-flat piano concerto at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Doctor Muck in the Academy last evening. There were a few vacant seats; the enthusiasm for the soloist and for the orchestra itself was considerable.

Miss Christie, whose stage presence is prepossessing, played in a strong, large way, sometimes blurring the technique a little, sometimes lifting the piano a little too far out of its refined and sophisticated environment with a prodigality of motion on the part of head and arms.

An earnestness of personality, a glowing and vivid womanliness shone in and from her playing, and while there have been many pianists heard who were more subtle or more profound or more polished, comparatively few are humanly more appealing. Often a lucid and beautiful tone issued from the instrument; frequently the rippling rills of the notes fell on the ear most agreeably, and if the pace at first seemed deliberate and at last a trifle hurried, one was always spared a sense of stilted and metronomic rigidity. The audience liked the player and the playing well and the recalls were numerous.

The Mozart Symphony was a purely delightful offering, immortal emanation of "a mind forever voyaging through strange seas of thought" far above the power of mean and narrow contemporaries to navigate. One was led to muse on the sheer cruelty of fate to such a bringer of light and joy to the uses of mankind. The French horns found their repeated ordeal in the trio a little too much for them. Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem was grandly done, and the sea round desolate promontories rose and fell in a slow processional magnificence of melancholy. The double basses, divided in four parts, distinguished themselves; into the opulence and the organic fullness of the corporate tone the golden voices of the strings and woodwind and brasses poured themselves as in blended pipes of the same instrument. The majestic finale was Beethoven's Overture to Egmont and the preface was an indifferent delivery of the national anthem.

F. L. W.

REPUBLICAN

ress Springfield, Mass.

FEB 17 1918

The decision of the city property committee to debar from the Auditorium those members of the Boston symphony orchestra who are of enemy nationality was tantamount to an order forbidding the concert. This may not have been the intention of the city property committee, but any one who is at all familiar with the artistic standards of the Boston symphony orchestra would not expect that organization to perform with one-third of its instruments played by substitutes. Perfection of orchestral performance depends upon the long and arduous rehearsal of men under a conductor who is able to impose his will upon the organization, so that its many voices are blended as in a single instrument possessing at once great delicacy and great power. The tone quality of the Boston symphony orchestra, while possibly not quite on the same plane of superlative perfection that it attained under Mr Gericke, has not been achieved in a single season, but in many. Whatever one may think of the decision of the city property committee—and to The Republican it seems to have been without sufficient justification—all must regret that the opposition to the orchestra covered a certain hostility in some quarters to foreign musicians, not at all on the ground that they happen to be enemy aliens, but on the quite different ground that they are foreigners. The theory that American musicians would find more lucrative employment if they did not suffer from foreign competition may be entirely true, but it has nothing to do with patriotism.

EAGLE

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

NO HUNS—NO SYMPHONY

Springfield, Mass., February 16—Word was received here today from the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that rather than lower the standard of the orchestra's performances, as would be necessary were the scheduled concert to be given here without the thirty German and Austro-Hungarian members who have been barred from the auditorium, the concert has been canceled.

HANDEL AND HAYDN

The Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, will give performances of "The Messiah" on Sunday, Dec. 23, at 7:30 P. M., an on Monday, Dec. 23, at 7:30 P. M., and on Monday, on Sunday night will be Marie Stoddart, Alma Beck, Reed Miller and Henri Scott. On Monday night they will be Marie de Kyzer, Merle Alcock and Messrs. Miller and Scott. Mr. Tucker will be the organist.

The society will perform "Hora Novissima" on Sunday, Feb. 17 (Mmes. Hudson-Alexander and Alcock; Lambert Murphy and F. Martin). Mabel W. Daniels's choral work "Peace with the Sword" will then be sung for the first time in public. The entire profit from this concert will be given to the fund to aid the war hut work of the Y. M. C. A.

On Easter Sunday, March 31, "The Redemption" (Mmes. Hudson-Alexander and Hemenway; Lambert Murphy, Earle Cartwright, F. Martin).

The sale of season tickets to the public will be open during the week beginning tomorrow at 8:30 A. M. at Symphony Hall. The season tickets include the choice of one performance of "The Messiah" and carry the right of renewal for another season to the same seats.

The sale of single tickets for "The Messiah" concerts, at $1, $1.50 and $2, will open Monday, Dec. 17, at 8:30 A. M.

Patrons can secure their seats by sending checks or money orders with return directed-postpaid envelopes to the box office, Symphony Hall. Be careful to state which "Messiah" date is desired. The best seats unsold—as near the desired location as possible—will be sent.

JOHN McCORMACK

It became evident early last week that the song recital by John McCormack at the Boston Opera House this afternoon at 3 o'clock would surpass all records in point of attendance. The only question was whether there would be sufficient accommodation.

For assisting artists he will have Andre Polah, violinist, and Edwin Schneider, pianist.

The program is as follows:

Recit and Air from "Joseph".....Mehul
Mr. McCormack.
Larghetto.....Weber
Theme et Variations.....Corelli-Tartini
Mr. Polah.
J'ai pleure en reve.....Hue
Autumn.....Feure
O cease thy singing.....Rachmaninoff
Fear not my love.....Rachmaninoff
Mr. McCormack.
Concerto.....Mendelssohn
Mr. Polah.
Irish folk songs:
Ah! pity boy sad am I.....Arr. Hardebeck
The Next Market Day.....Arr. Hughes
The song of the Rose.....Arr. Stanford
Men of Connaught (from the Gaelic)
Arr. Milligan-Fox
Mr. McCormack.
Rondino.....Vieuxtemps
Mr. Polah.
Till I wake.....H. T. Burleigh
The Littlest of All.....Frank Tours
Unmindful of the Roses..Edwin Schneider
The Lord is my Light (by request)
Frances Allitsen
Mr. McCormack.

THIBAUD-NOVAES CONCERT

There will be no concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon, but a week from Sunday Jacques Thibaud, violinist, and Guiomar Novaes, pianist, will give a concert. Mr. Thibaud ranks among the very foremost violinists of our time. Miss Novaes has fully justified the profound impression she made at her first appearances in America two years ago. She is a pianist of great gifts.

CONCERT NOTES

At Laura Littlefield's postponed recital in Jordan Hall Tuesday evening, Dec. 18, the program will remain the same.

Yolande Mero, pianist, will give a recital on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 18, in Steinert Hall. Mme. Mero's program will open with Bach's "Concerto for the Organ," arranged by Aug. Stradal, and it will include pieces by Schumann, Debussy, Rachmaninoff, Dohnanyi, Liszt and Merkler.

On Saturday evening, Dec. 29, a concert for a Russian relief benefit will be given in Steinert hall.

The first of the two chamber music concerts by Fritz Kreisler and Messrs. Letz, Svencenski and Willike will take place in Jordan Hall Thursday afternoon, Dec. 20. Three quartets comprise the program: Mozart's in C major; Beethoven's in E major, op. 59, No. 1; and Schubert's in A minor, op. 29. Mr. Kreisler's appearance is in accordance with his recent decision not to appear this season in any but charity concerts, as he had already pledged himself to give his share in these chamber music concerts to the Musicians' Foundation, established by the "Bohemians."

TRANSCRIPT FEB. 2, 1918 –

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

SIBELIUS BY THE SIDE OF TWO PARISIANS

Tone-Poems, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunset," Still Relatively Unfamiliar, in Which He Far Outshone Dukas in a Labored and Hollow Symphony and Saint-Saens in a Neat Concerto—Miss Seydel as Violinist

IN disparagement of the proposition that Boston audiences take the learned attitude toward their music, the Friday subscribers, at least, met the rather light-charactered and superficial French music at yesterday's concert with many rounds of applause, whereas the more deep-currented and nobly conceived "Pohjola's Daughter," and the "Night Ride and Sunrise" of Sibelius found no stronger acknowledgment than perfunctory politeness. A part explanation is obvious: the Symphony of Dukas and the violin concerto of Saint-Säens in B minor indulge in the usual orchestral excitements and convolutions, while Sibelius here set himself soberly to his particular task, avoiding superlatives. The Frenchmen courted the applause of habit with the usual ascendant endings, while Sibelius was prompted solely by his art and his subject, in the first case drab, in the second dreamy, in each, innocent of physiological reaction.

Take them in what light you may, the two tone-poems, repeated from last season, still overtopped in interest the symphony newly introduced to Boston. The music of Sibelius persists strange in our ears, while more than one work labelled "First time in Boston" presents aspects by no means unfamiliar. And therefore Sibelius, however distinct and unmistakable his style, necessitates frequent returns from year to year. Such opportunity Dr. Muck abundantly provides. No living composer, not even Debussy and Strauss, does he favor more, while conductors the country over merely chance upon "Finlandia" or the like now and then, steering wide and wary of the Fourth Symphony. Yet Boston, even its once doubting part, is being converted to Sibelius "en bloc," to the point of taking him for granted. Let us avoid that pitfall, while welcoming the repetition of the First, Second and Fourth Symphonies, the "Swan of Tuonela," "Finlandia," the "Oceanides," and the two supremely beautiful pieces of yesterday. The "King Christian" Suite should give way permanently to its betters, and the "Valse Triste" will do for scandalous dancers on Broadway. If Dr. Muck belonged to New York, he would undoubtedly reiterate the Fourth Symphony, until he had compelled and driven his auidences from reluctance into enthusiasm.

Like the rest, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the "Night Ride and Sunrise," with repetition grow in the estimation of the hearer. Dr. Muck interprets them with a remarkable lucidity and sympathy, avoiding haste and the continental, un-Sibelian mannerisms into which another conductor would lapse from the thoughtless custom of his beat, cherishing every atom of the eloquence in the individual voices. In listening to them, a strong effort of receptivity is necessary, and it is well to leave both musical and literary orthodoxy behind. Commentators are prone to become too wordy over Sibelius's nationality, his landscape, his "Kalevala." These things are implicated, but they are not inexplicable. To much preoccupation with runs and phrases, too much thinking in the terms of poetry and prose, tends to divert people from the impassioned directness and simplicity of Sibelius's purely musical genius. Suffice it that the two pieces in question describe what their names imply. Sibelius is a highly imaginative, but not a graphic worker; with him, as with every important composer, moods are paramount, specific deeds, negligible. He feels a deep kinship for his people and their folk-lores—that feeling finds natural and concentrated expression in his music. And the inner emotion is more indescribable than the external signs. It is music of the heart. knowing no rhetoric but that of the heart, knowing no rhetoric but that of the overloaded with pretension, finery and brain-spun elaboration.

Indeed, the economy of Sibelius's materials and design is never more apparent than in these pieces. In "Pohjola's Daughter," particularly, there is intensive and creative search of the latent melodic possibilities of the various instruments. The songful result, finely and freshly wrought. often follows a single line, blending from instrument to instrument, and enhanced by a weird and shimmering background. It is the very opposite of a multiplex score, intricately contrived, and breathlessly eventful. The subject is laid out simply, clearly, deliberately. But it never sounds "thin," or more than intentionally monotonous, for it is replete with the subtlest touches and changes. So also with the music of the night ride. Strauss might have launched a huge orchestra upon a stupendous race, exceeding Liszt's "Mazeppa." But the loping, rhythmic figure of Sibelius in the strings, with just the right touch of sleighbells, tries not once to be "clever," and becomes far the apter sensation. More than one celebrity has missed the kernel of an every-day matter, in his too prodigious efforts to be ingenious. But it is always mood rather than imitation, and the sunrise is full of mood. To a person who has never heard it, it is as indescribable as color to a blind man.

Beside Sibelius, the orchestral manipulations of Dukas, brass fanfares, flute runs and the rest of it, sounded perhaps more conventional than they really were. The Symphony was naturally chosen as the only alternative to the "Sorcerer's Apprentice," which is in pressing need of rest. And now, it is not hard to understand why the Scherzo is the more used. That Scherzo is more than a serviceable tour de force, to enliven and fill out a programme. Its maker has never before or since hit upon its felicitous twist of theme or struck the mark of orchestral brilliance more cleanly, or lived up to its conciseness and its sparkling wit. Surely, not in his symphony. Accustomed to the lone flash of humor, one looked yesterday for the more serious Dukas, for whatever aims and aspirations his more largely drawn music might reveal. Glimpses of personality, of genuine intimate beauty, shone from many pages of the slow movement, but the first and last seemed mostly a compilation of "influences" and contemporary usages, disparate music of a composer conversant in the "grand manner" more proficient in gesture than moved by inspiration. Dukas stands forth in his symphony as a skilled orchestrator, with a long eye for proportion, mass, and musical logic, yet more than one loose joint is uncovered in its course. And, most conspicuously, the symphony is full of "theatre," in the vein of French musical tradition. He shapes and plans his climaxes well; the storms darkly gathering in the strings, the cumulative ascent, magniloquent statement from the trombones or trumpets, these practices bespeak a good campaigner, but they have all been heard before. There is more than a tinge of the artificial and the "showy"; the wit of the last movement falls distinctly short of the "Sorcerer's Apprentice." But there is an inspiriting snap of rhythm in the first. And the Andante is an individual, a distinctly finer sort of music. The longest of the three movements, it justifies its length. There is beauty in the main theme, variety of color in its development, individual orchestration as almost nowhere else. There are some truly memorable passages for the horns, and the glamorous body of the sustained strings is never sentimental. By its slow movement, the Symphony will be remembered.

Last week Mme. Leginska, first appearing in Boston with its eminent orchestra, missed her fullest opportunities by an unwise choice of concerto. Miss Irma Seydel doing the same yesterday, chose one which suited her to perfection. The Violin Concerto of Saint-Saëns in B minor has undergone very different readings, but the feminine, persuasive quality of hers may stand with the best of them. Sarasate, for whom the concerto was written, may have played it with more suave polish and complacent confidence, with more "temperament"—keener fire of attack and incision, with more grandiose bravura. But these qualities were not missed; they would have sounded rather strange from a quiet-mannered girl of twenty-two. For instance, the flourish opening the last movement, which sounds most threadbare and all of thirty-eight years old, she performed with modest exactitude rather than strutting assertion. As a generally careful and graceful interpretation, it was the more becoming, even though the wit and sparkle of the composer flashed rather more deftly from the orchestra than Miss Seydel's bow. The middle Siciliano struck the best balance of ensemble, and brought forth the most charming capabilities of Miss Seydel. She forgot her nervousness, played as one with the orchestra for the enhancement of the music. And if hers was not the shaded eloquence and authority of Mr. Longy's oboe, nor the subtlety of Mr. Maquarre's flute, her excellent musicianship still bespoke her competence to match her lovely and faultless tone, most discriminately poised and shaped, with theirs.

J. N. B.

TRANSCRIPT MARCH, 1, 1918

BACH RESTORED

Dr. Muck's Preparations for the Coming Performance of the "Passion Music According to Matthew"—A Return to the Composer's Orchestra and Accompaniments

AT the performance of Bach's "Passion Music according to Matthew," by Dr. Muck, the Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Townsend's choir, in Symphony Hall on Tuesday, March 26, the conductor will not only make no cuts in the score, but will return as nearly as possible to the original accompaniments as the composer himself wrote them or in close accord with his instrumental means and procedure. A communiqué from Symphony Hall sets forth Dr. Muck's purpose as follows:

In the original version of the "Passion Music" Bach's orchestra comprised a string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable—first, with oboes "d'amore," second, with oboes "da caccia." He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the figured bass. For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment, unless it was a single instrument "obbligato," allowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers. This figured bass became a lost art long before the end of the eighteenth century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Franz, and this version of the "Passion Music" has been generally used at performances in this country and in Europe.

Now it is Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to Bach's original score in form and manner. He will make no cuts in the music, since the excisions usually made destroy to a degree the significance and proportion of the whole. Accordingly, he will begin the performance at 4.30 in the afternoon; continue it until a little past six; resume it at eight in the evening, and end it about ten. The more epic music falls into the afternoon; the more dramatic into the evening. Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding, likewise, that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects entirely Mozart's version of the orchestral part and all of Franz's version except certain accompaniments for strings alone.

Instead, Dr. Muck's orchestra will consist of thirty-two violins, twelve violas, twelve 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. He has been unable to secure in this country the prescribed oboes "da caccia," but for these he will substitute English horns, the nearest analogue in the modern orchestra. He has oboes "d'amore." Dr. Muck has himself restored, so far as practicable, the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for Bach's orchestra many of the airs and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. Furthermore, he has written out the parts for the organ and the piano, to replace the harpsichord. In other words, the coming performance of the "Passion Music" will approximate the original performance in the Church of St. Thomas at Leipsic as closely as modern conditions permit.

Globe, MARCH. 2, 1918

NEW DUKAS SYMPHONY

Globe 3/2

The spirit of the scherzo is not wholly absent from the new symphony in C major of Dukas, given yesterday for the first time here, although the movement itself is lacking. There appears to be much intent toward vivacity in the other three, with some purpose in caprice, whimsicality, humor. But the Dukas who wrote the contemporaneous scherzo, "Sorcerer's Apprentice," with a fine wit and a skillful pen, is seldom heard.

The last of the three movements, in attempting impetuous vigor, ends by being noisy, bustling, emptily pretentious, with commonplace themes. The first had promised better, both in significance of ideas and in continuity. The "song" theme, minor in mode, gracefully plaintive, has marked beauty as announced in violins and deepening as repeated with added horn. In the slow movement there is a definite mood in the passage descending scale fashion from the tonic, pausing on six and three. Archaic in character it is the more churchly through the appropriate harmonization and rich bass. Repeated later in the return in loud brass with counterpoint in strings, the beauty has gone. Dr Muck conducted wtih obvious care and sympathy. Another work of moments, and there are many details of skillful orchestration, but unequal to the duration of symphonic flight.

The soloist of the day was Irma Seydel, the violinist whose steady rise all have watched with interest and pleasure. Miss Seydel is now more than a promising young woman. There is maturity in her manner, breadth of bowing, the quality of authority in molding and projecting a phrase, in planning a passage in due proportion, in perceiving the contrast of moods and works. Saint-Saens' old concerto in B minor, with its elegance and artifices, was the number. The bravura had boldness, aplomb, rhythmic profile. The superb calm which underlies the Sicilian melody will be more Miss Seydel's some day, than just now, but in passages not asking such repose, there was technic, intonation, taste and that elusive thing called style. In all a successful debut, for while Miss Seydel has played elsewhere with the orchestra, this was her first appearance at these concerts.

Two of the noblest compositions in modern orchestral literature, Sibelius' "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," conducted with masterful perception and authority by Dr Muck at their former performance, were the closing numbers.

Herald Nov 22, 1917

MANY NOVELTIES IN COPELAND'S RECITAL

Satie, Roger-Ducasse and Ravel Numbers Given Here for the First Time.

George Copeland gave a piano recital last evening at Jordan Hall. The program was as follows: Gluck, Musette and Gavotte; Chopin, Fantaisie F minor; Schumann, Faschingswank; Satie, Gnossienne No. 1; Roger-Ducasse, Bourree; Ravel, Danse de Daphnis; Engel, Peau d'Espagne, Sombras; de Falla, Andaluza; Grovlez, Reverie; Debussy, "Les Fees sont d'exquises danseuses," Voiles, L'isle Joyeuse.

Mr. Copeland is invariably a delightful maker of programs in which interesting novelties are introduced. Last evening pieces by Satie, Roger-Ducasse, Ravel, Engel, de Falla and Grovlez were played here for the first time. Satie's Gnossienne No. 1 was easily the most fascinating of the French group. Cnossus, an ancient town of Crete, whose foundation is laid to Minos, King of the Cretans, was the scene of the birth of Jupiter and of his marriage to Hera. It was also his burial place. It is also said to have been the site of the Cretan labyrinth, the abode of the Minotaur, built by Daedalus. Were the Cnossian women fair to look upon? Satie has presumed them to be so. The piece has the classic beauty of figures moving in harmonious and enchanting rhythm across a Greek frieze. The frank gayety of Roger-Ducasse's Bourree provided agreeable contrast. Then came Ravel's Danse of Daphnis, the Sicilian shepherd, said to be a son of Mercury.

Mr. Engel has written a set of piano pieces inspired by various perfumes. His Peau d'Espagne is a particularly happy number of the group, striking in color and rhythm, realistic in atmosphere. His Sombras, written for and dedicated to Mr. Copeland, is in another vein, mysterious and contemplative, in keeping with the title.

Mr. Copeland's playing has been justly and repeatedly praised. It is late in the day to speak of his velvet touch, the depth and sonority of his most vigorous moments. He weaves many and enchanting spells whether in music of another century, as the supreme interpreter of the Frenchman Debussy, or whether with superb aplomb, daring colors and unerring sense of rhythm he paints gorgeous and fiery pictures of Spain. A very large audience was enthusiastic.

Herald 11/22

TRANSCRIPT FEB. 2, 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

SIBELIUS BY THE SIDE OF TWO PARISIANS

Tone-Poems, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunset," Still Relatively Unfamiliar, in Which He Far Outshone Dukas in a Labored and Hollow Symphony and Saint-Saens in a Neat Concerto—Miss Seydel as Violinist

IN disparagement of the proposition that Boston audiences take the learned attitude toward their music, the Friday subscribers, at least, met the rather light-charactered and superficial French music at yesterday's concert with many rounds of applause, whereas the more deep-currented and nobly conceived "Pohjola's Daughter," and the "Night Ride and Sunrise" of Sibelius found no stronger acknowledgment than perfunctory politeness. A part explanation is obvious: the Symphony of Dukas and the violin concerto of Saint-Saëns in B minor indulge in the usual orchestral excitements and convolutions, while Sibelius here set himself soberly to his particular task, avoiding superlatives. The Frenchmen courted the applause of habit with the usual ascendant endings, while Sibelius was prompted solely by his art and his subject, in the first case drab, in the second dreamy, in each, innocent of physiological reaction.

Take them in what light you may, the two tone-poems, repeated from last season, still overtopped in interest the symphony newly introduced to Boston. The music of Sibelius persists strange in our ears, while more than one work labelled "First time in Boston" presents aspects by no means unfamiliar. And therefore Sibelius, however distinct and unmistakable his style, necessitates frequent returns from year to year. Such opportunity Dr. Muck abundantly provides. No living composer, not even Debussy and Strauss, does he favor more, while conductors the country over merely chance upon "Finlandia" or the like now and then, steering wide and wary of the Fourth Symphony, Yet Boston, even its once doubting part, is being converted to Sibelius "en bloc," to the point of taking him for granted. Let us avoid that pitfall, while welcoming the repetition of the First, Second and Fourth Symphonies, the "Swan of Tuonela," "Finlandia," the "Oceanides," and the two supremely beautiful pieces of yesterday. The "King Christian" Suite should give way permanently to its betters, and the "Valse Triste" will do for scandalous dancers on Broadway. If Dr. Muck belonged to New York, he would undoubtedly reiterate the Fourth Symphony, until he had compelled and driven his auidences from reluctance into enthusiasm.

Like the rest, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the "Night Ride and Sunrise," with repetition grow in the estimation of the hearer. Dr. Muck interprets them with a remarkable lucidity and sympathy, avoiding haste and the continental, un-Sibelian mannerisms into which another conductor would lapse from the thoughtless custom of his beat, cherishing every atom of the eloquence in the individual voices. In listening to them, a strong effort of receptivity is necessary, and it is well to leave both musical and literary orthodoxy behind. Commentators are prone to become too wordy over Sibelius's nationality, his landscape, his "Kalevala." These things are implicated, but they are not inexplicable. To much preoccupation with runs and phrases, too much thinking in the terms of poetry and prose, tends to divert people from the impassioned directness and simplicity of Sibelius's purely musical genius. Suffice it that the two pieces in question describe what their names imply. Sibelius is a highly imaginative, but not a graphic worker; with him, as with every important composer, moods are paramount, specific deeds, negligible. He feels a deep kinship for his people and their folk-lores—that feeling finds natural and concentrated expression in his music. And the inner emotion is more indescribable than the external signs. It is music of the heart. knowing no rhetoric but that of the heart, knowing no rhetoric but that of the overloaded with pretension, finery and brain-spun elaboration.

Indeed, the economy of Sibelius's materials and design is never more apparent than in these pieces. In "Pohjola's Daughter," particularly, there is intensive and creative search of the latent melodic possibilities of the various instruments. The songful result, finely and freshly wrought. often follows a single line, blending from instrument to instrument, and enhanced by a weird and shimmering background. It is the very opposite of a multiplex score, intricately contrived, and breathlessly eventful. The subject is laid out simply, clearly, deliberately. But it never sounds "thin," or more than intentionally monotonous, for it is replete with the subtlest touches and changes. So also with the music of the night ride. Strauss might have launched a huge orchestra upon a stupendous race, exceeding Liszt's "Mazeppa." But the loping, rhythmic figure of Sibelius in the strings, with just the right touch of sleighbells, tries not once to be "clever," and becomes far the apter sensation. More than one celebrity has missed the kernel of an every-day matter, in his too prodigious efforts to be ingenious. But it is always mood rather than imitation, and the sunrise is full of mood. To a person who has never heard it, it is as indescribable as color to a blind man.

Beside Sibelius, the orchestral manipulations of Dukas, brass fanfares, flute runs and the rest of it, sounded perhaps more conventional than they really were. The Symphony was naturally chosen as the only alternative to the "Sorcerer's Apprentice," which is in pressing need of rest. And now, it is not hard to understand why the Scherzo is the more used. That Scherzo is more than a serviceable tour de force, to enliven and fill out a programme. Its maker has never before or since hit upon its felicitous twist of theme or struck the mark of orchestral brilliance more cleanly, or lived up to its conciseness and its sparkling wit. Surely, not in his symphony. Accustomed to the lone flash of humor, one looked yesterday for the more serious Dukas, for whatever aims and aspirations his more largely drawn music might reveal. Glimpses of personality, of genuine intimate beauty, shone from many pages of the slow movement, but the first and last seemed mostly a compilation of "influences" and contemporary usages, disparate music of a composer conversant in the "grand manner" more proficient in gesture than moved by inspiration. Dukas stands forth in his symphony as a skilled orchestrator, with a long eye for proportion, mass, and musical logic, yet more than one loose joint is uncovered in its course. And, most conspicuously, the symphony is full of "theatre," in the vein of French musical tradition. He shapes and plans his climaxes well; the storms darkly gathering in the strings, the cumulative ascent, magniloquent statement from the trombones or trumpets, these practices bespeak a good campaigner, but they have all been heard before. There is more than a tinge of the artificial and the "showy"; the wit of the last movement falls distinctly short of the "Sorcerer's Apprentice." But there is an inspiriting snap of rhythm in the first. And the Andante is an individual, a distinctly finer sort of music. The longest of the three movements, it justifies its length. There is beauty in the main theme, variety of color in its development, individual orchestration as almost nowhere else. There are some truly memorable passages for the horns, and the glamorous body of the sustained strings is never sentimental. By its slow movement, the Symphony will be remembered.

Last week Mme. Leginska, first appearing in Boston with its eminent orchestra, missed her fullest opportunities by an unwise choice of concerto. Miss Irma Seydel doing the same yesterday, chose one which suited her to perfection. The Violin Concerto of Saint-Saëns in B minor has undergone very different readings, but the feminine, persuasive quality of hers may stand with the best of them. Sarasate, for whom the concerto was written, may have played it with more suave polish and complacent confidence, with more "temperament"—keener fire of attack and incision, with more grandiose bravura. But these qualities were not missed; they would have sounded rather strange from a quiet-mannered girl of twenty-two. For instance, the flourish opening the last movement, which sounds most threadbare and all of thirty-eight years old, she performed with modest exactitude rather than strutting assertion. As a generally careful and graceful interpretation, it was the more becoming, even though the wit and sparkle of the composer flashed rather more deftly from the orchestra than Miss Seydel's bow. The middle Siciliano struck the best balance of ensemble, and brought forth the most charming capabilities of Miss Seydel. She forgot her nervousness, played as one with the orchestra for the enhancement of the music. And if hers was not the shaded eloquence and authority of Mr. Longy's oboe, nor the subtlety of Mr. Maquarre's flute, her excellent musicianship still bespoke her competence to match her lovely and faultless tone, most discriminately poised and shaped, with theirs.

J. N. B.

TRANSCRIPT MARCH, 1, 1918

BACH RESTORED

Dr. Muck's Preparations for the Coming Performance of the "Passion Music According to Matthew"—A Return to the Composer's Orchestra and Accompaniments

AT the performance of Bach's "Passion Music according to Matthew," by Dr. Muck, the Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Townsend's choir, in Symphony Hall on Tuesday, March 26, the conductor will not only make no cuts in the score, but will return as nearly as possible to the original accompaniments as the composer himself wrote them or in close accord with his instrumental means and procedure. A communiqué from Symphony Hall sets forth Dr. Muck's purpose as follows:

In the original version of the "Passion Music" Bach's orchestra comprised a string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable—first, with oboes "d'amore," second, with oboes "da caccia." He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the figured bass. For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment, unless it was a single instrument "obbligato," allowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers. This figured bass became a lost art long before the end of the eighteenth century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Franz, and this version of the "Passion Music" has been generally used at performances in this country and in Europe.

Now it is Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to Bach's original score in form and manner. He will make no cuts in the music, since the excisions usually made destroy to a degree the significance and proportion of the whole. Accordingly, he will begin the performance at 4.30 in the afternoon; continue it until a little past six; resume it at eight in the evening, and end it about ten. The more epic music falls into the afternoon; the more dramatic into the evening. Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding, likewise, that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects entirely Mozart's version of the orchestral part and all of Franz's version except certain accompaniments for strings alone.

Instead, Dr. Muck's orchestra will consist of thirty-two violins, twelve violas, twelve 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. He has been unable to secure in this country the prescribed oboes "da caccia," but for these he will substitute English horns, the nearest analogue in the modern orchestra. He has oboes "d'amore." Dr. Muck has himself restored, so far as practicable, the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for Bach's orchestra many of the airs and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. Furthermore, he has written out the parts for the organ and the piano, to replace the harpsichord. In other words, the coming performance of the "Passion Music" will approximate the original performance in the Church of St. Thomas at Leipsic as closely as modern conditions permit.

Globe, MARCH. 2, 1918

NEW DUKAS SYMPHONY

Globe 3/2

The spirit of the scherzo is not wholly absent from the new symphony in C major of Dukas, given yesterday for the first time here, although the movement itself is lacking. There appears to be much intent toward vivacity in the other three, with some purpose in caprice, whimsicality, humor. But the Dukas who wrote the contemporaneous scherzo, "Sorcerer's Apprentice," with a fine wit and a skillful pen, is seldom heard.

The last of the three movements, in attempting impetuous vigor, ends by being noisy, bustling, emptily pretentious, with commonplace themes. The first had promised better, both in significance of ideas and in continuity. The "song" theme, minor in mode, gracefully plaintive, has marked beauty as announced in violins and deepening as repeated with added horn. In the slow movement there is a definite mood in the passage descending scale fashion from the tonic, pausing on six and three. Archaic in character it is the more churchly through the appropriate harmonization and rich bass. Repeated later in the return in loud brass with counterpoint in strings, the beauty has gone. Dr Muck conducted wtih obvious care and sympathy. Another work of moments, and there are many details of skillful orchestration, but unequal to the duration of symphonic flight.

The soloist of the day was Irma Seydel, the violinist whose steady rise all have watched with interest and pleasure. Miss Seydel is now more than a promising young woman. There is maturity in her manner, breadth of bowing, the quality of authority in molding and projecting a phrase, in planning a passage in due proportion, in perceiving the contrast of moods and works. Saint-Saens' old concerto in B minor, with its elegance and artifices, was the number. The bravura had boldness, aplomb, rhythmic profile. The superb calm which underlies the Sicilian melody will be more Miss Seydel's some day, than just now, but in passages not asking such repose, there was technic, intonation, taste and that elusive thing called style. In all a successful debut, for while Miss Seydel has played elsewhere with the orchestra, this was her first appearance at these concerts.

Two of the noblest compositions in modern orchestral literature, Sibelius' "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," conducted with masterful perception and authority by Dr Muck at their former performance, were the closing numbers.

Herald Nov 22, 1917

MANY NOVELTIES IN COPELAND'S RECITAL

Satie, Roger-Ducasse and Ravel Numbers Given Here for the First Time.

George Copeland gave a piano recital last evening at Jordan Hall. The program was as follows: Gluck, Musette and Gavotte; Chopin, Fantaisie f minor; Schumann, Faschingswank; Satie, Gnossienne No. 1; Roger-Ducasse, Bourree; Ravel, Danse de Daphnis; Engel, Peau d'Espagne, Sombras; de Falla, Andaluza; Grovlez, Reverie; Debussy, "Les Fees sont d'exquises danseuses," Voiles, L'isle Joyeuse.

Mr. Copeland is invariably a delightful maker of programs in which interesting novelties are introduced. Last evening pieces by Satie, Roger-Ducasse, Ravel, Engel, de Falla and Grovlez were played here for the first time. Satie's Gnossienne No. 1 was easily the most fascinating of the French group. Gnossus, an ancient town of Crete, whose foundation is laid to Minos, King of the Cretans, was the scene of the birth of Jupiter and of his marriage to Hera. It was also his burial place. It is also said to have been the site of the Cretan labyrinth, the abode of the Minotaur, built by Daedalus. Were the Gnossian women fair to look upon? Satie has presumed them to be so. The piece has the classic beauty of figures moving in harmonious and enchanting rhythm across a Greek frieze. The frank gayety of Roger-Ducasse's Bourree provided agreeable contrast. Then came Ravel's Danse of Daphnis, the Sicilian shepherd, said to be a son of Mercury.

Mr. Engel has written a set of piano pieces inspired by various perfumes. His Peau d'Espagne is a particularly happy number of the group, striking in color and rhythm, realistic in atmosphere. His Sombras, written for and dedicated to Mr. Copeland, is in another vein, mysterious and contemplative, in keeping with the title.

Mr. Copeland's playing has been justly and repeatedly praised. It is late in the day to speak of his velvet touch, the depth and sonority of his most vigorous moments. He weaves many and enchanting spells whether in music of another century, as the supreme interpreter of the Frenchman Debussy, or whether with superb aplomb, daring colors and unerring sense of rhythm he paints gorgeous and fiery pictures of Spain. A very large audience was enthusiastic.

Herald March, 2, 1918

SYMPHONY GIVES 16TH CONCERT

Audience Is Delighted with Violin Performance of Miss Seydel

MAKES DEBUT HERE WITH ORCHESTRA

By PHILIP HALE

The 16th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Dukas, Symphony in C major; Saint-Saens, Concerto for Violin, No. 3; Sibelius, "Pojhola's Daughter" and "Nightride and Sunrise."

Dukas is known here chiefly by his Scherzo "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," which at first seemed to be an excellent bit of humor in music, but now sounds like an old joke. The symphony, which was played here for the first time in Boston, if not in the United States, was composed in 1895-96, a year or so before the Scherzo. Its prevailing fault is dryness—dryness in thematic material and in the scholastic use of the material. There is little or nothing that can be called imaginative; the only approach to the poetic is in the second movement, at the beginning of the middle section, which is also noticeable for more ingenious and effective instrumentation than is elsewhere displayed. The harmonic schemes are orthodox, without a touch of ultra-modernity. There are a few traces of Cesar Franck's influence, as in a jubilant passage where trumpets play an important part, also in one melodic line that recalls the Franck of the Symphony in D minor. Dukas's symphony is a serious work, the work of a man enamored of development, delighting in working out contrapuntal problems; a laborious work, one without the quickening breath of inspiration.

Miss Seydel, now in her 22d year, has had uncommon experience in playing before the public since she was 10 years old; experience in this country and in Europe. Yesterday she played at a Symphony concert in Boston for the first time, although she has played with this orchestra in Providence and twice in Cambridge. She chose Saint-Saens's familiar concerto in B minor. When the concerto was first performed in Boston by Mr. Adamowski the critic of a leading newspaper condemned it as "insipid, colorless," hastily put together as for a pressing occasion. The second movement reminded him of Gounod; the third of Bizet. Another critic said that the music was "without the characteristics of Saint-Saens," and saw a short life for the concerto. Let this be a warning to us, dearly beloved brethren! Let us not venture in prophecy. Miss Seydel displayed a sound, sure technic. Her performance was careful and feminine. There are women violinists of whom it is said admiringly: "She plays like a man." We do not wish to hear a woman, young or old, play with the virility of a male virtuoso. This concerto admits of broader treatment, of greater dash and brilliancy than were shown yesterday; at the same time, a milder interpretation, a woman's interpretation, is welcome, if it is as musical and agreeable as was that of Miss Seydel's. Certainly the second movement did not lose its pastoral charm, and Miss Seydel's harmonics were more secure than those played by some of her male predecessors. If her performance was feminine, it was not effeminate.

The two pieces by Sibelius were heard here about a year ago. "Pohjola's Daughter" illustrates a rune in the Finnish epic "Kalevela"—the wooing of Louhi's daughter by Vainamoinen and the ride of the disappointed and wounded lover who could not meet all the tests proposed by the mocking maiden. The fantasia is program, descriptive music, entertaining, now wild, now lyrically charming, often impressive. There is no printed argument for "Nightride and Sunrise." Whoever rode, rode for a long time and hard. The galloping figure becomes monotonous. The sun, in this fantasia, loudly calls attention to its rising, as if it were an extraordinary phenomenon. The final sonorous pages do not make one forget the monotony of those preceding.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of next week is as follows: Goldmark, overture, "Sakuntala"; Lalo, violin 'cello concerto (Joseph Malkin); Beethoven, Symphony No. 2.

Post March 2, 1918

NEW MUSIC PLAYED BY SYMPHONY

Dukas' C Major Heard —Miss Seydel the Soloist

BY OLIN DOWNES

Dukas' symphony in C major, played for the first time in Boston; the Saint-Saens B minor concerto for the violin, played by Miss Irma Seydel; and two compositions of Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night-Ride and Sunrise," made the programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

SUAVITY OF DUKAS

The symphony of Dukas—the last two movements at least—written in the composer's 30th year, shows an admirable command of orchestral resources and a youthful freshness of feeling which at times verges perilously on what is sentimental. It is far from the idiom of the mature composer of "Ariane et Barbe Bleu," the opera which is one of the very significant contributions of the modern Frenchman to the literature of music-drama. The symphony also seemed at a first hearing overlong. But its suavity and frankness of style gave pleasure.

Miss Seydel played the Saint-Saens concerto in a very musicianly manner, with warmth and refinement of style, with contagious feeling. An unusually gifted player today, she has a solid and admirable foundation for future achievement. If the regular progress and development of past years is continued, as doubtless it will be, there should be a brilliant career before her. The audience was delighted with her performance, and recalled the violinist several times.

Sibelius' Great Music

The two pieces of Sibelius, not so familiar to Symphony audiences as other music by this remarkable composer, grow greater with closer acquaintance. It is also doubtless true that Dr. Muck's performance of this music, especially of the "Night-Ride and Sunrise," grows in its greatness. It is no doubt largely our fault that we see more in this work than when Dr. Muck first played it in Boston.

"Night-Ride and Sunrise"—the darkness and agitation of the night, a night of grotesque shapes that peer from the shadows, when the hoofs of the horse themselves awaken echoes which terrify the lonely rider, when a branch of a tree may be the arm of a hobgoblin stretched out hungrily from its ambush, when other strange inhabitants of the darkness may be dodging the flying pair; then a flush on the horizon, a sort of a quiver that runs through everything as it awakens, a song of a bird, long lanes of light that floods over the rocks and through the top branches of trees, then more light, and the great, peaceful, reassuring sun!

Then the Glorious Sunrise

Imagine this, or anything else you like, while this singular music is being played! Enough that there are two moods, the first fantastical and macabre, with just a realistic touch in the occasional orchestral reference to the clatter of hoofs, the muttering of some ghostly wind instrument, and later a monotonous song heard over the hoofbeats; and then such strange and beautiful effects as no orchestra but the orchestra of Sibelius is capable of, and the sensation of warmth and light and smiling nature.

Sibelius has been accused of being unable to write save as a Northman, a Finn, of realizing in his scores only the things that he hears under his village belfry. True, the imagination of this piece is northern, for only in the north could nature assume by turns such impressive and supernatural or genial and beautiful aspects. But such music, whatever its origin, is for any hearer, in any land, who has trembled or rejoiced before the greatness of the earth. Notable is the wild introduction, and the wonderful orchestral effects as the mood changes and the shadows disperse.

Writes With Absolute Sureness

The composer writes with the absolute sureness of the inspired master. Doing things that have not been done before with the orchestra, he knows in advance exactly how he is going to do them, and what the new sounds will be like. Truly, there is not the like of this Northman in modern music. "Pohjola's Daughter" was only less astonishing yesterday because it was better understood in advance. The music of the ride of Wainamoinen, the wooer of the fair daughter of the North; the taunting laughter of strings and wood in the fanciful scene in which he discovers her seated, weaving, on the rainbow; the stern and heroic fanfare of the brass, flung out like a challenge to Northern nature; the poetic conclusion, which leaves in the mind of the hearer the vision of the far-vanishing sledge and the silence that again descends on the colossal, ancient, inviolable North—these things are for music by Sibelius, far more than for words, to portray.

The performance was a triumph for [illegible] and conductor, and the last

Advertiser March. 2, 1918

MISS IRMA SEYDEL PROVES A PRODIGY

Boston Girl Violinist Fulfils All Her Early Promise at Symphony Hall

MAKES HER DEBUT AS FULL FLEDGED ARTIST

Dukas' Three Part Symphony and Two Sibelius Works Also on Program

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.

Dukas ..... Symphony in three parts
Saint-Saens ..... Violin concerto, B minor
Soloist, Miss Irma Seydel
Sibelius ..... "Pojhola's Daughter"
Sibelius ..... "Night Ride and Sunrise"
Night ride and sunrise.

Miss Irma Seydel made her debut, as a young prodigy on the violin, some years ago. More than one musical prodigy grows less as she grows bigger, and is great only while she is small, but we are glad to see that Miss Seydel does not belong to this type. She has been steadily ripening, and the sterling character of her musicianship was demonstrated yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, when she made her debut at these concerts as a full-fledged artist.

Her tone is remarkably broad and is sympathetic; her intonation is secure, and her technique in such points as double-stopping, harmonics, etc., is most advanced. The Saint-Saens concerto is not one of the world-famous ones, and yet it is not only good music, but really violinistic in its effects. The slow movement is its most difficult requirement, and Miss Seydel gave this with superb steadiness, the ending of this movement being remarkable for harmonics and arpeggios, which were executed with great effect.

AROUSED ENTHUSIASM.

In the first movement the full tone, especially in G string passages, was wonderful, and the dash and brilliancy of the finale aroused remarkable enthusiasm, which was fully deserved.

Mr. Loeffler, as the teacher of this artist, deserves mention, and the father at the back of the orchestra must have been proud of the girl in front of it. This very young artist may yet inherit the title of "the fiddle-fairy," which was applied to Mme. Norman Neruda in her youth.

Dukas has been chiefly known here by his "Sorcerer's Apprentice," with its two bewitched bassoons, and we were glad to hear him in something more serious. He is neither ugly nor prolix in this symphony which is something to be grateful for in these modern days. In short we can praise the first movement for symmetry and intelligibility. Here there is a theme that is rollicking enough to be a drinking song. The opening figure of this (sight notes), is treated all the way from flutes to trombones, and finally comes in in augmentation on the heavy brasses. It is a rather noisy movement, but the best of the work.

The andante is filled with pastoral pipings and monotony. In the centre there is a broad chorale for brasses, with brilliant figuration of the strings—the only tangible thing in the rhapsodical movement, which seems to come to a close many times, only to go on again:

"He oft bade farewell, yet was loath to depart."

The finale was inconsequential. A Frenchman once hearing a meaningless sonata burst out with—"Ce sonate, que me veut il?" In like manner we would wish to know what that movement wanted of us. It ended very triumphantly as if Mr. Dukas had really found something important, but we could not discover it.

FULL OF NORTHERN GLOOM.

The two Sibelius works which closed the program were of Northern gloom and impressiveness. Pojhola's Daughter is wooed by Wannemoien, a Scandinavian deity, who used to play upon a harp made of dead men's bones, and strung with drowned maidens' hair, but as such instruments are not manufactured nowadays, Sibelius did not make the harp very prominent in this. Per contra, he gave a picture of the daughter aforesaid seated on a rainbow. Wagner does somewhat better with a rainbow, in the finale of "Rhinegold," but the moist seat was nevertheless recognizable. The formula of beginning with deep bass growls and then working up to a higher climax is a regular Scandinavian patent process, but it must be said that it is employed effectively here, the intentionally fragmentary and spasmodic vein is dramatic, and the monotony of the North has always a species of picturesqueness in its music.

The Night-Ride was rather unconventional. We cannot imagine, for example, what that sudden kettledrum stroke meant, unless it was a ride in an automobile, and there was a blow-out! In the matter of a Northern sunrise we still prefer Grieg in "Peer Gynt," but this number is none the less impressive and modern.

The brass instruments had some difficult passages in the first number and the steadiness of their work demands mention.

UNION
Springfield, Mass.
FEB

13

Musician Says Dr. Karl Muck Is Not Swiss

City Should Not Entertain Enemies While Boys Are Being Shot Up Over There.

The city property committee's desire for a full expression of public opinion before making a decision as to allowing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Karl Muck, to appear in the Auditorium, has already brought two communications to The Union, one from Edward H. Marsh, representing Mr. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and the other questioning some of Mr. Marsh's statements and coming from a well-known local musician who does not care to have his name appear, but allows his statement to speak for itself. Mr. Marsh asserts that Dr. Muck is not a Prussian, but has been for many years a citizen of Switzerland.

The local musician quoted says that Dr. Muck is German to all intents and practical purposes, if not born there, and takes the ground that it is not fitting, with the Nation at war, that Springfield, or any other city, entertain a large group of enemy aliens who hate the American idea. He asks whether the case would seem the same were the Huns bombarding some nearby American city.

His communication follows:

"After reading Mr. Marsh's defense of Dr. Muck, I thought that some of his statements should not go unchallenged. In the first place, what are Mr. Marsh's interests? Merely financial. What are Mr. Ellis' interests in this matter? The same—purely financial. Now about the Ellis statements that are being sent out wherever the orchestra wishes to play. The Swiss legation at Washington refuses to accept the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Muck was released by the Kaiser when he came to Boston to conduct the Boston orchestra, and as the papers at that time stated, great pressure had to be brought to bear on the Kaiser to release him for the American engagement. In Germany Dr. Muck was and still is pointed to as the great German conductor. Do the Germans disown him? Do they engage conductors of any other nation?

"Now about that refusal to play our National anthem. Why was the stand taken that it would ruin the symmetry of the artistic program of the orchestra if it were played? And then that charge was withdrawn and Mr. Ellis said that Dr. Muck has never refused to play it. Would the National anthem ever have been played at Dr. Muck's suggestion?

"One more question. How long has Dr. Muck been conducting the 'pop' concerts in Boston? It is news to me that he is conductor at the summer concerts.

"After hearing the orchestra play the Dr. Muck version of "The Star Spangled Banner," what did the papers say (with the exception of Boston)? Most of them called it a parody on the National anthem. While the brasses were playing the tune the strings were playing suggestions of the Venusberg music of 'Tannhauser.' The simple setting is not good enough for Dr. Muck. What about the order from Washington more than a year ago that any arrangements or variations on our National anthem would hereafter be prohibited?

"The whole matters sums up to this: Whether the orchestra and Dr. Muck play here or not. We are at war and will be deeper in another six weeks or so. When our boys are coming back all shot up and with limbs gone, and many have given their lives for our liberty we are entertaining a pro-German conductor and 22 Germans, eight Austrians and six Dutch, 36 all told, who hate the American idea, and who would not be here were it not for the money they receive.

"Let's back the boys at the front. What would be the difference if the Huns were bombarding New Haven, New York or Boston from the Lorraine front? We are at war and would be sitting and enjoying with ease a crowd of recognized enemy's subjects. Now is it consistent? The men will get their salaries just the same if they do not play one more note in the country. After the war let's ship them back and give the opportunity to our American musicians. This war has taught one thing among many; that the foreign musician has always had the big end of everything American in music."

The statement made last night by Mr. Marsh follows:

"Inasmuch as the city property committee seeks an expression of opinion from the citizens of Springfield as to the propriety of allowing Dr. Karl Muck to conduct the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Auditorium Feb. 27, it seems only fair, in view of the many erroneous and malicious statements which have been given wide publicity, that these facts should be known, the truth of which is vouched for by C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since its organization, and recognized as the head of his profession in America.

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not even a citizen of Germany. He was born in Hesse, but he has been for many years a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father before him.

"Dr. Muck has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' In fact, he played it willingly at each of the 'pop' concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall all last season.

"After the most searching investigation the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.'

"For three years of the war Dr. Muck has directed this great cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among these musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises: Fifty-one American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians, two Bohemians.

"On Dec. 16 last the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conducting, with Fritz Kreisler and Mme. Melba, gave their services in a concert in Symphone Hall for the benefit of the Massachusetts Halfax relief committee and as a result Mr. Ellis turned over to Robert Winsor, treasurer of the committee, a check for $10,539.26.

"EDWARD H. MARSH."

EXCERPTIONS TO

Herald
march, 2, 1918

SYMPHONY GIVES 16TH CONCERT

Audience Is Delighted with Violin Performance of Miss Seydel

MAKES DEBUT HERE WITH ORCHESTRA

By PHILIP HALE

The 16th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Dukas, Symphony in C major; Saint-Saens, Concerto for Violin, No. 3; Sibelius, "Pojhola's Daughter" and "Nightride and Sunrise."

Dukas is known here chiefly by his Scherzo "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," which at first seemed to be an excellent bit of humor in music, but now sounds like an old joke. The symphony, which was played here for the first time in Boston, if not in the United States, was composed in 1895-96, a year or so before the Scherzo. Its prevailing fault is dryness—dryness in thematic material and in the scholastic use of the material. There is little or nothing that can be called imaginative; the only approach to the poetic is in the second movement, at the beginning of the middle section, which is also noticeable for more ingenious and effective instrumentation than is elsewhere displayed. The harmonic schemes are orthodox, without a touch of ultra-modernity. There are a few traces of Cesar Franck's influence, as in a jubilant passage where trumpets play an important part, also in one melodic line that recalls the Franck of the Symphony in D minor. Dukas's symphony is a serious work, the work of a man enamored of development, delighting in working out contrapuntal problems; a laborious work, one without the quickening breath of inspiration.

Miss Seydel, now in her 22d year, has had uncommon experience in playing before the public since she was 10 years old; experience in this country and in Europe. Yesterday she played at a Symphony concert in Boston for the first time, although she has played with this orchestra in Providence and twice in Cambridge. She chose Saint-Saens's familiar concerto in B minor. When the concerto was first performed in Boston by Mr. Adamowski the critic of a leading newspaper condemned it as "insipid, colorless," hastily put together as for a pressing occasion. The second movement reminded him of Gounod; the third of Bizet. Another critic said that the music was "without the characteristics of Saint-Saens," and saw a short life for the concerto. Let this be a warning to us, dearly beloved brethren! Let us not venture in prophecy. Miss Seydel displayed a sound, sure technic. Her performance was careful and feminine. There are women violinists of whom it is said admiringly: "She plays like a man." We do not wish to hear a woman, young or old, play with the virility of a male virtuoso. This concerto admits of broader treatment, of greater dash and brilliancy than were shown yesterday; at the same time, a milder interpretation, a woman's interpretation, is welcome, if it is as musical and agreeable as was that of Miss Seydel's. Certainly the second movement did not lose its pastoral charm, and Miss Seydel's harmonics were more secure than those played by some of her male predecessors. If her performance was feminine, it was not effeminate.

The two pieces by Sibelius were heard here about a year ago. "Pohjola's Daughter" illustrates a rune in the Finnish epic "Kalevela"—the wooing of Louhi's daughter by Vainamoinen and the ride of the disappointed and wounded lover who could not meet all the tests proposed by the mocking maiden. The fantasia is program, descriptive music, entertaining, now wild, now lyrically charming, often impressive. There is no printed argument for "Nightride and Sunrise." Whoever rode, rode for a long time and hard. The galloping figure becomes monotonous. The sun, in this fantasia, loudly calls attention to its rising, as if it were an extraordinary phenomenon. The final sonorous pages do not make one forget the monotony of those preceding.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of next week is as follows: Goldmark, overture, "Sakuntala"; Lalo, violin 'cello concerto (Joseph Malkin); Beethoven, Symphony No. 2.

Post. MARCH 2, 1918

NEW MUSIC PLAYED BY SYMPHONY

Dukas' C Major Heard —Miss Seydel the Soloist

BY OLIN DOWNES

Dukas' symphony in C major, played for the first time in Boston; the Saint-Saens B minor concerto for the violin, played by Miss Irma Seydel; and two compositions of Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night-Ride and Sunrise," made the programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

SUAVITY OF DUKAS

The symphony of Dukas—the last two movements at least—written in the composer's 30th year, shows an admirable command of orchestral resources and a youthful freshness of feeling which at times verges perilously on what is sentimental. It is far from the idiom of the mature composer of "Ariane et Barbe Bleu," the opera which is one of the very significant contributions of the modern Frenchman to the literature of music-drama. The symphony also seemed at a first hearing overlong. But its suavity and frankness of style gave pleasure.

Miss Seydel played the Saint-Saens concerto in a very musicianly manner, with warmth and refinement of style, with contagious feeling. An unusually gifted player today, she has a solid and admirable foundation for future achievement. If the regular progress and development of past years is continued, as doubtless it will be, there should be a brilliant career before her. The audience was delighted with her performance, and recalled the violinist several times.

Sibelius' Great Music

The two pieces of Sibelius, not so familiar to Symphony audiences as other music by this remarkable composer, grow greater with closer acquaintance. It is also doubtless true that Dr. Muck's performance of this music, especially of the "Night-Ride and Sunrise," grows in its greatness. It is no doubt largely our fault that we see more in this work than when Dr. Muck first played it in Boston.

"Night-Ride and Sunrise"—the darkness and agitation of the night, a night of grotesque shapes that peer from the shadows, when the hoofs of the horse themselves awaken echoes which terrify the lonely rider, when a branch of a tree may be the arm of a hobgoblin stretched out hungrily from its ambush, when other strange inhabitants of the darkness may be dodging the flying pair; then a flush on the horizon, a sort of a quiver that runs through everything as it awakens, a song of a bird, long lanes of light that floods over the rocks and through the top branches of trees, then more light, and the great, peaceful, reassuring sun!

Then the Glorious Sunrise

Imagine this, or anything else you like, while this singular music is being played! Enough that there are two moods, the first fantastical and macabre, with just a realistic touch in the occasional orchestral reference to the clatter of hoofs, the muttering of some ghostly wind instrument, and later a monotonous song heard over the hoofbeats; and then such strange and beautiful effects as no orchestra but the orchestra of Sibelius is capable of, and the sensation of warmth and light and smiling nature.

Sibelius has been accused of being unable to write save as a Northman, a Finn, of realizing in his scores only the things that he hears under his village belfry. True, the imagination of this piece is northern, for only in the north could nature assume by turns such impressive and supernatural or genial and beautiful aspects. But such music, whatever its origin, is for any hearer, in any land, who has trembled or rejoiced before the greatness of the earth. Notable is the wild introduction, and the wonderful orchestral effects as the mood changes and the shadows disperse.

Writes With Absolute Sureness

The composer writes with the absolute sureness of the inspired master. Doing things that have not been done before with the orchestra, he knows in advance exactly how he is going to do them, and what the new sounds will be like. Truly, there is not the like of this Northman in modern music. "Pohjola's Daughter" was only less astonishing yesterday because it was better understood in advance. The music of the ride of Wainamoinen, the wooer of the fair daughter of the North; the taunting laughter of strings and wood in the fanciful scene in which he discovers her seated, weaving, on the rainbow; the stern and heroic fanfare of the brass, flung out like a challenge to Northern nature; the poetic conclusion, which leaves in the mind of the hearer the vision of the far-vanishing sledge and the silence that again descends on the colossal, ancient, inviolable North—these things are for music by Sibelius, far more than for words, to portray.

The performance was a triumph for orchestra and conductor, and the last

Advertiser MARCH. 2, 1918

MISS IRMA SEYDEL PROVES A PRODIGY

Boston Girl Violinist Fulfils All Her Early Promise at Symphony Hall

MAKES HER DEBUT AS FULL FLEDGED ARTIST

Dukas' Three Part Symphony and Two Sibelius Works Also on Program

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM.

Dukas ..... Symphony in three parts
Saint-Saens ..... Violin concerto, B minor
Soloist, Miss Irma Seydel
Sibelius ..... "Pojhola's Daughter"
Sibelius ..... "Night Ride and Sunrise"
Night ride and sunrise.

Miss Irma Seydel made her debut, as a young prodigy on the violin, some years ago. More than one musical prodigy grows less as she grows bigger, and is great only while she is small, but we are glad to see that Miss Seydel does not belong to this type. She has been steadily ripening, and the sterling character of her musicianship was demonstrated yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, when she made her debut at these concerts as a full-fledged artist.

Her tone is remarkably broad and is sympathetic; her intonation is secure, and her technique in such points as double-stopping, harmonics, etc., is most advanced. The Saint-Saens concerto is not one of the world-famous ones, and yet it is not only good music, but really violinistic in its effects. The slow movement is its most difficult requirement, and Miss Seydel gave this with superb steadiness, the ending of this movement being remarkable for harmonics and arpeggios, which were executed with great effect.

AROUSED ENTHUSIASM.

In the first movement the full tone, especially in G string passages, was wonderful, and the dash and brilliancy of the finale aroused remarkable enthusiasm, which was fully deserved.

Mr. Loeffler, as the teacher of this artist, deserves mention, and the father at the back of the orchestra must have been proud of the girl in front of it. This very young artist may yet inherit the title of "the fiddle-fairy," which was applied to Mme. Norman Neruda in her youth.

Dukas has been chiefly known here by his "Sorcerer's Apprentice," with its two bewitched bassoons, and we were glad to hear him in something more serious. He is neither ugly nor prolix in this symphony which is something to be grateful for in these modern days. In short we can praise the first movemen for symmetry and intelligibility Here there is a theme that is rollicking enough to be a drinking song. The opening figure of thi (sight notes), is treated all the wa from flutes to trombones, and finally comes in in augmentation on th heavy brasses. It is a rather nois movement, but the best of the work

The andante is filled with pastoral pipings and monotony. In the centre there is a broad chorale fo brasses, with brilliant figuration o the strings—the only tangible thing in the rhapsodical movement, which seems to come to a close many times, only to go on again:

"He oft bade farewell, yet was loath to depart."

The finale was inconsequential. A Frenchman once hearing a meaningless sonata burst out with—"Ce sonate, que me veut il?" In like manner we would wish to know what that movement wanted of us. It ended very triumphantly as if Mr. Dukas had really found something important, but we could not discover it.

FULL OF NORTHERN GLOOM.

The two Sibelius works which closed the program were of Northern gloom and impressiveness. Pojhola's Daughter is wooed by Wannemoien, a Scandinavian deity, who used to play upon a harp made of dead men's bones, and strung with drowned maidens' hair, but as such instruments are not manufactured nowadays, Sibelius did not make the harp very prominent in this. Per contra, he gave a picture of the daughter aforesaid seated on a rainbow. Wagner does somewhat better with a rainbow, in the finale of "Rhinegold," but the moist seat was nevertheless recognizable. The formula of beginning with deep bass growls and then working up to a higher climax is a regular Scandinavian patent process, but it must be said that it is employed effectively here, the intentionally fragmentary and spasmodic vein is dramatic, and the monotony of the North has always a species of picturesqueness in its music.

The Night-Ride was rather unconventional. We cannot imagine, for example, what that sudden kettle-drum stroke meant, unless it was a ride in an automobile, and there was a blow-out! In the matter of a Northern sunrise we still prefer Grieg in "Peer Gynt," but this number is none the less impressive and modern.

The brass instruments had some difficult passages in the first number and the steadiness of their work demands mention.

UNION
Springfield, Mass.

13

Musician Says Dr. Karl Muck Is Not Swiss

City Should Not Entertain Enemies While Boys Are Being Shot Up Over There.

The city property committee's desire for a full expression of public opinion before making a decision as to allowing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Karl Muck, to appear in the Auditorium, has already brought two communications to The Union, one from Edward H. Marsh, representing Mr. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, and the other questioning some of Mr. Marsh's statements and coming from a well-known local musician who does not care to have his name appear, but allows his statement to speak for itself. Mr. Marsh asserts that Dr. Muck is not a Prussian, but has been for many years a citizen of Switzerland.

The local musician quoted says that Dr. Muck is German to all intents and practical purposes, if not born there, and takes the ground that it is not fitting, with the Nation at war, that Springfield, or any other city, entertain a large group of enemy aliens who hate the American idea. He asks whether the case would seem the same were the Huns bombarding some nearby American city.

His communication follows:

"After reading Mr. Marsh's defense of Dr. Muck, I thought that some of his statements should not go unchallenged. In the first place, what are Mr. Marsh's interests? Merely financial. What are Mr. Ellis' interests in this matter? The same—purely financial. Now about the Ellis statements that are being sent out wherever the orchestra wishes to play. The Swiss legation at Washington refuses to accept the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Muck was released by the Kaiser when he came to Boston to conduct the Boston orchestra, and as the papers at that time stated, great pressure had to be brought to bear on the Kaiser to release him for the American engagement. In Germany Dr. Muck was and still is pointed to as the great German conductor. Do the Germans disown him? Do they engage conductors of any other nation?

"Now about that refusal to play our National anthem. Why was the stand taken that it would ruin the symmetry of the artistic program of the orchestra if it were played? And then that charge was withdrawn and Mr. Ellis said that Dr. Muck has never refused to play it. Would the National anthem ever have been played at Dr. Muck's suggestion?

"One more question. How long has Dr. Muck been conducting the 'pop' concerts in Boston? It is news to me that he is conductor at the summer concerts.

"After hearing the orchestra play the Dr. Muck version of "The Star Spangled Banner," what did the papers say (with the exception of Boston)? Most of them called it a parody on the National anthem. While the brasses were playing the tune the strings were playing suggestions of the Venusberg music of 'Tannhauser.' The simple setting is not good enough for Dr. Muck. What about the order from Washington more than a year ago that any arrangements or variations on our National anthem would hereafter be prohibited?

"The whole matters sums up to this: Whether the orchestra and Dr. Muck play here or not. We are at war and will be deeper in another six weeks or so. When our boys are coming back all shot up and with limbs gone, and many have given their lives for our liberty we are entertaining a pro-German conductor and 22 Germans, eight Austrians and six Dutch, 36 all told, who hate the American idea, and who would not be here were it not for the money they receive.

"Let's back the boys at the front. What would be the difference if the Huns were bombarding New Haven, New York or Boston from the Lorraine front? We are at war and would be sitting and enjoying with ease a crowd of recognized enemy's subjects. Now is it consistent? The men will get their salaries just the same if they do not play one more note in the country. After the war let's ship them back and give the opportunity to our American musicians. This war has taught one thing among many; that the foreign musician has always had the big end of everything American in music."

The statement made last night by Mr. Marsh follows:

"Inasmuch as the city property committee seeks an expression of opinion from the citizens of Springfield as to the propriety of allowing Dr. Karl Muck to conduct the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Auditorium Feb. 27, it seems only fair, in view of the many erroneous and malicious statements which have been given wide publicity, that these facts should be known, the truth of which is vouched for by C. A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since its organization, and recognized as the head of his profession in America.

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an official of the German government.

"He is not even a citizen of Germany. He was born in Hesse, but he has been for many years a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father before him.

"Dr. Muck has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner.' In fact, he played it willingly at each of the 'pop' concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall all last season.

"After the most searching investigation the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.'

"For three years of the war Dr. Muck has directed this great cosmopolitan orchestra with rare tact in almost daily rehearsals and concerts. He has permitted no discussion of political affairs and there has not been the slightest friction among these musicians of many nationalities. The membership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprises: Fifty-one American citizens (17 native born), 22 Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians, two Bohemians.

"On Dec. 16 last the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conducting, with Fritz Kreisler and Mme. Melba, gave their services in a concert in Symphone Hall for the benefit of the Massachusetts Halfax relief committee and as a result Mr. Ellis turned over to Robert Winsor, treasurer of the committee, a check for $10,539.26.

"EDWARD H. MARSH."

EXCERPTIONS TO

BULLETIN
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.
FEB 12 19

The Boston Orchestra

WITH Winifred Christie, pianist, as the solo performer, the Boston Symphony made another appearance at the Academy of Music last evening. The program, in addition to the Liszt E-minor concerto, in which Miss Christie was heard for the first time in Philadelphia, included the G-minor symphony of Mozart, Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead," and the overture to "Egmont," Beethoven, as the purely orchestral numbers.

The symphony, which was placed first on the program, has been referred to as "an expression of sorrow," but that it has also the radiance of joy is evidenced by the fact that Schubert said, "You can hear the angels singing in it." The work, at any rate, is one of inspired and inspiring beauty, with much of the simplicity that is one of Mozart's chief charms, and even the intricacies of the final movement are so unfolded that their flow is as smooth and unchallenged as that of the rippling brook. That the orchestra played the work well might be regarded as a foregone conclusion. That a more satisfactory interpretation would not be possible may not be granted, however. There were moments when the tone might have been clearer and the emphasis less pronounced, when the music itself was far better than the manner in which it was being played.

The Rachmaninoff symphonic poem is an impressive tonal elucidation of the Boecklin picture. Beginning in lugubrious manner, with the rumbling of undulating minor in 'cellos, double basses and harps, there is a graphic suggestion of the dark waters, moaning about the "Island of the Dead." At times there is a marked similarity to Wagner's "Gotterdammerung" music, with a somewhat magnified sense of what has come to be known as "modernism," but the work withal has originality and striking effectiveness, in its bizarre and expressive manner. It was admirably played, the interpretation, in fact, marking the highest point of excellence on the program.

Miss Christie played the somewhat superficial but altogether melodious and beautiful Liszt concerto in a way that won her audience to a genuine demonstration at its conclusion. This attractive young English woman has a plenitude of power and technique, playing with fine command and not a little of sympathy and feeling. There was at times rather too much emphasis, a tendency to make too much effort to produce effects that should have come with seeming ease, but the florid measures were delivered with fluency and the finale brought forth real brilliancy, so that the enthusiasm of the audience, which recalled the pianist several times to the platform, may be regarded as a genuine tribute well deserved.

TRIBUNE
Providence, R. I.
FEB 15 1918

TEUTONS MUST BE ELIMINATED

Otherwise Boston Symphony Orchestra Can't Play in Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 15.—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to say what course would be taken relative to a scheduled concert of the orchestra in this city, in view of the conditions attached by the city property board to its use of the Auditorium. The board voted unanimously last night not to allow the use of the Auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion." It is understood the orchestra includes 22 Germans and eight Austrians. The board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is a Swiss, and to allow him to appear.

Says Muck Is a Swiss.

Boston, Feb. 15.—In connection with the barring of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Washington some time ago because its membership included a number of enemy aliens, a representative of the orchestra issued a statement in which he said that the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, was a Swiss citizen. Although Dr. Muck was born in Germany, the statement said, his parents early removed to Switzerland and his father became a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck became of age, it was stated, he took out Swiss citizenship papers for himself. The Swiss legation at Washington has declined to make any comment as to Dr. Muck's status.

ENQUIRER
ess: Philadelphia, Pa.
FEB 12 191

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS

Heard at Academy of Music Last Night in Varied Programme

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, gave its third local concert for the season at the Academy of Music last evening in the presence of such an audience in character and numbers as it never fails to attract. A varied and interestiing programme had been prepared for the occasion. It had for its central feature the G minor symphony of Mozart, the one in which Schubert is reported to have said that he "could hear the angels singing," and this familiar but always appealing music could hardly have received a more eloquent or satisfying interpretation.

It was played with that admirable beauty of tone and exquisite refinement of finish for which the Boston Orchestra has for these many years been distinguished and with a lucidity of exposition whereby all the lovely details of its structure was impressively and illuminatively disclosed. Other purely orchestral numbers on the list were Rachmaninoff's poetic and picturesque tone poem inspired by Arnold Boecklin's famous picture, "The Island of the Dead," and the "Egmont" overture of Beethoven, which brought the proceedings to a close.

The assistant artist was Miss Winnifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had not been heard here before and who must be credited with having achieved a distinct success. She has taste and tone and force and an ample technique, and she materially contributed to the enjoyment of the evening by a masterly performance of Lizst's concert in E flat major. The next of these concerts is announced for Monday evening, March 1.

Transcript
March 8, 1918

Belated Reply

On Thursday evening, Jan. 31, more than a month ago, Mr. Ernst Schmidt, as assistant conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, led a considerable contingent from it in a concert at Symphony Hall with Mr. Elman as violinist and Miss Power, a protégée of Mme. Melba, as singer. The orchestra played three movements of Goldmark's symphony, "Rustic Wedding," one or two other numbers, and accompanied Mr. Elman in Mendelssohn's concerto. Several days later this column contained a paragraph or two, reproaching the Symphony Orchestra for the carelessness with which it had played at this concert, recalling a like indifference on other occasions when Dr. Muck was not leading it, and noting a similar neglect of duty when one or another choral society employs it. To these strictures, Mr. Schmidt now replies in the following, though somewhat belated, note:

A few weeks ago the usual annual attack upon the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared in this place charging them with deliberate lack of discipline, when under the leadership of anybody else but Dr. Muck. Although the anonymous writer mentioned my name in connection with the Elman concert. I would not have answered at all if that report had not lately made its way through papers in other cities and threatened to mislead people in general.

Three tasks the critic should fulfill: First, to know something about music; second, to be present at the performance which he is going to write about; third, to be sincere in his criticism. At least one of them, the writer in The Transcript apparently missed. I am far from praising my own work, but the enthusiastic appreciation shown by the large audience especially after the symphony; the high acknowledgment repeatedly expressed by the manager, Mr. Ellis, as well as the gladness of the soloist, Mr. Elman, over the good accompaniment; and last, but not least, the willingness and animation of the whole orchestra absolutely proved that said performance was not as bad as your writer would have us believe.

Referring to the complaint about the choral concerts: Everybody, who has any experience, will admit that the orchestral performance of these concerts differs a good deal from that at the Symphony Concerts. But not everybody considers the different circumstances which determine that difference. In the first place, the orchestra consists of forty or a few more—very seldom of sixty members—instead of the usual one hundred. There is usually one rehearsal only, seldom two, while the orchestra has four or more rehearsals for each of its own concerts. There is also the very important question of the conductor. Most of our chorus leaders are thoroughly experienced as such, but have little or no experience in leading an orchestra. Of course they are not expected to have this experience. Moreover, an orchestra is not a piano, upon which you can practice in your home. You can conduct the greatest opera in front of your mirror without any mistake, but standing before an orchestra, some unexpected sound combination surprises you in such a way that you can easily lose your head and control of your forces. There are many instances in the history of the Symphony Orchestra at choral concerts where such leaders lost their heads and have only been saved by the routine and willingness of the men. Even sensible leaders themselves acknowledge this fact. Writers about music ought to know this and used to know it. May those papers, which printed the original article, also print this reply for the sake of justice.

Here in Boston

At the performance of Bach's Passion Music according to Matthew, in entirety by Dr. Muck, the Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Townsend's chorus at Symphony Hall on Tuesday, March 26, the "first session"—it is now decided—will begin at four in the afternoon and end toward six. The "second session" will begin at eight and continue until half-past nine; while needless, almost, to say, the prices of admission will include both. Dr. Muck has now completed his orchestra, seventy-four in number, and divided into two choirs, each consisting of sixteen violins, six violas, six violoncellos, five basses, two flutes, and two oboes. So far, the solo-singers enlisted comprise Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock, and Messrs. Murphy and Werrenrath. For further needless specification—in any days but these—an English text will be used. Like the orchestra, the chorus will be divided into two choirs, each two hundred strong, with an additional choir of eighty boys' voices.

The Bostonian Strings

Perfect intonation and perfect uniformity can always be expected of Dr. Muck's first violin section, but their playing is always a fresh surprise. In that unforgettable performance of Mozart's symphony in G minor every bar was treated as a factor in the artistic whole. The sixteen men drew a pianissimo so fine that it could only just be heard in the large hall, so true that there seemed not a single conflicting overtone. With this pianissimo as the indispensable basis of all their work they modelled each phrase as carefully as a skilled actor models his sentences. The melody was never on the dead level, as is so often the case in routine orchestral playing. It was always evidently going somewhere or coming from somewhere. The tone was rising or falling, deepening or blanching. The bows of Mr. Witek's men were more than a draftsman's pencil. They were an artist's brush, giving color and design at the same time to their musical line. The performance could have taught something to any virtuoso of the violin who happened to hear it. It was one of the miracles of the present concert season. [The New York Tribune

m EVENING Bulletin
lress Providence, R. I.
FEB 15 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA FACES NEW DIFFICULTIES

Springfield, Mass., City Property Board Refuses Use of Hall Unless German or Austro-Hungarian Musicians Are Eliminated for Occasion.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 15.—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to say what course would be taken relative to a scheduled concert of the orchestra in this city, in view of the conditions attached by the city property board to its use of the auditorium. The board voted unanimously last night not to allow the use of the auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion."

It is understood the orchestra includes 22 Germans and eight Austrians. The board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is a Swiss, and to allow him to appear.

AMERICAN
New York City.
FEB 17 1918

Symphonic Concerts Attract Three Large Audiences Yesterday

THE Boston, New York and Russian symphony orchestras gave local concerts yesterday. Each attracted an audience of enormous size and distinct individuality.

The Boston Orchestra was heard in its fourth matinee in Carnegie Hall. For the second time this week Dr. Muck showed evidence of having been influenced by the recent ruling of the Philharmonic Society. That is, he included no works by living German composers in his programme. Yesterday's list comprised the Austrian Haydn's "Surprise" symphony; the Russian Tschaikowsky's Serenada for string orchestra, and the Hungarian Goldmark's overture "Sakuntala."

The conductor again exemplified exceptional skill and taste in his masterly interpretations of these diverse examples. An interested and enthusiastic auditor was Fritz Kreisler, the renowned violinist and composer.

om CITIZEN
dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
FEB 11
te

PROF. GRIGGS' LECTURE.

Discusses the Boston Orchestra Programme.

The programme that the Boston Symphonw Orchestra will play to-morrow evening at the fourth concert in the series at the Academy of Music was considered in a lecture-recital yesterday afternoon by Professor John C. Griggs, of Vassar College, at the Brooklyn Institute. Before taking up the programme Professor Griggs read a paper on appreciation of music due to a knowledge of color, tone and harmony and delight in virtuosity. Music, he insisted, is something to be appreciated by human ears, and not something to be haggled about, and he expressed sympathy for those who get discouraged because they try to see in music the things they think they ought to see and do not understand.

Professor Griggs then took up the Fourth Symphony of Tschaihowsky, which he commented on in detail, and a young woman assistant played the principal themes. The Strauss tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration," which will be the concluding number on the orchestra's programme, was similarly discussed.

EVENING WORLD
: New York City.
FEB 18 1918

Haydn's "Surprise" symphony, with which Dr. Karl Muck began the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, was a delight. Elegance, grace of contour, purity and precision in every detail were blended into a perfect whole in the presentation of the work. The Tschaikowsky serenade for strings in C major, not one of the composer's most remarkable works, although benefitting by an impeccable rendering, was something of an anticlimax. At the end there was Goldmark's lyric overture "Sakuntala."

From LIFE
Address Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date FEB 9 - 1918

Winifred Christie Soloist with Boston Symphony.

Winifred Christie, the English pianist, will be soloist at the fourth Boston Symphony Concert to be given in the Academy of Music under Institute auspices on Friday evening of next week. She will play Liszt's E-flat Concerto for piano and orchestra; Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony in F-Minor and Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration."

Post Jan 20, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3:30
YSAYE THE GREAT BELGIAN VIOLINIST
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c

BULLETIN

ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

The Boston Orchestra

WITH Winifred Christie, pianist, as the solo performer, the Boston Symphony made another appearance at the Academy of Music last evening. The program, in addition to the Liszt E-minor concerto, in which Miss Christie was heard for the first time in Philadelphia, included the G-minor symphony of Mozart, Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem, "The Island of the Dead," and the overture to "Egmont," Beethoven, as the purely orchestral numbers.

The symphony, which was placed first on the program, has been referred to as "an expression of sorrow," but that it has also the radiance of joy is evidenced by the fact that Schubert said, "You can hear the angels singing in it." The work, at any rate, is one of inspired and inspiring beauty, with much of the simplicity that is one of Mozart's chief charms, and even the intricacies of the final movement are so unfolded that their flow is as smooth and unchallenged as that of the rippling brook. That the orchestra played the work well might be regarded as a foregone conclusion. That a more satisfactory interpretation would not be possible may not be granted, however. There were moments when the tone might have been clearer and the emphasis less pronounced, when the music itself was far better than the manner in which it was being played.

The Rachmaninoff symphonic poem is an impressive tonal elucidation of the Bocklin picture. Beginning in lugubrious manner, with the rumbling of undulating minor in 'cellos, double basses and harps, there is a graphic suggestion of the dark waters, moaning about the "Island of the Dead." At times there is a marked similarity to Wagner's "Gotterdammerung" music, with a somewhat magnified sense of what has come to be known as "modernism," but the work withal has originality and striking effectiveness, in its bizarre and expressive manner. It was admirably played, the interpretation, in fact, marking the highest point of excellence on the program.

Miss Christie played the somewhat superficial but altogether melodious and beautiful Liszt concerto in a way that won her audience to a genuine demonstration at its conclusion. This attractive young English woman has a plenitude of power and technique, playing with fine command and not a little of sympathy and feeling. There was at times rather too much emphasis, a tendency to make too much effort to produce effects that should have come with seeming ease, but the florid measures were delivered with fluency and the finale brought forth real brilliancy, so that the enthusiasm of the audience, which recalled the pianist several times to the platform, may be regarded as a genuine tribute well deserved.

om CITIZEN

dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

e

PROF. GRIGGS' LECTURE.

Discusses the Boston Orchestra Programme.

The programme that the Boston Symphonw Orchestra will play to-morrow evening at the fourth concert in the series at the Academy of Music was considered in a lecture-recital yesterday afternoon by Professor John C. Griggs, of Vassar College, at the Brooklyn Institute. Before taking up the programme Professor Griggs read a paper on appreciation of music due to a knowledge of color, tone and harmony and delight in virtuosity. Music, he insisted, is something to be appreciated by human ears, and not something to be haggled about, and he expressed sympathy for those who get discouraged because they try to see in music the things they think they ought to see and do not understand.

Professor Griggs then took up the Fourth Symphony of Tschaihowsky, which he commented on in detail, and a young woman assistant played the principal themes. The Strauss tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration," which will be the concluding number on the orchestra's programme, was similarly discussed.

From

Address

Date

Winifred Christie Soloist with Boston Symphony.

Winifred Christie, the English pianist, will be soloist at the fourth Boston Symphony Concert to be given in the Academy of Music under Institute auspices on Friday evening of next week. She will play Liszt's E-flat Concerto for piano and orchestra; Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony in F-Minor and Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration."

TRIBUNE

Providence, R. I.

FEB 15

TEUTONS MUST BE ELIMINATED

Otherwise Boston Symphony Orchestra Can't Play in Springfield.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 15.—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to say what course would be taken relative to a scheduled concert of the orchestra in this city, in view of the conditions attached by the city property board to its use of the Auditorium. The board voted unanimously last night not to allow the use of the Auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion." It is understood the orchestra includes 22 Germans and eight Austrians. The board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is a Swiss, and to allow him to appear.

Says Muck Is a Swiss.

Boston, Feb. 15.—In connection with the barring of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from Washington some time ago because its membership included a number of enemy aliens, a representative of the orchestra issued a statement in which he said that the conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, was a Swiss citizen. Although Dr. Muck was born in Germany, the statement said, his parents early removed to Switzerland and his father became a Swiss citizen. When Dr. Muck became of age, it was stated, he took out Swiss citizenship papers for himself. The Swiss legation at Washington has declined to make any comment as to Dr. Muck's status.

m Bulletin

lress

e

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA FACES NEW DIFFICULTIES

Springfield, Mass., City Property Board Refuses Use of Hall Unless German or Austro-Hungarian Musicians Are Eliminated for Occasion.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 15.—The representative here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra refused to-day to say what course would be taken relative to a scheduled concert of the orchestra in this city, in view of the conditions attached by the city property board to its use of the auditorium. The board voted unanimously last night not to allow the use of the auditorium "unless the members of this orchestra who are citizens of Germany or Austria-Hungary are eliminated for this occasion."

It is understood the orchestra includes 22 Germans and eight Austrians. The board is willing to accept the orchestra management's statement that Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is a Swiss, and to allow him to appear.

EVENING WORLD

: New York City.

FEB 18 1918

Haydn's "Surprise" symphony, with which Dr. Karl Muck began the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, was a delight. Elegance, grace of contour, purity and precision in every detail were blended into a perfect whole in the presentation of the work. The Tschaikowsky serenade for strings in C major, not one of the composer's most remarkable works, although benefitting by an impeccable rendering, was something of an anti-climax. At the end there was Goldmark's lyric overture "Sakuntala."

Post Jan 20, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
THIS (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3:30
YSAYE THE GREAT BELGIAN VIOLINIST
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c

ENQUIRER

ess: Philadelphia, Pa.

FEB 12

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS

Heard at Academy of Music Last Night in Varied Programme

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Karl Muck, gave its third local concert for the season at the Academy of Music last evening in the presence of such an audience in character and numbers as it never fails to attract. A varied and interestiing programme had been prepared for the occasion. It had for its central feature the G minor symphony of Mozart, the one in which Schubert is reported to have said that he "could hear the angels singing," and this familiar but always appealing music could hardly have received a more eloquent or satisfying interpretation.

It was played with that admirable beauty of tone and exquisite refinement of finish for which the Boston Orchestra has for these many years been distinguished and with a lucidity of exposition whereby all the lovely details of its structure was impressively and illuminatively disclosed. Other purely orchestral numbers on the list were Rachmaninoff's poetic and picturesque tone poem inspired by Arnold Boecklin's famous picture, "The Island of the Dead," and the "Egmont" overture of Beethoven, which brought the proceedings to a close.

The assistant artist was Miss Winnifred Christie, a Scotch pianist, who had not been heard here before and who must be credited with having achieved a distinct success. She has taste and tone and force and an ample technique, and she materially contributed to the enjoyment of the evening by a masterly performance of Lizst's concert in E flat major. The next of these concerts is announced for Monday evening, March 1.

AMERICAN

New York City.

FEB

Symphonic Concerts Attract Three Large Audiences Yesterday

THE Boston, New York and Russian symphony orchestras gave local concerts yesterday. Each attracted an audience of enormous size and distinct individuality.

The Boston Orchestra was heard in its fourth matinee in Carnegie Hall. For the second time this week Dr. Muck showed evidence of having been influenced by the recent ruling of the Philharmonic Society. That is, he included no works by living German composers in his programme. Yesterday's list comprised the Austrian Haydn's "Surprise" symphony; the Russian Tschaikowsky's Serenada for string orchestra, and the Hungarian Goldmark's overture "Sakuntala."

The conductor again exemplified exceptional skill and taste in his masterly interpretations of these diverse examples. An interested and enthusiastic auditor was Fritz Kreisler, the renowned violinist and composer.

Transcript March 8, 1918

Belated Reply

On Thursday evening, Jan. 31, more than a month ago, Mr. Ernst Schmidt, as assistant conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, led a considerable contingent from it in a concert at Symphony Hall with Mr. Elman as violinist and Miss Power, a protégée of Mme. Melba, as singer. The orchestra played three movements of Goldmark's symphony, "Rustic Wedding," one or two other numbers, and accompanied Mr. Elman in Mendelssohn's concerto. Several days later this column contained a paragraph or two, reproaching the Symphony Orchestra for the carelessness with which it had played at this concert, recalling a like indifference on other occasions when Dr. Muck was not leading it, and noting a similar neglect of duty when one or another choral society employs it. To these strictures, Mr. Schmidt now replies in the following, though somewhat belated, note:

A few weeks ago the usual annual attack upon the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared in this place charging them with deliberate lack of discipline, when under the leadership of anybody else but Dr. Muck. Although the anonymous writer mentioned my name in connection with the Elman concert. I would not have answered at all if that report had not lately made its way through papers in other cities and threatened to mislead people in general.

Three tasks the critic should fulfill: First, to know something about music; second, to be present at the performance which he is going to write about; third, to be sincere in his criticism. At least one of them, the writer in The Transcript apparently missed. I am far from praising my own work, but the enthusiastic appreciation shown by the large audience especially after the symphony; the high acknowledgment repeatedly expressed by the manager, Mr. Ellis, as well as the gladness of the soloist, Mr. Elman, over the good accompaniment; and last, but not least, the willingness and animation of the whole orchestra absolutely proved that said performance was not as bad as your writer would have us believe.

Referring to the complaint about the choral concerts: Everybody, who has any experience, will admit that the orchestral performance of these concerts differs a good deal from that at the Symphony Concerts. But not everybody considers the different circumstances which determine that difference. In the first place, the orchestra consists of forty or a few more—very seldom of sixty members—instead of the usual one hundred. There is usually one rehearsal only, seldom two, while the orchestra has four or more rehearsals for each of its own concerts. There is also the very important question of the conductor. Most of our chorus leaders are thoroughly experienced as such, but have little or no experience in leading an orchestra. Of course they are not expected to have this experience. Moreover, an orchestra is not a piano, upon which you can practice in your home. You can conduct the greatest opera in front of your mirror without any mistake, but standing before an orchestra, some unexpected sound combination surprises you in such a way that you can easily lose your head and control of your forces. There are many instances in the history of the Symphony Orchestra at choral concerts where such leaders lost their heads and have only been saved by the routine and willingness of the men. Even sensible leaders themselves acknowledge this fact. Writers about music ought to know this and used to know it. May those papers, which printed the original article, also print this reply for the sake of justice.

Here in Boston

At the performance of Bach's Passion Music according to Matthew, in entirety by Dr. Muck, the Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Townsend's chorus at Symphony Hall on Tuesday, March 26, the "first session"—it is now decided—will begin at four in the afternoon and end toward six. The "second session" will begin at eight and continue until half-past nine; while needless, almost, to say, the prices of admission will include both. Dr. Muck has now completed his orchestra, seventy-four in number, and divided into two choirs, each consisting of sixteen violins, six violas, six violoncellos, five basses, two flutes, and two oboes. So far, the solo-singers enlisted comprise Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock, and Messrs. Murphy and Werrenrath. For further needless specification—in any days but these—an English text will be used. Like the orchestra, the chorus will be divided into two choirs, each two hundred strong, with an additional choir of eighty boys' voices.

The Bostonian Strings

Perfect intonation and perfect uniformity can always be expected of Dr. Muck's first violin section, but their playing is always a fresh surprise. In that unforgettable performance of Mozart's symphony in G minor every bar was treated as a factor in the artistic whole. The sixteen men drew a pianissimo so fine that it could only just be heard in the large hall, so true that there seemed not a single conflicting overtone. With this pianissimo as the indispensable basis of all their work they modelled each phrase as carefully as a skilled actor models his sentences. The melody was never on the dead level, as is so often the case in routine orchestral playing. It was always evidently going somewhere or coming from somewhere. The tone was rising or falling, deepening or blanching. The bows of Mr. Witek's men were more than a draftsman's pencil. They were an artist's brush, giving color and design at the same time to their musical line. The performance could have taught something to any virtuoso of the violin who happened to hear it. It was one of the miracles of the present concert season. [The New York Tribune

Advertiser, Feb. 28, 1918

BOSTON MUSICAL STAR

Miss Irma Seydel, one of the most brilliant of the young violinists of the day, who will appear as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra this week.

BOSTON GIRL NEXT SYMPHONY SOLOIST

Miss Irma Seydel to Play Saint-Saens' Violin Concerto at This Week's Concerts

To the enviable number of Boston musicians who have appeared as soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall will now be added Miss Irma Seydel, the violinist, who will be the soloist at this week's concerts.

Miss Seydel, who is still in her 'teens, is one of the youngest artists to appear with the famous orchestra. Indeed, it is a question whether she is not the very youngest, as her first performance with the orchestra took place several years ago at Cambridge. But there is more honor in appearing here at Symphony Hall, so that this week will mark a new advancement for the talented Boston girl.

Another remarkable feature of the event is that Miss Seydel's father will take part in the performance of the Saint-Saens concerto. The father, Theodore Seydel, is a member of the Symphony Orchestra. It was under his direction that the talented daughter began to study the violin with Charles Martin Loeffler, then second violin of the orchestra, and now one of the foremost composers of the day.

Transcript March 4, 1918

WEEK-END CONCERTS

TWO COMPOSERS, A SINGER AND A VIOLINIST

Dukas and Sibelius in the Sharp Contrast of the Parisian's Symphony and the Finn's Tone-Poem—Miss van Dresser of the Acute Mind and the Unanswering Voice—Mr. Ysaye in His New Subtleties and Fineness—Mme. Galli-Curci's and Mr. Heifetz's Programmes—Two Prospective Symphonies and Mr. Casals Anew

THE symphony by Dukas, heard for the first times in Boston and the two tone poems of Sibelius—"Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night-Ride and Sunrise"—by no means familiar music here, again made interesting contrast when all three were repeated at the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening. The Parisian sets to his piece with tremendous energy. It becomes him, as rising composer, to write a symphony and write it he will. With tireless vigor, he continues from end to end of the three movements in which he fashions his music. Onward and onward, he drives his counterpoint, especially in the first Allegro and with the first motive thereof, until he has exhausted all that his mind and his manipulation can devise. He is as zealous to keep his orchestra at work and in motion, with inevitable result in music of insistently thick texture and of a kind of urgent monotony. Distinctly at the end, the hearer believes that the composer was of like sensation with himself: "There, it is done!" The slow movement ensues, as ruminant upon the motives whence it springs, as reflective in the progress and interplay of them, as though Dukas had taken cue, but not inspiration, from Brahms himself. By all means a well-knit music, but so closely knit that it relaxes but seldom for harmonic and instrumental color. Solidly it is wrought; stolidly it moves. For the Finale, Dukas regathers the energy of the beginning; again he is lengthy in proportion to the interest of his matter; again he tends to monotony. Happily, however, the music is lighter-paced, more diverse in color; here and there outsprings a hint of exhilaration. After all, Paul Abraham Dukas, having undertaken to write a symphony, has written it. Moreover, as he may reflect nowadays, there have been conductors and orchestras in France and the United States willing to play it—once.

On the other hand, in Sibelius's tone-poems, the composer writes obviously from imaginative impulse. The wanton and witching woman of the moon, mocking, enticing, testing the hero beneath her on his sledge, his chagrins and his consolations, the icy air, the glinting light, prompt him to tonal narrative, to tonal picture. He achieves both in music that is not only closely wrought but supple; that at once interests the ear and stirs perception and fancy; that is both economical and diverse of means; that has a native wildness and a strange magic; that summons atmosphere, imposes suggestion; that is hard to hear unmoved. Again in "Night-Ride and Sunrise," Sibelius courts monotony in the figure of the ring of the horses' feet, but a monotony that pricks the nerves of sensation, not dulls them. Out of his melancholy tune, he hints at the moody preoccupation of the riders and so strikes personal, human note. His dawn, his sunrise are not tonal commonplaces. They are musical record of individual sensation for which he finds as individual musical means and procedure. Dukas in his symphony makes his way by sheer force of will, through a self-imposed task. Sibelius in his tone-poems writes music that, seemingly, mind and heart bade him eagerly to write and for which he less multiplies than sifts his resources. The Parisian atrophies his hearers; the Fin [illegible] them.

Post March 9, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The impending performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition which will be used. In the original version Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first with oboes d'amore, second with oboes da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the "basso continuo," or "figured bass." For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obligato, alowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers.

This "basso continuo" became a lost art long before the end of the 18th century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Robert Franz, and it is this which is generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performances it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original in form and manner. He will give it in its entirety, for the excisions usually made destroy to a great degree the significance of the work. He will give it in two sessions, the first part, which is essentially epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, which is dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding likewise that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version and all of the Franz version except certain accompaniments for string alone. His orchestra wil consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. It is greatly to his regret that he is unable to secure in this country the oboes da caccia, but for these he will substitute the English horns, which in the modern orchestra correspond to the obsolete oboe da caccia. He has oboes d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for the Bach orchestra many of the arias and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. He has also written out the parts for the organ and piano, the latter taking the place of the harpsichord. In other words, the coming performance of the "Passion" music will approximate the original performance in the Church of St. Thomas, Leipsic, as closely as modern conditions permit.

Mr. Stephen Townsend, who is training the chorus, reports that he will have 400 singers. Rehearsals are being held twice a week, one for each of the two choruses, and there will be two full rehearsals for the entire chorus the week of March 11. The following week there will be two full rehearsals with orchestras under Dr. Muck. In addition to the chorus there will be a boys' choir of 80 carefully chosen from various churches in the city.

Advertiser March 9, 1918

SYMPHONY PROGRAM IS CONSERVATIVE

Joseph Malkin, as Soloist, Moves His Audience to Frequent Applause

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

Program.
Goldmark. "Sakuntala" Overture.
Lalo, Concerto for Violoncello.
Soloist, Joseph Malkin.
Beethoven. Second Symphony.

A conservative program, written in the days when they composed tunes and when music was supposed to please the auditor. Goldmark's "Sakuntala" overture is a point where the non-musician can enjoy and the strict musician also be satisfied.

It is the composer's best orchestral work. There are good contrasts in the overture. The hunting of King Dushyanta and the loneliness of Sakuntala in the forest are fine foils to each other, and there is real passion in the love-scenes.

The figure treatment is not too complex for the laity to follow; every auditor could trace the five-noted bit (a, b-flat, c, d. c) from which much of the music is derived, and the deep trills of the string orchestra and bassoons were impressive to all alike.

The horns and trumpets had some very brilliant work to do in the hunting themes, and accomplished it finely, while the triumphant coda, with plenty of kettle-drum spice, was finely effective. Such music is beautiful even when it pictures gloom. It is an Oriental picture with properly Oriental warmth of coloring. It aroused great applause and both the work and its interpretation deserved it.

GIVES MANY ENCORES.

Lalo's violoncello concerto still kept to the domain of melody. It served to introduce Mr. Joseph Malkin as soloist, one of the great performers in this city of great violoncellists. Mr. Malkin's tone was broad, sympathetic and pure in intonation —"Mein Liebchen, was willst Du noch mehr?"—and the concerto is agreeable all the way through.

Perhaps one might except the first movement from the pleasant adjective, for it is rather long and not so popular as the succeeding two, but the perfect phrasing of the soloist and the excellent ensemble of the orchestra caused it to win much applause. Its earnest and dramatic vein was finely given, and the antiphonal dialogue between the calls and the orchestra (chiefly brasses) was especially effective.

The second movement is pastoral even to the extent of giving a drone bass of bagpipe style and it contrasted well with the more sombre character of the preceding movement. The finale has themes which are almost dances in character.

We should scarcely call this a great composition, but 'cello concertos are scarce and this could ill be spared from the repertoire. Mr. Malkin was recalled three times with considerable enthusiasm.

POPULAR MELODIES.

And now came more melodies, for the second and third movements of Beethoven's second symphony are really popular in their simplicity of tunes. We once asked Mr. Gericke which symphony of the Beethoven nine he considered the greatest.

"Always the one I have heard last," was his answer.

There is much truth in this: the second symphony may be less than the heroic, the fifth or the seventh, but heard by itself it is grand enough to satisfy anybody. The slow movement has melody enough to set up half-a-dozen modern composers in orchestral work, unless they despised such simplicity of themes.

One may remember, too, that the third movement of this was the first Scherzo ever written, the foundation of a new form of movement for symphony, replacing the Minuet which Haydn had worn threadbare.

One can only praise the reading and the shading of the performance. The rapid chief figure of the first movement, and the rather difficult skips of the first theme of the finale, were given flawlessly. Therefore, for once, one could forget the modern musical troubles and enjoy good, commonsense melody such as used to be written "when Music, Heavenly Maid, was young"!

Items and Announcements

Dr. Muck has in hand for performance before the end of the season two symphonies by American composers—one by John Alden Carpenter, first heard at the Norfolk Festival, last June, and again in Chicago, last October, at Mr. Stock's concerts; the other by Daniel Gregory Mason, as yet unheard anywhere. Each is the first symphony of the composer; each is interesting in kind; while upon both the conductor, as his custom is, will spend his utmost pains.

Hitherto in Boston, Mr. Casals, the eminent violoncellist, has ventured no recital of his own. Now, he will undertake such a concert in Jordan Hall on Monday afternoon, March 25, playing sonatas for violoncello and piano, suites for violoncello alone and a few lighter pieces. The occasion is as rare, almost, as the violoncellist himself.

H. T. P.

Transcript 3/4

WORLD
New York City
MAR 1 - 1918

THE "BAZOOKA'S" MELLOW NOTE is probably as yet a stranger to Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is doubtful even if it is familiar to us lowbrows whose dull lives are sweetened by jazz bands. The bazooka is the instrument at the left of this [illegible] recently organized at [illegible]

Somerville Journal
Dec 7, 1917

NEWMAN'S TRAVEL TALK.

In "Our West Indies," Newman's final travel talk this season, at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, the popular traveler will portray salient characteristics of today's daily life in Porto Rico, Santa Cruz and our new possessions, the Virgin Islands. An unusual feature of the "journey" is a motion picture record—the only one in existence—of the ceremonies when the transfer was made of the jurisdiction of the Virgin Isles from Denmark to the United States. Exclusive motion pictures and gorgeous color views will portray the busy street life of Porto Rico's capital, San Juan.

Advertiser, Feb. 28, 1918

BOSTON MUSICAL STAR

Miss Irma Seydel, one of the most brilliant of the young violinists of the day, who will appear as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra this week.

BOSTON GIRL NEXT SYMPHONY SOLOIST

TRANSCRIPT MARCH 4

Miss Irma Seydel to Play Saint-Saens' Violin Concerto at This Week's Concerts

To the enviable number of Boston musicians who have appeared as soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall will now be added Miss Irma Seydel, the violinist, who will be the soloist at this week's concerts.

Miss Seydel, who is still in her 'teens, is one of the youngest artists to appear with the famous orchestra. Indeed, it is a question whether she is not the very youngest, as her first performance with the orchestra took place several years ago at Cambridge. But there is more honor in appearing here at Symphony Hall, so that this week will mark a new advancement for the talented Boston girl.

Another remarkable feature of the event is that Miss Seydel's father will take part in the performance of the Saint-Saens concerto. The father, Theodore Seydel, is a member of the Symphony Orchestra. It was under his direction that the talented daughter began to study the violin with Charles Martin Loeffler, then second violin of the orchestra, and now one of the foremost composers of the day.

Somerville Journal Dec 7, 1917

NEWMAN'S TRAVEL TALK.

In "Our West Indies," Newman's final travel talk this season, at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, the popular traveler will portray salient characteristics of today's daily life in Porto Rico, Santa Cruz and our new possessions, the Virgin Islands. An unusual feature of the "journey" is a motion picture record—the only one in existence—of the ceremonies when the transfer was made of the jurisdiction of the Virgin Isles from Denmark to the United States. Exclusive motion pictures and gorgeous color views will portray the busy street life of Porto Rico's capital, San Juan.

Items and Announcements

Dr. Muck has in hand for performance before the end of the season two symphonies by American composers—one by John Alden Carpenter, first heard at the Norfolk Festival, last June, and again in Chicago, last October, at Mr. Stock's concerts; the other by Daniel Gregory Mason, as yet unheard anywhere. Each is the first symphony of the composer; each is interesting in kind; while upon both the conductor, as his custom is, will spend his utmost pains.

Hitherto in Boston, Mr. Casals, the eminent violoncellist, has ventured no recital of his own. Now, he will undertake such a concert in Jordan Hall on Monday afternoon, March 25, playing sonatas for violoncello and piano, suites for violoncello alone and a few lighter pieces. The occasion is as rare, almost, as the violoncellist himself.

H. T. P.

Transcript

WORLD
New York City
MAR 1 - 1918

TRANSCRIPT MARCH 4, 1918

WEEK-END CONCERTS

TWO COMPOSERS, A SINGER AND A VIOLINIST

Dukas and Sibelius in the Sharp Contrast of the Parisian's Symphony and the Finn's Tone-Poem—Miss van Dresser of the Acute Mind and the Unanswering Voice—Mr. Ysaye in His New Subtleties and Fineness—Mme. Galli-Curci's and Mr. Heifetz's Programmes—Two Prospective Symphonies and Mr. Casals Anew

THE symphony by Dukas, heard for the first times in Boston and the two tone poems of Sibelius—"Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night-Ride and Sunrise"—by no means familiar music here, again made interesting contrast when all three were repeated at the Symphony Concert of Saturday evening. The Parisian sets to his piece with tremendous energy. It becomes him, as rising composer, to write a symphony and write it he will. With tireless vigor, he continues from end to end of the three movements in which he fashions his music. Onward and onward, he drives his counterpoint, especially in the first Allegro and with the first motive thereof, until he has exhausted all that his mind and his manipulation can devise. He is as zealous to keep his orchestra at work and in motion, with inevitable result in music of insistently thick texture and of a kind of urgent monotony. Distinctly at the end, the hearer believes that the composer was of like sensation with himself: "There, it is done!" The slow movement ensues, as ruminant upon the motives whence it springs, as reflective in the progress and interplay of them, as though Dukas had taken cue, but not inspiration, from Brahms himself. By all means a well-knit music, but so closely knit that it relaxes but seldom for harmonic and instrumental color. Solidly it is wrought; stolidly it moves. For the Finale, Dukas regathers the energy of the beginning; again he is lengthy in proportion to the interest of his matter; again he tends to monotony. Happily, however, the music is lighter-paced, more diverse in color; here and there outsprings a hint of exhilaration. After all, Paul Abraham Dukas, having undertaken to write a symphony, has written it. Moreover, as he may reflect nowadays, there have been conductors and orchestras in France and the United States willing to play it—once.

On the other hand, in Sibelius's tone-poems, the composer writes obviously from imaginative impulse. The wanton and witching woman of the moon, mocking, enticing, testing the hero beneath her on his sledge, his chagrins and his consolations, the icy air, the glinting light, prompt him to tonal narrative, to tonal picture. He achieves both in music that is not only closely wrought but supple; that at once interests the ear and stirs perception and fancy; that is both economical and diverse of means; that has a native wildness and a strange magic; that summons atmosphere, imposes suggestion; that is hard to hear unmoved. Again in "Night-Ride and Sunrise," Sibelius courts monotony in the figure of the ring of the horses' feet, but a monotony that pricks the nerves of sensation, not dulls them. Out of his melancholy tune, he hints at the moody preoccupation of the riders and so strikes personal, human note. His dawn, his sunrise are not tonal commonplaces. They are musical record of individual sensation for which he finds as individual musical means and procedure. Dukas in his symphony makes his way by sheer force of will, through a self-imposed task. Sibelius in his tone-poems writes music that, seemingly, mind and heart bade him eagerly to write and for which he less multiplies than sifts his resources. The Parisian atrophies his hearers; the Fin [illegible]

POST MARCH. 3, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The impending performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition which will be used. In the original version Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first with oboes d'amore, second with oboes da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the "basso continuo," or "figured bass." For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obligato, alowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers.

This "basso continuo" became a lost art long before the end of the 18th century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Robert Franz, and it is this which is generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performances it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original in form and manner. He will give it in its entirety, for the excisions usually made destroy to a great degree the significance of the work. He will give it in two sessions, the first part, which is essentially epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, which is dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding likewise that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version and all of the Franz version except certain accompaniments for string alone. His orchestra wil consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. It is greatly to his regret that he is unabl to secure in this country the oboes da caccia, but for these he will substitute the English horns, which in the modern orchestra correspond to the obsolete oboe da caccia. He has oboes d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for the Bach orchestra many of the arias and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. He has also written out the parts for the organ and piano, the latter taking the place of the harpsichord. In other words, the coming performance of the "Passion" music will approximate the original performance in the Church of St. Thomas, Leipsic, as closely as modern conditions permit.

Mr. Stephen Townsend, who is training the chorus, reports that he will have 400 singers. Rehearsals are being held twice a week, one for each of the two choruses, and there will be two full rehearsals for the entire chorus the week of March 11. The following week there will be two full rehearsals with orchestras under Dr. Muck. In addition to the chorus there will be a boys' choir of 80 carefully chosen from various churches in the city.

THE "BAZOOKA'S" MELLOW NOTE is probably as yet a stranger to Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is doubtful even if it is familiar to us lowbrows whose dull lives are sweetened by jazz bands. The bazooka is the instrument at the left of this picture of the [illegible] recently organized at Paris [illegible]

15

Advertiser March 9, 1918

SYMPHONY PROGRAM IS CONSERVATIVE

Joseph Malkin, as Soloist, Moves His Audience to Frequent Applause

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

Program.
Goldmark. "Sakuntala" Overture.
Lalo, Concerto for Violoncello.
Soloist, Joseph Malkin.
Beethoven. Second Symphony.

A conservative program, written in the days when they composed tunes and when music was supposed to please the auditor. Goldmark's "Sakuntala" overture is a point where the non-musician can enjoy and the strict musician also be satisfied.

It is the composer's best orchestral work. There are good contrasts in the overture. The hunting of King Dushyanta and the loneliness of Sakuntala in the forest are fine foils to each other, and there is real passion in the love-scenes.

The figure treatment is not too complex for the laity to follow; every auditor could trace the five-noted bit (a, b-flat, c, d, c) from which much of the music is derived, and the deep trills of the string orchestra and bassoons were impressive to all alike.

The horns and trumpets had some very brilliant work to do in the hunting themes, and accomplished it finely, while the triumphant coda, with plenty of kettle-drum spice, was finely effective. Such music is beautiful even when it pictures gloom. It is an Oriental picture with properly Oriental warmth of coloring. It aroused great applause and both the work and its interpretation deserved it.

GIVES MANY ENCORES.

Lalo's violoncello concerto still kept to the domain of melody. It served to introduce Mr. Joseph Malkin as soloist, one of the great performers in this city of great violoncellists. Mr. Malkin's tone was broad, sympathetic and pure in intonation —"Mein Liebchen, was willst Du noch mehr?"—and the concerto is agreeable all the way through.

Perhaps one might except the first movement from the pleasant adjective, for it is rather long and not so popular as the succeeding two, but the perfect phrasing of the soloist and the excellent ensemble of the orchestra caused it to win much applause. Its earnest and dramatic vein was finely given, and the antiphonal dialogue between the calls and the orchestra (chiefly brasses) was especially effective.

The second movement is pastoral even to the extent of giving a drone bass of bagpipe style and it contrasted well with the more sombre character of the preceding movement. The finale has themes which are almost dances in character.

We should scarcely call this a great composition, but 'cello concertos are scarce and this could ill be spared from the repertoire. Mr. Malkin was recalled three times with considerable enthusiasm.

POPULAR MELODIES.

And now came more melodies, for the second and third movements of Beethoven's second symphony are really popular in their simplicity of tunes. We once asked Mr. Gericke which symphony of the Beethoven nine he considered the greatest.

"Always the one I have heard last," was his answer.

There is much truth in this: the second symphony may be less than the heroic, the fifth or the seventh, but heard by itself it is grand enough to satisfy anybody. The slow movement has melody enough to set up half-a-dozen modern composers in orchestral work, unless they despised such simplicity of themes.

One may remember, too, that the third movement of this was the first Scherzo ever written, the foundation of a new form of movement for symphony, replacing the Minuet which Haydn had worn threadbare.

One can only praise the reading and the shading of the performance. The rapid chief figure of the first movement, and the rather difficult skips of the first theme of the finale, were given flawlessly. Therefore, for once, one could forget the modern musical troubles and enjoy good, commonsense melody such as used to be written "when Music, Heavenly Maid, was young"!

Globe March 9-1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Goldmark's overture "Sakuntala" was given a glowing, glorious performance yesterday afternoon. Dr Muck and the orchestra recreated the old work, finding in it a warmly imaginative, romantic spirit which makes the hearer pause and consider. Where did this son of a Jewish cantor, born in a small Hungarian town in a year, when Berlioz was 27, Liszt but 19, find the inspiration much less the knowledge of orchestral technic for the thought and expression of certain of these pages?

Rubin Goldmark, the composer's nephew now living in New York, has said, as quoted in the program notes, that his uncle worshipped Mozart, greatly admired Schumann, but had written his representative works long before the later Wagner had been played in Vienna. There is the suggestion of the East in pages of this overture, as in the exotic so-called "love theme," sensuous, of noble curve and plasticity, a fancy substantiating Goldmark's disdain for Kapellmeistermusik.

The treatment of the dramatic episodes, the fine sense of distinction between arioso and declamation, between points of climax and of repose, the use of the filled pause, the moments of golden sonority, the surprising feeling for orchesural color — these and other comparable qualities give the score a modern cast despite certain perfunctory measures as the pompous fanfare perhaps heralding the arrival of the king.

Lalo's concerto for cello might profitably be presented to a museum for the preservation of his works. A tedious first movement harnessing the solo instrument employed in endless filagree to an orchestra in absurdly incongruous punctuation is not much bettered by the aridity of the two which follow. Mr Malkin struggled with the thankless piece conscientiously, as though for some expiation. Let us trust one performance is sufficient.

Beethoven's second symphony made the second half of the program. The orchestra takes its fifth trip next week. At the concerts March 22 and 23 Mr Chadwick's Symphonic Sketches and Saint-Saens' third symphony will be played.

Post March 9 1918

MALKIN AS SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY

Goldmark's "Sakuntala" and Beethoven's Second Played

BY OLIN DOWNES

Joseph Malkin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was soloist at the concert given by that organization yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, playing Lalo's concerto for 'cello and orchestra.

The orchestral pieces were Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala" and Beethoven's symphony in D major.

MR. MALKIN'S HANDICAP

The concerto sounded more old-fashioned than ever. Its performance was capable, but rather perfunctory. Mr. Malkin had suffered a disappointment, which can only be appreciated by those who play a fine stringed instrument and devoted to it, when he recently lost a very valuable and treasured violoncello in a taxicab accident. He played on another and an inferior instrument yesterday, and such an experience is enough to dull the enthusiasm and conviction of any artist when he performs in public. A 'cellist of exceptional talent and virtuosity, Mr. Malkin has done himself greater justice on other occasions.

The Goldmark overture is a singular blend of that which is rich, exotic, fascinating beyond words in its languor and orientalism, and that which is regular dyed-in-the-wool German formula. The introduction and the opening theme, once heard, are never forgotten. But the contrasting passage—the trumpet calls, and all that—is the regular proceeding in the manner of the German school, which, with the deterioration of Richard Strauss in his later period ceased to be original and creative in its musical art. We say this, not to introduce politics in a musical discussion, but with full recognition of the fact that any sound appreciation or criticism of music must be based on the understanding of the wonderfully intimate relation between musical expression and the spirit of a people.

A court of law would base its decision against Germany on the scraps of paper she has torn up and destroyed, and her entire failure to justify such a proceeding. But to a sensitive musician it would only be necessary to examine the music that has come from modern Germany and compare it with the music of a Beethoven or a Brahms to realize the entire change and deterioration in the morale of the people. The Beethoven, even of the early second symphony, preached a gospel which would not be pleasing to their leaders of today.

Herald March 9, 1918

SYMPHONY GIVES 17TH CONCERT

Goldmark's Gorgeous Overture Feature of the Performance

LALO'S CONCERTO FOR VIOLONCELLO

By PHILIP HALE

The 17th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Goldmark, overture, "Sakuntala"; Lalo, Concerto for Violoncello; Beethoven, Symphony No. 2.

The gorgeous overture of Goldmark was played in a manner to arouse enthusiasm. When the overture was performed here for the first time over 40 years ago the players were so enamored of it that, as Mr. Zerrahn once told us, they hummed the chief themes at rehearsals of other compositions for many months, whistled them in the streets, and were eager for frequent performances of it. Yesterday's performance was the 15th at the Symphony concerts, yet the music is as fresh, as oriental in its sensuousness, as it was when it was first heard.

"Oriental" is, after all, a loose term to be applied to any occidental music; but this overture with the prelude and other pages of Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba" are more suggestive of the East than Japanese, Chinese or Hindu music that has been played or sung here in public or in private. If true oriental music is not thematically like that of Goldmark's; it should be. In "The Queen of Sheba" the influence of the composer's Hebrew blood is clearly revealed, especially in the Temple scene; but the opening measures of the "Sakuntala" overture, like those of the orchestral introduction to "The Queen of Sheba," are redolent of the Orient; the one suggesting lush vegetation and sensuous anticipation; the other vast sandy stretches and the blazing sun; both hinting at what Henley called "the tedium of the East."

Lalo's violoncello concerto is one of the very few elaborate compositions for the instrument that repay the art of the player and the attention of the hearer. Many years ago Hanslick of Vienna protested against the pompous introduction with the blasts of brass. We like to hear a violinist, pianist or violoncellist announced with a flourish of trumpets, with the jubilation of the full orchestra. It is as if the composer said: "Here comes one that is worth hearing. Mark how he will play my music." Perhaps the first movement of Lalo's concerto is interesting by reason of the general structure and the singularly effective instrumentation rather than the thematic character. How more modern composers have borrowed liberally from Lalo and Chabrier in the matter of orchestration: in the use of the brass and wood wind; also in the delicate treatment of the string choir! The second and third movements are melodically grateful, nor is it fanciful to find in these movements the influence of Lalo's Spanish descent on the rhythm and the melodic lines. Mr. Malkin gave an artistic and pleasing performance.

Dr. Muck bestows as much loving care on the interpretation of the first and second symphonies of Beethoven as on that of the greater ones. The two early symphonies are fairly familiar by this time. The pleasure to be derived from them is chiefly a question of performance. If we must hear early works of the masters in Vienna, would not the unfamiliar symphonies of Mozart and Haydn, some of those for the smallest orchestra of that period, be more entertaining?

The concert will be repeated tonight. The orchestra will be away next week. The program for March 15 and 16 will be as follows: Chadwick, Symphonic Sketches; Saint-Saens, Symphony No. 3 in C minor.

RECORD Dec 28.1917

The Symphony standees on Huntington ave. were out in full force this morning to get the "rush" seats. Mme. Melba was singing and she is always a drawing card with those who hear the greatest of orchestras for a quarter-plus your Uncle Samuel's war tax. Mme. Melba today sang two Mozart arias and Lia's aria from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue." Mme. Melba has been heard much here this year, in her own Thanksgiving Day recital, at the regular Symphony performances and at the Red Cross benefit. Many are anxiously awaiting her Sunday afternoon appearance.

The usual great audience will greet Mr. McCormack at Symphony Hall Sunday when he sings for the benefit of the Red Cross. Mr. McCormack's stock with musicians has jumped 50 p.c. since his recent remarkable singing with the Symphony. He then proved that he not only possessed a wonderfully beautiful lyric tenor voice but that he was a sound musician. Sunday he gives his "popular" audience what they like, standard songs, ballards, and Irish ditties.

Transcript Dec. 15, 1917

Amusements | Amusements

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON AT 3.30
RELIEF CONCERT for the Benefit of Sufferers by the Catastrophe at HALIFAX.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Madame MELBA—FRITZ KREISLER—who give their services.
Admission $2. Souvenir Programme 25c.

SYMPHONY HALL—Two Courses Exactly Alike
BURTON HOLMES
FRIDAY EVE'S at 8.15 SATURDAY MAT'S at 2.30
AUSTRALIA, Jan. 4 & 5 NEW ZEALAND, Jan. 11 & 12
SOUTH SEA ISLANDS, Jan. 18 & 19 JAPAN in 1917, Jan. 25 & 26
ALASKA TODAY, Feb. 1 & 2
SALE COURSE TICKETS: $4, $3 and $2.50 WED., DEC. 26

Handel and Haydn Society
EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Conductor H. G. TUCKER, Organist
Chorus of Society — Orchestra — Organ — Soloists
THE Messiah
SUN., DEC. 23, 7.30
Soprano, MARIE STODDART
Alto, ALMA BECK
Tenor, REED MILLER
Bass, HENRI SCOTT
MON., DEC. 24, 7.30
Soprano, MARIE de KYZER
Alto, MERLE ALCOCK
Tenor, Reed Miller
Bass HENRI SCOTT
Two Performances
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00 Now on Sale

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 30, AT 3
JOHN McCORMACK
The World's Greatest Lyric Tenor. Mr. McCormack will sing his usual complete concert program.
ENTIRE RECEIPTS FOR BENEFIT OF RED CROSS
Mr. McCormack has volunteered to raise $100,000 by giving a series of concerts from coast to coast.
Tickets: $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. No War Tax.
This concert under the management of the Boston Metropolitan Chapter American Red Cross. Mail Orders Now to L. H. MUDGETT, Honorary Manager.

SYMPHONY HALL, SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 6, AT 3.30
JASHA HEIFETZ VIOLIN RECITAL
THE SENSATION OF THE PRESENT MUSICAL SEASON
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c

JORDAN HALL, TUESDAY EVENING, DEC. 18, AT 8.15
LAURA LITTLEFIELD SOPRANO Song Recital
Tickets Purchased for Tues. Eve., Dec. 4, hold good for the 18th
Tickets $1.50, $1.00 and 50c at Symphony Hall

JORDAN HALL, WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 2, AT 3
EMILIO De GOGORZA SONG RECITAL
Tickets $1.50, $1.00 and 50c at Symphony Hall

Mail Orders accompanied by check or money order and addressed L. H. MUDGETT, Symphony Hall, filled in order of receipt and as near desired location as possible.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
John McCORMACK, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
5t(A) d 11

Transcript Jan 19, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3.30
YSAYE THE GREAT BELGIAN VIOLINIST
BERYL RUBINSTEIN, Pianist
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c.

From TOWN & COUNTRY
Address: New York City
Date Dec 28 1917

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

By ANNE SHINGLEUR

Established:

THE second pair of Boston Symphony concerts were given in Carnegie Hall on Friday evening, December seventh, and Saturday afternoon, December eighth. The program for the first of these concerts included Rachmaninoff's Second Symphony and three pieces from Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." At the afternoon performance there was no symphony played, the program comprising MacDowell's second suite in E minor, "Indian"; Debussy's three symphonic sketches, "The Sea," and Beethoven's overture, "Leonore," No. 3.

THERE was some conjecture as to whether these concerts would be given here, because of the announcement made shortly before that on account of the rigid enforcement of the Enemy Alien Act, the Boston Symphony Orchestra might be disbanded. It seems that out of one hundred and one members of the orchestra twenty-three are without citizenship papers, and the new Department of Justice regulations prohibit alien enemies from leaving the State. This ruling affects all orchestras with alien membership, and the Philadelphia Orchestra has met the situation by dismissing its eight German musicians who were not American citizens. Even if the Boston Orchestra followed this example, however, it is difficult to see how the new ruling could be modified in the case of Dr. Karl Muck, or to understand how that eminent conductor will be allowed to leave the State of Massachusetts, unless, as has been asserted, he is a native of Switzerland. However, it is not probable that after his hostile attitude toward the "Star Spangled Banner" he will be granted any special favors by our Government. All the world knows of his refusal to conduct our national air in Providence, R.I., and the sensational developments that followed. The Boston band of musicians could not then stoop to anything so inartistic. Dr. Muck said, "Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra? To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the symphony stands for—musical art." Nevertheless, the Boston Orchestra was not strong enough to stand the storm of protest, and after the incident at Providence our anthem was played at the beginning of each concert. But with the true German spirit, Dr. Muck could not capitulate entirely, or magnanimously. Instead of playing the anthem as written he gave his own "arrangement" which was embroidered with many violin runs and arpeggios, taking away much of the dignity of the music.

Globe March 9 - 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Goldmark's overture "Sakuntala" was given a glowing, glorious performance yesterday afternoon. Dr Muck and the orchestra recreated the old work, finding in it a warmly imaginative, romantic spirit which makes the hearer pause and consider. Where did this son of a Jewish cantor, born in a small Hungarian town in a year, when Berlioz was 27, Liszt but 19, find the inspiration much less the knowledge of orchestral technic for the thought and expression of certain of these pages?

Rubin Goldmark, the composer's nephew now living in New York, has said, as quoted in the program notes, that his uncle worshipped Mozart, greatly admired Schumann, but had written his representative works long before the later Wagner had been played in Vienna. There is the suggestion of the East in pages of this overture, as in the exotic so-called "love theme," sensuous, of noble curve and plasticity, a fancy substantiating Goldmark's disdain for Kapellmeistermusik.

The treatment of the dramatic episodes, the fine sense of distinction between arioso and declamation, between points of climax and of repose, the use of the filled pause, the moments of golden sonority, the surprising feeling for orchestral color — these and other comparable qualities give the score a modern cast despite certain perfunctory measures as the pompous fanfare perhaps heralding the arrival of the king.

Lalo's concerto for cello might profitably be presented to a museum for the preservation of his works. A tedious first movement harnessing the solo instrument employed in endless filagree to an orchestra in absurdly incongruous punctuation is not much bettered by the aridity of the two which follow. Mr Malkin struggled with the thankless piece conscientiously, as though for some expiation. Let us trust one performance is sufficient.

Beethoven's second symphony made the second half of the program. The orchestra takes its fifth trip next week. At the concerts March 22 and 23 Mr Chadwick's Symphonic Sketches and Saint-Saens' third symphony will be played.

Post March 9

MALKIN AS SOLOIST AT SYMPHONY

Goldmark's "Sakuntala" and Beethoven's Second Played

BY OLIN DOWNES

Joseph Malkin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was soloist at the concert given by that organization yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, playing Lalo's concerto for 'cello and orchestra.

The orchestral pieces were Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala" and Beethoven's symphony in D major.

MR. MALKIN'S HANDICAP

The concerto sounded more old-fashioned than ever. Its performance was capable, but rather perfunctory. Mr. Malkin had suffered a disappointment, which can only be appreciated by those who play a fine stringed instrument and devoted to it, when he recently lost a very valuable and treasured violoncello in a taxicab accident. He played on another and an inferior instrument yesterday, and such an experience is enough to dull the enthusiasm and conviction of any artist when he performs in public. A 'cellist of exceptional talent and virtuosity, Mr. Malkin has done himself greater justice on other occasions.

The Goldmark overture is a singular blend of that which is rich, exotic, fascinating beyond words in its languor and orientalism, and that which is regular dyed-in-the-wool German formula. The introduction and the opening theme, once heard, are never forgotten. But the contrasting passage—the trumpet calls, and all that—is the regular proceeding in the manner of the German school, which, with the deterioration of Richard Strauss in his later period ceased to be original and creative in its musical art. We say this, not to introduce politics in a musical discussion, but with full recognition of the fact that any sound appreciation or criticism of music must be based on the understanding of the wonderfully intimate relation between musical expression and the spirit of a people.

A court of law would base its decision against Germany on the scraps of paper she has torn up and destroyed, and her entire failure to justify such a proceeding. But to a sensitive musician it would only be necessary to examine the music that has come from modern Germany and compare it with the music of a Beethoven or a Brahms to realize the entire change and deterioration in the morale of the people. The Beethoven, even of the early second symphony, preached a gospel which would not be pleasing to their leaders of today.

Herald March 9, 1918

SYMPHONY GIVES 17TH CONCERT

Goldmark's Gorgeous Overture Feature of the Performance

LALO'S CONCERTO FOR VIOLONCELLO

By PHILIP HALE

The 17th concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Goldmark, overture, "Sakuntala"; Lalo, Concerto for Violoncello; Beethoven, Symphony No. 2.

The gorgeous overture of Goldmark was played in a manner to arouse enthusiasm. When the overture was performed here for the first time over 40 years ago the players were so enamored of it that, as Mr. Zerrahn once told us, they hummed the chief themes at rehearsals of other compositions for many months, whistled them in the streets, and were eager for frequent performances of it. Yesterday's performance was the 15th at the Symphony concerts, yet the music is as fresh, as oriental in its sensuousness, as it was when it was first heard.

"Oriental" is, after all, a loose term to be applied to any occidental music; but this overture with the prelude and other pages of Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba" are more suggestive of the East than Japanese, Chinese or Hindu music that has been played or sung here in public or in private. If true oriental music is not thematically like that of Goldmark's; it should be. In "The Queen of Sheba" the influence of the composer's Hebrew blood is clearly revealed, especially in the Temple scene; but the opening measures of the "Sakuntala" overture, like those of the orchestral introduction to "The Queen of Sheba," are redolent of the Orient; the one suggesting lush vegetation and sensuous anticipation; the other vast sandy stretches and the blazing sun; both hinting at what Henley called "the tedium of the East."

Lalo's violoncello concerto is one of the very few elaborate compositions for the instrument that repay the art of the player and the attention of the hearer. Many years ago Hanslick of Vienna protested against the pompous introduction with the blasts of brass. We like to hear a violinist, pianist or violoncellist announced with a flourish of trumpets, with the jubilation of the full orchestra. It is as if the composer said: "Here comes one that is worth hearing. Mark how he will play my music." Perhaps the first movement of Lalo's concerto is interesting by reason of the general structure and the singularly effective instrumentation rather than the thematic character. How more modern composers have borrowed liberally from Lalo and Chabrier in the matter of orchestration: in the use of the brass and wood wind; also in the delicate treatment of the string choir! The second and third movements are melodically grateful, nor is it fanciful to find in these movements the influence of Lalo's Spanish descent on the rhythm and the melodic lines. Mr. Malkin gave an artistic and pleasing performance.

Dr. Muck bestows as much loving care on the interpretation of the first and second symphonies of Beethoven as on that of the greater ones. The two early symphonies are fairly familiar by this time. The pleasure to be derived from them is chiefly a question of performance. If we must hear early works of the masters in Vienna, would not the unfamiliar symphonies of Mozart and Haydn, some of those for the smallest orchestra of that period, be more entertaining?

The concert will be repeated tonight. The orchestra will be away next week. The program for March 15 and 16 will be as follows: Chadwick, Symphonic Sketches; Saint-Saens, Symphony No. 3 in C minor.

RECORD Dec 28. 1917

The Symphony standees on Huntington ave. were out in full force this morning to get the "rush" seats. Mme. Melba was singing and she is always a drawing card with those who hear the greatest of orchestras for a quarter-plus your Uncle Samuel's war tax. Mme. Melba today sang two Mozart arias and Lia's aria from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue." Mme. Melba has been heard much here this year, in her own Thanksgiving Day recital, at the regular Symphony performances and at the Red Cross benefit. Many are anxiously awaiting her Sunday afternoon appearance.

The usual great audience will greet Mr. McCormack at Symphony Hall Sunday when he sings for the benefit of the Red Cross. Mr. McCormack's stock with musicians has jumped 50 p.c. since his recent remarkable singing with the Symphony. He then proved that he not only possessed a wonderfully beautiful lyric tenor voice but that he was a sound musician. Sunday he gives his "popular" audience what they like, standard songs, ballards, and Irish ditties.

Transcript Dec. 15, 1917

Amusements | Amusements

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON AT 3.30
RELIEF CONCERT for the Benefit of Sufferers by the Catastrophe at HALIFAX.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—Dr. KARL MUCK, Conductor
Madame MELBA—FRITZ KREISLER—who give their services.
Admission $2. Souvenir Programme 25c.

SYMPHONY HALL—Two Courses Exactly Alike
BURTON HOLMES
FRIDAY EVE'S at 8.15 SATURDAY MAT'S at 2.30
AUSTRALIA, Jan. 4 & 5 NEW ZEALAND, Jan. 11 & 12
SOUTH SEA ISLANDS, Jan. 18 & 19 JAPAN In 1917, Jan. 25 & 26
ALASKA TODAY, Feb. 1 & 2
SALE COURSE TICKETS: $4, $3 and $2.50 WED., DEC. 26

Handel and Haydn Society
EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Conductor H. G. TUCKER, Organist
Chorus of Society — Orchestra — Organ — Soloists
THE Messiah
SUN., DEC. 23, 7.30
Soprano, MARIE STODDART
Alto, ALMA BECK
Tenor, REED MILLER
Bass, HENRI SCOTT
MON., DEC. 24, 7.30
Soprano, MARIE de KYZER
Alto, MERLE ALCOCK
Tenor, Reed Miller
Bass HENRI SCOTT
Two Performances
Tickets $2.00, $1.50 and $1.00 Now on Sale

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 30, AT 3
JOHN McCORMACK
The World's Greatest Lyric Tenor. Mr. McCormack will sing his usual complete concert program.
ENTIRE RECEIPTS FOR BENEFIT OF RED CROSS
Mr. McCormack has volunteered to raise $100,000 by giving a series of concerts from coast to coast.
Tickets: $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00. No War Tax.
This concert under the management of the Boston Metropolitan Chapter American Red Cross. Mail Orders Now to L. H. MUDGETT, Honorary Manager.

SYMPHONY HALL, SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 6, AT 3.30
JASHA HEIFETZ VIOLIN RECITAL
THE SENSATION OF THE PRESENT MUSICAL SEASON
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75c

JORDAN HALL, TUESDAY EVENING, DEC. 18, AT 8.15
LAURA LITTLEFIELD SOPRANO
Song Recital
Tickets Purchased for Tues. Eve., Dec. 4, hold good for the 18th
Tickets $1.50, $1.00 and 50c at Symphony Hall

JORDAN HALL, WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 2, AT 3
EMILIO De GOGORZA SONG RECITAL
Tickets $1.50, $1.00 and 50c at Symphony Hall

Mail Orders accompanied by check or money order and addressed L. H. MUDGETT, Symphony Hall, filled in order of receipt and as near desired location as possible.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8
Dr. KARL MUCK, Cond.
John McCORMACK, Soloist
TICKETS AT BOX OFFICE
5t(A) d 11

Transcript Jan. 19, 1918

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW (SUNDAY) AFTERNOON, AT 3.30
YSAYE THE GREAT BELGIAN VIOLINIST
BERYL RUBINSTEIN, Pianist
Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c.

From TOWN & COUNTRY

Address: New York City

Date

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

By ANNE SHINGLEUR

Established:

THE second pair of Boston Symphony concerts were given in Carnegie Hall on Friday evening, December seventh, and Saturday afternoon, December eighth. The program for the first of these concerts included Rachmaninoff's Second Symphony and three pieces from Mendelssohn's music to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." At the afternoon performance there was no symphony played, the program comprising MacDowell's second suite in E minor, "Indian"; Debussy's three symphonic sketches, "The Sea" and Beethoven's overture, "Leonore," No. 3.

THERE was some conjecture as to whether these concerts would be given here, because of the announcement made shortly before that on account of the rigid enforcement of the Enemy Alien Act, the Boston Symphony Orchestra might be disbanded. It seems that out of one hundred and one members of the orchestra twenty-three are without citizenship papers, and the new Department of Justice regulations prohibit alien enemies from leaving the State. This ruling affects all orchestras with alien membership, and the Philadelphia Orchestra has met the situation by dismissing its eight German musicians who were not American citizens. Even if the Boston Orchestra followed this example, however, it is difficult to see how the new ruling could be modified in the case of Dr. Karl Muck, or to understand how that eminent conductor will be allowed to leave the State of Massachusetts, unless, as has been asserted, he is a native of Switzerland. However, it is not probable that after his hostile attitude toward the "Star Spangled Banner" he will be granted any special favors by our Government. All the world knows of his refusal to conduct our national air in Providence, R.I., and the sensational developments that followed. The Boston band of musicians could not then stoop to anything so inartistic. Dr. Muck said, "Does the public think that the Symphony Orchestra is a military band or a ballroom orchestra? To ask us to play 'The Star Spangled Banner' is embarrassing. It is almost an insult. Such an attempt would be destructive of the very thing the symphony stands for—musical art." Nevertheless, the Boston Orchestra was not strong enough to stand the storm of protest, and after the incident at Providence our anthem was played at the beginning of each concert. But with the true German spirit, Dr. Muck could not capitulate entirely, or magnanimously. Instead of playing the anthem as written he gave his own "arrangement" which was embroidered with many violin runs and arpeggios, taking away much of the dignity of the music.

N.Y. World March 14, 1918

N. Y. Times March 14, 1918

N. Y. Tribune March 14, 1918

N Y World 3/14/18

WAR ON DR. MUCK GROWING WARMER

Carnegie Hall Management Says It Cannot Break Contract, So Mrs. Jay Appeals to License Commission.

Promising interesting developments to-day, which will decide definitely whether Dr. Karl Muck will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall, or will be prevented by the authorities, Mrs. William Jay of No. 850 Park Avenue last night made public an open letter she has addressed to him.

Major Henry L. Higginson, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, defended Dr. Muck in Boston yesterday. He said that he had gone over the whole question with the Department of Justice in Washington, and the Conductor had received permission to play anywhere in the United States except the District of Columbia.

"The orchestra will play to-night with Dr. Muck," said Major Higginson, "and those who object to Dr. Muck or the nationality of any of the players can stay away if they don't want to hear the music."

The management of Carnegie Hall told The World that the whole matter was out of its hands. Major Higginson has made a contract for a stipulated number of concerts there. Dr. Muck and his orchestra have already appeared there several times this season. The orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" under his leadership.

"Up to License Commissioner."

The hall managers asserted they could not prevent the concert to-night without exposing themselves to a suit. They said that if the concert to-night offended the dignity for peace of New York, action was up to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

Mrs. Jay visited Commissioner Gilchrist yesterday afternoon.

"I told Mrs. Jay," he said later, "that the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not need a special license for its concert. The annual license issued to the hall by the city covers all public entertainments. This department at present sees no reason why it should prvent Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra. There is no evidence that the law is being violated or the public peace or decency endangered. If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or the nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt action will be taken. If Dr. Muck is an enemy alien that comes under Federal jurisdiction and is out of my hands entirely."

Made a German by "Who's Who."

"The statement that Dr. Muck is a Swiss is not borne out by facts," said Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, speaking for Mrs. Jay. "He was born in Germany of German parents. If you want to know how German he is, just read 'Who's Who.' My information indicates he has the status of an enemy alien."

"Who's Who" gives Dr. Muck's birthplace as Darmstadt, Germany. He studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig, was conductor at various opera houses in Germany and in 1908 was named as musical director of the Prussian Court by the Kaiser.

Mrs. Jay's letter to Dr. Muck follows:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra.

"There has been brought to my attention an exxcerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of the Chronicle dated Oct. 23, 1917. There was this referenc to you: 'Bear in mind that Doktor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends here.

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen? If so, when were you naturalized? Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to asnwer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

MAJOR HIGGINSON DEFENDS DR. MUCK

Boston Symphony Founder Says Mrs. Jay's Statement Contains "Mistaken" Assertions.

MAY PROTEST FROM STAGE

Declares He Will Appeal to American Spirit of Fair Play if a Disturbance Occurs Tonight.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for thirty-seven years its guarantor against loss, financial or artistic, notified Manager C. A. Ellis yesterday that he was coming to New York today to be present in Carnegie Hall this evening, when the orchestra was to give its final evening concert of the season, followed by two others in Brooklyn and Manhattan tomorrow and Saturday, conducted by Dr. Karl Muck. Because of attacks on his chief musician, Major Higginson said that, if any attempt should be made at disturbing tonight's concert he proposed to take the stage himself, as he has done elsewhere, and put the entire case up to the public in an appeal to the American spirit of fair play.

Major Higginson sent to THE NEW YORK TIMES and to other newspapers a statement in which he answered what he declared to be mistaken assertions by Mrs. William Jay, a Director of the New York Philharmonic Society, conducted by Josef Stransky. In this rejoinder Major Higginson stood by Dr. Muck, who, he said, is a citizen of the Swiss Republic, and whose status has been duly examined by officers of the United States Government. Dr. Muck, he further declared, had never refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," nor had he ever made any remark discourteous to the American flag or people. Those who subscribed to the concert shere and in Brooklyn, all sold out by the year, he added, had been fully informed of the facts before they bought their tickets last Fall.

The following was Major Higginson's statement:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week, and are mistaken in various statements which they make, let me give you the facts:

"Following an attack of The Providence Journal in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

Citizen of Switzerland.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport today. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years, went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here. He has not been 'loaned' by anybody, and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner' but, on the contrary, did so the first time I asked him, which was in November. He gave me his resignation, which I have not refused or accepted.

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case has been stated clearly, and on Dec. 7 received leave to play anywhere in the United States, except the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go to the newspapers and, therefore, I ask you to publish this statement for me. You will see by reading the later articles in The Herald that various of Mrs. Jay's statements are incorrect. Among other things, she states that various cities have barred the orchestra out. The management of the orchestra gave up those cities, except Baltimore, because the local managers feared a loss of money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in The Herald of yesterday, and I repeat it: 'I have your letter of March 7th. It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence. As regards the act of Trading with the Enemy,' I sought in person instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington and have obeyed those instructions with care.'

Recalls 1917 Concert.

"About March 15, 1917, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in New York the Faust Symphony, together with a chorus of 160 men taken from Boston, and that concert was received with great applause, and was satisfactory to the audience. It is the same orchestra and the same conductor, and all the world knew that the United States would declare war in a few days, which it did. When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season, we had declared war and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people, in buying those tickets, knew what they were to hear and how the orchestra was composed. I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and, in honesty, can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?

H. L. HIGGINSON."

Major Higginson, whose statement was issued in New York by the local office of Lee, Higginson & Co., is known at his home in Boston as a fighter for his principles and one with an honorable record in the civil war. He was brevetted Colonel in that conflict, but his old army mates stuck to his title of Major, while that of Colonel was popularly reserved in Boston for the late Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson of another family. Two of Major Higginson's brothers fought in the Union Army, and one of them, James Higginson, was captured by the Confederates. A cousin, Colonel Robert Gould Shaw, was killed in action while commanding the first regiment of negro troops from the North, and his monument by St. Gaudens is one of the chief memorials on Boston Common today.

Mrs. Jay Retorts, Aided by Mrs. Story.

Mrs. Jay returned to the attack last night by sending to the newspapers an "open letter" to Dr. Muck, in which she asked him a series of questions, answered in part by Major Higginson's statement yesterday. Among other things she asked were: "Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?"

Mrs. Jay also invited Dr. Muck in the event of his not answering the questions to "retire permanently from public, musical life."

Mrs. William Cumming Story, Honorary President of the Daughters of the American Revolution, said yesterday that she had sent the following letter to Mrs. Jay:

"Your splendid condemnation of toleration of enemy aliens will find a response in the heart of every true American. I would urge all women who may have an opportunity through holding seats for the Boston Symphony concert, which is led by Dr. Muck, to express their disapproval by refusing to occupy those seats, and to declare that their loyalty is too deep to permit them to tolerate any person who is in sympathy with our enemy across the sea, an enemy that we are giving our hearts' blood to conquer. I believe that the Daughters of the American Revolution will wish to declare their loyalty to the principles their ancestors died to preserve, and that all true Americans will unite in their support of your stand in this matter."

Transcript March 14, 1918

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO HAVE POLICE GUARD

DR. MUCK WILL BE THERE DESPITE REQUEST THAT HIS APPEARANCE BE PROHIBITED

New York, March 14—As a precaution against disturbances, a detail of police will attend the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall here tonight at the request of the management of the hall. City authorities have been urged to prohibit the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, but the police said today that no good reason for such action had been presented.

Globe March 12, 1918

ress toward recovery.

BOSTON OPERA NETTED GOVERNMENT $11,649

The Federal Government was yesterday given the largest check ever paid into the office of the Boston Collector of Internal Revenue as a tax on amusements. Charles A. Ellis, who managed the two-week Boston season of the Chicago Opera Company, gave to Collector John F. Malley a check for $11,649.40. This represents 10 percent of all admissions during the two weeks beginning Feb 18. As there were 16 performances the average tax for each was a bit over $728.

The fortnight's season was the most successful the Boston Opera House ever had.

Transcript March 14, 1918

Programmes in Prospect

At the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge on Thursday of next week, Mr. Hackett, the excellent tenor, will be the assisting singer in a programme that Dr. Muck has put together as follows:

Symphony in F-minor, No. 4.....Chaikovsky
Air, "Il Mio Tesoro," from "Don Juan"..Mozart
The Good-Friday Spell from "Parsifal"..Wagner
Air, "Waft Her, Angels," from "Jephtha"..Handel

Mrs. William Jay Plays 'Trump' In Fight to Bar Dr. Muck He

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Must Answer Questions Concerning His Patriotism or She Will Take Other Measures, She Declares

The first "trump card" in the fight organized against Dr. Karl Muck's appearance to-night in Carnegie Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an open letter to him signed by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the concerts who object to having their music directed by an "enemy alien." Mrs. Jay asks Dr. Muck some questions in the letter and demands that he declare himself on the point of his citizenship before he enters Carnegie Hall to-night. In case Dr. Muck refuses to answer her questions, Mrs. Jay and her friends will then play their other "trump card," presumably an ace.

The letter to Dr. Muck reads:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra. There has been brought to my attention an excerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of 'The Chronicle,' dated October 23, 1917. There was this reference to you:

"'Bear in mind that Doctor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends there.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when wer you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have paers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York City which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

Says Dr. Muck Will Not Conduct

"One thing is certain. Dr. Muck will not conduct to-night," declared Mrs. Jay yesterday.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has stood firmly behind Dr. Muck since the outbreak of the war, issued the following statement yesterday in regard to the activities of Mrs. Jay and the subscribers she represents:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week and are mistaken in various statements which they make, let me give the facts.

"Following an attack of 'The Providence Journal' in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany; was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here.

"He has not been 'loaned' by anybody and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but contrary, did so the first time him, which was in November. me his resignation, which I refused or accepted.

Approved by U. S. Authorit

"I put the whole case befor United States legal authorities, a ceived their statement that ther nothing against any member of t chestra, including Dr. Muck. I went to the Department of Just Washington, where the whole ca been stated clearly, and on Dec 7 received leave to play anywhe the United States except in the trict of Columbia, being barred that place by a recent law with re to aliens, there being some alie the orchestra.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go t newspapers, and therefore I ask y publish this statement for me. will see by reading the later artic 'The Herald' that various of Mrs. statements are incorrect. Among o things she states that various c have barred the orchestra out management of the orchestra gave those cities, except Baltimore, becau the local managers feared a loss money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in 'The Herald' of yesterday, and I repeat it 'I have your letter of March 7. seems to me idle to cary on this co respondence. As regards the act "trading with the enemy," I sought person instructions from the Depa ment of Justice in Washington, a have obeyed those instructions w care.'

"About March 15, 1917, the Bo Symphony Orchestra played in York the Faust Symphony, toge with a chorus of 160 men taken Boston, and that concert was rece with great applause, and was s factory to the audience. It is the sa orchestra and the same conductor, a all the world knew that the Unite States would declare war in a few days, which it did.

"When the tickets were sold las May and June for the concerts of the present season, we had declared war and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people, in buying those tickets, knew what they were to he and how the orchestra was compo I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and, in honesty, can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?"

Mrs. William Cummings Story, honoray president general of the Nation Society of the Daughters of the Am can Revolution, begged last night every patriotic woman refuse to at the concert this evening and to-mo afternoon.

"Mrs. Jay's splendid denunciatio the tolerance of enemy aliens will echo in every true American h she declared.

"I would urge every woman who m have the opportunity through holdi seats for symphonies led by Dr. Muck to express disapproval by refusing to attend and in forceful utterance to declare her loyalty to be too deep to permit her to accept any person who is in sympathy with enemies across the sea —an enemy for whom we are sacrificing our heart's blood to conquor. I believe that the Daughters of the American Revolution will wish to record in this way their loyalty to the principles for which their ancestors died."

From NORTH AMERICAN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

DEC 16 191

Da Doctor Muck, Swiss Citizen

TO THE EDITOR—Having for the last three years attended every concert given in Philadelphia by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I feel privileged to critizise the circular now issued by this organization in defense of its conductor, Doctor Muck. In the document are many statements such as these: Doctor Muck is not a Prussian; he is not an enemy alien; he is not a citizen of Germany. The circular also states that Doctor Muck never refused to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" when asked to do so. It would have been better had he refused at the opening concert given in Philadelphia this year. For, while no one could doubt Doctor Muck's ability to interpret most artistically the finest musical compositions, every American should now regard with the greatest disfavor the man who so indifferently conducted our national anthem. His lukewarmness on that occasion was an insult, not only to the anthem, but also to every loyal American. Next the circular states that the federal authorities made a careful investigation and find that Doctor Muck has done nothing against the interests of this country. Howe that may be, Philadelphia people can only ju by the manner in which he conducted tion's hymn here.

k, 1884

N.Y. World March 14, 1918

N.Y. Times March 14, 1918

N.Y. Tribune March 14, 1918

N.Y. World 3/14/18

WAR ON DR. MUCK GROWING WARMER

Carnegie Hall Management Says It Cannot Break Contract, So Mrs. Jay Appeals to License Commission.

Promising interesting developments to-day, which will decide definitely whether Dr. Karl Muck will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall, or will be prevented by the authorities, Mrs. William Jay of No. 850 Park Avenue last night made public an open letter she has addressed to him.

Major Henry L. Higginson, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, defended Dr. Muck in Boston yesterday. He said that he had gone over the whole question with the Department of Justice in Washington, and the Conductor had received permission to play anywhere in the United States except the District of Columbia.

"The orchestra will play to-night with Dr. Muck," said Major Higginson, "and those who object to Dr. Muck or the nationality of any of the players can stay away if they don't want to hear the music."

The management of Carnegie Hall told The World that the whole matter was out of its hands. Major Higginson has made a contract for a stipulated number of concerts there. Dr. Muck and his orchestra have already appeared there several times this season. The orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" under his leadership.

"Up to License Commissioner."

The hall managers asserted they could not prevent the concert to-night without exposing themselves to a suit. They said that if the concert to-night offended the dignity for peace of New York, action was up to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

Mrs. Jay visited Commissioner Gilchrist yesterday afternoon.

"I told Mrs. Jay," he said later, "that the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not need a special license for its concert. The annual license issued to the hall by the city covers all public entertainments. This department at present sees no reason why it should prvent Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra. There is no evidence that the law is being violated or the public peace or decency endangered. If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or the nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt action will be taken. If Dr. Muck is an enemy alien that comes under Federal jurisdiction and is out of my hands entirely."

Made a German by "Who's Who."

"The statement that Dr. Muck is a Swiss is not borne out by facts," said Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, speaking for Mrs. Jay. "He was born in Germany of German parents. If you want to know how German he is, just read 'Who's Who.' My information indicates he has the status of an enemy alien."

"Who's Who" gives Dr. Muck's birthplace as Darmstadt, Germany. He studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig, was conductor at various opera houses in Germany and in 1908 was named as musical director of the Prussian Court by the Kaiser.

Mrs. Jay's letter to Dr. Muck follows:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra.

"There has been brought to my attention an exxcxerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of the Chronicle dated Oct. 23, 1917. There was this referenc to you: 'Bear in mind that Doktor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends here.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen? If so, when were you naturalized? Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to asnwer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

twenty-[illegible] Russians, eight Aus[illegible] two Russians, two British, si[illegible] two Russians, three French, tw[illegible] Germans and two Bohemians."

MAJOR HIGGINSON DEFENDS DR. MUCK

Boston Symphony Founder Says Mrs. Jay's Statement Contains "Mistaken" Assertions.

MAY PROTEST FROM STAGE

Declares He Will Appeal to American Spirit of Fair Play if a Disturbance Occurs Tonight.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for thirty-seven years its guarantor against loss, financial or artistic, notified Manager C. A. Ellis yesterday that he was coming to New York today to be present in Carnegie Hall this evening, when the orchestra was to give its final evening concert of the season, followed by two others in Brooklyn and Manhattan tomorrow and Saturday, conducted by Dr. Karl Muck. Because of attacks on his chief musician, Major Higginson said that, if any attempt should be made at disturbing tonight's concert he proposed to take the stage himself, as he has done elsewhere, and put the entire case up to the public in an appeal to the American spirit of fair play.

Major Higginson sent to THE NEW YORK TIMES and to other newspapers a statement in which he answered what he declared to be mistaken assertions by Mrs. William Jay, a Director of the New York Philharmonic Society, conducted by Josef Stransky. In this rejoinder Major Higginson stood by Dr. Muck, who, he said, is a citizen of the Swiss Republic, and whose status has been duly examined by officers of the United States Government. Dr. Muck, he further declared, had never refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," nor had he ever made any remark discourteous to the American flag or people. Those who subscribed to the concert shere and in Brooklyn, all sold out by the year, he added, had been fully informed of the facts before they bought their tickets last Fall.

The following was Major Higginson's statement:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week, and are mistaken in various statements which they make, let me give you the facts:

"Following an attack of The Providence Journal in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

Citizen of Switzerland.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport today. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years, went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here. He has not been 'loaned' by anybody, and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but, on the contrary, did so the first time I asked him, which was in November. He gave me his resignation, which I have not refused or accepted.

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case has been stated clearly, and on Dec. 7 received leave to play anywhere in the United States, except the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go to the newspapers and, therefore, I ask you to publish this statement for me. You will see by reading the later articles in The Herald that various of Mrs. Jay's statements are incorrect. Among other things, she states that various cities have barred the orchestra out. The management of the orchestra gave up those cities, except Baltimore, because the local managers feared a loss of money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in The Herald of yesterday, and I repeat it: 'I have your letter of March 7th. It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence. As regards the act of Trading with the Enemy,' I sought in person instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington and have obeyed those instructions with care.'

Recalls 1917 Concert.

"About March 15, 1917, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in New York the Faust Symphony, together with a chorus of 160 men taken from Boston, and that concert was received with great applause, and was satisfactory to the audience. It is the same orchestra and the same conductor, and all the world knew that the United States would declare war in a few days, which it did. When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season, we had declared war and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people, in buying those tickets, knew what they were to hear and how the orchestra was composed. I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and, in honesty, can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?

H. L. HIGGINSON."

Major Higginson, whose statement was issued in New York by the local office of Lee, Higginson & Co., is known at his home in Boston as a fighter for his principles and one with an honorable record in the civil war. He was brevetted Colonel in that conflict, but his old army mates stuck to his title of Major, while that of Colonel was popularly reserved in Boston for the late Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson of another family. Two of Major Higginson's brothers fought in the Union Army, and one of them, James Higginson, was captured by the Confederates. A cousin, Colonel Robert Gould Shaw, was killed in action while commanding the first regiment of negro troops from the North, and his monument by St. Gaudens is one of the chief memorials on Boston Common today.

Mrs. Jay Retorts, Aided by Mrs. Story.

Mrs. Jay returned to the attack last night by sending to the newspapers an "open letter" to Dr. Muck, in which she asked him a series of questions, answered in part by Major Higginson's statement yesterday. Among other things she asked were: "Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?"

Mrs. Jay also invited Dr. Muck in the event of his not answering the questions to "retire permanently from public musical life."

Mrs. William Cumming Story, Honorary President of the Daughters of the American Revolution, said yesterday that she had sent the following letter to Mrs. Jay:

"Your splendid condemnation of toleration of enemy aliens will find a response in the heart of every true American. I would urge all women who may have an opportunity through holding seats for the Boston Symphony concert, which is led by Dr. Muck, to express their disapproval by refusing to occupy those seats, and to declare that their loyalty is too deep to permit them to tolerate any person who is in sympathy with our enemy across the sea—an enemy that we are giving our hearts' blood to conquer. I believe that the Daughters of the American Revolution will wish to declare their loyalty to the principles their ancestors died to preserve, and that all true Americans will unite in their support of your stand in this matter."

Transcript March 14, 1918

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO HAVE POLICE GUARD

DR. MUCK WILL BE THERE DESPITE REQUEST THAT HIS APPEARANCE BE PROHIBITED

New York, March 14—As a precaution against disturbances, a detail of police will attend the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Carnegie Hall here tonight at the request of the management of the hall. City authorities have been urged to prohibit the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, but the police said today that no good reason for such action had been presented.

Globe March 12, 1918

ress toward recovery.

BOSTON OPERA NETTED GOVERNMENT $11,649

The Federal Government was yesterday given the largest check ever paid into the office of the Boston Collector of Internal Revenue as a tax on amusements. Charles A. Ellis, who managed the two-week Boston season of the Chicago Opera Company, gave to Collector John F. Malley a check for $11,649.40. This represents 10 percent of all admissions during the two weeks beginning Feb 18. As there were 16 performances the average tax for each was a bit over $728.

The fortnight's season was the most successful the Boston Opera House ever had.

Transcript March 14, 1918

Programmes in Prospect

At the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge on Thursday of next week, Mr. Hackett, the excellent tenor, will be the assisting singer in a programme that Dr. Muck has put together as follows:

Symphony in F-minor, No. 4.....Chaikovsky
Air, "Il Mio Tesoro," from "Don Juan"..Mozart
The Good-Friday Spell from "Parsifal"..Wagner
Air, "Waft Her, Angels," from "Jephtha"..Händel

Mrs. William Jay Plays 'Trump' In Fight to Bar Dr. Muck He[illegible]

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Must 'An[illegible] Questions Concerning His Patriotism or She Wil[illegible] Take Other Measures, She Declares

The first "trump card" in the fight organized against Dr. Karl Muck's appearance to-night in Carnegie Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an open letter to him signed by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the concerts who object to having their music directed by an "enemy alien." Mrs. Jay asks Dr. Muck some questions in the letter and demands that he declare himself on the point of his citizenship before he enters Carnegie Hall to-night. In case Dr. Muck refuses to answer her questions, Mrs. Jay and her friends will then play their other "trump card," presumably an ace.

The letter to Dr. Muck reads:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra. There has been brought to my attention an excerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of 'The Chronicle,' dated October 23, 1917. There was this reference to you:

"'Bear in mind that Doctor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends there.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when wer you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have paers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York City which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

Says Dr. Muck Will Not Conduct

"One thing is certain, Dr. Muck will not conduct to-night," declared Mrs. Jay yesterday.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has stood firmly behind Dr. Muck since the outbreak of the war, issued the following statement yesterday in regard to the activities of Mrs. Jay and the subscribers she represents:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week and are mistaken in various statements which they make, let me give the facts.

"Following an attack of 'The Providence Journal' in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany; was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years, went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here.

"He has not been 'loaned' by anybody and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but, on the contrary, did so the first time [illegible] him, which was in November. [illegible] me his resignation, which I [illegible] refused or accepted.

Approved by U. S. Authorit[illegible]

"I put the whole case befor[illegible] United States legal authorities, a[illegible] ceived their statement that ther[illegible] nothing against any member of t[illegible] chestra, including Dr. Muck. L[illegible] went to the Department of Just[illegible] Washington, where the whole cas[illegible] been stated clearly, and on Dec[illegible] 7 received leave to play anywhe[illegible] the United States except in the [illegible] trict of Columbia, being barred [illegible] that place by a recent law with re[illegible] to aliens, there being some alien[illegible] the orchestra.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go t[illegible] newspapers, and therefore I ask y[illegible] publish this statement for me. [illegible] will see by reading the later artic[illegible] 'The Herald' that various of Mrs. [illegible] statements are incorrect. Among o[illegible] things she states that various c[illegible] have barred the orchestra out, [illegible] management of the orchestra gave [illegible] those cities, except Baltimore, beca[illegible] the local managers feared a loss o[illegible] money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in 'Th[illegible] Herald' of yesterday, and I repeat it: 'I have your letter of March 7. [illegible] seems to me idle to cary on this co[illegible] respondence. As regards the act [illegible] "trading with the enemy," I sought [illegible] person instructions from the Depa[illegible] ment of Justice in Washington, a[illegible] have obeyed those instructions w[illegible] care.'

"About March 15, 1917, the Bo[illegible] Symphony Orchestra played in [illegible] York the Faust Symphony, toge[illegible] with a chorus of 160 men taken [illegible] Boston, and that concert was rece[illegible] with great applause, and was s[illegible] factory to the audience. It is the sa[illegible] orchestra and the same conductor, a[illegible] all the world knew that the Unite[illegible] States would declare war in a few days, which it did.

"When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season, we had declared war and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people, in buying those tickets, knew what they were to he[illegible] and how the orchestra was compo[illegible] I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and, in honesty, can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?"

Mrs. William Cummings Story, honorary president general of the Nation[illegible] Society of the Daughters of the Am[illegible]can Revolution, begged last night every patriotic woman refuse to at[illegible] the concert this evening and to-mo[illegible] afternoon.

"Mrs. Jay's splendid denunciatio[illegible] the tolerance of enemy aliens will echo in every true American h[illegible] she declared.

"I would urge every woman who m[illegible] have the opportunity through holdi[illegible] seats for symphonies led by Dr. Muck to express disapproval by refusing to attend and in forceful utterance to declare her loyalty to be too deep to permit her to accept any person who is in sympathy with enemies across the sea—an enemy for whom we are sacrificing our heart's blood to conquor. I believe that the Daughters of the American Revolution will wish to record in this way their loyalty to the principles for which their ancestors died."

From NORTH AMERICAN

Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

Da[illegible] Doctor Muck, Swiss Citizen

TO THE EDITOR—Having for the last three years attended every concert given in Philadelphia by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I feel privileged to critizise the circular now issued by this organization in defense of its conductor, Doctor Muck. In the document are many statements such as these: Doctor Muck is not a Prussian; he is not an enemy alien; he is not a citizen of Germany. The circular also states that Doctor Muck never refused to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" when asked to do so. It would have been better had he refused at the opening concert given in Philadelphia this year. For, while no one could doubt Doctor Muck's ability to interpret most artistically the finest musical compositions, every American should now regard with the greatest disfavor the man who so indifferently conducted our national anthem. His lukewarmness on that occasion was an insult, not only to the anthem, but also to every loyal American. Next the circular states that the federal authorities made a careful investigation and find that Doctor Muck has done nothing against the interests of this country. Howe[illegible] that may be, Philadelphia people can only ju[illegible] by the manner in which he conducted th[illegible] tion's hymn here.

[illegible]k, 1884

N.Y. World March 14, 1918

N. Y. Times March 14, 1918

N. Y. Tribune March 14, 1918

N Y World 3/14/15

WAR ON DR. MUCK GROWING WARMER

Carnegie Hall Management Says It Cannot Break Contract, So Mrs. Jay Appeals to License Commission.

Promising interesting developments to-day, which will decide definitely whether Dr. Karl Muck will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall, or will be prevented by the authorities, Mrs. William Jay of No. 850 Park Avenue last night made public an open letter she has addressed to him.

Major Henry L. Higginson, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, defended Dr. Muck in Boston yesterday. He said that he had gone over the whole question with the Department of Justice in Washington, and the Conductor had received permission to play anywhere in the United States except the District of Columbia.

"The orchestra will play to-night with Dr. Muck," said Major Higginson, "and those who object to Dr. Muck or the nationality of any of the players can stay away if they don't want to hear the music."

The management of Carnegie Hall told The World that the whole matter was out of its hands. Major Higginson has made a contract for a stipulated number of concerts there. Dr. Muck and his orchestra have already appeared there several times this season. The orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" under his leadership.

"Up to License Commissioner."

The hall managers asserted they could not prevent the concert to-night without exposing themselves to a suit. They said that if the concert to-night offended the dignity for peace of New York, action was up to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

Mrs. Jay visited Commissioner Gilchrist yesterday afternoon.

"I told Mrs. Jay," he said later, "that the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not need a special license for its concert. The annual license issued to the hall by the city covers all public entertainments. This department at present sees no reason why it should prvent Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra. There is no evidence that the law is being violated or the public peace or decency endangered. If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or the nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt action will be taken. If Dr. Muck is an enemy alien that comes under Federal jurisdiction and is out of my hands entirely."

Made a German by "Who's Who."

"The statement that Dr. Muck is a Swiss is not borne out by facts," said Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, speaking for Mrs. Jay. "He was born in Germany of German parents. If you want to know how German he is, just read 'Who's Who.' My information indicates he has the status of an enemy alien."

"Who's Who" gives Dr. Muck's birthplace as Darmstadt, Germany. He studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig, was conductor at various opera houses in Germany and in 1908 was named as musical director of the Prussian Court by the Kaiser.

Mrs. Jay's letter to Dr. Muck follows:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra.

"There has been brought to my attention in exxcxerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of the Chronicle dated Oct. 23, 1917. There was this referenc to you: 'Bear in mind that Doktor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends here.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen? If so, when were you naturalized? Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to asnwer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

twenty-[illegible] Russians, eight Aus[illegible] two Russians, two British, si[illegible] two Russians, three French, tw[illegible] Bohemians."

MAJOR HIGGINSON DEFENDS DR. MUCK

Boston Symphony Founder Says Mrs. Jay's Statement Contains "Mistaken" Assertions.

MAY PROTEST FROM STAGE

Declares He Will Appeal to American Spirit of Fair Play if a Disturbance Occurs Tonight.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for thirty-seven years its guarantor against loss, financial or artistic, notified Manager C. A. Ellis yesterday that he was coming to New York today to be present in Carnegie Hall this evening, when the orchestra was to give its final evening concert of the season, followed by two others in Brooklyn and Manhattan tomorrow and Saturday, conducted by Dr. Karl Muck. Because of attacks on his chief musician, Major Higginson said that, if any attempt should be made at disturbing tonight's concert he proposed to take the stage himself, as he has done elsewhere, and put the entire case up to the public in an appeal to the American spirit of fair play.

Major Higginson sent to THE NEW YORK TIMES and to other newspapers a statement in which he answered what he declared to be mistaken assertions by Mrs. William Jay, a Director of the New York Philharmonic Society, conducted by Josef Stransky. In this rejoinder Major Higginson stood by Dr. Muck, who, he said, is a citizen of the Swiss Republic, and whose status has been duly examined by officers of the United States Government. Dr. Muck, he further declared, had never refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," nor had he ever made any remark discourteous to the American flag or people. Those who subscribed to the concert shere and in Brooklyn, all sold out by the year, he added, had been fully informed of the facts before they bought their tickets last Fall.

The following was Major Higginson's statement:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week, and are mistaken in various statements which they make, let me give you the facts:

"Following an attack of The Providence Journal in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner," various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

Citizen of Switzerland.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport today. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years, went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here. He has not been 'loaned' by anybody, and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but, on the contrary, did so the first time I asked him, which was in November. He gave me his resignation, which I have not refused or accepted.

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the archestra, including Dr. Muck. Later I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case had been stated clearly, and on Dec. 7 received leave to play anywhere in the United States, except the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go to the newspapers and, therefore, I ask you to publish this statement for me. You will see by reading the later articles in The Herald that various of Mrs. Jay's statements are incorrect. Among other things, she states that various cities have barred the orchestra out. The management of the orchestra gave up those cities, except Baltimore, because the local managers feared a loss of money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in The Herald of yesterday, and I repeat it: 'I have your letter of March 7th. It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence. As regards the act of Trading with the Enemy,' I sought in person instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington and have obeyed those instructions with care.'

Recalls 1917 Concert.

"About March 15, 1917, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in New York the Faust Symphony, together with a chorus of 160 men taken from Boston, and that concert was received with great applause, and was satisfactory to the audience. It is the same orchestra and the same conductor, and all the world knew that the United States would declare war in a few days, which it did. When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season, we had declared war and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people, in buying those tickets, knew what they were to hear and how the orchestra was composed. I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and, in honesty, can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?

H. L. HIGGINSON."

Major Higginson, whose statement was issued in New York by the local office of Lee, Higginson & Co., is known at his home in Boston as a fighter for his principles and one with an honorable record in the civil war. He was brevetted Colonel in that conflict, but his old army mates stuck to his title of Major, while that of Colonel was popularly reserved in Boston for the late Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson of another family. Two of Major Higginson's brothers fought in the Union Army, and one of them, James Higginson, was captured by the Confederates. A cousin, Colonel Robert Gould Shaw, was killed in action, while commanding the first regiment of negro troops from the North, and his monument by St. Gaudens is one of the chief memorials on Boston Common today.

Mrs. Jay Retorts, Aided by Mrs. Story.

Mrs. Jay returned to the attack last night by sending to the newspapers an "open letter" to Dr. Muck, in which she asked him a series of questions, answered in part by Major Higginson's statement yesterday. Among other things she asked were: "Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?"

Mrs. Jay also invited Dr. Muck in the event of his not answering the questions to "retire permanently from public musical life."

Mrs. William Cumming Story, Honorary President of the Daughters of the American Revolution, said yesterday that she had sent the following letter to Mrs. Jay:

"Your splendid condemnation of toleration of enemy aliens will find a response in the heart of every true American. I would urge all women who may have an opportunity through holding seats for the Boston Symphony concert, which is led by Dr. Muck, to express their disapproval by refusing to occupy those seats, and to declare that their loyalty is too deep to permit them to tolerate any person who is in sympathy with our enemy across the sea, an enemy that we are giving our hearts' blood to conquer. I believe that the Daughters of the American Revolution will wish to declare their loyalty to the principles their ancestors died to preserve, and that all true Americans will unite in their support of your stand in this matter."

Transcript March 14, 1918

HONY ORCHESTRA TO HAVE POLICE GUARD

UCK WILL BE THERE DESPITE QUEST THAT HIS APPEARANCE PROHIBITED

ew York, March 14—As a precaution g.nst disturbances, a detail of police will ce.d the concert of the Boston Symphony n-estra at Carnegie Hall here tonight at request of the management of the hall. he authorities have been urged to prohibit nt appearance of Dr. Karl Muck, conduc- n of the orchestra, but the police said to- that no good reason for such action e been presented.

Globe March 12, 1918

ress toward recovery.

BOSTON OPERA NETTED GOVERNMENT $11,649

The Federal Government was yesterday given the largest check ever paid into the office of the Boston Collector of Internal Revenue as a tax on amusements. Charles A. Ellis, who managed the two-week Boston season of the Chicago Opera Company, gave to Collector John F. Malley a check for $11,649.40. This represents 10 percent of all admissions during the two weeks beginning Feb 18. As there were 16 performances the average tax for each was a bit over $728.

The fortnight's season was the most successful the Boston Opera House ever had.

Transcript March 14, 1918

Programmes in Prospect

At the concert of the Symphony Orchestra in Sanders Theatre at Cambridge on Thursday of next week, Mr. Hackett, the excellent tenor, will be the assisting singer in a programme that Dr. Muck has put together as follows:

Symphony in F-minor, No. 4.....Chaikovsky
Air, "Il Mio Tesoro," from "Don Juan"..Mozart
The Good-Friday Spell from "Parsifal"..Wagner
Air, "Waft Her, Angels," from "Jephtha"..Händel

Mrs. William Jay Plays 'Trump' In Fight to Bar Dr. Muck He

Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader Must 'An Questions Concerning His Patriotism or She Wil Take Other Measures, She Declares

The first "trump card" in the fight organized against Dr. Karl Muck's appearance to-night in Carnegie Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an open letter to him signed by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the concerts who object to having their music directed by an "enemy alien." Mrs. Jay asks Dr. Muck some questions in the letter and demands that he declare himself on the point of his citizenship before he enters Carnegie Hall to-night. In case Dr. Muck refuses to answer her questions, Mrs. Jay and her friends w:" then play their other "trump card," presumably an ace.

The letter to Dr. Muck reads:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra. There has been brought to my attention an excerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of 'The Chronicle,' dated October 23, 1917. There was this reference to you:

"'Bear in mind that Doctor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends there.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when wer you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have paers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New ork City which represents the citi- ns of New York, or else will you re- re permanently from public musical e?"

Says Dr. Muck Will Not Conduct

"One thing is certain. Dr. Muck will t conduct to-night," declared Mrs. y yesterday.

Major Henry L. Higginson, presi- nt of the Boston Symphony Orches- a, who has stood firmly behind Dr. uck since the outbreak of the war, sued the following statement yester- ay in regard to the activities of Mrs. ay and the subscribers she represents:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are igorously opposing the two concerts f the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week and are mis- taken in various statements which they make, let me give the facts.

"Following an attack of 'The Providence Journal' in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany; was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizen ship papers and passport to-day. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here.

"He has not been 'loaned' by anybody and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but contrary, did so the first time him, which was in November. me his resignation, which I refused or accepted.

Approved by U. S. Authorit

"I put the whole case befor United States legal authorities, a ceived their statement that ther nothing against any member of t chestra, including Dr. Muck. L went to the Department of Just Washington, where the whole cas been stated clearly, and on Dec 7 received leave to play anywhe the United States except in the trict of Columbia, being barred that place by a recent law with re to aliens, there being some alien the orchestra.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go t newspapers, and therefore I ask y publish this statement for me. will see by reading the later artic 'The Herald' that various of Mrs. statements are incorrect. Among o things she states that various c have barred the orchestra out. management of the orchestra gave those cities, except Baltimore, becau the local managers feared a loss o money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in 'Th Herald' of yesterday, and I repeat it 'I have your letter of March 7. seems to me idle to cary on this co respondence. As regards the act "trading with the enemy," I sought person instructions from the Depa ment of Justice in Washington, a have obeyed those instructions w care.'

"About March 15, 1917, (the Bo Symphony Orchestra played in York the Faust Symphony, toge with a chorus of 160 men taken f Boston, and that concert was rece with great applause, and was s factory to the audience. It is the sam orchestra and the same conductor, an all the world knew that the Unite States would declare war in a few days, which it did.

"When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season, we had declared war and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people, in buying those tickets, knew what they were to he and how the orchestra was compo I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and, in honesty, can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?"

Mrs. William Cummings Story, honorary president general of the Nation Society of the Daughters of the Am can Revolution, begged last night every patriotic woman refuse to at the concert this evening and to-mo afternoon.

"Mrs. Jay's splendid denunciatio the tolerance of enemy aliens will echo in every true American h she declared.

"I would urge every woman who m have the opportunity through holdi seats for symphonies led by Dr. Muck to express disapproval by refusing to attend and in forceful utterance to declare her loyalty to be too deep to permit her to accept any person who is in sympathy with enemies across the sea —an enemy for whom we are sacrificing our heart's blood to conquor. I believe that the Daughters of the American Revolution will wish to record in this way their loyalty to the principles for which their ancestors died."

From NORTH AMERICAN
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

Da Doctor Muck, Swiss Citizen

TO THE EDITOR—Having for the last three years attended every concert given in Philadelphia by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I feel privileged to critizise the circular now issued by this organization in defense of its conductor, Doctor Muck. In the document are many statements such as these: Doctor Muck is not a Prussian; he is not an enemy alien; he is not a citizen of Germany. The circular also states that Doctor Muck never refused to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" when asked to do so. It would have been better had he refused at the opening concert given in Philadelphia this year. For, while no one could doubt Doctor Muck's ability to interpret most artistically the finest musical compositions, every American should now regard with the greatest disfavor the man who so indifferently conducted our national anthem. His lukewarmness on that occasion was an insult, not only to the anthem, but also to every loyal American. Next the circular states that the federal authorities made a careful investigation and find that Doctor Muck has done nothing against the interests of this country. Howe that may be, Philadelphia people can only ju by the manner in which he conducted th tion's hymn here.

k, 1884

BLANK PAGE

druggist, when shown
"Yes, Tescum is a re

REDUCTION RATIO

14x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

TELEGRAPH
NEW YORK CITY
DEC 2 1917

Department of Justice at Washington Declines to Believe That Boston Symphony Conductor Is a "Swiss," and Warns Him Not to Enter the District of Columbia.

CLAMOR FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS

Persons Who Bought Tickets for Concert Series Unable to Get Money Back, but Receive Letter Reiterating That Musician Is Citizen of Helvetian Republic, as Was Father.

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., Dec. 19.

Dr. Carl Muck, condctor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is held by officials of the Federal Government to be a German citizen and as such will be arrested the moment he attempts to enter the District of Columbia. The contention that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject is not taken seriously at the Department of Justice, and Major Raymond Pullman, chief of police of Washington, has been so notified.

That Dr. Muck is held by our Government to be a German was developed today when in connection with an investigation into the fact that those in charge of the orchestra concert series in Washington have refused to refund money to subscribers for concerts scheduled for the future.

Gave Only One Concert.

Dr. Muck has conducted only one concert here. That was before the President issued his proclamation barring German aliens from the District of Columbia. Under that proclamation no concert was given as scheduled for December 4. Despite the repeated statements by the Department of Justice that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, and twenty-two of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are German citizens and cannot come to Washington, subscribers to the Washington series of concerts have been unable to get their money refunded for the remainder of the series.

Meantime the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck "is not a citizen of Germany," that "he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father." A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Major Pullman, police superintendent. Major Pullman to-day stated that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members who are German subjects may come to Washington unless the Washington police department receives a special ruling from the Department of Justice ordering their admission.

Will Arrest on Sight.

John Lord O'Bryan, special assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of enforcement of the enemy alien proclamation, reiterated to-day: "Dr. Muck is a German subject and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the District."

The Swiss Legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, secretary of legation, said:

"No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Muck's status."

Persons who sought to have their money refunded for the three remaining concerts of the series of the Boston Symphony have had their requests declined by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, local agent for the orchestra. They were told, they stated, that the remaining concerts would be given.

One subscriber sought to press the matter on the ground that he did not wish to hear the orchestra play without its conductor and twenty-two of its best musicians, and neither did he desire to contribute to the support of German subjects, should Dr. Muck and his fellow Germans be admitted to the District.

From AMERICAN
Address: Baltimore, Md.

Date

Dr. Muck Barred From Washingtou

Will Be Arrested If He Comes—Symphony Patrons Clamoring for Their Money.

Bureau of The Baltimore American,
715 Riggs Building,
Washington, December 19.

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is held by officials of the federal government to be a German citizen and as such will be arrested the moment he attempts to enter the District of Columbia.

The contention that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject is not taken seriously at the Department of Justice and Major Raymond Pullman, Chief of Police of Washington, has been so notified.

Dr. Muck has conducted only one concert here. That was before the rPesident issued his proclamation barring aliens from the District of Columbia. Under that proclamation no concert was given as scheduled for December 4. Despite the repeated statements by the Department of Justice that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, and 22 of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are German citizens and cannot come to Washington, subscribers to the Washington series of concerts have not yet had their money refunded for the remainder of the series.

Meantime the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck "is not a citizen of Germany," that "he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

"A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Major Pullman, police superintendent. Major Pullman today stated that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members who are German subjects may come to Washington, unless the Washington Police Department receives a special ruling from the Department of Justice ordering their admission.

John Lord O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General in charge of enforcement of the enemy alien proclamation, reiterated today:

"Dr. Muck is a German subject, and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the District."

The Swiss Legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, secretary of legation, said: "No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Mucks' status."

Persons who sought to have their money refunded for the three remaining concerts of the series of the Boston Symphony have had their requests declined by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, local agent of the orchestra. They were told, they stated, that the remaining concerts would be given.

One subscriber sought to press the matter on the ground that he did not wish to hear the orchestra play without its conductor and 22 of its best musicians, and neither did he desire to contribute to the support of German subjects, should Dr. Muck and his fellow-Germans be admitted to the District.

From HERALD
Address: New York City

Date

CAPITAL BARS DR. MUCK AS CITIZEN OF GERMANY

Herald Bureau,
No. 1,502 H Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C., Wednesday.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra who purchased season tickets for the Washington concerts announced by that organization are seeking to have the balance of their subscriptions refunded since Washington was declared a barred zone to German subjects.

In spite of the protestation of the manager of the orchestra that the much advertised Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is not German, but a citizen of Switzerland, the Chief of Police of Washington refuses to be convinced and insists that neither Dr. Muck nor any one of the twenty-two members of his orchestra who are classed as German subjects will be permitted to enter the District of Columbia.

John L. O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General, also remains unconvinced and insists that the wielder of the baton is a subject of the Kaiser.

"Dr. Muck is a German subject," said Mr. O'Brian, "and as such will be placed under arrest if he enters the District."

The Swiss Legation also declines to be put on record as vouching for the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck and restricts itself to a statement that the matter is being investigated.

CAPITAL READY TO ARREST MUCK

(Continued From Page 1.)

rict. Refund of his money for the remaining three concerts was declined.

Holds on to the Money.

Mrs. Greene said to-day: "No notices regarding the future concerts have been sent out by me. So far as I have been informed the other concerts will be held. The only money I could refund was that sent me from the orchestra's management to be returned for tickets purchased for the concert of December 4, which was not given."

Evidences of Dr. Muck's citizenship has been sent to the Department of Justice. According to "Who's Who in America" for 1916-17, Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, graduated from the Wurzburg Gymnasium and studied at the Universities of Heidelberg and Leipzig.

The sketch, in giving his orchestral connections, states: "Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra (with leave of absence from Berlin), 1906-08; again conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1912." It also states that he was given the "title of 'Koniglicher Preussischer Generalmusikdirektor'" by the Emperor of Germany.

Ellis Writes a Letter.

The letter sent by Mr. Ellis to subscribers, under date of November 29, begins:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck, widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"'Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"'He is not an "enemy alien" of the United States.

"'He is not an official of the German Government.

"'He is not a citizen of Germany.

"'While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.'"

This statement gives the make-up of Dr. Muck's orchestra as follows: Fifty-one American citizens (seventeen native born), twenty-two Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians and two Bohemians."

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.

DEC 19 1917

Managers for Boston Symphony Orchestra Still Deny Dr. Muck Is German.

IS LISTED AS SUCH HERE

Despite repeated statements by the Department of Justice that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, and twenty-two of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are German citizens and cannot come to Washington, subscribers to the Washington series of concerts have been unable to get their money refunded for the remainder of the series.

Meantime the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck "is not a citizen of Germany," that "he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Maj. Pullman, police superintendent. Major Pullman today stated that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members who are German subjects may come to Washington, unless the Washington police department receives a special ruling from the Department of Justice ordering their admission.

Is Subject to Arrest.

John Lord O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of enforcement of the enemy alien proclamation, reiterated today: "Dr. Muck is a German subject and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the District."

The Swiss legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, secretary of legation, stated:

"No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Muck's status."

Persons who sought to have their money refunded for the three remaining concerts of the series of the Boston Symphony have had their requests declined by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, local agent for the orchestra. They were told, they stated, that the remaining concerts would be given.

One subscriber sought to press the matter on the ground that he did not wish to hear the orchestra play without its conductor and twenty-two of its best musicians, and neither did he desire to contribute to the support of German subjects, should Dr. Muck and his fellow Germans be admitted to the District. Refund of his money for the remaining three concerts was declined.

Mrs. Greene Makes Statement.

Mrs. Greene said today: "No notices regarding the future concerts have been sent out by me. So far as I have been informed the other concerts will be held. The only money I could refund was that sent me from the orchestra's management to be returned for tickets purchased for the concert of December 4, which was not given."

Evidence of Dr. Muck's citizenship has been sent to the Department of Justice. According to "Who's Who in America" for 1916-17 Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, graduated from the Wurzburg Gymnasium and studied at the universities of Heidelberg and Leipzig.

The sketch, in giving his orchestral connections, states "conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra (with leave of absence from Berlin), 1906-08; again conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1912." It also states that he was given the "title of 'Koniglich preussischer Gereralmusikdirektor'" by the Emperor of Germany.

Letter to Subscribers.

The letter sent by Mr. Ellis to subscribers, under date of November 29, begins:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck, widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an 'enemy alien' of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German Government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

The statement gives the makeup of Dr. Muck's orchestra as follows: Fifty-one American citizens (seventeen native born), twenty-two Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians and two Bohemians.

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.

Kreisler to Aid Halifax Stricken.

NEW YORK, December 13.—Fritz Kreisler, noted violinist and former officer in the Austrian army, inquired of United States Marshal McCarthy here yesterday whether he might appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert to be given at Boston next Sunday for the benefit of the Halifax sufferers. Marshal McCarthy informed the violinist there was nothing to prevent him from keeping the engagement. Kreisler recently announced his retirement professionally from the concert stage for the duration of the war.

Boston Symphony Concerts

The 20th Symphony program which will be played next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening—with Ernst Schmidt as conductor—will present no soloist, but the three works to be played are of unusual attractiveness and interest. As a tribute to the memory of Claude Debussy, the opening number of the second part of the program will be his Nocturne, entitled "Nuages."

The first number will be Dvorak's Symphony, "From the New World," which has not been heard here in several years, while the closing number will be Gustave Charpentier's charming suite, "Impressions of Italy."

TIMES
Washington, D. C.

HERE ARE MEN WHO MIGHT CONDUCT THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

By J. McB.

The most interesting speculation of the moment, in music circles, is that of the immediate future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The announcement that but one concert need be canceled in the course for Washington brings forth the discussion of a number of possibilities in the limited list of directors who may be eligible to that high office.

No statement has as yet come from Boston, but it would seem that the disbanding of this great orchestra can be averted. It would, indeed, be deplorable should such a thing happen. The music world would suffer, as would nearly the entire hundred of these sterling musicians should they be cast adrift when they have so much to contribute toward the refining elements that must be kept alive today if we are to stay at our best ethically, morally, spiritually.

Foremost among the names of those who could maintain the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its standard of excellence comes that of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the eminent pianist. Gabrilowitsch created a sensation in New York last winter when he appeared there in the new guise of an orchestral leader of exceptional gifts. His musicianship is beyond dispute, and it is also said he has great ambition in this direction.

And where is Henry Hadley, the American conductor? Both as conductor and composer Mr. Hadley has loomed high on the music horizon of the Pacific coast. His opera, "Azora" has just been accepted by Cleofonte Campanini, to be produced by the Chicago Grand Opera Company this season. Mr. Hadley will conduct the premiere. Walter Rothwell, too, is now in New York. He has had signal success with the St. Paul Symphony Orchestra.

Then there is Pierre Monteux, the Parisian, who was in New York last spring directing the fate of New York's Civic Orchestra. Pierre Monteux has an enviable reputation that might be tested. And with France in mind why not send to Paris for Andre Messager? The latter name offers a possible and most enticing solution, and one that is awaited with great interest.

om TELEGRAM
ldress: New York City.
ate DEC 20 1917

WASHINGTON BARS DR. KARL MUCK AS A PRUSSIAN

Chief of Police at Capital Refuses to Allow Him to Lead Orchestra.

ALLEGE MUSICAL CONDUCTOR IS AN AUSTRIAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday.—Subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra who purchased season tickets for the Washington concerts announced by that organization are seeking to have the balance of their subscriptions refunded since Washington was declared a barred zone to German subjects.

In spite of the protestation of the manager of the orchestra that the much advertised Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is not German, but a citizen of Switzerland, the Chief of Police of Washington refuses to be convinced and insists that neither Dr. Muck nor any one of the twenty-two members of his orchestra who are classed as German subjects will be permitted to enter the District of Columbia.

John L. O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General, also remains unconvinced and insists that the wielder of the baton is a subject of the Kaiser.

"Dr. Muck is a German subject," said Mr. O'Brian, "and as such will be placed under arrest if he enters the District."

The Swiss Legation also declines to be put on record as vouching for the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck and restricts itself to a statement that the matter is being investigated.

TELEGRAPH
NEW YORK CITY
DEC 20 1917

Department of Justice at Washington Declines to Believe That Boston Symphony Conductor Is a "Swiss," and Warns Him Not to Enter the District of Columbia.

CLAMOR FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS

Persons Who Bought Tickets for Concert Series Unable to Get Money Back, but Receive Letter Reiterating That Musician Is Citizen of Helvetian Republic, as Was Father.

Washington Bureau,
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., Dec. 19.

Dr. Carl Muck, condctor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is held by officials of the Federal Government to be a German citizen and as such will be arrested the moment he attempts to enter the District of Columbia. The contention that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject is not taken seriously at the Department of Justice, and Major Raymond Pullman, chief of police of Washington, has been so notified.

That Dr. Muck is held by our Government to be a German was developed today when in connection with an investigation into the fact that those in charge of the orchestra concert series in Washington have refused to refund money to subscribers for concerts scheduled for the future.

Gave Only One Concert.

Dr. Muck has conducted only one concert here. That was before the President issued his proclamation barring German aliens from the District of Columbia. Under that proclamation no concert was given as scheduled for December 4. Despite the repeated statements by the Department of Justice that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, and twenty-two of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are German citizens and cannot come to Washington, subscribers to the Washington series of concerts have been unable to get their money refunded for the remainder of the series.

Meantime the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck "is not a citizen of Germany," that "he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father." A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Major Pullman, police superintendent. Major Pullman to-day stated that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members who are German subjects may come to Washington unless the Washington police department receives a special ruling from the Department of Justice ordering their admission.

Will Arrest on Sight.

John Lord O'Bryan, special assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of enforcement of the enemy alien proclamation, reiterated to-day: "Dr. Muck is a German subject and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the District."

The Swiss Legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, secretary of legation, said:

"No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Muck's status."

Persons who sought to have their money refunded for the three remaining concerts of the series of the Boston Symphony have had their requests declined by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, local agent for the orchestra. They were told, they stated, that the remaining concerts would be given.

One subscriber sought to press the matter on the ground that he did not wish to hear the orchestra play without its conductor and twenty-two of its best musicians, and neither did he desire to contribute to the support of German subjects, should Dr. Muck and his fellow-Germans be admitted to the District.

From AMERICAN
Address: Baltimore, Md.

Date

Dr. Muck Barred From Washingtou

Will Be Arrested If He Comes—Symphony Patrons Clamoring for Their Money.

Bureau of The Baltimore American,
715 Riggs Building,
Washington, December 19.

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is held by officials of the federal government to be a German citizen and as such will be arrested the moment he attempts to enter the District of Columbia.

The contention that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject is not taken seriously at the Department of Justice and Major Raymond Pullman, Chief of Police of Washington, has been so notified.

Dr. Muck has conducted only one concert here. That was before the rPesident issued his proclamation barring aliens from the District of Columbia. Under that proclamation no concert was given as scheduled for December 4. Despite the repeated statements by the Department of Justice that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, and 22 of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are German citizens and cannot come to Washington, subscribers to the Washington series of concerts have not yet had their money refunded for the remainder of the series.

Meantime the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck "is not a citizen of Germany," that "he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

"A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Major Pullman, police superintendent. Major Pullman today stated that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members who are German subjects may come to Washington, unless the Washington Police Department receives a special ruling from the Department of Justice ordering their admission.

John Lord O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General in charge of enforcement of the enemy alien proclamation, reiterated today:

"Dr. Muck is a German subject, and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the District."

The Swiss Legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, secretary of legation, said: "No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Mucks' status."

Persons who sought to have their money refunded for the three remaining concerts of the series of the Boston Symphony have had their requests declined by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, local agent of the orchestra. They were told, they stated, that the remaining concerts would be given.

One subscriber sought to press the matter on the ground that he did not wish to hear the orchestra play without its conductor and 22 of its best musicians, and neither did he desire to contribute to the support of German subjects, should Dr. Muck and his fellow-Germans be admitted to the District.

From HERALD
Address: New York City

Date

CAPITAL BARS DR. MUCK AS CITIZEN OF GERMANY

Herald Bureau,
No. 1,502 H Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C., Wednesday.

Subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra who purchased season tickets for the Washington concerts announced by that organization are seeking to have the balance of their subscriptions refunded since Washington was declared a barred zone to German subjects.

In spite of the protestation of the manager of the orchestra that the much advertised Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is not German, but a citizen of Switzerland, the Chief of Police of Washington refuses to be convinced and insists that neither Dr. Muck nor any one of the twenty-two members of his orchestra who are classed as German subjects will be permitted to enter the District of Columbia.

John L. O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General, also remains unconvinced and insists that the wielder of the baton is a subject of the Kaiser.

"Dr. Muck is a German subject," said Mr. O'Brian, "and as such will be placed under arrest if he enters the District."

The Swiss Legation also declines to be put on record as vouching for the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck and restricts itself to a statement that the matter is being investigated.

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.

Managers for Boston Symphony Orchestra Still Deny Dr. Muck Is German,

IS LISTED AS SUCH HERE

Despite repeated statements by the Department of Justice that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor, and twenty-two of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are German citizens and cannot come to Washington, subscribers to the Washington series of concerts have been unable to get their money refunded for the remainder of the series.

Meantime the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck "is not a citizen of Germany," that "he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Maj. Pullman, police superintendent. Major Pullman today stated that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members who are German subjects may come to Washington, unless the Washington police department receives a special ruling from the Department of Justice ordering their admission.

Is Subject to Arrest.

John Lord O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of enforcement of the enemy alien proclamation, reiterated today: "Dr. Muck is a German subject and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the District."

The Swiss legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject. Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, secretary of legation, stated: "No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Muck's status."

Persons who sought to have their money refunded for the three remaining concerts of the series of the Boston Symphony have had their requests declined by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, local agent for the orchestra. They were told, they stated, that the remaining concerts would be given.

One subscriber sought to press the matter on the ground that he did not wish to hear the orchestra play without its conductor and twenty-two of its best musicians, and neither did he desire to contribute to the support of German subjects, should Dr. Muck and his fellow Germans be admitted to the District. Refund of his money for the remaining three concerts was declined.

Mrs. Greene Makes Statement.

Mrs. Greene said today: "No notices regarding the future concerts have been sent out by me. So far as I have been informed the other concerts will be held. The only money I could refund was that sent me from the orchestra's management to be returned for tickets purchased for the concert of December 4, which was not given."

Evidence of Dr. Muck's citizenship has been sent to the Department of Justice. According to "Who's Who in America" for 1916-17 Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, graduated from the Wurzburg Gymnasium and studied at the universities of Heidelberg and Leipzig.

The sketch, in giving his orchestral connections, states "conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra (with leave of absence from Berlin), 1906-08; again conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1912." It also states that he was given the "title of 'Koniglich preussischer Gereralmusikdirektor'" by the Emperor of Germany.

Letter to Subscribers.

The letter sent by Mr. Ellis to subscribers, under date of November 29, begins:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck, widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an 'enemy alien' of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German Government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

The statement gives the makeup of Dr. Muck's orchestra as follows: Fifty-one American citizens (seventeen native born), twenty-two Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians and two Bohemians.

EVENING STAR
Washington, D. C.

Kreisler to Aid Halifax Stricken.

NEW YORK, December 13.—Fritz Kreisler, noted violinist and former officer in the Austrian army, inquired of United States Marshal McCarthy here yesterday whether he might appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert to be given at Boston next Sunday for the benefit of the Halifax sufferers. Marshal McCarthy informed the violinist there was nothing to prevent him from keeping the engagement. Kreisler recently announced his retirement professionally from the concert stage for the duration of the war.

TIMES
Washington, D. C.

HERE ARE MEN WHO MIGHT CONDUCT THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

By J. McB.

The most interesting speculation of the moment, in music circles, is that of the immediate future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The announcement that but one concert need be canceled in the course for Washington brings forth the discussion of a number of possibilities in the limited list of directors who may be eligible to that high office.

No statement has as yet come from Boston, but it would seem that the disbanding of this great orchestra can be averted. It would, indeed, be deplorable should such a thing happen. The music world would suffer, as would nearly the entire hundred of these sterling musicians should they be cast adrift when they have so much to contribute toward the refining elements that must be kept alive today if we are to stay at our best ethically, morally, spiritually.

Foremost among the names of those who could maintain the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its standard of excellence comes that of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the eminent pianist. Gabrilowitsch created a sensation in New York last winter when he appeared there in the new guise of an orchestral leader of exceptional gifts. His musicianship is beyond dispute, and it is also said he has great ambition in this direction.

And where is Henry Hadley, the American conductor? Both as conductor and composer Mr. Hadley has loomed high on the music horizon of the Pacific coast. His opera, "Azora" has just been accepted by Cleofonte Campanini, to be produced by the Chicago Grand Opera Company this season. Mr. Hadley will conduct the premiere. Walter Rothwell, too, is now in New York. He has had signal success with the St. Paul Symphony Orchestra.

Then there is Pierre Monteux, the Parisian, who was in New York last spring directing the fate of New York's Civic Orchestra. Pierre Monteux has an enviable reputation that might be tested. And with France in mind why not send to Paris for Andre Messager? The latter name offers a possible and most enticing solution, and one that is awaited with great interest.

From TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
Date DEC 20 1917

WASHINGTON BARS DR. KARL MUCK AS A PRUSSIAN

Chief of Police at Capital Refuses to Allow Him to Lead Orchestra.

ALLEGE MUSICAL CONDUCTOR IS AN AUSTRIAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday.—Subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra who purchased season tickets for the Washington concerts announced by that organization are seeking to have the balance of their subscriptions refunded since Washington was declared a barred zone to German subjects.

In spite of the protestation of the manager of the orchestra that the much advertised Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor, is not German, but a citizen of Switzerland, the Chief of Police of Washington refuses to be convinced and insists that neither Dr. Muck nor any one of the twenty-two members of his orchestra who are classed as German subjects will be permitted to enter the District of Columbia.

John L. O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General, also remains unconvinced and insists that the wielder of the baton is a subject of the Kaiser.

"Dr. Muck is a German subject," said Mr. O'Brian, "and as such will be placed under arrest if he enters the District."

The Swiss Legation also declines to be put on record as vouching for the Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck and restricts itself to a statement that the matter is being investigated.

CAPITAL READY TO ARREST MUCK

(Continued From Page 1.)

rict. Refund of his money for the remaining three concerts was declined.

Holds on to the Money.

Mrs. Greene said to-day: "No notices regarding the future concerts have been sent out by me. So far as I have been informed the other concerts will be held. The only money I could refund was that sent me from the orchestra's management to be returned for tickets purchased for the concert of December 4, which was not given."

Evidences of Dr. Muck's citizenship has been sent to the Department of Justice. According to "Who's Who in America" for 1916-17, Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, graduated from the Wurzburg Gymnasium and studied at the Universities of Heidelberg and Leipzig.

The sketch, in giving his orchestral connections, states: "Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra (with leave of absence from Berlin), 1906-08; again conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1912." It also states that he was given the "title of 'Koniglicher Preussischer Generalmusikdirektor'" by the Emperor of Germany.

Ellis Writes a Letter.

The letter sent by Mr. Ellis to subscribers, under date of November 29, begins:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr. Karl Muck, widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by any one who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"'Dr. Muck is not a Prussian.

"'He is not an "enemy alien" of the United States.

"'He is not an official of the German Government.

"'He is not a citizen of Germany.

"'While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.'"

This statement gives the make-up of Dr. Muck's orchestra as follows: Fifty-one American citizens (seventeen native born), twenty-two Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians and two Bohemians."

as he rolled back and forth over the slippery treacherous roads. Soaked to the skin with the wind aiding his high speed in making the task uncomfortable, he steadily plugged along, at times reaching a speed of 52 miles an hour.

"I regard the record as a high tribute to the non-skid qualities and all-'round excellence of the Firestone tires with which my machine was equipped," said Burns after his victory. "At such high speed over those slimy roads a skid would have been fatal to the record, if not to myself. But the Firestone gripped the road securely and gave me all the confidence in the world to 'let 'er out' and tuck the championship safely away."

OBSTACLES NO BAR

REDUCTION RATIO

12x

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
2.5 mm 1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
2.0 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
1.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
4.5 mm 1234567890

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
DEC 16 1917

The Pernicious Influence of German Music in America

By Francis Grierson

AT LAST a reaction has set in against music made in Germany and performed in America by Teutonic artists and singers, who use German songs and compositions to weave a musical spell around all Americans who are naive enough to patronize them, using at the same time the slogan that art has no nationality.

Never was a dangerous lie wrapped in such a tissue of cheap sentimentality!

German music in America at this juncture exerts an influence just as potent as German propaganda uttered in English, and perhaps even more dangerous, for it is impossible to listen for two hours to German music without in some subtle way coming under its psychological influence.

Not only is this true, but for more than fifty years musical directors from the Teutonic countries have been sent here as musical missionaries to convert Americans to the belief that the only music worth hearing is German and Austrian.

Nor is this all. Since the beginning of the war the Prussians and the Austrians have maintained a system of musical propaganda and espionage in America the like of which has surpassed anything ever dreamed of by the most astute political propagandist up to the present. These spies have been sent here with special and peculiar missions. Many of them are women, some are men. They are of all ages. For Teuton psychology in relation to this war is far-reaching, profoundly subtle and universal.

Nothing escapes it. It embraces all forms of art, science, politics and philosophy. Our universities are full of professors who teach the superiority of German philosophy, and our colleges and academies employ German teachers to instill into the minds of the young the idea that German music is superior to any.

I had my eyes opened to the kind of teaching permitted when I gave a course of lectures at the universities of Illinois and Wisconsin last year. And all over the country I found societies and clubs under the domination of the German musical incubus.

Few Americans have given serious thought to the deadly effects produced by the psychological influence of German singers, pianists, violinists and conductors since the beginning of the war. Every German singer who stands before an audience and sings a German song utters a subtle plea for the unspeakable Hun.

The sentiments aroused by such a singer thrill the listeners with musical emotions that draw them closer to the people who seek the life blood of civilized nations, and every performer on the piano or violin who makes a specialty of German music is doing his best to divert practical sympathy to our sworn enemies.

What would become of the American artist who would even attempt to sing or execute American songs in Berlin or Vienna at this juncture? Such a singer would be mobbed and probably killed. Not only are thousands of Teuton enemies permitted to exert a potent influence on the American public during the gravest crisis in our history, but they are permitted to draw huge sums from the American public to be spent in Germany and Austria to help on the war against America.

The scandal caused by the flat refusal of the good Doctor Muck to perform the "Star Spangled Banner" has brought home to some Americans a realization of the danger we are in.

It makes no difference now whether a composer has been dead fifty or a hundred years; the fact remains that the music, being typically German, is enough to suggest to the listener a trend of sympathy toward Germany. Such music thus becomes a traitorous influence that should be stamped out by the most drastic and ruthless methods.

Wagner prepared conditions for this war as much as any political writer or militant historian. He is violently national. His musical conceptions are grossly and aggressively Teutonic. In Bayreuth I heard German officers declare that listening to his operas always inspired them with an invincible courage for war and conquest.

People who prate about Wagner being neutral in music are irresponsible sentimentalists whose opinions are without weight. I say it is psychologically impossible to listen to the music of our worst enemies and not be drawn into the weaving way of their musical spells.

Some things that were moral before the war are now immoral and impossible in the light of recent events. Only those with the instinct of the sentimental pacifist and the moral slacker will attend German performances.

People who patronize German performances today should have their names made public, so that American patriots who love their country could know who is who and what is what.

POST
Washington, D. C.
DEC 20 1917

TRYING TO PROVE DR. MUCK IS A SWISS

Mrs. Greene Hopes He May Come Here With Boston Symphony.

A movement to establish the right of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play in this city has begun. Despite the reiteration of the Department of Justice that Dr. Muck as an enemy alien is liable to arrest should he come to Washington, his friends are confident they will be able to establish that he is a Swiss citizen and the son of a Swiss citizen.

Leading the cause for the conductor is C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra.

The Swiss legation, through Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, secretary, yesterday refused to comment on the claim of Dr. Muck's friends. "No official statement has been made by the legation regarding Dr. Muck's nationality," was all Dr. Hubscher would say.

Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who booked the Boston Symphony, yesterday said:

"No notices regarding the future concerts have been sent out by me. So far as I have been informed the other concerts will be held. The only money I could refund was that sent me from the orchestra's management to be returned for tickets purchased for the concert of December 4, which was not given."

Paper Cutting Bureau in the World
LIFE
Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE second concert of the Boston Symphony Society went without the slightest hitch though special permission had to be secured from the Department of Justice to make it possible to move the twenty-three aliens in the band from Boston to New York, and an additional one from local authorities to move them from Manhattan to Brooklyn. Dr. Muck scarcely has reached the point of the Manhattan concerts where the soloist is unknown, so Nellie Melba sang two Mozart arias—the "Lusinghieri Zefferetti" from the opera "Idomeneo" and "Voi che sapete," Cherubino's air in the second act of "Nozze di Figaro"—and Lia's big recitative and air from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue." Age does not dim the glory of the old lady's voice, though there are traces of roughness in that formerly smoothest of coloraturas and she sang best after some wandering from the pitch in her first air. But how well she knows how to sing Mozart! There is no distortion of phase, or unevenness of tempo, or ripping of the rhythm. Melba sings a Mozart air as the composer wrote it and sufficient unto Mozart is Mozart. The purely orchestral numbers included the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, the "Tannhaeuser" overture, and the "Grand Fête" from Berlioz's symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." There is a man now living in Switzerland, Romain Rolland, who would have loved the care and attention which marked Dr. Muck's reading of Berlioz and who would have realized once more how great a composer Berlioz would be held to-day were there more conductors of Dr. Muck's calibre. It is because Berlioz is butchered that he is not dear to the public. The overture was a genuine overture under Dr. Muck's direction. And how he vitalized the Venusberg section and how every solo instrument in the band answered his slightest direction! Of the symphony, why speak? We only hear Beethoven in all his glory when this band comes from Boston to afford us a musical holiday.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
PUBLIC Ledger
Philadelphia, Pa.
DEC 17 1917

DOCTOR MUCK AIDS HALIFAX

Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Melba and Kreisler Yields $10,000

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck; Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years for the benefit of the sufferers from the Halifax disaster. Prices of tickets ran from $1 to $5 and the house was entirely sold out in seven hours after the opening of the sale.

More than $5000 in mail orders was returned and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except the actual newspaper advertising, Major H. L. Higginson having contributed Symphony Hall and its attaches. The concert netted considerably more than $10,000.

From EVENING MAIL
Address: New York City
Date DEC 17 1917

DR. MUCK CONDUCTS AT BENEFIT FOR HALIFAX

Boston, Dec. 17.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Kark Muck, the conductor; Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, contributing their services, gave a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund yesterday.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau
From EVENING TELEGRAM
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
Date

KARL MUCK'S CONCERT AT CHICAGO CANCELLED

Representative of Orchestra Asks That Appearance in Windy City Be Called Off.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here February 3, it was announced today by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear.

A representative of the orchestra, who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
Date DEC 23 1917

MUCK WILL SKIP CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here on Feb. 3, it was announced to-day. A representative of the orchestra who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

From EAGLE
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
DEC 16 1917
Date

Although it was not so announced upon the program of the Boston Symphony Society, nor even in the usually exact and comprehensive notes of Philip Hale, the new orchestration of "The Star-Spangled Banner," which the band played on its last visit, was made by Nahan Franko expressly at the desire of Dr. Muck. The other evening Franko walked into the press room of the Opera House murmuring "P. O. F." (meaning Poor Old Franko), and complaining that he had not received credit for his work. He would, had we known it, and we are glad at this time to make record of the fact.

In this connection it is advisable to call attention to the tempo mark of the National Anthem. It is marked "maestoso con spirito," that is slowly, but with spirit." Accordingly it should be played in a slow, dignified manner, but with such spirit that it may not seem to be dragged. If the "con spirito" is not there, it will sound twice as slow and will drag beyond endurance.

EVENING SUN
New York City
DEC 20 1917

CAPITAL BARS DR. MUCK AND BOSTON SYMPHONY

Orchestra Will Not Be Permitted to Play in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Dr. Karl Muck and twenty-two members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra troupe, advertised to give a series of concerts here, have been stopped by agents of the Department of Justice and local police. Their status is said to be that of German citizens and will remain as such until they are able to prove otherwise.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, has sent letters to subscribers telling them that Dr. Muck is not a German citizen, but that his father had come from Switzerland.

Major Pullman, superintendent of police, has received a copy of this letter, but he said neither Dr. Muck nor the members of his orchestra who are German citizens would be allowed to perform in Washington unless the Department of Justice gave their consent.

John Lord O'Brian, assistant to the Attorney-General, having charge of the alien enemy proclamation, said today that Dr. Muck was a German citizen and would be subject to arrest if he entered the District.

The Swiss Legation would not support Dr. Muck in his declaration that he was a citizen of Switzerland. The legation is now investigating the matter.

TIMES
New York City

WON'T LIFT BAN ON MUCK.

Washington Police Firm in Refusal to Admit German Musicians.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Agents of the Department of Justice and the local police have refused to lift the ban on Dr. Karl Muck and twenty-two members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are scheduled to give a series of concerts here. They are listed as German citizens and will remain catalogued as such until proof is given to the contrary, the officials say.

Meantime the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck "is not a citizen of Germany," but "a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Major Pullman, Police Superintendent. Major Pullman today said that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members who were German subjects would be allowed to come to Washington, unless the Washington Police Department received a special ruling from the Department of Justice ordering their admission.

John Lord O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of the enforcement of the alien enemy proclamation, said today:

"Dr. Muck is a German subject, and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the District."

The Swiss Legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck was a Swiss citizen. Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, Secretary of Legation, said: "No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Muck's status."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World
From EVENING TELEGRAM
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
DEC 17 1917

TIMES
New York City
DEC 23 1917

Muck Cancels Chicago Engagement.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here on Feb. 3, it was announced today by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear. A representative of the orchestra, who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

NET $10,000 FOR HALIFAX IN BOSTON SUNDAY CONCERT

Melba, Kreisler on Program Including Dr. Muck Directing Symphony Orchestra.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 17.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck; Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler united yesterday in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years, for the benefit of the sufferers in the Halifax disaster. Prices of tickets ran from $1 to $5 dollars, and the house was sold out in seven hours after the opening of the sale. Over $5,000 in mail orders were returned and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except the advertising, Major H. L. Higginson having contrib-

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
DEC 23 1917

Dr. Muck Cancels Concert Scheduled for Chicago

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here on February 3, it was announced to-day by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear.

A representative of the orchestra, who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

The Pernicious Influence of German Music in America

By Francis Grierson

AT LAST a reaction has set in against music made in Germany and performed in America by Teutonic artists and singers, who use German songs and compositions to weave a musical spell around all Americans who are naive enough to patronize them, using at the same time the slogan that art has no nationality.

Never was a dangerous lie wrapped in such a tissue of cheap sentimentality!

German music in America at this juncture exerts an influence just as potent as German propaganda uttered in English, and perhaps even more dangerous, for it is impossible to listen for two hours to German music without in some subtle way coming under its psychological influence.

Not only is this true, but for more than fifty years musical directors from the Teutonic countries have been sent here as musical missionaries to convert Americans to the belief that the only music worth hearing is German and Austrian.

Nor is this all. Since the beginning of the war the Prussians and the Austrians have maintained a system of musical propaganda and espionage in America the like of which has surpassed anything ever dreamed of by the most astute political propagandist up to the present. These spies have been sent here with special and peculiar missions. Many of them are women, some are men. They are of all ages. For Teuton psychology in relation to this war is far-reaching, profoundly subtle and universal.

Nothing escapes it. It embraces all forms of art, science, politics and philosophy. Our universities are full of professors who teach the superiority of German philosophy, and our colleges and academies employ German teachers to instill into the minds of the young the idea that German music is superior to any.

I had my eyes opened to the kind of teaching permitted when I gave a course of lectures at the universities of Illinois and Wisconsin last year. And all over the country I found societies and clubs under the domination of the German musical incubus.

Few Americans have given serious thought to the deadly effects produced by the psychological influence of German singers, pianists, violinists and conductors since the beginning of the war. Every German singer who stands before an audience and sings a German song utters a subtle plea for the unspeakable Hun.

The sentiments aroused by such a singer thrill the listeners with musical emotions that draw them closer to the people who seek the life blood of civilized nations, and every performer on the piano or violin who makes a specialty of German music is doing his best to divert practical sympathy to our sworn enemies.

What would become of the American artist who would even attempt to sing or execute American songs in Berlin or Vienna at this juncture? Such a singer would be mobbed and probably killed. Not only are thousands of Teuton enemies permitted to exert a potent influence on the American public during the gravest crisis in our history, but they are permitted to draw huge sums from the American public to be spent in Germany and Austria to help on the war against America.

The scandal caused by the flat refusal of the good Doctor Muck to perform the "Star Spangled Banner" has brought home to some Americans a realization of the danger we are in.

It makes no difference now whether a composer has been dead fifty or a hundred years; the fact remains that the music, being typically German, is enough to suggest to the listener a trend of sympathy toward Germany. Such music thus becomes a traitorous influence that should be stamped out by the most drastic and ruthless methods.

Wagner prepared conditions for this war as much as any political writer or militant historian. He is violently national. His musical conceptions are grossly and aggressively Teutonic. In Bayreuth I heard German officers declare that listening to his operas always inspired them with an invincible courage for war and conquest.

People who prate about Wagner being neutral in music are irresponsible sentimentalists whose opinions are without weight. I say it is psychologically impossible to listen to the music of our worst enemies and not be drawn into the weaving way of their musical spells.

Some things that were moral before the war are now immoral and impossible in the light of recent events. Only those with the instinct of the sentimental pacifist and the moral slacker will attend German performances.

People who patronize German performances today should have their names made public, so that American patriots who love their country could know who is who and what is what.

POST

s: Washington, D. C.

TRYING TO PROVE DR. MUCK IS A SWISS

Mrs. Greene Hopes He May Come Here With Boston Symphony.

A movement to establish the right of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play in this city has begun. Despite the reiteration of the Department of Justice that Dr. Muck as an enemy alien is liable to arrest should he come to Washington, his friends are confident they will be able to establish that he is a Swiss citizen and the son of a Swiss citizen.

Leading the cause for the conductor is C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra.

The Swiss legation, through Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, secretary, yesterday refused to comment on the claim of Dr. Muck's friends. "No official statement has been made by the legation regarding Dr. Muck's nationality," was all Dr. Hubscher would say.

Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, who booked the Boston Symphony, yesterday said:

"No notices regarding the future concerts have been sent out by me. So far as I have been informed the other concerts will be held. The only money I could refund was that sent me from the orchestra's management to be returned for tickets purchased for the concert of December 4, which was not given."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

PUBLIC Ledger

om

dress Philadelphia, Pa.

te

DOCTOR MUCK AIDS HALIFAX

Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Melba and Kreisler Yields $10,000

Special Telegram to Public Ledger

BOSTON, Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck; Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years for the benefit of the sufferers from the Halifax disaster. Prices of tickets ran from $1 to $5 and the house was entirely sold out in seven hours after the opening of the sale.

More than $5000 in mail orders was returned and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except the actual newspaper advertising, Major H. L. Higginson having contributed Symphony Hall and its attaches.

The concert netted considerably more than $10,000.

Newspaper Cutting

From EAGLE

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date

Although it was not so announced upon the program of the Boston Symphony Society, nor even in the usually exact and comprehensive notes of Philip Hale, the new orchestration of "The Star-Spangled Banner," which the band played on its last visit, was made by Nahan Franko expressly at the desire of Dr. Muck. The other evening Franko walked into the press room of the Opera House murmuring "P. O. F." (meaning Poor Old Franko), and complaining that he had not received credit for his work. He would, had we known it, and we are glad at this time to make record of the fact.

In this connection it is advisable to call attention to the tempo mark of the National Anthem. It is marked "maestoso con spirito," that is slowly, but with spirit." Accordingly it should be played in a slow, dignified manner, but with such spirit that it may not seem to be dragged. If the "con spirito" is not there, it will sound twice as slow and will drag beyond endurance.

LIFE

ooklyn, N. Y.

ss

THE second concert of the Boston Symphony Society went without the slightest hitch though special permission had to be secured from the Department of Justice to make it possible to move the twenty-three aliens in the band from Boston to New York, and an additional one from local authorities to move them from Manhattan to Brooklyn. Dr. Muck scarcely has reached the point of the Manhattan concerts where the soloist is unknown, so Nellie Melba sang two Mozart arias—the "Lusinghieri Zefferetti" from the opera "Idomeneo" and "Voi che sapete," Cherubino's air in the second act of "Nozze di Figaro"—and Lia's big recitative and air from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue." Age does not dim the glory of the old lady's voice, though there are traces of roughness in that formerly smoothest of coloraturas and she sang best after some wandering from the pitch in her first air. But how well she knows how to sing Mozart! There is no distortion of phase, or unevenness of tempo, or ripping of the rhythm. Melba sings a Mozart air as the composer wrote it and sufficient unto Mozart is Mozart. The purely orchestral numbers included the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, the "Tannhaeuser" overture, and the "Grand Fête" from Berlioz's symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." There is a man now living in Switzerland, Romain Rolland, who would have loved the care and attention which marked Dr. Muck's reading of Berlioz and who would have realized once more how great a composer Berlioz would be held to-day were there more conductors of Dr. Muck's calibre. It is because Berlioz is butchered that he is not dear to the public. The overture was a genuine overture under Dr. Muck's direction. And how he vitalized the Venusberg section and how every solo instrument in the band answered his slightest direction! Of the symphony, why speak? We only hear Beethoven in all his glory when this band comes from Boston to afford us a musical holiday.

From EVENING MAIL

Address: New York City

Date

DR. MUCK CONDUCTS AT BENEFIT FOR HALIFAX

Boston, Dec. 17.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Kark Muck, the conductor; Mme. Melba and Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, contributing their services, gave a concert for the benefit of the Halifax relief fund yesterday.

Newspaper Cutting Bureau

om EVENING TELEGRAM

ldress: Philadelphia, Pa.

te

KARL MUCK'S CONCERT AT CHICAGO CANCELLED

Representative of Orchestra Asks That Appearance in Windy City Be Called Off.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here February 3, it was announced today by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear.

A representative of the orchestra, who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

om WORLD

ddress: New York City

ate DEC 23 1917

MUCK WILL SKIP CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here on Feb. 3, it was announced to-day. A representative of the orchestra who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

:om TRIBUNE

ddress: New York City

DEC 23 1917

ate

Dr. Muck Cancels Concert Scheduled for Chicago

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here on February 3, it was announced to-day by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear.

A representative of the orchestra, who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

VENING SUN

New York City

DEC 20 1917

CAPITAL BARS DR. MUCK AND BOSTON SYMPHONY

Orchestra Will Not Be Permitted to Play in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Dr. Karl Muck and twenty-two members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra troupe, advertised to give a series of concerts here, have been stopped by agents of the Department of Justice and local police. Their status is said to be that of German citizens and will remain as such until they are able to prove otherwise.

C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, has sent letters to subscribers telling them that Dr. Muck is not a German citizen, but that his father had come from Switzerland.

Major Pullman, superintendent of police, has received a copy of this letter, but he said neither Dr. Muck nor the members of his orchestra who are German citizens would be allowed to perform in Washington unless the Department of Justice gave their consent.

John Lord O'Brian, assistant to the Attorney General, having charge of the alien enemy proclamation, said today that Dr. Muck was a German citizen and would be subject to arrest if he entered the District.

The Swiss Legation would not support Dr. Muck in his declaration that he was a citizen of Switzerland. The legation is now investigating the matter.

TIMES

s: New York City

WON'T LIFT BAN ON MUCK.

Washington Police Firm in Refusal to Admit German Musicians.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Agents of the Department of Justice and the local police have refused to lift the ban on Dr. Karl Muck and twenty-two members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are scheduled to give a series of concerts here. They are listed as German citizens and will remain catalogued as such until proof is given to the contrary, the officials say.

Meantime the subscribers have received a letter from C. A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, stating that Dr. Muck "is not a citizen of Germany," but "a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father."

A copy of this letter has been placed in the hands of Major Pullman, Police Superintendent. Major Pullman today said that neither Dr. Muck nor his orchestra members who were German subjects would be allowed to come to Washington, unless the Washington Police Department received a special ruling from the Department of Justice ordering their admission.

John Lord O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General, in charge of the enforcement of the alien enemy proclamation, said today:

"Dr. Muck is a German subject, and as such would be placed under arrest if he entered the District."

The Swiss Legation declined to stand sponsor for the claim that Dr. Muck was a Swiss citizen. Dr. Carl Paul Hubscher, Secretary of Legation, said: "No official statement has been made by the legation concerning the citizenship of Dr. Muck. We are now investigating the matter. At present we are not prepared to answer questions regarding Dr. Muck's status."

Newspaper Cutting Bureau in the World

n EVENING TELEGRAM

ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

TIMES

: New York City

DEC 23 1917

Muck Cancels Chicago Engagement.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here on Feb. 3, it was announced today by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear. A representative of the orchestra, who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

NET $10,000 FOR HALIFAX IN BOSTON SUNDAY CONCERT

Melba, Kreisler on Program Including Dr. Muck Directing Symphony Orchestra.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 17.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck; Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler united yesterday in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years, for the benefit of the sufferers in the Halifax disaster. Prices of tickets ran from $1 to $5 dollars, and the house was sold out in seven hours after the opening of the sale. Over $5,000 in mail orders were returned and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except the advertising, Major H. L. Higginson having contrib-

Transcript Mar 9, 1918

20

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

FAMILIAR MUSIC IN GLORIFIED PERFORMANCE

A Programme That Belied Anticipation with Conductor and Orchestra in High Mettle—New Voice to Goldmark's Overture to "Sakuntala," and Sheer Eloquence with Beethoven's Second Symphony—Withal, a Concerto for 'Cello

WHAT seemed a routine and unpromising programme turned yesterday afternoon, at Symphony Hall into an exceptionally pleasurable and interesting concert. Dr. Muck proposed to his hearers, who seem to be equally numerous, this season, whatever the pieces or the "assisting artist," Goldmark's overture to the ancient Hindu play, "Sakuntala"; Lalo's concerto for violoncello and orchestra with Mr. Malkin to play the solo part; and the second symphony, in D major, of Beethoven. Anticipation, admittedly a little impatient and scoffing, might reckon the overture hackneyed and cloying: the symphony, early and none too characteristic work of mind, heart and hand still groping out the way that was to lead into the fervors and fulfilment of the succeeding "Eroica." As to the concerto, was it not for the monotonous violoncello, while the virtuoso to play it, sits weekly in the orchestra from October to May? Evidently, went this preliminary speculation, Dr. Muck was engrossed with preparation for the impending performance at a choral concert of Bach's Passion Music according to Matthew. Not without reason he was taking the easiest way with an intervening pair of Symphony Concerts. To our seats then, but in mood unexpectant and resigned.

Now, it is true that a concerto for violoncello is—a concerto for violoncello—and that no one has yet bestowed upon the world and the 'cellists therein music of genius in that species. It is also true that the overture to "Sakuntala" has been a familiar item for twenty-five years in orchestral repertories; and that, for blessing or for bane, Beethoven's second symphony enjoys the right to biennial repetition in most series of symphony concerts, though it be not like the third, fifth, seventh, or even the fourth or the eighth. What, then, altered dull anticipation of all three pieces into lively pleasure from them? Nothing else than the quality of the performance. Though Dr. Muck may be preparing an unusually exacting restoration of the Passion Music, not for one afternoon will he take his ease at a Symphony Concert or for one morning in the rehearsals thereof. Before orchestra and conductor had proceeded a hundred measures into Goldmark's overture, it was clear that they were on their mettle. Lalo's concerto does excel many another for the violoncello in intrinsic invention, imagination, interest—and the more for the voice that conductor, orchestra and "soloist" yesterday found for it. As for the symphony, all concerned made it sound as of Beethoven with wings already outspread for characteristic and sustained flight. In fine, to come to the concert to scoff was to depart from it to praise. Seldom, on a Friday afternoon, has applause been heartier.

In the overture, Dr. Muck excelled even his wonted discernment and discrimination in a choice of pace that unfolded Goldmark's long, sinuous, ascendant, melodic line, that never languished, that never clouded; in the distribution of emphases, contrasts, color; in the moulding of phrases into far foreseen and sensitively graduated course; in the maintenance of the sensuous voice and glamor of the music, yet so that it never thickened or cloyed. After all, Goldmark is oftener eloquent than he is lush. In turn, the orchestra played with the consummate beauty of tone that on its high days every choir and each separate voice within it, may summon; with unfailing ear for the euphonies of instrument with instrument, with flow of edgeless and perfectly jointured phrase, with almost unerring sensibility of tonal color, with understanding and response for the whole overture as well as for the particular part and page upon the several desks. The outcome was a performance that glowed with the sensuous beauty of Goldmark's melody, with the richness of his harmonic dress, with the pulsing warmth of his instrumental coloring, with the suggestion of ancient oriental legend sung in exotic and enhancing tones. Seldom has Goldmark's overture sounded upon the ear as so velvet-like a music; seldom has it seemed of such finely woven strands like the interlacings of oriental pattern, carved, embroidered, painted; seldom has it reflected such softly golden lustres; or seemed so illusively the speech of piteous, low-spoken, semi-static Indian tale. The spell of poetry flowed out of composer's and orchestra's tones. The listener heard, fascinated, illuded, loth to dispel the magic by the applause that he knew was just reward. The coarse-fingered, the over-luscious, the too insistently oriental Goldmark has vanished out of the music. The overture had become transformed in the poetizing imagination of him who led it, in the response thereto of those who played it.

So, again, with Beethoven's second symphony. Not upon the high fervors of the "Eroica," the passionate progress of the fifth, the glow and glint of the seventh, the epical excitements of the ninth, has Dr. Muck lavished more penetrating care, more imaginative pains. Beethoven, hearing, perchance, from the Elysian Fields and remembering this music of his youth, must have rejoiced, for example, in the lightness of tone, pace, rhythm, that wove the pattern of his Finale as in glint upon the air. Here was the fleetness, the clearness, the elasticity with which Dr. Muck and the orchestra are wont to play the final movements of eighteenth-century symphonies doing like office to almost as light-footed bright-winged a music and doing it with a precision that, as it never slipped, so it never hardened. Rarely has the band touched such plasticity of tone as that with which it kept Scherzo and Finale in perpetual play, tossing ornament out of them, catching ornament back into them; now shaping a phrase as through string-choir or wood-winds were a single singing voice; again whipping up and down the music with that zest of tonal energy and tonal progress already alert and goading in Beethoven. Throughout the symphony leapt bright to the ear. A conductor in his fifties, a middle-aged orchestra were suffusing it with the young imagination of a Beethoven beginning his thirties.

As thrilling to hear was the slow movement. Within easy memory conductor and orchestra have played the first symphony, the Haydnish-Mozartean symphony, of Beethoven, written when he was studying the best models. Therein the slow movement accords with the conventions; herein it is the Beethoven of pure instrumental song upspringing from his own invention, conducted and diversified by his own imagination, controlled by his own clear mind, manipulated by his own sure hand. He begins veritable Beethovenish melody in firm contours and songful depth, rich-textured, luminous. He goes on, and conductor and orchestra with him, to lead it into various transformations, to deck it with new ornaments, to make play with suggestion from it. He wrote, they spoke in the pure loveliness of musical sound when fresh fancy and warm impulse wing and diversify it. Beethoven himself may hardly have imagined such euphonies, such iridescence.

And young energy and young power similarly spoke out of the first movement. Grave the beginning, yet irrepressibly songful; but only for a relative moment before a fine young zest possesses the music. The conductor, divining his pace, sharpening his rhythms, inflecting the imitative passages, speeding or staying long progressions, lightly modulating here and there, made the music sound like sheer, sure, sunny improvisation—of the Beethoven who not many years after was to achieve his first Allegros of the passionate tumults, of the manifold and commanding voice. How various, how vigorous it already is stood disclosed in Dr. Muck's eloquence. What many another conductor leaves asmouldering in this second symphony of Beethoven he blows into fire. The connoisseurs of orchestral performance marvelled yesterday at the imagination, the intuition, the adeptness of some of his strokes. The most innocent of listeners must have felt in sum the impact upon ear and fancy of music so opened and vivified. Even a youthful symphony may make what a cliché of reviewing calls a "memorable" afternoon.

Lalo's concerto for violoncello excels many another in that the composer writes neither academically, nor perfunctorily, nor yet displayfully for the solo instrument. Rather, he treats it as the outstanding voice in a symphonic piece that has something to say in its own right and its own manner. The listener hears with surprise the full-throated, energetic, broad measured beginning to be reassured only when the violoncello sounds in deep tone and stately progress. He is wont to hear it as solo instrument in music that tempts it to sugary song or clumsy capering. Instead, in this first movement of Lalo's concerto, he hears it at once vigorous and sonorous, elastic yet of sustained melody and march. It speaks with dignity, with warmth, with a becoming brevity. The music makes no play with the feat superfluous, with the feat distorting. As large-voiced as it began the movement ends. The ensuing intermezzo shows no less discriminating thought for the music. Intrinsically it remains interesting, whether the violoncello unfolds its more sentimental song; whether it guides across the tonal tapestry a lighter thread upon which the orchestra may hang inflection or ornament. There is halo for the slow song! there is setting for the livelier melody. Even in the Finale, the violoncello has not to caper creaking. There is no super-abundance of "passage-work." The solo instrument still sings, but whereas it has been stately musing, gently gay, now it may weave its brighter tones into the pattern the orchestra, in the returns of the rondo, is fashioning for it. To the end a measure of symphonic interest exhales from the piece. Mr. Malkin could hardly have chosen a concerto to better advantage, since his tone lacks neither lightness nor depth, neither suavity nor color. He can play songfully, ornately, euphoniously; and he understood yesterday the limpidity, the continence, the elegance of Lalo's music.

H. T. P.

RATHSKELLER

THE HOUSE OF GOOD CHEER

APPETIZING SPECIALS

BUSINESS MEN'S LUNCH AT NOON

DANCING 7 to 11 P. M.

AMERICAN HOUSE

REOPENED — REFURNISHED

WS(D) mh 6

Transcript Nov 27, 1917

Symphony Gives Pleasure in Ideal Program

Restful rather than exciting, best tells the story of the Symphony concert of yesterday afternoon. The program was one of good, substantial propositions with the soloist's selections in keeping with the orchestral numbers.

The Cherubini "Anacreon" overture may well be reckoned old fashioned as to date of composition, but as Dr. Muck reads it and the orchestra plays it there is not the slightest trace of the ancient to be found in its pages.

Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, one has to admit, seems a trifle overlong, but this thought is more than offset by its many glorious passages.

Between these selections came Mr. Noack, assistant concert master of the orchestra with his solo number Saint-Saens, "Havanaise" and Chausson's "Poeme." Fortunate indeed is the orchestra that has such an artist in its ranks and fortunate are the patrons to hear him as soloist.

N Y Times March 13, 1918

DR. MANNING JOINS ATTACK ON DR. MUCK

Rector of Trinity Approves of the Stand Taken by Mrs. Jay.

MEN IN SERVICE BARRED

Soldiers and Sailors May Not Accept Free Tickets to Boston Symphony Orchestra.

American soldiers and sailors will not be permitted to accept free tickets to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's recital at Carnegie Hall tomorrow night, according to Mrs. William Jay, who has been leading the efforts of many persons, including George L. Ingraham, formerly Justice of the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, to prevent the orchestra giving any recital here while Dr. Karl Muck remains its Director. Mrs. Jay also made public a letter which she said had been dictated from Camp Upton by the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, supporting her contention that loyal Americans should not go to concerts where Dr. Muck had a leading part. Dr. Manning's letter says:

May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham, and others, against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra? We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

While our boys, fighting at the front in our defense, are being assailed by liquid fire, poison gas, and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other places, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser.

Mrs. Jay's opposition to Dr. Muck, commencing at the time when he announced that he would not play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra because the national anthem was not comparable as music to the rest of the program is based, she says, on the fact that he is a subject of the Kaiser, formerly the favorite musical director in Berlin, and that his appearance here is a subtle form of German propaganda.

Mrs. Jay said last night that she heard from Dr. H. D. Fairbairn of 219 McDonough Street, Brooklyn, that the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accustomed to give away seats to soldiers and sailors in uniform with the result that audiences which listened to the German director had a distinctly patriotic appearance. Accordingly, she said, she got in touch with Rear Admiral Usher, commanding the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and with Major Gen. Mann, commandant at Governors Island, and both officers assured her they would not allow officers or sailors in the Government service to accept free tickets to the concerts.

"The abominable use," said Mrs. Jay, "to which it is being made of our soldiers and sailors to support an enemy alien in his vocation of conductor could only have come from the modern German brain. Surely these fine men to support German propaganda through the medium of the art of music, should be condemned by every loyal American and lover of fair play." Among the letters I received this morning was one from a Swiss school teacher who suggested that a public appeal be issued to the principals of the leading girls' private schools in and around the city to leave their seats unoccupied if these concerts are held."

Mrs. Jay made public a letter from Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby, 29 Washington Square, in which she says:

"There can be no half measures in the Muck case. It is either loyalty or treason! I am particularly interested in the attitude you have assumed, as there is but a handful of women in Boston, my daughter, Mrs. Allan Forbes, being one, who love their country more than their music, and who have been willing to give up the symphony seats if there no possibility of awakening in the minds of those who are in power the all-important and vital need and duty of having justice done by public hanging of spies until they are dealt with as other nations treat them? We are ignoring the most alarming menace, and this an attitude which, as a nation, is ignoble."

David Bispham, she says, wrote to her as follows: "I am much in sympathy with your crusade against Doktor Muck. Of course, this fellow ought to be expelled from the country or interned. I wish I might help do either."

Dr. Muck, who amended his expressed resolution not to play the national anthem at concerts he directed, and who has played it, in fact, everywhere since the first of last November, came to this country in 1912 to become director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He has been supported in the face of every criticism by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. In Baltimore last Fall citizens declined to permit the orchestra to give its recital, and so much feeling was aroused that its engagement was canceled.

N. Y. American March 13, 1918

Mrs. William Jay Moves to Stop Muck's Concerts

Patronage of Boston Symphony Is Largely Pro-German, She Says, Moving to Silence Orchestra.

Mrs. William Jay renewed her attack last night on Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She said that the force of public opinion should stop the scheduled concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday and Saturday evenings. Mrs. Jay also indicated that she would take steps that would prevent Dr. Muck's appearance, but declined to reveal her plans. Mrs. Jay said:

"I am told that the performances of the orchestra here this Winter have been largely attended by pro-Germans, and I sometimes wonder whether this is an American city. Certainly Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Springfield and Detroit have shown their Americanism by refusing to have Dr. Muck appear with the orchestra in those cities.

"Only a few minutes ago a man in Brooklyn called me on the telephone and said he understood that the management of the orchestra was distributing tickets among soldiers and sailors. This, I think, the Secret Service should stop. It is not right that our soldiers should be permitted to attend such a performance."

Mrs. Jay is a season subscriber, but has kept away in what has been, up to the present, a silent protest.

C. C. Smith, manager of Carnegie Hall, said he knew nothing of any plan to stop the concerts.

License Commissioner Gilchrist refused to say whether he would halt the performances. The concerts this week are the last of the season. At the Academy of Music, in Brooklyn, where the orchestra is also to appear, it was said that the concert would be given as announced.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

Press: New York City

DEC 30 1917

DR. MUCK WILL NOT LEAD.

Can't Enter Army Camp for Symphony Orchestra Concert.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, Dec. 29.—Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert to soldiers at Camp Devens, Ayer, Sunday afternoon, Dr. Karl Muck, recently the target in bitter attacks growing out of failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a Providence concert, will not take part as leader. Being a German, he is barred as an "alien enemy" from entering the camp.

Clement Lenom will conduct the concert in Dr. Muck's stead. The first number on the program will be "The Star Spangled Banner" and the second will be "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Two German pieces will be given, and Italian and French compositions are included. Aware of the regulation that bars him from the camp, Dr. Muck made no comment on his inability to lead.

RECORD

Address: Philadelphia, P

become available.

BIG HALIFAX BENEFIT

Boston Symphony Orchestra and Other Artists Raise $10,000.

Boston, Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck, Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler, united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years. The benefit was for the sufferers from the Halifax disaster. Prices of tickets ran from $1 to $5, and the house was entirely sold out in seven hours after the opening of the sale. Over $5000 in mail orders were returned, and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except the actual newspaper advertising, Major H. L. Higginson having contributed Symphony Hall and services of its attaches. The concert netted considerably over $10,000.

EVENING MAIL

New York City

Dr. Muck Avoids Chicago.

Chicago, Dec. 22.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here February 3, it was announced. A representative of the orchestra asked that the concert be canceled.

TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

Boston Orchestra to Play At Camp Without Dr. Muck

BOSTON, Dec. 29.—Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert to soldiers at Camp Devens Sunday afternoon, Dr. Karl Muck, recently the target in bitter attacks growing out of failure to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a Providence concert, will not take part as leader. Being a German, he is barred from the camp as an "alien enemy."

Clement Lenom will conduct the concert in Dr. Muck's stead. The first number on the programme will be "The Star-Spangled Banner," and the second will be "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Two German pieces will be given, also Italian and French compositions.

EVENING GLOBE

Address: New York City

Muck's Chicago Concert Off.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here Feb. 3, it was announced to-day by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear. A representative of the orchestra who made a trip through the middle west, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

PRESS

Philadelphia, Pa.

MUCK, MELBA, KREISLER IN $10,000 HALIFAX CONCERT

Boston, Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck, Madame Melba and Fritz Keisler united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years, for the benefit of the sufferers in the Halifax disaster. Prices of tickets ran from one dollar to five dollars and the house was sold out in seven hours after the opening of the sale. Over $5000 in mail orders were returned and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except the advertising, Major H. L. Higginson having contributed Symphony Hall and its attaches. The concert netted considerably over $10,000.

Transcript Mar 9, 1918

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

FAMILIAR MUSIC IN GLORIFIED PERFORMANCE

A Programme That Belied Anticipation with Conductor and Orchestra in High Mettle—New Voice to Goldmark's Overture to "Sakuntala," and Sheer Eloquence with Beethoven's Second Symphony—Withal, a Concerto for 'Cello

WHAT seemed a routine and unpromising programme turned yesterday afternoon, at Symphony Hall into an exceptionally pleasurable and interesting concert. Dr. Muck proposed to his hearers, who seem to be equally numerous, this season, whatever the pieces or the "assisting artist," Goldmark's overture to the ancient Hindu play, "Sakuntala"; Lalo's concerto for violoncello and orchestra with Mr. Malkin to play the solo part; and the second symphony, in D major, of Beethoven. Anticipation, admittedly a little impatient and scoffing, might reckon the overture hackneyed and cloying: the symphony, early and none too characteristic work of mind, heart and hand still groping out the way that was to lead into the fervors and fulfilment of the succeeding "Eroica." As to the concerto, was it not for the monotonous violoncello, while the virtuoso to play it, sits weekly in the orchestra from October to May? Evidently, went this preliminary speculation, Dr. Muck was engrossed with preparation for the impending performance at a choral concert of Bach's Passion Music according to Matthew. Not without reason he was taking the easiest way with an intervening pair of Symphony Concerts. To our seats then, but in mood unexpectant and resigned.

Now, it is true that a concerto for violoncello is—a concerto for violoncello—and that no one has yet bestowed upon the world and the 'cellists therein music of genius in that species. It is also true that the overture to "Sakuntala" has been a familiar item for twenty-five years in orchestral repertories; and that, for blessing or for bane, Beethoven's second symphony enjoys the right to biennial repetition in most series of symphony concerts, though it be not like the third, fifth, seventh, or even the fourth or the eighth. What, then, altered dull anticipation of all three pieces into lively pleasure from them? Nothing else than the quality of the performance. Though Dr. Muck may be preparing an unusually exacting restoration of the Passion Music, not for one afternoon will he take his ease at a Symphony Concert or for one morning in the rehearsals thereof. Before orchestra and conductor had proceeded a hundred measures into Goldmark's overture, it was clear that they were on their mettle. Lalo's concerto does excel many another for the violoncello in intrinsic invention, imagination, interest—and the more for the voice that conductor, orchestra and "soloist" yesterday found for it. As for the symphony, all concerned made it sound as of Beethoven with wings already outspread for characteristic and sustained flight. In fine, to come to the concert to scoff was to depart from it to praise. Seldom, on a Friday afternoon, has applause been heartier.

In the overture, Dr. Muck excelled even his wonted discernment and discrimination in a choice of pace that unfolded Goldmark's long, sinuous, ascendant, melodic line, that never languished, that never clouded; in the distribution of emphases, contrasts, color; in the moulding of phrases into far foreseen and sensitively graduated course; in the maintenance of the sensuous voice and glamor of the music, yet so that it never thickened or cloyed. After all, Goldmark is oftener eloquent than he is lush. In turn, the orchestra played with the consummate beauty of tone that on its high days every choir and each separate voice within it, may summon; with unfailing ear for the euphonies of instrument with instrument, with flow of edgeless and perfectly jointured phrase, with almost unerring sensibility of tonal color, with understanding and response for the whole overture as well as for the particular part and page upon the several desks. The outcome was a performance that glowed with the sensuous beauty of Goldmark's melody, with the richness of his harmonic dress, with the pulsing warmth of his instrumental coloring, with the suggestion of ancient oriental legend sung in exotic and enhancing tones. Seldom has Goldmark's overture sounded upon the ear as so velvet-like a music; seldom has it seemed of such finely woven strands like the interlacings of oriental pattern, carved, embroidered, painted; seldom has it reflected such softly golden lustres; or seemed so illusively the speech of piteous, low-spoken, semi-static Indian tale. The spell of poetry flowed out of composer's and orchestra's tones. The listener heard, fascinated, illuded, loth to dispel the magic by the applause that he knew was just reward. The coarse-fingered, the over-luscious, the too insistently oriental Goldmark has vanished out of the music. The overture had become transformed in the poetizing imagination of him who led it, in the response thereto of those who played it.

So, again, with Beethoven's second symphony. Not upon the high fervors of the "Eroica," the passionate progress of the fifth, the glow and glint of the seventh, the epical excitements of the ninth, has Dr. Muck lavished more penetrating care, more imaginative pains. Beethoven, hearing, perchance, from the Elysian Fields and remembering this music of his youth, must have rejoiced, for example, in the lightness of tone, pace, rhythm, that wove the pattern of his Finale as in glint upon the air. Here was the fleetness, the clearness, the elasticity with which Dr. Muck and the orchestra are wont to play the final movements of eighteenth-century symphonies, doing like office to almost as light-footed, bright-winged a music and doing it with a precision that, as it never slipped, so it never hardened. Rarely has the band touched such plasticity of tone as that with which it kept Scherzo and Finale in perpetual play, tossing ornament out of them, catching ornament back into them; now shaping a phrase as through string-choir or wood-winds were a single singing voice; again whipping up and down the music with that zest of tonal energy and tonal progress already alert and goading in Beethoven. Throughout the symphony leapt bright to the ear. A conductor in his fifties, a middle-aged orchestra were suffusing it with the young imagination of a Beethoven beginning his thirties.

As thrilling to hear was the slow movement. Within easy memory conductor and orchestra have played the first symphony, the Haydnish-Mozartean symphony, of Beethoven, written when he was studying the best models. Therein the slow movement accords with the conventions; herein it is the Beethoven of pure instrumental song upspringing from his own invention, conducted and diversified by his own imagination, controlled by his own clear mind, manipulated by his own sure hand. He begins veritable Beethovenish melody in firm contours and songful depth, rich-textured, luminous. He goes on, and conductor and orchestra with him, to lead it into various transformations, to deck it with new ornaments, to make play with suggestion from it. He wrote, they spoke in the pure loveliness of musical sound when fresh fancy and warm impulse wing and diversify it. Beethoven himself may hardly have imagined such euphonies, such iridescence.

And young energy and young power similarly spoke out of the first movement. Grave the beginning, yet irrepressibly songful; but only for a relative moment before a fine young zest possesses the music. The conductor, divining his pace, sharpening his rhythms, inflecting the imitative passages, speeding or staying long progressions, lightly modulating here and there, made the music sound like sheer, sure, sunny improvisation—of the Beethoven who not many years after was to achieve his first Allegros of the passionate tumults, of the manifold and commanding voice. How various, how vigorous it already is stood disclosed in Dr. Muck's eloquence. What many another conductor leaves asmouldering in this second phony of Beethoven he blows into fire. connoisseurs of orchestral perfo marvelled yesterday at the imag the intuition, the adeptness of so his strokes. The most innocent o eners must have felt in sum the impr on ear and fancy of music so open vivified. Even a youthful symphon make what a cliché of reviewing "memorable" afternoon.

Lalo's concerto for violoncello many another in that the composer neither academically, nor perfun nor yet displayfully for the solo ment. Rather, he treats it as the on ing voice in a symphonic piece t something to say in its own right own manner. The listener hears w prise the full-throated, energetic measured beginning to be reassu when the violoncello sounds in d and stately progress. He is wont it as solo instrument in mu tempts it to sugary song or clum ing. Instead, in this first move Lalo's concerto, he hears it at orous and sonorous, elastic yet of melody and march. It speaks wit with warmth, with a becoming The music makes no play with superfluous, with the feat distor large-voiced as it began the ends. The ensuing intermezzo less discriminating thought for t Intrinsically it remains interesting the violoncello unfolds its more sentimental song: whether it guides across the tonal tapestry a lighter thread upon which the orchestra may hang inflection or ornament. There is halo for the slow song! there is setting for the livelier melody. Even in the Finale, the violoncello has not to cape creaking. There is no super-abundance o "passage-work." The solo instrument stil sings, but whereas it has been stately musing, gently gay, now it may weave its brighter tones into the pattern the orchestra, in the returns of the rondo, is fashioning for it. To the end a measure of symphonic interest exhales from the piece. Mr. Malkin could hardly have chosen a concerto to better advantage, since his tone lacks neither lightness nor depth, neither suavity nor color. He can play songfully, ornately, euphoniously; and he understood yesterday the limpidity, the continence, the elegance of Lalo's music.

H. T. P.

RATHSKELLER
THE HOUSE OF GOOD CHEER
APPETIZING SPECIALS
BUSINESS MEN'S LUNCH AT NOON
DANCING 7 to 11 P. M.
AMERICAN HOUSE
REOPENED — REFURNISHED
WS(D) mh 6

Traveler Nov 27, 1917

mphony ves Pleasure n Ideal Program

festful rather than exciting, best the story of the Symphony concert esterday afternoon. The program ull one of good, substantial proposi- s with the soloist's selections in ing with the orchestral numbers. e Cherubini "Anacreon" overture n well be reckoned old fashioned as ate of composition, but as Dr. Muck is it and the orchestra plays it there ot the slightest trace of the ancient be found in its pages.

Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, one to admit, seems a trifle overlong, this thought is more than offset by many glorious passages.

Between these selections came Mr. ack, assistant concert master of the chestra with his solo number Saint-Saens, "Havanaise" and Chausson's "Poème." Fortunate indeed is the or- chestra that has such an artist in its ranks and fortunate are the patrons to hear him as soloist.

N Y Times March 13, 1918

DR. MANNING JOINS ATTACK ON DR. MUCK

Rector of Trinity Approves of the Stand Taken by Mrs. Jay.

MEN IN SERVICE BARRED

Soldiers and Sailors May Not Accept Free Tickets to Boston Symphony Orchestra.

American soldiers and sailors will not be permitted to accept free tickets to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's recital at Carnegie Hall tomorrow night, according to Mrs. William Jay, who has been leading the efforts of many persons, including George L. Ingraham, formerly Justice of the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, to prevent the orchestra giving any recital here while Dr. Karl Muck remains its Director. Mrs. Jay also made public a letter which she said had been dictated from Camp Upton by the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, supporting her contention that loyal Americans should not go to concerts where Dr. Muck had a leading part. Dr. Manning's letter says:

May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham, and others, against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra? We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

While our boys, fighting at the front in our defense, are being assailed by liquid fire, poison gas, and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other places, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser.

Mrs. Jay's opposition to Dr. Muck, commencing at the time when he announced that he would not play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra because the national anthem was not comparable as music to the rest of the program is based, she says, on the fact that he is a subject of the Kaiser, formerly the favorite musical director in Berlin, and that his appearance here is a subtle form of German propaganda.

Mrs. Jay said last night that she heard from Dr. H. D. Fairbairn of 219 McDonough Street, Brooklyn, that the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was accustomed to give away seats to soldiers and sailors in uniform with the result that audiences which listened to the German director had a distinctly patriotic appearance. Accordingly, she said, she got in touch with Rear Admiral Usher, commanding the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and with Major Gen. Mann, commanding at Governors Island, and both officers assured her they would not allow soldiers or sailors in the Government service to accept free tickets to the concerts.

"The abominable use," said Mrs. Jay, "that is being made of our soldiers and sailors to support an enemy alien in his arrogant conduct could only have sprung from the modern German brain. To use these fine men to support German propaganda through the medium of love of music, should be condemned by every loyal American and lover of fair play. Among the letters I received this morning was one from a Swiss school teacher who suggested that a public appeal be issued to the principals of the leading girls' private schools in and around the city to leave their seats unoccupied if these concerts are held."

Mrs. Jay made public a letter from Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby, 29 Washington Square, in which she says:

"There can be no half measures in the Muck case. It is either loyalty or treason! I am particularly interested in the attitude you have assumed, as there is but a handful of women in Boston, my daughter, Mrs. Allan Forbes, being one, who love their country more than their music, and who have been willing to give up the symphony seats. Is there no possibility of awakening in the minds of those who are in power, the all-important and vital need and duty of having justice done by public hanging of spies until they are dealt with as other nations treat them? We are ignoring the most alarming menace, and [illegible] attitude which, as a nation, is ignoble."

David Bispham, she says, wrote to her as follows: "I am much in sympathy with your crusade against Doktor Muck. Of course, this fellow ought to be expelled from the country or interned. I wish I might help do either."

Dr. Muck, who amended his expressed resolution not to play the national anthem at concerts he directed, and who has played it, in fact, everywhere since the first of last November, came to this country in 1912 to become director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He has been supported in the face of every criticism by Major Henry L. Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra. In Baltimore last Fall citizens declined to permit the orchestra to give its recital, and so much feeling was aroused that its engagement was canceled.

N. Y. American March 13, 1918

Mrs. William Jay Moves to Stop Muck's Concerts

Patronage of Boston Symphony Is Largely Pro-German, She Says, Moving to Silence Orchestra.

Mrs. William Jay renewed her attack last night on Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She said that the force of public opinion should stop the scheduled concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday and Saturday evenings. Mrs. Jay also indicated that she would take steps that would prevent Dr. Muck's appearance, but declined to reveal her plans. Mrs. Jay said:

"I am told that the performances of the orchestra here this Winter have been largely attended by pro-Germans, and I sometimes wonder whether this is an American city. Certainly Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Springfield and Detroit have shown their Americanism by refusing to have Dr. Muck appear with the orchestra in those cities.

"Only a few minutes ago a man in Brooklyn called me on the telephone and said he understood that the management of the orchestra was distributing tickets among soldiers and sailors. This, I think, the Secret Service should stop. It is not right that our soldiers should be permitted to attend such a performance."

Mrs. Jay is a season subscriber, but has kept away in what has been, up to the present, a silent protest.

C. C. Smith, manager of Carnegie Hall, said he knew nothing of any plan to stop the concerts.

License Commissioner Gilchrist refused to say whether he would halt the performances. The concerts this week are the last of the season. At the Academy of Music, in Brooklyn, where the orchestra is also to appear, it was said that the concert would be given as announced.

PRESS

Philadelphia, Pa.

MUCK, MELBA, KREISLER IN $10,000 HALIFAX CONCERT

Boston, Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Karl Muck, Madame Melba and Fritz Keisler united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years, for the benefit of the sufferers in the Halifax disaster. Prices of tickets ran from one dollar to five dollars and the house was sold out in seven hours after the opening of the sale. Over $5000 in mail orders were returned and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except the advertising, Major H. L. Higginson having contributed Symphony Hall and its attaches. The concert netted considerably over $10,000.

RECORD

ss: Philadelphia, P

MORNING TELEGRAPH

ress: New York City

DEC 30 1917

DR. MUCK WILL NOT LEAD.

Can't Enter Army Camp for Symphony Orchestra Concert.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

BOSTON, Dec. 29.—Though the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert to soldiers at Camp Devens, Ayer, Sunday afternoon, Dr. Karl Muck, recently the target in bitter attacks growing out of failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a Providence concert, will not take part as leader. Being a German, he is barred as an "alien enemy" from entering the camp.

Clement Lenom will conduct the concert in Dr. Muck's stead. The first number on the program will be "The Star Spangled Banner" and the second will be "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Two German pieces will be given, and Italian and French compositions are included. Aware of the regulation that bars him from the camp, Dr. Muck made no comment on his inability to lead.

become available.

BIG HALIFAX BENEFIT

Boston Symphony Orchestra and Other Artists Raise $10,000.

Boston, Dec. 16.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Karl Muck, Madame Melba and Fritz Kreisler, united this afternoon in the biggest concert that Boston has had for years. The benefit was for the sufferers from the Halifax disaster. Prices of tickets ran from $1 to $5, and the house was entirely sold out in seven hours after the opening of the sale. Over $5000 in mail orders were returned, and at least that amount was turned away from the box office. There were no expenses except the actual newspaper advertising, Major H. L. Higginson having contributed Symphony Hall and services of its attaches. The concert netted considerably over $10,000.

EVENING MAIL

New York City

Dr. Muck Avoids Chicago.

Chicago, Dec. 22.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here February 3, it was announced. A representative of the orchestra asked that the concert be can- ce[illegible]

om TRIBUNE

ldress: New York City

te

Boston Orchestra to Play At Camp Without Dr. Mu

BOSTON, Dec. 29.—Though the B ton Symphony Orchestra will give concert to soldiers at Camp Deve Sunday afternoon, Dr. Karl Muck, r cently the target in bitter attac growing out of failure to play "Th Star-Spangled Banner" at a Providenc concert, will not take part as leade Being a German, he is barred from the camp as an "alien enemy."

Clement Lenom will conduct the concert in Dr. Muck's stead. The first number on the programme will be "The Star-Spangled Banner," and the second will be "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Two German pieces will be given, also Italian and French compositions.

m EVENING GLOBE

lress: New York City

e

Muck's Chicago Concert

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—Karl conductor of the Boston Symp Orchestra, will not keep his en ment to give a concert here Feb was announced to-day by the agement of the theatre at wh was to appear. A representa the orchestra who made through the middle west, re that the concert be cancelled, it said.

Transcript Dec 23, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

MOZART, MME. MELBA AND SUNDRY OTHERS

The Singer in Music of Youth, Notably in an Air from the Half-Forgotten "Idomeneo"—The Puissant Brahms of the "Tragic Overture," Chaikovsky, Imaginative and Fertile, and Sibelius in a Tone-Poem Complete and Flawless

BRAHMS, Mozart, Sibelius, Debussy, Chaikovsky, Mme. Melba, Dr. Muck and a New England audience—only an Italian could have plausibly complained of oversight in the cosmopolitan quality of the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon; while he might have found a measure of compensation in the fact that two of the singer's airs—from "Idomeneo" and "Le Nozze di Figaro"—were sung in Italian text from Italianate operas, though the one was written for a Munich of 1781 and the other for a Vienna of 1786. Eight times in twenty-two years Mme. Melba has sung at the Symphony Concerts, and on five of those occasions, like most lyric singers when they "assist" the orchestra, she has chosen at least one number from Mozart—sometimes the air from "The Shepherd King" that Miss Garrison sang at them a few weeks ago; sometimes the countess's melancholy soliloquies out of "Figaro"; and yesterday, as at least once before, Cherubino's half-arch, half-languorous canzonetta, "Voi che Sapete" from that same opera. To it, however, she prefixed from another of Mozart's operas that now seldom comes to the stage an air as seldom heard in these days in concerts—"Zeffiretti Lusinghieri," from "Idomeneo," the first of Mozart's "serious pieces" for the theatre. Sixteen years ago she herself sang it in Symphony Hall; since that time Bostonian ears have not known it.

"Idomeneo" unfolds stiltedly, long-windedly, the hapless plight of Idomeneus, King of Crete, who returning to his island after long absence at the Trojan War, vows in sacrifice to Neptune the first being that he encounters, since the sea-god has saved him from tempest. That being proves to be his son, whereupon both king and prince are prey to highly conflicting emotions. In the youth, they are heightened by his love for Ilia, captive Trojan princess, who secretly returns his affection, and by his disdain for Electra, princess of Greece, who openly pursues him. It is not necessary to follow this fable through the many ramifications of self-sacrifice and amorous rivalry that the relenting god finally adjusts. Suffice it that the air sung by Mme. Melba falls to Ilia and that in it, at the moment in which the fortunes of all concerned seem most desperate, she soliloquizes upon her love for the Cretan youth. In "Idomeneo" as a whole, Mozart is sometimes mindful of the new fashions in which Gluck had written operas of ancient mythology; again he follows the conventional Italian procedure of the time with such pieces; but in this air of Ilia, as in divers other numbers, he forgets models under the promptings of his own inclination and imagination.

The outcome in this instance, both in the preliminary declamation and the succeeding air, is music lovely of melody, delicate of workmanship, and subtle, almost, in the wistful suggestion of the orchestral part. It is music also that might be the poetized speech of the gentle and devoted young princess, speaking to herself the longings of amorous melancholy, yet glad within if only her prince's heart may overhear. Mme. Melba has passed her fiftieth year; but the soft bright glow of her tones summons the glamor of youth that Mozart sheds over Ilia's air, accords now with the gentle warmth, now with the wistful melancholy, of the music. To the sentiment of such a piece, as the eighteenth century would have called it, Mme. Melba's voice answers almost intuitively; while it is as sensitive to the long undulation, the melting of phrase into phrase, in the unbroken progress of the Mozartean melody, to the limpid lustre of it against the harmonic background. The music and the voice, the sentiment and the singing, united in a single impression of nearly perfect beauty; for the very lightness of Mme. Melba's present tones accorded with the matter and the mood of the air. It was the music of youth that she essayed also in Cherubino's song and again to glamor it with the light pulsing, the silvery flow, the sensuous beauty still abiding in her middle tones. The charm of the voice was the charm of the amorous boy—half-pleased, half-troubled—and of the music that mirrors him. Once more Mme. Melba seemed to sing by an intuition that is musical magic upon her piece and her means. If her third number, the soliloquy of the longing and remembering mother from Debussy's cantata, "The Prodigal Son," gave less pleasure, the shortcoming lay more in the quality of the music, which barely rises above appropriateness and utility, than in the quality of the singing. Yet again were Mme. Melba's tones the illusive voice of wistful melancholy. Where once she was mistress of brilliant vocal ornament, she is now equal mistress of the tender sentiment of sensuous song.

With each repetition, the power of the beginning and the end of Brahms's "Tragic Overture" seems more and more to lay hold upon Dr. Muck and through him upon his orchestra and his audience. Under his hand, there is no questioning the grim and sombre force of the measures that seem to set the scene for the composer's fated hero; that bear him across it through struggle and tumult; that at last seem more to crush than to exalt him. Driving creative energy sustains Brahms in an impassioned music of relentless and resistless fate against which mortal will fights or broods in vain; bends the chosen form to the idea and the emotion; leads the overture through turbulent progress; impregnates it with dark harmonic color; goads it to puissant voice. By these attributes and in such performance as the piece received yesterday, the music, so far, is tragic and epic too. If only the idea and the emotion had not exacted the "contrasting passages" of softer, more songful mood, as of the hero in vision comforted; if only, the form had not demanded this "second subject." Neither intrinsically nor as it unfolds in musical or dramatic suggestion does it bear comparison with the rest. For a little, Brahms, as he is wont to do when the creative impulse weakens, calculates his way and the outcome is a dry, austere, almost passionless music that no performance may quite vitalize. Not until fate strides and strikes anew upon the imaginary hero does the overture rise afresh to power. The beauty that Beethoven could set glowing against force was not here for the continuator of the symphonic line. Not unlike some of Rodin's figures, plentiful in power but lacking the beauty that would intensify it, is this "Tragic Overture."

No more does Chaikovsky's symphony in F minor attain to that rare perfection in which music seems completely to fulfill the composer's design. Conductor and orchestra spared not in eloquent pains upon it. The most ardent champion of the native and neurotic wildness of Chaikovsky's music might not complain of the frenzies and the languors of the first movement, of the thunders of fate therein, as Dr. Muck released and contrasted them. He could as little question the rhythmic leaps, the songful stride, the driving tonal excitement of the finale. It was hard in the celebrated scherzo to say whether the precision and the animation of the string choir plucking at its instruments or the finesse and the lightness of the brass was the more remarkable technical feat; while the contrasts of the little andantino sounded both apt and fanciful. To the full Dr. Muck disclosed and emphasized the range of invention, the readiness of imagination, the clearness of progress in variety of means, the measured mingling of passion and workmanship that set this fourth symphony above the other five from Chaikovsky's pen. For once, the Russian's music that sometimes seems to evade the conductor, spoke the more characteristically and vividly because he was its voice. Yet by that very eloquence, the plainer were the moments when Chaikovsky flags, when he takes refuge in repetitions; when he is loud, but empty; when the fancy that enlivens the lighter movements takes the easiest, rather than the choicest way. Like the power of Brahms in the "Tragic Overture," the imagination of Chaikovsky in the symphony in F minor does not quite and always fill his mould.

In contrast, the music with which Dr. Muck interspersed Mme. Melba's numbers is such perfection of fulfilled design—the terse tone-poem of Sibelius, "The Swan of Tuonela." Upon the black river circling the Hades of Finnish myth floats the white swan; into the stillness it lifts piercing haunting song; singing it courses the stream—to die because a hunter-hero would gratify a woman's wicked will. These very premises set the composer exacting tasks. With sound, he must invoke stillness and solitude. Only in the darkest colors of his harmonic and instrumental palette may he paint his tone-picture. His music must move as the murky waters of this underworld, waveless, currentless; yet bear a swan-song weird and woful. Therewith imagination and resource go hand in hand in achievement; often Sibelius's means are intricate, yet always the outcome is as direct as though the listener's eye visualized and the listener's ear heard with naught between them and the illusion of the composer's voice. The song of the swan is at once a melody of mordant and mysterious woe; uncanny harmonies and modulations make it yet more piteous, strange. There is sense of the great still place through which it rises and penetrates, falls and dies. The blackness of the music never brightens; phrases like stillness stirred expand faintly from the song like the eddy cloven by the white bird upon the dark waters. The imagery of the music never dims; the smallest of the means to expression never falters. Nothing is spared; yet nothing is wasted. A unified, unclouded, undiminished sensation possesses the hearer, spell-like—the magic of perfect achievement.

H. T. P.

Transcript Dec 30, 1917

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Ravel and Ropartz on Dr. Muck's Programme—Mr. McCormack for the Red Cross—Mr. de Gogorza in Fresh Pieces—Debussy's New Sonata

FIVE pieces—an exceptional number as Dr. Muck's programmes go—again fill the list for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The conspicuous item among them is the music from Ravel's ballet of "Daphnis and Chloe," first heard here in remarkable performance a fortnight ago and now repeated by general request. Beside it, in the second part of the programme, stands another French piece of a different quality—the well-made, tranquil and conventionally pleasing symphony of Ropartz revived for the first time since conductor and orchestra produced it first in America. Schumann, with the overture to his opera, "Genoveva"; Dohnanyi, with a "Concert-Piece" for Mr. Warnke to play upon the violoncello; and Händel with a swelling "Concerto Grosso"—in D minor, numbered 10 in Opus VI.—divide the first half of the concert. No piece by Schumann has thus far been played by the orchestra this season, while the ample periods and stately march of Händel's concerto will pleasure many a hearer.

Dec 22, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

AN INNOVATION WITH AGREEABLE OUTCOME

Mr. Noack Substitutes Two Short Violin Pieces for the Usual "Soloist's" Concerto—The Pleasures of Chausson's "Poem" and Saint-Saens's "Havanaise" So Heard—Familiar Pieces Revitalized for Beginning and End

LAST season, so far as recent memory runs, Mr. Gebhard and Dr. Muck bravely set the example. Yesterday afternoon Mr. Noack and Dr. Muck began to make it precedent. There is not a sound reason in the world except the pestilent "tradition," why an "assisting artist" of violin, violoncello or piano, called to the Symphony Concerts, or having turn as "soloist" from the "first desks" of the orchestra, should count himself constrained to play a concerto. Though two centuries and more academically hallow the form, it has no signal interest in itself. Few composers ply it with ease or energy, invention or imagination; many more, especially among the moderns, chafe within it, stretching, twisting, transmuting the prescriptions. Often such music discloses less clearly and widely the individual quality of the virtuoso than many a less orthodox and freer handled piece. It is hard to fill the exacting form with musical matter interesting or animating in itself; while the process is a reversal of the normal procedure wherein the matter conditions the method. Under this limitation, hearers by long habit, take a concerto as existing by virtue of the pianist or the violinist only and, primarily, for the display of his imparting skill.

Concertos for violoncello with few exceptions are tedium to the listening ear and, seemingly, vexation to the playing hand. Few are the concertos for violin that keep place in the active repertory, perhaps because the violinists are not diligent in the widening of it; as probably, because they find little to reward research. Not too numerous are the concertos for piano that virtuosi play and audiences hear with equal gladness. Rare must be the composer in these days who writes a concerto from inner and irresistible prompting; yet still he writes that he may do his full duty to the art of music, himself and the proclaiming virtuoso. Many a pianist and a violinist, were he to speak his full mind, would eagerly break this bondage of orthodoxy in which "the tradition" holds him fast. The more, then, the courage of Mr. Gebhard, when, called to the Symphony Concerts last winter, he played Franck's Symphonic Variations and Strauss's Burlesque, innstead of a concerto, and of Mr. Noack, who, rising from his place in the orchestra to be "soloist" yesterday, chose for pieces Chausson's "Poem" and Saint-Saëns's "Havanaise." Dr. Muck blessed both innovators; and so, once more, was the good gospel of freedom and individual choice preached at the Symphony Concerts to the fresh pleasure of the listening congregation. Liberty, as Monsieur Talleyrand shrewdly defined it, is the right to follow one's own will and the privilege to impose it, willy-nilly, on others. Yesterday Mr. Noack's hearers submitted gladly.

Moreover, such pieces as the violinist chose for his happy venture of Friday regain in a symphony concert the voice and semblance in which the composer designed them. Time and again both Chausson's "Poem" and Saint-Saëns's "Havanaise" are played in recitals with the orchestral background dimly suggested in a transcription for piano. Yet Saint-Saëns wrote his piece for violin and orchestra—even though it be a discreet orchestra often no more than pulsing with the rhythm of the Spanish dance, the Habanera, that underlays the whole music. Chausson, however, by no means held his band in such careful leash; his "Poem" is really a tone-poem for orchestra in which a "solo violin" as the phrase goes, is the distinctive voice. Heard merely with piano, the music penetrates and stirs the hearer in the melancholy progress through which shadow falls recurrently upon the brightening song or gathering energy quickly succumbs to regathering brooding. Heard as it was yesterday with orchestra and with Dr. Muck keenly sensitive alike to melodic line, harmonic color and inwrought euphonies, it rose to finer beauty of speech and graver intensity of mood. The songful melody of the violin sounded more richly, sensuously against the orchestral background; the shadows of melancholy seemed to play upon it more deeply, variously; it gained power when for a time the energy of the longing and the quest fitfully filled it; the fading into the calm of resignation was more wistful.

Mr. Noack loves the finesse of the violin, the spinning of his tone in undulating phrase and delicate lustres; his temperament in response to music might be more ardent. Often here has Mr. Ysaye played this music that he cherishes and to which he answers out of the deep stores of his mind and heart. Yet even with the implied reservation, the "Poem" rose yesterday to a beauty of sound and progress, to a sustained intensity of longing and questing mood, shot through with the lights and shadows of romantic fancy that without orchestra even such a master as Ysaye may hardly give it. Chausson probably knew not Tennyson; but he did know his Arthurian legends; and wrote his music that "follows the gleam." At best, Saint-Saëns's "Havanaise" is only dexterity and fancy; but an orchestra points the deftness of the piece in itself and for the violin, sustains the rhythmic beat; brightens the light contrasts. Moreover, it was music that welcomed Mr. Noack's technical grace, fineness of tone and quick sensibility. His audience had reason to reward him.

A piece that in itself stoutly withstands a century and more, and that Dr. Muck and the orchestra have more than once revitalized began the concert — Cherubini's overture to his "opera-ballet" of "Anacre-ennial repetition, gladden expectant ears. If ever Beethoven wrote a transparent, homely, sentimental, playful music, it is this symphony. Even the "little" eighth is artful, intricate, self-conscious beside it. Read into it what the commentators will, the Pastoral Symphony is Beethoven writing the limped, merry, plain-spoken, free-running music of the folk, however much the melodies therein are all his own. Of course, he transfigures it, and of course, such performance as it received yesterday glorifies it. Not for an instant does Dr. Muck stay the spontaneous flood of the music; yet cunningly he varies the curve and the progress of the current, speeding, staying, lightly modulating it. He is ingenious in mitigating by light and changeful strokes the repetitions with which the composer "establishes" his moods. He is adept with the long and short gradients of the music. He misses not a hint of the suggesting tonal colors; each phrase, each figure falls into pointing place in the cumulating tonal pattern; from first measure to last the instrumental song never sags or dulls. The method is as subtle as the outcome seems simple.

H. T. P.

Advertiser Dec 27, 1917

MELBA FAREWELL CHRISTMAS NIGHT

Will Be Soloist in Holiday Program of Boston Symphony Orchestra

Dr. Muck made no special selections for this year's Christmas program of the Symphony Orchestra. In the past few years he has fairly well exhausted available music appropriate to the day, so for this year he has made a straight program. The soloist will be Madame Melba. This will probably be her last appearance in concert in Boston this year.

The orchestral part of the program will open with Brahms' "Tragic" Overture. Then will come that fascinating work of Sibelius entitled "The Swan of Tuonela." The symphony will be Eschsikowsky's Fourth in F-Minor. The program in its proper order is as follows:

Mozart:
(a) Recitative, "Solitudini Amiche," and Aria, "Zeffiretti Lusinghiere" from "Idomeneo."
(b) Canzona, "Voi, che sapete," fet II., Scene 3, of "Le Nozze di Figaro."
Sibelius—"The Swan of Tuonela: Legend from the Finnish Folk-Epic, "Kalevala."
Debussy—Recitative and Aria of Lia, from "L' Enfant Prodigue."

* * *

The second of the series of choral concerts arranged for this season utilizing the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the chorus organized by Stephen Townsend will be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, January 22. The work will be the Second Symphony of Mahler.

The music that Mahler has written for the chorus is not so difficult as Beethoven's and, moreover, the training received for the Ninth Symphony has helped the chorus wonderfully in taking up the new work. Therefore, the rehearsals which come every Wednesday are not devoted entirely to the Mahler Symphony. The work has already begun on Bach's Passion Music, which will be heard at the third concert of the series, Tuesday evening, March 26.

EVENING POST
New York City

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Concert in Chicago Cancelled.

CHICAGO, December 22 (by A. P.).—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here on February 3, it was announced to-day by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear. A representative of the orchestra, who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

Transcript Dec 23, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

MOZART, MME. MELBA AND SUNDRY OTHERS

The Singer in Music of Youth, Notably in an Air from the Half-Forgotten "Idomeneo"—The Puissant Brahms of the "Tragic Overture," Chaikovsky, Imaginative and Fertile, and Sibelius in a Tone-Poem Complete and Flawless

BRAHMS, Mozart, Sibelius, Debussy, Chaikovsky, Mme. Melba, Dr. Muck and a New England audience—only an Italian could have plausibly complained of oversight in the cosmopolitan quality of the Symphony Concert yesterday afternoon; while he might have found a measure of compensation in the fact that two of the singer's airs—from "Idomeneo" and "Le Nozze di Figaro"—were sung in Italian text from Italianate operas, though the one was written for a Munich of 1781 and the other for a Vienna of 1786. Eight times in twenty-two years Mme. Melba has sung at the Symphony Concerts, and on five of those occasions, like most lyric singers when they "assist" the orchestra, she has chosen at least one number from Mozart—sometimes the air from "The Shepherd King" that Miss Garrison sang at them a few weeks ago; sometimes the countess's melancholy soliloquies out of "Figaro"; and yesterday, as at least once before, Cherubino's half-arch, half-languorous canzonetta, "Voi che Sapete" from that same opera. To it, however, she prefixed from another of Mozart's operas that now seldom comes to the stage an air as seldom heard in these days in concerts—"Zeffiretti Lusinghieri," from "Idomeneo," the first of Mozart's "serious pieces" for the theatre. Sixteen years ago she herself sang it in Symphony Hall; since that time Bostonian ears have not known it.

"Idomeneo" unfolds stiltedly, long-windedly, the hapless plight of Idomeneus, King of Crete, who returning to his island after long absence at the Trojan War, vows in sacrifice to Neptune the first being that he encounters, since the sea-god has saved him from tempest. That being proves to be his son, whereupon both king and prince are prey to highly conflicting emotions. In the youth, they are heightened by his love for Ilia, captive Trojan princess, who secretly returns his affection, and by his disdain for Electra, princess of Greece, who openly pursues him. It is not necessary to follow this fable through the many ramifications of self-sacrifice and amorous rivalry that the relenting god finally adjusts. Suffice it that the air sung by Mme. Melba falls to Ilia and that in it, at the moment in which the fortunes of all concerned seem most desperate, she soliloquizes upon her love for the Cretan youth. In "Idomeneo" as a whole, Mozart is sometimes mindful of the new fashions in which Gluck had written operas of ancient mythology; again he follows the conventional Italian procedure of the time with such pieces; but in this air of Ilia, as in divers other numbers, he forgets models under the promptings of his own inclination and imagination.

The outcome in this instance, both in the preliminary declamation and the succeeding air, is music lovely of melody, delicate of workmanship, and subtle, almost, in the wistful suggestion of the orchestral part. It is music also that might be the poetized speech of the gentle and devoted young princess, speaking to herself the longings of amorous melancholy, yet glad within if only her prince's heart may overhear. Mme. Melba has passed her fiftieth year; but the soft bright glow of her tones summons the glamor of youth that Mozart sheds over Ilia's air, accords now with the gentle warmth, now with the wistful melancholy, of the music. To the sentiment of such a piece, as the eighteenth century would have called it, Mme. Melba's voice answers almost intuitively; while it is as sensitive to the long undulation, the melting of phrase into phrase, in the unbroken progress of the Mozartean melody, to the limpid lustre of it against the harmonic background. The music and the voice, the sentiment and the singing, united in a single impression of nearly perfect beauty; for the very lightness of Mme. Melba's present tones accorded with the matter and the mood of the air. It was the music of youth that she essayed also in Cherubino's song and again to glamor it with the light pulsing, the silvery flow, the sensuous beauty still abiding in her middle tones. The charm of the voice was the charm of the amorous boy—half-pleased, half-troubled—and of the music that mirrors him. Once more Mme. Melba seemed to sing by an intuition that is musical magic upon her piece and her means. If her third number, the soliloquy of the longing and remembering mother from Debussy's cantata, "The Prodigal Son," gave less pleasure, the shortcoming lay more in the quality of the music, which barely rises above appropriateness and utility, than in the quality of the singing. Yet again were Mme. Melba's tones the illusive voice of wistful melancholy. Where once she was mistress of brilliant vocal ornament, she is now equal mistress of the tender sentiment of sensuous song.

With each repetition, the power of the beginning and the end of Brahms's "Tragic Overture" seems more and more to lay hold upon Dr. Muck and through him upon his orchestra and his audience. Under his hand, there is no questioning the grim and sombre force of the measures that seem to set the scene for the composer's fated hero; that bear him across it through struggle and tumult; that at last seem more to crush than to exalt him. Driving creative energy sustains Brahms in an impassioned music of relentless and resistless fate against which mortal will fights or broods in vain; bends the chosen form to the idea and the emotion; leads the overture through turbulent progress; impregnates it with dark harmonic color; goads it to puissant voice. By these attributes and in such performance as the piece received yesterday, the music, so far, is tragic and epic too. If only the idea and the emotion had not exacted the "contrasting passages" of softer, more songful mood, as of the hero in vision comforted; if only, the form had not demanded this "second subject." Neither intrinsically nor as it unfolds in musical or dramatic suggestion does it bear comparison with the rest. For a little, Brahms, as he is wont to do when the creative impulse weakens, calculates his way and the outcome is a dry, austere, almost passionless music that no performance may quite vitalize. Not until fate strides and strikes anew upon the imaginary hero does the overture rise afresh to power. The beauty that Beethoven could set glowing against force was not here for the continuator of the symphonic line. Not unlike some of Rodin's figures, plentiful in power but lacking the beauty that would intensify it, is this "Tragic Overture."

No more does Chaikovsky's symphony in F minor attain to that rare perfection in which music seems completely to fulfill the composer's design. Conductor and orchestra spared not in eloquent pains upon it. The most ardent champion of the native and neurotic wildness of Chaikovsky's music might not complain of the frenzies and the languors of the first movement, of the thunders of fate therein, as Dr. Muck released and contrasted them. He could as little question the rhythmic leaps, the songful stride, the driving tonal excitement of the finale. It was hard in the celebrated scherzo to say whether the precision and the animation of the string choir plucking at its instruments or the finesse and the lightness of the brass was the more remarkable technical feat; while the contrasts of the little andantino sounded both apt and fanciful. To the full Dr. Muck disclosed and emphasized the range of invention, the readiness of imagination, the clearness of progress in variety of means, the measured mingling of passion and workmanship that set this fourth symphony above the other five from Chaikovsky's pen. For once, the Russian's music that sometimes seems to evade the conductor, spoke the more characteristically and vividly because he was its voice. Yet by that very eloquence, the plainer were the moments when Chaikovsky flags, when he takes refuge in repetitions; when he is loud, but empty; when the fancy that enlivens the lighter movements takes the easiest, rather than the choicest way. Like the power of Brahms in the "Tragic Overture," the imagination of Chaikovsky in the symphony in F minor does not quite and always fill his mould.

In contrast, the music with which Dr. Muck interspersed Mme. Melba's numbers is such perfection of fulfilled design—the terse tone-poem of Sibelius, "The Swan of Tuonela." Upon the black river circling the Hades of Finnish myth floats the white swan; into the stillness it lifts piercing haunting song; singing it courses the stream—to die because a hunter-hero would gratify a woman's wicked will. These very premises set the composer exacting tasks. With sound, he must invoke stillness and solitude. Only in the darkest colors of his harmonic and instrumental palette may he paint his tone-picture. His music must move as the murky waters of this underworld, waveless, currentless; yet bear a swan-song weird and woful. Therewith imagination and resource go hand in hand in achievement; often Sibelius's means are intricate, yet always the outcome is as direct as though the listener's eye visualized and the listener's ear heard with naught between them and the illusion of the composer's voice. The song of the swan is at once a melody of mordant and mysterious woe; uncanny harmonies and modulations make it yet more piteous, strange. There is sense of the great still place through which it rises and penetrates, falls and dies. The blackness of the music never brightens; phrases like stillness stirred expand faintly from the song like the eddy cloven by the white bird upon the dark waters. The imagery of the music never dims; the smallest of the means to expression never falters. Nothing is spared; yet nothing is wasted. A unified, unclouded, undiminished sensation possesses the hearer, spell-like—the magic of perfect achievement.

H. T. P.

Transcript Dec 30, 1917

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Ravel and Ropartz on Dr. Muck's Programme—Mr. McCormack for the Red Cross—Mr. de Gogorza in Fresh Pieces—Debussy's New Sonata

FIVE pieces—an exceptional number as Dr. Muck's programmes go—again fill the list for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The conspicuous item among them is the music from Ravel's ballet of "Daphnis and Chloe," first heard here in remarkable performance a fortnight ago and now repeated by general request. Beside it, in the second part of the programme, stands another French piece of a different quality—the well-made, tranquil and conventionally pleasing symphony of Ropartz revived for the first time since conductor and orchestra produced it first in America. Schumann, with the overture to his opera, "Genoveva"; Dohnanyi, with a "Concert-Piece" for Mr. Warnke to play upon the violoncello; and Händel with a swelling "Concerto Grosso"—in D minor, numbered 10 in Opus VI.—divide the first half of the concert. No piece by Schumann has thus far been played by the orchestra this season, while the ample periods and stately march of Händel's concerto will pleasure many a hearer.

Dec 22, 1917

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT

AN INNOVATION WITH AGREEABLE OUTCOME

Mr. Noack Substitutes Two Short Violin Pieces for the Usual "Soloist's" Concerto—The Pleasures of Chausson's "Poem" and Saint-Saens's "Havanaise" So Heard—Familiar Pieces Revitalized for Beginning and End

LAST season, so far as recent memory runs, Mr. Gebhard and Dr. Muck bravely set the example. Yesterday afternoon Mr. Noack and Dr. Muck began to make it precedent. There is not a sound reason in the world except the pestilent "tradition," why an "assisting artist" of violin, violoncello or piano, called to the Symphony Concerts, or having turn as "soloist" from the "first desks" of the orchestra, should count himself constrained to play a concerto. Though two centuries and more academically hallow the form, it has no signal interest in itself. Few composers ply it with ease or energy, invention or imagination; many more, especially among the moderns, chafe within it, stretching, twisting, transmuting the prescriptions. Often such music discloses less clearly and widely the individual quality of the virtuoso than many a less orthodox and freer handled piece. It is hard to fill the exacting form with musical matter interesting or animating in itself; while the process is a reversal of the normal procedure wherein the matter conditions the method. Under this limitation, hearers, by long habit, take a concerto as existing by virtue of the pianist or the violinist only and, primarily, for the display of his imparting skill.

Concertos for violoncello with few exceptions are tedium to the listening ear and, seemingly, vexation to the playing hand. Few are the concertos for violin that keep place in the active repertory, perhaps because the violinists are not diligent in the widening of it; as probably, because they find little to reward research. Not too numerous are the concertos for piano that virtuosi play and audiences hear with equal gladness. Rare must be the composer in these days who writes a concerto from inner and irresistible prompting; yet still he writes that he may do his full duty to the art of music, himself and the proclaiming virtuoso. Many a pianist and a violinist, were he to speak his full mind, would eagerly break this bondage of orthodoxy in which "the tradition" holds him fast. The more, then, the courage of Mr. Gebhard, when, called to the Symphony Concerts last winter, he played Franck's Symphonic Variations and Strauss's Burlesque, innstead of a concerto, and of Mr. Noack, who, rising from his place in the orchestra to be "soloist" yesterday, chose for pieces Chausson's "Poem" and Saint-Saëns's "Havanaise." Dr. Muck blessed both innovators; and so, once more, was the good gospel of freedom and individual choice preached at the Symphony Concerts to the fresh pleasure of the listening congregation. Liberty, as Monsieur Talleyrand shrewdly defined it, is the right to follow one's own will and the privilege to impose it, willy-nilly, on others. Yesterday Mr. Noack's hearers submitted gladly.

Moreover, such pieces as the violinist chose for his happy venture of Friday regain in a symphony concert the voice and semblance in which the composer designed them. Time and again both Chausson's "Poem" and Saint-Saëns's "Havanaise" are played in recitals with the orchestral background dimly suggested in a transcription for piano. Yet Saint-Saëns wrote his piece for violin and orchestra—even though it be a discreet orchestra often no more than pulsing with the rhythm of the Spanish dance, the Habanera, that underlays the whole music. Chausson, however, by no means held his band in such careful leash; his "Poem" is really a tone-poem for orchestra in which a "solo violin" as the phrase goes, is the distinctive voice. Heard merely with piano, the music penetrates and stirs the hearer in the melancholy progress through which shadow falls recurrently upon the brightening song or gathering energy quickly succumbs to regathering brooding. Heard as it was yesterday with orchestra and with Dr. Muck keenly sensitive alike to melodic line, harmonic color and inwrought euphonies, it rose to finer beauty of speech and graver intensity of mood. The songful melody of the violin sounded more richly, sensuously against the orchestral background; the shadows of melancholy seemed to play upon it more deeply, variously; it gained power when for a time the energy of the longing and the quest fitfully filled it; the fading into the calm of resignation was more wistful.

Mr. Noack loves the finesse of the violin, the spinning of his tone in undulating phrase and delicate lustres; his temperament in response to music might be more ardent. Often here has Mr. Ysaye played this music that he cherishes and to which he answers out of the deep stores of his mind and heart. Yet even with the implied reservation, the "Poem" rose yesterday to a beauty of sound and progress, to a sustained intensity of longing and questing mood, shot through with the lights and shadows of romantic fancy that without orchestra even such a master as Ysaye may hardly give it. Chausson probably knew not Tennyson; but he did know his Arthurian legends; and wrote his music that "follows the gleam." At best, Saint-Saëns's "Havanaise" is only dexterity and fancy; but an orchestra points the deftness of the piece in itself and for the violin, sustains the rhythmic beat; brightens the light contrasts. Moreover, it was music that welcomed Mr. Noack's technical grace, fineness of tone and quick sensibility. His audience had reason to reward him.

A piece that in itself stoutly withstands a century and more, and that Dr. Muck and the orchestra have more than once revitalized began the concert — Cherubini's overture to his "opera-ballet" of "Anacre-ennial repetition, gladden expectant ears. If ever Beethoven wrote a transparent, homely, sentimental, playful music, it is this symphony. Even the "little" eighth is artful, intricate, self-conscious beside it. Read into it what the commentators will, the Pastoral Symphony is Beethoven writing the limped, merry, plain-spoken, free-running music of the folk, however much the melodies therein are all his own. Of course, he transfigures it, and of course, such performance as it received yesterday glorifies it. Not for an instant does Dr. Muck stay the spontaneous flood of the music; yet cunningly he varies the curve and the progress of the current, speeding, staying, lightly modulating it. He is ingenious in mitigating by light and changeful strokes the repetitions with which the composer "establishes" his moods. He is adept with the long and short gradients of the music. He misses not a hint of the suggesting tonal colors; each phrase, each figure falls into pointing place in the cumulating tonal pattern; from first measure to last the instrumental song never sags or dulls. The method is as subtle as the outcome seems simple.

H. T. P.

Advertiser Dec 27, 1917

MELBA FAREWELL CHRISTMAS NIGHT

Will Be Soloist in Holiday Program of Boston Symphony Orchestra

Dr. Muck made no special selections for this year's Christmas program of the Symphony Orchestra. In the past few years he has fairly well exhausted available music appropriate to the day, so for this year he has made a straight program. The soloist will be Madame Melba. This will probably be her last appearance in concert in Boston this year.

The orchestral part of the program will open with Brahms' "Tragic" Overture. Then will come that fascinating work of Sibelius entitled "The Swan of Tuonela." The symphony will be Eschsikowsky's Fourth in F-Minor. The program in its proper order is as follows:

Mozart:
(a) Recitative, "Solitudini Amiche," and Aria, "Zeffiretti Lusinghiere" from "Idomeneo."
(b) Canzona, "Voi, che sapete," fet II., Scene 3, of "Le Nozze di Figaro."
Sibelius—"The Swan of Tuonela: Legend from the Finnish Folk-Epic, "Kalevala."
Debussy—Recitative and Aria of Lia, from "L' Enfant Prodigue."

* * *

The second of the series of choral concerts arranged for this season utilizing the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the chorus organized by Stephen Townsend will be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, January 22. The work will be the Second Symphony of Mahler.

The music that Mahler has written for the chorus is not so difficult as Beethoven's and, moreover, the training received for the Ninth Symphony has helped the chorus wonderfully in taking up the new work. Therefore, the rehearsals which come every Wednesday are not devoted entirely to the Mahler Symphony. The work has already begun on Bach's Passion Music, which will be heard at the third concert of the series, Tuesday evening, March 26.

EVENING POST
New York City

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Concert in Chicago Cancelled.

CHICAGO, December 22 (by A. P.).—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will not keep his engagement to give a concert here on February 3, it was announced to-day by the management of the theatre at which he was to appear. A representative of the orchestra, who made a trip through the Middle West, requested that the concert be cancelled, it was said.

on." As it was first played in 1803 before the "citizens" and the "citizenesses" of the Paris that still affected those democratic titles, could it possibly have sounded in a little opera house from a small orchestra as it sounds now when many instrumental voices swell it? The sonority of the opening chords carries all before it; the music gathers body in puissant progressions; before it is done, it has outspread into a broad and glowing tapestry of tones; the whole impression is of the unfolding design, the precise and economical means, the mounting mood, the sweeping eloquence of a soliloquy in a French classic tragedy. The power of the voices and the handling infuses into the music a loftiness of mood, manner, speech, of which "Anacreon" itself gives no hint. Yet were this power, this voice not inherent in the music, no conductor and no orchestra could of themselves summon it. Perhaps Cherubini took less thought of his "opera-ballet" when he wrote than of the creative impulse within him. "I follow my own way," he snapped at a detractor that may have felt this incongruity. And the way, as it sometimes happens, has handed the overture to "Anacreon" down to posterity more alive, according to history of past and experience of present, than the "citoyens" and "citoyennes" ever suspected.

The more for this same divining and imparting treatment and for a more varied eloquence of separate and collective speech did Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, in bl-

NY Post March 3, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The impending performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition which will be used. In the original version Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first with oboes d'amore, second with oboes da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the "basso continuo," or "figured bass." For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obligato, alowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers.

This "basso continuo" became a lost art long before the end of the 18th century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Robert Franz, and it is this which is generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performances it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original in form and manner. He will give it in its entirety, for the excisions usually made destroy to a great degree the significance of the work. He will give it in two sessions, the first part, which is essentially epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, which is dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding likewise that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version and all of the Franz version except certain accompaniments for string alone. His orchestra wil consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. It is greatly to his regret that he is unabl to secure in this country the oboes da caccia, but for these he will substitute the English horns, which in the modern orchestra correspond to the obsolete oboe da caccia. He has oboes d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for the Bach orchestra many of the arias and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. He has also written out the parts for the organ and piano, the latter taking the place rare type o public official who unites a very liberal and progressive social philosophy with the ability to get things done and to exercise effective leadership. They do not fear a liberal who lacks the power of leadership, but such a man as Mr. Baker, who joins the two, is recognized as most dangerous to the things for which they stand.

Another class joining in the attack on Secretary Baker is made up of the men who, notwithstanding their patriotic motives, are thinking emotionally without adequate knowledge. The see some definite weaknesses in our war preparations; they assail them "they must be cured and cured once." They are the passengers who instead of singing the praises of the

NY Herald March 3, 1918

THE PASSION MUSIC

The performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26th, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition that will be used. Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first, with oboi d'amore, second, with oboi da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the basso continuo or figured bass. For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obbligato, allowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment.

This basso continuo became a lost art, Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's score. He added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and kettledrums. A more familiar revision was made later by Franz, the one generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performance it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original. He will give the work in its entirety, in two sessions, the first part, epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented after Bach's death and holding that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and kettledrums in this music had he so wished, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version, also the Franz version, except certain accompaniments for strings alone. His orchestra will consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. He is unable to secure in this country the oboi da caccia, but for them he will substitute English horns. He has oboi d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration, and score for the Bach orchestra arias and choruses that in the original were accompanied by a sole instrument and the figured bass. He has written out parts for the organ and piano. The latter takes the place of the harpsichord. The coming performance will approximate the original performance in the Church of St. Thomas, Leipsic, as closely as modern conditions permit.

Stephen Townsend has been training the chorus of 400 voices. Rehearsals are held twice a week. There will be two full rehearsals for the entire choruses the week of March 11. The following week there will be two full rehearsals with orchestra led by Dr. Muck. Theer will be a boys' choir of 80 from churches in the city.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Joseph Malkin, who shares the first desk of the violoncellos with Mr. Warnke, will be the soloist at the 17th pair of Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play Lalo's Concerto. The program is short. The first number will be the "Sakuntala" Overture of Goldmark. Then will come the concerto. The symphony will be the second of Beethoven.

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
MAR 6 - 1

MRS. WILLIAM JAY LEADS A PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK

Four Subscribers to Boston Orchestra Concerts Demand That Major Higginson Find Another Conductor.

Opposition to the retaining of Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that he is pro-German, has reached a point where the Chronicle, a local publication devoted to society and the arts, prints in its March issue letters of protest addressed by Mrs. William Jay and other prominent subscribers to the New York concerts to Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, who controls the destinies of the famous orchestra.

Under heading "Doktor Muck Must Go," the editorial introduction to the article says in part:—"Mrs. Jay is performing a great public service in directing attention to the incumbency of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Jay's protest to Major Higginson is admirably aided by the fearless support of Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, all of whom have been subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York for many years. Major Higginson is obdurate before the appeals of the signatories of the ensuing correspondence." * * *

There is one remaining concert in New York this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On this occasion it will be decided whether New York ranks beside Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington, or whether she will reject the ardent protest against "giving aid and comfort to the enemy."

The original letter of protest was sent to Major Higginson January 22, signed personally by Mrs. Jay, Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, and it closes as follows:—

"None can impugn the appreciation of music—German music—of the undersigned. Although subscribers for many years to the Boston Symphony, we have been compelled, by the presence of Dr. Muck—an admitted ally of the Kaiser—to leave our seats unoccupied; thus signalizing our disapproval of the course you are pursuing."

In his reply Major Higginson said, among other things:—

"Dr. Muck is probably German in feeling, but he has done nothing wrong. He has been eminently satisfactory to me as a conductor and as a man. His industry, knowledge and power are great, and his place cannot be supplied in this country. * * *

"If your request were carried out, the orchestra would disband, and it would be owing to a small number of people who take your view. Do you care for this responsibility?"

"Five representative cities—Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—already have refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wishes of their citizens," wrote Mrs. Jay and her associate protesters. "You, over your signature, admit that Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector.'

"* * * With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by us."

"P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck has 'done nothing'?"

Transcript Dec 27, 1917

MUCK'S BAND AT AYER

Symphony Orchestra to Play Sunday Afternoon

'Nutmeg' Correspondents Called Too "Nosey"

Below-Zero Weather Stops Target Shoot

Court — Martial Sentences Two Men

Special to the Transcript:

Camp Devens, Ayer, Dec. 27—No entertainment, past or projected, has aroused the amount of interest in Camp Devens which accompanies the announcement this morning to the effect that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, is to give a concert in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium here at three o'clock Sunday afternoon.

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
1918

CASE OF KARL MUCK.

EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

Protest of Mrs. Jay against Karl ... welcomed by a large number of ... Karl Muck advertises himself in "Who in America" for 1916-1917 as ... leave of absence from the Kaiser. ... intimate friend of Bernstorff's. ... here twice a month with twenty-... agents. Like Nero, he celebrates ... with music. * * *

... does the government let in these ... aliens when it acknowledges it can ... control those already in our midst? ... and company "have done no wrong." ... year. They have done and do a great ... in supporting the enemy of the world—... Kaiser. Out with them!

AMERICAN.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 6, 1918.

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 9 1918

Mrs. Jay and Her Associates in a New Muck Attack

Major Higginson's Statements About German Conductor Provoke Sharp Rejoinder from Subscribers.

Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, New York subscribers to the Boston Orchestra concerts, whose protest to Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, against the retention of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor have attracted attention in musical circles recently, have not closed their campaign against the German leader.

They made public yesterday a copy of Major Higginson's last letter to Mrs. Jay, under date of March 5, and also their reply.

"Judging by your statements, you have evidently at your command more facts than I have, and are ignorant of facts which must rule," wrote Major Higginson. "I have made certain contracts which must in common honesty be carried out. You would impose your will on a great and loyal public which disagrees with you. Can any man—or woman—prove that he is not a liar or a thief?"

To this Mrs. Jay, in behalf of herself and associates, wrote to the wealthy patron of the Boston Orchestra:—

"If we have at our command more facts than you have, how can we be less ignorant of facts than you?

"You write, 'I have made certain contracts which must in common honesty be carried out.' There is a 'Trading with the Enemy' act in force. If the citizens of Washington, Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg and Springfield, Mass., can cancel the Boston Symphony contracts with you, are these citizens in your eyes dishonest?

"You write, 'You would impose your will on a great and loyal public which disagrees with you.' Summarizing the action of the 'loyal citizens' above named, you must admit that 'a great and loyal public' does not disagree with us.

"You write, 'Can any man (or woman) prove that he is not a liar or a thief?' If a man admits he is a liar or a thief as clearly as Dr. Muck admits his pro-Germanism, what is the need of any proof? Will you publish the names of the persons in New York who are as active in their support of Dr. Muck as we have been in publishing those who, on patriotic grounds, oppose him steadfastly?"

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
MAR 8 1918

MUCK MUST GO

By JOHN H. RAFTERY.

Herr Doktor Karl Muck, Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector, alien enemy and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, must go. The March number of the Chronicle projects the proposition "Doktor Muck Must Go" and proceeds to show the reason why by publishing the correspondence between three subscribers to the Boston Symphony in New York and Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the orchestra society of Boston, in which Mrs. William Jay, living up to the patriotic achievements of her ancestors, demands the dismissal of Muck as "a man who bears the German Emperor's decoration," "whose sympathies are most palpably opposed to the United States" and "whose resignation was most justifiably forced by public opinion."

It will be remembered that Doktor Muck once tendered his resignation and that Major Higgins refused to accept it. Realizing that he should go, the court musician of the Kaiser went. But Higgins called him back. Mrs. Jay and her protesting associates say that Muck's resignation was forced by public opinion. Major Higgins reports that the public of Boston and of New York continue not only to tolerate, but to welcome Doktor Muck by attending his concerts and generously applauding his conductorship.

Both of these apparently contradictory statements are measurably right. There is in New York, as in every large city, an element of the public which contends that "art is international." Also there is a passively non-patriotic wing, a public of musically intoxicated "addicts" and, worst of all, a downright pro-German public which, together with its less virulent devotees of German musik kultur, are sufficient to pack Carnegie Hall and vigorously applaud Conductor Muck and the splendid orchestra which he directs.

To all letters of protest against the continuance of the Kaiser's court musician as head of an American orchestra Major Higginson has remained obdurate. He has not failed to point to the excellent musical qualifications of Muck, to the superiority of the orchestra, to the pleasure it brought into "the gray lives" of its audiences, to the awful alternative of throwing the members of the orchestra out of work and finally to the presumed fact that "Doktor Muck has done nothing wrong." In what the Chronicle heads as "A Final Warning," the New York objectors to the continuance of Conductor Muck wrote to Major Higginson as follows:

"Dear Sir:—In reply to your courteous letter dated January 30, 1918, sent to us, the undersigned, who protested against Doktor Karl Muck's continuance as conductor of the Boston Symphony, we beg to point out further reasons for his withdrawal—in disagreement with your masterly defense.

"Five representative cities—Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—have already refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wishes of their citizens. You, over your signature, admit that Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title, 'Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector.'

"There seems to be only one point to be considered. Aren't aid and comfort being given to the enemy in retaining in such an important capacity a musician so terribly entangled with German kultur? Isn't is cause for congratulation at Potsdam and in Wilhelmstrasse that a man so distinguished as yourself should support Doktor Muck against the aspersions of other Americans? What weigh the economic fates of the members of your excellent orchestra against the political significance of Muck glorified before the few remaining German sympathizers in the large cities of the East? Isn't national unity the one great aim? Are we to pour forth our blood and nerve and brain and treasure and still hold to German musical domination? Rather a thousand times that the orchestral traditions fade from our lives than one hour be added to the war's duration by clinging to this last tentacle of the German octopus!

"With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony, we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by. Yours very truly,

(Signed)
"Lucie Jay.
"Carolyn K. Wright.
"Adelaide Douglas.
"George L. Ingraham.

"P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck 'has done nothing'?"

There is no question in my mind th

Monitor March 9, 1918

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala," which opened the seventeenth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, may or may not be worth a place in these concerts. That, after all, must remain, like any purely personal question, a ready and fruitful topic for discussion in New York, Providence or wherever it is that they object to the programs of this orchestra. As it was played yesterday, the music was dignified by an inspiration of performance that eluded the composer in the writing of it. The remarkable attack of this band has never had better illustration than in this overture, commonplace though the occasion for it was. There is a certain looking forward to Brahms in this work, though it seems in the attempted use of orchestral color rather than in the invention. The cumulation of the brass in the "Tragic" overture gives a poignant emotion; added brass in the "Sakuntala" results merely in a tickling of the ears. The audience insisted on the orchestra rising to acknowledge its applause.

In another column of this issue is quoted a letter of Tschaikowsky anent Lalo, who, says the Russian, "seeks new forms without trying to be profound." No charge of profundity could be brought against the composer because of the concerto for 'cello and orchestra which Mr. Malkin, who sits at the first desk of the 'cellos, played yesterday. Its last performance in Boston had been by Pablo Casals, whose vigorous and far-pervading tone had evoked a songfulness not easily forgotten. Mr. Malkin strove nobly, but except in the second movement, entitled by the seeker after new forms "intermezzo" rather than "andante," the voice of his instrument was too light. He has a facile technique, resulting in an agreeable tone which in this slow movement reached its greatest heights of romantic feeling.

There is a quiet enjoyment in the familiar classics equaled by no other f... musical entertainment, espe... when they are so superbly ... as was the second symphony, ... 36, of Beethoven. Pioneers of the ...sic of our day, these pieces are still ...tent to give pleasure and profit and ...eir charm is a part of our musical experience which we hope long to keep fresh. In the second movement of this symphony appeared for a few moments the full power of the string section of the orchestra, like a quartet in the precision of its technique, but of a wonderful, permeating volume. Especially surprising was the volume coming from the second violins, which ordinarily are kept rather subdued.

Boston Music Notes

BOSTON, Mass.—There will be no symphony concerts the coming week as the orchestra is making its last trip of the season to the South. It will give its usual concerts in Philadelphia Monday night, New York Thursday night and Saturday afternoon, and Brooklyn Friday night.

MALKIN CLEVER IN SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Orchestra Gives Beethoven's Works in D Major, With the Goldmark Overture

By FRED J. McISAAC.

Joseph Malkin, the respected cellist of the Boston Symphony, was soloist at yesterday afternoon's concert. He played the Lalo concerto for violincello. The other numbers were the Goldmark Overture "Sakuntala" and the Beethoven Symphony in D major.

Doctor Muck has recently persisted in placing the symphony at the end of his program instead of the beginning. Whether it is a silent protest at the situation he has been in since we declared war on Germany, "the world turned upside down," or whether it is just an experiment, nobody knows.

I like to hear my symphony in the early half of the afternoon when I am fresh and eager, rather than after half an hour of a violoncello concerto, even when performed by such an excellent musician as Malkin.

Some of the conductor's traducers have been charging that he would not play works by Saint-Saens and D'Indy, because of the anti-German activity of those French composers. Just as he overwhelmed the people who didn't think he would play "The Star Spangled Banner" by playing it at every performance, so he has confounded these othe ...ritics by announcing the Saint ...ns Symphony No. 3, for next wee

NY Post March 3, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The impending performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition which will be used. In the original version Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first with oboes d'amore, second with oboes da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the "basso continuo," or "figured bass." For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obligato, alowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers.

This "basso continuo" became a lost art long before the end of the 18th century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Robert Franz, and it is this which is generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performances it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original in form and manner. He will give it in its entirety, for the excisions usually made destroy to a great degree the significance of the work. He will give it in two sessions, the first part, which is essentially epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, which is dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding likewise that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version and all of the Franz version except certain accompaniments for string alone. His orchestra wil consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. It is greatly to his regret that he is unabl to secure in this country the oboes da caccia, but for these he will substitute the English horns, which in the modern orchestra correspond to the obsolete oboe da caccia. He has oboes d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for the Bach orchestra many of the arias and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. He has also written out the parts for the organ and piano, the latter taking the place rare type o public official who unites a very liberal and progressive social philosophy with the ability to get things done and to exercise effective leadership. They do not fear a liberal who lacks the power of leadership, but such a man as Mr. Baker, who joins the two, is recognized as most dangerous to the things for which they stand.

Another class joining in the attack on Secretary Baker is made up of the men who, notwithstanding their patriotic motives, are thinking emotionally without adequate knowledge. They see some definite weaknesses in our war preparations; they assail them "they must be cured and cured ; once." They are the passengers wh ...stead of singing the praises of t...

NEW Y...

ss

Mrs. J...

Associ...

Major Higginson's ...

German Conductor Pro...

Rejoinder from Su...

Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Willi... Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright a... Judge George L. Ingraham, New York subscribers to the Boston Orchestra concerts, whose protest to Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, against the retention of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor have attracted attention in musical circles recently, have not closed their campaign against the German leader.

They made public yesterday a copy of Major Higginson's last letter to Mrs. Jay, under date of March 5, and also their reply.

"Judging by your statements, you have evidently at your command more facts than I have, and are ignorant of facts which must rule," wrote Major Higginson. "I have made certain contracts which must in common honesty be carried out. You would impose your will on a great and loyal public which disagrees with you. Can any man—or woman—prove that he is not a liar or a thief?"

To this Mrs. Jay, in behalf of herself and associates, wrote to the wealthy patron of the Boston Orchestra:—

"If we have at our command more facts than you have, how can we be less ignorant of facts than you?

"You write, 'I have made certain contracts which must in common honesty be carried out.' There is a 'Trading with the Enemy' act in force. If the citizens of Washington, Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg and Springfield, Mass., can cancel the Boston Symphony contracts with you, are these citizens in your eyes dishonest?

"You write, 'You would impose your will on a great and loyal public which disagrees with you.' Summarizing the action of the 'loyal citizens' above named, you must admit that 'a great and loyal public' does not disagree with us.

"You write, 'Can any man (or woman) prove that he is not a liar or a thief?' If a man admits he is a liar or a thief as clearly as Dr. Muck admits his pro-Germanism, what is the need of any proof? Will you publish the names of the persons in New York who are as active in their support of Dr. Muck as we have been in publishing those who, on patriotic grounds, oppose him steadfastly?"

NY Herald March 3, 1918

THE PASSION MUSIC

The performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26th, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition that will be used. Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first, with oboi d'amore, second, with oboi da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the basso continuo or figured bass. For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obbligato, allowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment.

This basso continuo became a lost art, Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's score. He added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and kettledrums. A more familiar revision was made later by Franz, the one generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performance it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original. He will give the work in its entirety, in two sessions, the first part, epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented after Bach's death and holding that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and kettledrums in this music had he so wished, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version, also the Franz version, except certain accompaniments for strings alone. His orchestra will consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. He is unable to secure in this country the oboi da caccia, but for them he will substitute English horns. He has oboi d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration, and score for the Bach orchestra arias and choruses that in the original were accompanied by a sole instrument and the figured bass. He has written out parts for the organ and piano. The latter takes the place of the harpsichord. The coming performance will approximate the original performance in the Church of St. Thomas, Leipsic, as closely as modern conditions permit.

Stephen Townsend has been training the chorus of 400 voices. Rehearsals are held twice a week. There will be two full rehearsals for the entire choruses the week of March 11. The following week there will be two full rehearsals with orchestra led by Dr. Muck. Theer will be a boys' choir of 80 from churches in the city.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Joseph Malkin, who shares the first desk of the violoncellos with Mr. Warnke, will be the soloist at the 17th pair of Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play Lalo's Concerto. The program is short. The first number will be the "Sakuntala" Overture of Goldmark. Then will come the concerto. The symphony will be the second of Beethoven.

...YORK HERALD

...ew York City

MAR 6 1918

THE CASE OF KARL MUCK.

To the Editor of the Herald:—

The protest of Mrs. Jay against Karl Muck is welcomed by a large number of citizens. Karl Muck advertises himself in "Who's Who in America" for 1916-1917 as here on leave of absence from the Kaiser. He was an intimate friend of Bernstorff's. He comes here twice a month with twenty-two alien agents. Like Nero, he celebrates destruction with music. * * *

Why does the government let in these enemy aliens when it acknowledges it cannot control those already in our midst? Muck and company "have done no wrong," we hear. They have done and do a great one in supporting the enemy of the world—the Kaiser. Out with them!

AMERICAN.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 6, 1918.

From NEW YORK HERALD

Address New York City

MAR 6 - 1...

MRS. WILLIAM JAY LEADS A PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK

Four Subscribers to Boston Orchestra Concerts Demand That Major Higginson Find Another Conductor.

Opposition to the retaining of Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that he is pro-German, has reached a point where the Chronicle, a local publication devoted to society and the arts, prints in its March issue letters of protest addressed by Mrs. William Jay and other prominent subscribers to the New York concerts to Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, who controls the destinies of the famous orchestra.

Under heading "Doktor Muck Must Go," the editorial introduction to the article says in part:—"Mrs. Jay is performing a great public service in directing attention to the incumbency of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Jay's protest to Major Higginson is admirably aided by the fearless support of Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, all of whom have been subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York for many years. Major Higginson is obdurate before the appeals of the signatories of the ensuing correspondence." * * *

There is one remaining concert in New York this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On this occasion it will be decided whether New York ranks beside Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington, or whether she will reject the ardent protest against "giving aid and comfort to the enemy."

The original letter of protest was sent to Major Higginson January 22, signed personally by Mrs. Jay, Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, and it closes as follows:—

"None can impugn the appreciation of music—German music—of the undersigned. Although subscribers for many years to the Boston Symphony, we have been compelled, by the presence of Dr. Muck—an admitted ally of the Kaiser—to leave our seats unoccupied; thus signalizing our disapproval of the course you are pursuing."

In his reply Major Higginson said, among other things:—

"Dr. Muck is probably German in feeling, but he has done nothing wrong. He has been eminently satisfactory to me as a conductor and as a man. His industry, knowledge and power are great, and his place cannot be supplied in this country. * * *

"If your request were carried out, the orchestra would disband, and it would be owing to a small number of people who take your view. Do you care for this responsibility?"

"Five representative cities—Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—already have refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wishes of their citizens," wrote Mrs. Jay and her associate protesters. "You, over your signature, admit that Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector.'

"* * * With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by us."

"P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck has 'done nothing'?"

Transcript Dec 27, 1917

MUCK'S BAND AT AYER

Symphony Orchestra to Play Sunday Afternoon

'Nutmeg' Correspondents Called Too "Nosey"

Below-Zero Weather Stops Target Shoot

Transcript Dec. 27

Court – Martial Sentences Two Men

Special to the Transcript:

Camp Devens, Ayer, Dec. 27—No entertainment, past or projected, has aroused the amount of interest in Camp Devens which accompanies the announcement this morning to the effect that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, is to give a concert in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium here at three o'clock Sunday afternoon.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

...ss: New York City

MAR 8 1918

MUCK MUST GO

By JOHN H. RAFTERY.

Herr Doktor Karl Muck, Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector, alien enemy and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, must go. The March number of the Chronicle projects the proposition "Doktor Muck Must Go" and proceeds to show the reason why by publishing the correspondence between three subscribers to the Boston Symphony in New York and Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the orchestra society of Boston, in which Mrs. William Jay, living up to the patriotic achievements of her ancestors, demands the dismissal of Muck as "a man who bears the German Emperor's decoration," "whose sympathies are most patably opposed to the United States" and "whose resignation was most justifiably forced by public opinion."

It will be remembered that Doktor Muck once tendered his resignation and that Major Higgins refused to accept it. Realizing that he should go, the court musician of the Kaiser went. But Higgins called him back. Mrs. Jay and her protesting associates say that Muck's resignation was forced by public opinion. Major Higgins retorts that the public of Boston and of New York continue not only to tolerate, but to welcome Doktor Muck by attending his concerts and generously applauding his conductorship.

Both of these apparently contradictory statements are measurably right. There is in New York, as in every large city, an element of the public which contends that "art is international." Also there is a passively non-patriotic wing, a public of musically intoxicated "addicts" and, worst of all, a downright pro-German public which, together with its less virulent devotees of German musik kultur, are sufficient to pack Carnegie Hall and vigorously applaud Conductor Muck and the splendid orchestra which he directs.

To all letters of protest against the continuance of the Kaiser's court musician as head of an American orchestra Major Higginson has remained obdurate. He has not failed to point to the excellent musical qualifications of Muck, to the superiority of the orchestra, to the pleasure it brought into "the gray lives" of its audiences, to the awful alternative of throwing the members of the orchestra out of work and finally to the presumed fact that "Doktor Muck has done nothing wrong." In what the Chronicle heads as "A Final Warning," the New York objectors to the continuance of Conductor Muck wrote to Major Higginson as follows:

"Dear Sir:—In reply to your courteous letter dated January 30, 1918, sent to us, the undersigned, who protested against Doktor Karl Muck's continuance as conductor of the Boston Symphony, we beg to point out further reasons for his withdrawal—in disagreement with your masterly defense.

"Five representative cities—Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—have already refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wisnes of their citizens. You, over your signature, admit that Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title, 'Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector.'

"There seems to be only one point to be considered. Aren't aid and comfort being given to the enemy in retaining in such an important capacity a musician so terribly entangled with German kultur? Isn't is cause for congratulation at Potsdam and in Wilhelmstrasse that a man so distinguished as yourself should support Doktor Muck against the aspersions of other Americans? What weigh the economic fates of the members of your excellent orchestra against the political significance of Muck glorified before the few remaining German sympathizers in the large cities of the East? Isn't national unity the one great aim? Are we to pour forth our blood and nerve and brain and treasure and still hold to German musical domination? Rather a thousand times that the orchestral traditions fade from our lives than one hour be added to the war's duration by clinging to this last tentacle of the German octopus!

"With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony, we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by. Yours very truly, (Signed) "Lucie Jay.

"Carolyn K. Wright.
"Adelaide Douglas.
"George L. Ingraham.

"P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck 'has done nothing'?"

There is no question in my mind th...

Monitor March 9, 1918

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala," which opened the seventeenth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, may or may not be worth a place in these concerts. That, after all, must remain, like any purely personal question, a ready and fruitful topic for discussion in New York, Providence or wherever it is that they object to the programs of this orchestra. As it was played yesterday, the music was dignified by an inspiration of performance that eluded the composer in the writing of it. The remarkable attack of this band has never had better illustration than in this overture, commonplace though the occasion for it was. There is a certain looking forward to Brahms in this work, though it seems in the attempted use of orchestral color rather than in the invention. The cumulation of the brass in the "Tragic" overture gives a poignant emotion; added brass in the "Sakuntala" results merely in a tickling of the ears. The audience insisted on the orchestra rising to acknowledge its applause.

In another column of this issue is quoted a letter of Tschaikowsky anent Lalo, who, says the Russian, "seeks new forms without trying to be profound." No charge of profundity could be brought against the composer because of the concerto for 'cello and orchestra which Mr. Malkin, who sits at the first desk of the 'cellos, played yesterday. Its last performance in Boston had been by Pablo Casals, whose vigorous and far-pervading tone had evoked a songfulness not easily forgotten. Mr. Malkin strove nobly, but except in the second movement, entitled by the seeker after new forms "intermezzo" rather than "andante," the voice of his instrument was too light. He has a facile technique, resulting in an agreeable tone which in this slow movement reached its greatest heights of romantic feeling.

There is a quiet enjoyment in the familiar classics equaled by no other f... musical entertainment, espe... when they are so superbly ...d as was the second symphony, ...36, of Beethoven. Pioneers of the ...sic of our day, these pieces are still ...tent to give pleasure and profit and ...eir charm is a part of our musical experience which we hope long to keep fresh. In the second movement of this symphony appeared for a few moments the full power of the string section of the orchestra, like a quartet in the precision of its technique, but of a wonderful, permeating volume. Especially surprising was the volume coming from the second violins, which ordinarily are kept rather subdued.

Boston Music Notes

BOSTON, Mass.—There will be no symphony concerts the coming week as the orchestra is making its last trip of the season to the South. It will give its usual concerts in Philadelphia Monday night, New York Thursday night and Saturday afternoon, and Brooklyn Friday night.

MALKIN CLEVER IN SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Transcript

Orchestra Gives Beethoven's Works in D Major, With the Goldmark Overture

By FRED J. McISAAC.

Joseph Malkin, the respected cellist of the Boston Symphony, was soloist at yesterday afternoon's concert. He played the Lalo concerto for violincello. The other numbers were the Goldmark Overture "Sakuntala" and the Beethoven Symphony in D major.

Doctor Muck has recently persisted in placing the symphony at the end of his program instead of the beginning. Whether it is a silent protest at the situation he has been in since we declared war on Germany, "the world turned upside down," or whether it is just an experiment, nobody knows.

I like to hear my symphony in the early half of the afternoon when I am fresh and eager, rather than after half an hour of a violoncello concerto, even when performed by such an excellent musician as Malkin.

Some of the conductor's traducers have been charging that he would not play works by Saint-Saens and D'Indy, because of the anti-German activity of those French composers. Just as he overwhelmed the people who didn't think he would play "The Star Spangled Banner" by playing it at every performance, so he has confounded these othe... critics by announcing the Saint... ...ns Symphony No. 3, for next wee...

NY Post March 3, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The impending performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition which will be used. In the original version Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first with oboes d'amore, second with oboes da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the "basso continuo," or "figured bass." For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obligato, alowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers.

This "basso continuo" became a lost art long before the end of the 18th century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Robert Franz, and it is this which is generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performances it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original in form and manner. He will give it in its entirety, for the excisions usually made destroy to a great degree the significance of the work. He will give it in two sessions, the first part, which is essentially epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, which is dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding likewise that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version and all of the Franz version except certain accompaniments for string alone. His orchestra wil consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. It is greatly to his regret that he is unabl to secure in this country the oboes da caccia, but for these he will substitute the English horns, which in the modern orchestra correspond to the obsolete oboe da caccia. He has oboes d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for the Bach orchestra many of the arias and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. He has also written out the parts for the organ and piano, the latter taking the place rare type o public official who unites a very liberal and progressive social philosophy with the ability to get things done and to exercise effective leadership. They do not fear a liberal who lacks the power of leadership, but such a man as Mr. Baker, who joins the two, is recognized as most dangerous to the things for which they stand.

Another class joining in the attack on Secretary Baker is made up of the men who, notwithstanding their patriotic motives, are thinking emotionally without adequate knowledge. The see some definite weaknesses in our war preparations; they assail them "they must be cured and cured instantly." They are the passengers who instead of singing the praises of the

NY Herald March 3, 1918

THE PASSION MUSIC

The performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26th, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition that will be used. Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first, with oboi d'amore, second, with oboi da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the basso continuo or figured bass. For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obbligato, allowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment.

This basso continuo became a lost art, Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's score. He added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and kettledrums. A more familiar revision was made later by Franz, the one generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performance it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original. He will give the work in its entirety, in two sessions, the first part, epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented after Bach's death and holding that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and kettledrums in this music had he so wished, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version, also the Franz version, except certain accompaniments for strings alone. His orchestra will consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. He is unable to secure in this country the oboi da caccia, but for them he will substitute English horns. He has oboi d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration, and score for the Bach orchestra arias and choruses that in the original were accompanied by a sole instrument and the figured bass. He has written out parts for the organ and piano. The latter takes the place of the harpsichord. The coming performance will approximate the original performance in the Church of St. Thomas, Leipsic, as closely as modern conditions permit.

Stephen Townsend has been training the chorus of 400 voices. Rehearsals are held twice a week. There will be two full rehearsals for the entire choruses the week of March 11. The following week there will be two full rehearsals with orchestra led by Dr. Muck. Theer will be a boys' choir of 80 from churches in the city.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Joseph Malkin, who shares the first desk of the violoncellos with Mr. Warnke, will be the soloist at the 17th pair of Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play Lalo's Concerto. The program is short. The first number will be the "Sakuntala" Overture of Goldmark. Then will come the concerto. The symphony will be the second of Beethoven.

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 1918

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
MAR 6 - 1

MRS. WILLIAM JAY LEADS A PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK

Four Subscribers to Boston Orchestra Concerts Demand That Major Higginson Find Another Conductor.

Opposition to the retaining of Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that he is pro-German, has reached a point where the Chronicle, a local publication devoted to society and the arts, prints in its March issue letters of protest addressed by Mrs. William Jay and other prominent subscribers to the New York concerts to Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, who controls the destinies of the famous orchestra.

Under heading "Doktor Muck Must Go," the editorial introduction to the article says in part:—"Mrs. Jay is performing a great public service in directing attention to the incumbency of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Jay's protest to Major Higginson is admirably aided by the fearless support of Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, all of whom have been subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York for many years. Major Higginson is obdurate before the appeals of the signatories of the ensuing correspondence." * * *

There is one remaining concert in New York this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On this occasion it will be decided whether New York ranks beside Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington, or whether she will reject the ardent protest against "giving aid and comfort to the enemy."

The original letter of protest was sent to Major Higginson January 22, signed personally by Mrs. Jay, Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, and it closes as follows:—

"None can impugn the appreciation of music—German music—of the undersigned. Although subscribers for many years to the Boston Symphony, we have been compelled, by the presence of Dr. Muck—an admitted ally of the Kaiser—to leave our seats unoccupied; thus signalizing our disapproval of the course you are pursuing."

In his reply Major Higginson said, among other things:—

"Dr. Muck is probably German in feeling, but he has done nothing wrong. He has been eminently satisfactory to me as a conductor and as a man. His industry, knowledge and power are great, and his place cannot be supplied in this country. * * *

"If your request were carried out, the orchestra would disband, and it would be owing to a small number of people who take your view. Do you care for this responsibility?"

"Five representative cities—Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—already have refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wishes of their citizens," wrote Mrs. Jay and her associate protesters. "You, over your signature, admit that Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title 'Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector.'

"* * * With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by us."

"P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck has 'done nothing'?"

Transcript Dec 27, 1917

MUCK'S BAND AT AYER

Symphony Orchestra to Play Sunday Afternoon

'Nutmeg' Correspondents Called Too "Nosey"

Below-Zero Weather Stops Target Shoot

Transcript Dec 27

Court – Martial Sentences Two Men

Special to the Transcript:

Camp Devens, Ayer, Dec. 27—No entertainment, past or projected, has aroused the amount of interest in Camp Devens which accompanies the announcement this morning to the effect that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, is to give a concert in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium here at three o'clock Sunday afternoon.

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 1918

THE CASE OF

To THE EDITOR OF THE

The protest of 1884 Muck is welcome citizens. Karl M "Who's Who in here on leave of ab. He was an intimate fri He comes here twice a mon two alien agents. Like Nero, destruction with music. * * *

Why does the government let in the enemy aliens when it acknowledges it cannot control those already in our midst? Muck and company "have done no wrong," we hear. They have done and do a great one in supporting the enemy of the world—the Kaiser. Out with them!

AMERICAN.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 6, 1918.

BROOKKEEPER time thoroughly take full charge double inter steady position
BROOKKEEPER afternoon
Herald.
BUTLER
shaves
Wrighte
Herald

NEW Y ss
Mrs. J
Associ
A

Major Higginson's
German Conductor Pro
Rejoinder from Su

Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Willia Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright a Judge George L. Ingraham, New York subscribers to the Boston Orchestra concerts, whose protest to Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, against the retention of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor have attracted attention in musical circles recently, have not closed their campaign against the German leader.

They made public yesterday a copy of Major Higginson's last letter to Mrs. Jay, under date of March 5, and also their reply.

"Judging by your statements, you have evidently at your command more facts than I have, and are ignorant of facts which must rule," wrote Major Higginson. "I have made certain contracts which must in common honesty be carried out. You would impose your will on a great and loyal public which disagrees with you. Can any man—or woman—prove that he is not a liar or a thief?"

To this Mrs. Jay, in behalf of herself and associates, wrote to the wealthy patron of the Boston Orchestra:—

"If we have at our command more facts than you have, how can we be less ignorant of facts than you?

"You write, 'I have made certain contracts which must in common honesty be carried out.' There is a 'Trading with the Enemy' act in force. If the citizens of Washington, Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg and Springfield, Mass., can cancel the Boston Symphony contracts with you, are these citizens in your eyes dishonest?

"You write, 'You would impose your will on a great and loyal public which disagrees with you.' Summarizing the action of the 'loyal citizens' above named, you must admit that 'a great and loyal public' does not disagree with us.

"You write, 'Can any man (or woman) prove that he is not a liar or a thief?' If a man admits he is a liar or a thief as clearly as Dr. Muck admits his pro-Germanism, what is the need of any proof? Will you publish the names of the persons in New York who are as active in their support of Dr. Muck as we have been in publishing those who, on patriotic grounds, oppose him steadfastly?"

MORNING TELEGRAPH
ss: New York City
MAR 8 1918

MUCK MUST GO

By JOHN H. RAFTERY.

Herr Doktor Karl Muck, Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector, alien enemy and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, must go. The March number of the Chronicle projects the proposition "Doktor Muck Must Go" and proceeds to show the reason why by publishing the correspondence between three subscribers to the Boston Symphony in New York and Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the orchestra society of Boston, in which Mrs. William Jay, living up to the patriotic achievements of her ancestors, demands the dismissal of Muck as "a man who bears the German Emperor's decoration," "whose sympathies are most palpably opposed to the United States" and "whose resignation was most justifiably forced by public opinion."

It will be remembered that Doktor Muck once tendered his resignation and that Major Higgins refused to accept it. Realizing that he should go, the country musician of the Kaiser went. But Higgins called him back. Mrs. Jay and her protesting associates say that Muck's resignation was forced by public opinion. Major Higgins retorts that the public of Boston and of New York continue not only to tolerate, but to welcome Doktor Muck by attending his concerts and generously applauding his conductorship.

Both of these apparently contradictory statements are measurably right. There is in New York, as in every large city, an element of the public which contends that "art is international." Also there is a passively non-patriotic wing, a public of musically intoxicated "addicts" and, worst of all, a downright pro-German public which, together with its less virulent devotees of German musik kultur, are sufficient to pack Carnegie Hall and vigorously applaud Conductor Muck and the splendid orchestra which he directs.

To all letters of protest against the continuance of the Kaiser's court musician as head of an American orchestra Major Higginson has remained obdurate. He has not failed to point to the excellent musical qualifications of Muck, to the superiority of the orchestra, to the pleasure it brought into "the gray lives" of its audiences, to the awful alternative of throwing the members of the orchestra out of work and finally to the presumed fact that "Doktor Muck has done nothing wrong." In what the Chronicle heads as "A Final Warning," the New York objectors to the continuance of Conductor Muck wrote to Major Higginson as follows:

"Dear Sir:—In reply to your courteous letter dated January 30, 1918, sent to us, the undersigned, who protested against Doktor Karl Muck's continuance as conductor of the Boston Symphony, we beg to point out further reasons for his withdrawal—in disagreement with your masterly defense.

"Five representative cities—Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—have already refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wisnes of their citizens. You, over your signature, admit that Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title, 'Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector.'

"There seems to be only one point to be considered. Aren't aid and comfort being given to the enemy in retaining in such an important capacity a musician so terribly entangled with German kultur? Isn't is cause for congratulation at Potsdam and in Wilhelmstrasse that a man so distinguished as yourself should support Doktor Muck against the aspersions of other Americans? What weigh the economic fates of the members of your excellent orchestra against the political significance of Muck glorified before the few remaining German sympathizers in the large cities of the East? Isn't national unity the one great aim? Are we to pour forth our blood and nerve and brain and treasure and still hold to German musical domination? Rather a thousand times that the orchestral traditions fade from our lives than one hour be added to the war's duration by clinging to this last tentacle of the German octopus!

"With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony, we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by. Yours very truly, (Signed) "Lucie Jay.

"Carolyn K. Wright.
"Adelaide Douglas.
"George L. Ingraham.

"P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck 'has done nothing'?"

There is no question in my mind th

Monitor March 9, 1918

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—Goldmark's overture to "Sakuntala," which opened the seventeenth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, may or may not be worth a place in these concerts. That, after all, must remain, like any purely personal question, a ready and fruitful topic for discussion in New York, Providence or wherever it is that they object to the programs of this orchestra. As it was played yesterday, the music was dignified by an inspiration of performance that eluded the composer in the writing of it. The remarkable attack of this band has never had better illustration than in this overture, commonplace though the occasion for it was. There is a certain looking forward to Brahms in this work, though it seems in the attempted use of orchestral color rather than in the invention. The cumulation of the brass in the "Tragic" overture gives a poignant emotion; added brass in the "Sakuntala" results merely in a tickling of the ears. The audience insisted on the orchestra rising to acknowledge its applause.

In another column of this issue is quoted a letter of Tschaikowsky anent Lalo, who, says the Russian, "seeks new forms without trying to be profound." No charge of profundity could be brought against the composer because of the concerto for 'cello and orchestra which Mr. Malkin, who sits at the first desk of the 'cellos, played yesterday. Its last performance in Boston had been by Pablo Casals, whose vigorous and far-pervading tone had evoked a songfulness not easily forgotten. Mr. Malkin strove nobly, but except in the second movement, entitled by the seeker after new forms "intermezzo" rather than "andante," the voice of his instrument was too light. He has a facile technique, resulting in an agreeable tone which in this slow movement reached its greatest heights of romantic feeling.

There is a quiet enjoyment in the familiar classics equaled by no other f[illegible] musical entertainment, espe[illegible] when they are so superbly [illegible] as was the second symphony, [illegible]36, of Beethoven. Pioneers of the [illegible]sic of our day, these pieces are still [illegible]tent to give pleasure and profit and [illegible]eir charm is a part of our musical experience which we hope long to keep fresh. In the second movement of this symphony appeared for a few moments the full power of the string section of the orchestra, like a quartet in the precision of its technique, but of a wonderful, permeating volume. Especially surprising was the volume coming from the second violins, which ordinarily are kept rather subdued.

Boston Music Notes

BOSTON, Mass.—There will be no symphony concerts the coming week as the orchestra is making its last trip of the season to the South. It will give its usual concerts in Philadelphia Monday night, New York Thursday night and Saturday afternoon, and Brooklyn Friday night.

MALKIN CLEVER IN SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Morning News

Orchestra Gives Beethoven's Works in D Major, With the Goldmark Overture

By FRED J. McISAAC.

Joseph Malkin, the respected cellist of the Boston Symphony, was soloist at yesterday afternoon's concert. He played the Lalo concerto for violincello. The other numbers were the Goldmark Overture "Sakuntala" and the Beethoven Symphony in D major.

Doctor Muck has recently persisted in placing the symphony at the end of his program instead of the beginning. Whether it is a silent protest at the situation he has been in since we declared war on Germany, "the world turned upside down," or whether it is just an experiment, nobody knows.

I like to hear my symphony in the early half of the afternoon when I am fresh and eager, rather than after half an hour of a violoncello concerto, even when performed by such an excellent musician as Malkin.

Some of the conductor's traducers have been charging that he would not play works by Saint-Saens and D'Indy, because of the anti-German activity of those French composers. Just as he overwhelmed the people who didn't think he would play "The Star Spangled Banner" by playing it at every performance, so he has confounded these othe[illegible]ritics by announcing the Saint[illegible]ns Symphony No. 3, for next wee

NY Post March 3, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC

The impending performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition which will be used. In the original version Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first with oboes d'amore, second with oboes da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the "basso continuo," or "figured bass." For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obligato, alowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers.

This "basso continuo" became a lost art long before the end of the 18th century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Robert Franz, and it is this which is generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performances it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original in form and manner. He will give it in its entirety, for the excisions usually made destroy to a great degree the significance of the work. He will give it in two sessions, the first part, which is essentially epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, which is dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding likewise that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version and all of the Franz version except certain accompaniments for string alone. His orchestra wil consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. It is greatly to his regret that he is unabl to secure in this country the oboes da caccia, but for these he will substitute the English horns, which in the modern orchestra correspond to the obsolete oboe da caccia. He has oboes d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for the Bach orchestra many of the arias and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. He has also written out the parts for the organ and piano, the latter taking the place

NY Herald March 3, 1918

THE PASSION MUSIC

The performance of Bach's "The Passion According to Matthew," in Symphony Hall, Tuesday of Holy Week, March 26th, has brought forth many inquiries regarding the edition that will be used. Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first, with oboi d'amore, second, with oboi da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the basso continuo or figured bass. For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument obbligato, allowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment.

This basso continuo became a lost art, Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's score. He added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and kettledrums. A more familiar revision was made later by Franz, the one generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performance it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original. He will give the work in its entirety, in two sessions, the first part, epic in form, in the afternoon; the second part, dramatic, in the evening.

Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented after Bach's death and holding that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and kettledrums in this music had he so wished, Dr. Muck rejects entirely the Mozart version, also the Franz version, except certain accompaniments for strings alone. His orchestra will consist of 32 violins, 12 violas, 12 'cellos and eight basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. He is unable to secure in this country the oboi da caccia, but for them he will substitute English horns. He has oboi d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored so far as practical the original orchestration, and score for the Bach orchestra arias and choruses that in the original were accompanied by a sole instrument and the figured bass. He has written out parts for the organ and piano. The latter takes the place of the harpsichord. The coming performance will approximate the original performance in the Church of St. Thomas, Leipsic, as closely as modern conditions permit.

Stephen Townsend has been training the chorus of 400 voices. Rehearsals are held twice a week. There will be two full rehearsals for the entire choruses the week of March 11. The following week there will be two full rehearsals with orchestra led by Dr. Muck. Theer will be a boys' choir of 80 from churches in the city.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Joseph Malkin, who shares the first desk of the violoncellos with Mr. Warnke, will be the soloist at the 17th pair of Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. He will play Lalo's Concerto. The program is short. The first number will be the "Sakuntala" Overture of Goldmark. Then will come the concerto. The symphony will be the second of Beethoven.

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
MAR 6 - 1918

MRS. WILLIAM JAY LEADS A PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK

Four Subscribers to Boston Orchestra Concerts Demand That Major Higginson Find Another Conductor.

Opposition to the retaining of Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that he is pro-German, has reacned a point where the Chronicle, a local publication devoted to society and the arts, prints in its March issue letters of protest addressed by Mrs. William Jay and other prominent subscribers to the New York concerts to Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, who controls the destinies of the famous orchestra.

Under heading "Doktor Muck Must Go," the editorial introduction to the article says in part:—"Mrs. Jay is performing a great public service in directing attention to the incumbency of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Jay's protest to Major Higginson is admirably aided by the fearless support of Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, all of whom have been subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York for many years. Major Higginson is obdurate before the appeals of the signatories of the ensuing correspondence." * * *

There is one remaining concert in New York this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On this occasion it will be decided whether New York ranks beside Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington, or whether she will reject the ardent protest against "giv'ing aid and comfort to the enemy."

The original letter of protest was sent to Major Higginson January 22, signed personally by Mrs. Jay, Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, and it closes as follows:—

"None can impugn the appreciation of music—German music—of the undersigned. Although subscribers for many years to the Boston Symphony, we have been compelled, by the presence of Dr. Muck—an admitted ally of the Kaiser—to leave our seats unoccupied; thus signalizing our disapproval of the course you are pursuing."

In his reply Major Higginson said, among other things:—

"Dr. Muck is probably German in feeling, but he has done nothing wrong. He has been eminently satisfactory to me as a conductor and as a man. His industry, knowledge and power are great, and his place cannot be supplied in this country. * * *

"If your request were carried out, the orchestra would disband, and it would be owing to a small number of people who take your view. Do you care for this responsibility?"

"Five representative cities—Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—already have refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wishes of their citizens," wrote Mrs. Jay and her associate protesters. "You, over your signature, admit that Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector.'

"* * * With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by us."

"P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck has 'done nothing'?"

Transcript Dec 27, 1917

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 7 1918

THE CASE OF KARL MUCK.

To the Editor of the Herald:—

The protest of Mrs. Jay against Karl Muck is welcomed by a large number of citizens. Karl Muck advertises himself in "Who's Who in America" for 1916-1917 as here on leave of absence from the Kaiser. He was an intimate friend of Bernstorff's. He comes here twice a month with twenty-two alien agents. Like Nero, he celebrates destruction with music. * * *

Why does the government let in these enemy aliens when it acknowledges it cannot control those already in our midst? Muck and company "have done no wrong," we hear. They have done and do a great one in supporting the enemy of the world—the Kaiser. Out with them!

AMERICAN.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 6, 1918.

NEW Y...
ss
Mrs. J...
Associ...

Major Higginson's ...
German Conductor Pro...
Rejoinder from Su...

Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. Willia... Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright a... Judge George L. Ingraham, New York subscribers to the Boston Orchestra concerts, whose protest to Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, against the retention of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor have attracted attention in musical circles recently, have not closed their campaign against the German leader.

They made public yesterday a copy of Major Higginson's last letter to Mrs. Jay, under date of March 5, and also their reply.

"Judging by your statements, you have evidently at your command more facts than I have, and are ignorant of facts which must rule," wrote Major Higginson. "I have made certain contracts which must in common honesty be carried out. You would impose your will on a great and loyal public which disagrees with you. Can any man—or woman—prove that he is not a liar or a thief?"

To this Mrs. Jay, in behalf of herself and associates, wrote to the wealthy patron of the Boston Orchestra:—

"If we have at our command more facts than you have, how can we be less ignorant of facts than you?

"You write, 'I have made certain contracts which must in common honesty be carried out.' There is a 'Trading with the Enemy' act in force. If the citizens of Washington, Baltimore, Detroit, Pittsburg and Springfield, Mass., can cancel the Boston Symphony contracts with you, are these citizens in your eyes dishonest?

"You write, 'You would impose your will on a great and loyal public which disagrees with you.' Summarizing the action of the 'loyal citizens' above named, you must admit that 'a great and loyal public' does not disagree with us.

"You write, 'Can any man (or woman) prove that he is not a liar or a thief?' If a man admits he is a liar or a thief as clearly as Dr. Muck admits his pro-Germanism, what is the need of any proof? Will you publish the names of the persons in New York who are as active in their support of Dr. Muck as we have been in publishing those who, on patriotic grounds, oppose him steadfastly?"

MUCK'S BAND AT AYER

Symphony Orchestra to Play Sunday Afternoon

'Nutmeg' Correspondents Called Too "Nosey"

Below-Zero Weather Stops Target Shoot

Transcript Dec 27

Court - Martial Sentences Two Men

Special to the Transcript:

Camp Devens, Ayer, Dec. 27—No entertainment, past or projected, has aroused the amount of interest in Camp Devens which accompanies the announcement this morning to the effect that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, is to give a concert in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium here at three o'clock Sunday afternoon.

...RAPH
MAR 8 191...

...UST GO

By JOHN ... RAFTERY.

Herr Doktor Karl Muck, Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector, alien enemy and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, must go. The March number of the Chronicle projects the proposition "Doktor Muck Must Go" and proceeds to show the reason why by publishing the correspondence between three subscribers to the Boston Symphony in New York and Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the orchestral society of Boston, in which Mrs. William Jay, living up to the patriotic achievements of her ancestors, demands the dismissal of Muck as "a man who bears the German Emperor's decoration," "whose sympathies are most palpably opposed to the United States" and "whose resignation was most justifiably forced by public opinion."

It will be remembered that Doktor Muck once tendered his resignation and that Major Higgins refused to accept it. Realizing that he should go, the court musician of the Kaiser went. But Higgins called him back. Mrs. Jay and her protesting associates say that Muck's resignation was forced by public opinion. Major Higgins retorts that the public of Boston and of New York continue not only to tolerate, but to welcome Doktor Muck by attending his concerts and generously applauding his conductorship.

Both of these apparently contradictory statements are measurably right. There is in New York, as in every large city, an element of the public which contends that "art is international." Also there is a passively non-patriotic wing, a public of musically intoxicated "addicts" and, worst of all, a downright pro-German public which, together with its less virulent devotees of German musik kultur, are sufficient to pack Carnegie Hall and vigorously applaud Conductor Muck and the splendid orchestra which he directs.

To all letters of protest against the continuance of the Kaiser's court musician as head of an American orchestra Major Higginson has remained obdurate. He has not failed to point to the excellent musical qualifications of Muck, to the superiority of the orchestra, to the pleasure it brought into "the gray lives" of its audiences, to the awful alternative of throwing the members of the orchestra out of work and finally to the presumed fact that "Doktor Muck has done nothing wrong." In what the Chronicle heads as "A Final Warning," the New York objectors to the continuance of Conductor Muck wrote to Major Higginson as follows:

"Dear Sir:—In reply to your courteous letter dated January 30, 1918, sent to us, the undersigned, who protested against Doktor Karl Muck's continuance as conductor of the Boston Symphony, we beg to point out further reasons for his withdrawal—in disagreement with your masterly defense.

"Five representative cities—Pittsburg, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—have already refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wisnes of their citizens. You, over your signature, admit that Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title, 'Koeniglich Preussicher General Musikdirector.'

"There seems to be only one point to be considered. Aren't aid and comfort being given to the enemy in retaining in such an important capacity a musician so terribly entangled with German kultur? Isn't is cause for congratulation at Potsdam and in Wilhelmstrasse that a man so distinguished as yourself should support Doktor Muck against the aspersions of other Americans? What weigh the economic fates of the members of your excellent orchestra against the political significance of Muck glorified before the few remaining German sympathizers in the large cities of the East? Isn't national unity the one great aim? Are we to pour forth our blood and nerve and brain and treasure and still hold to German musical domination? Rather a thousand times that the orchestral traditions fade from our lives than one hour be added to the war's duration by clinging to this last tentacle of the German octopus!

"With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony, we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by. Yours very truly,

(Signed)
"Lucie Jay.
"Carolyn K. Wright.
"Adelaide Douglas.
"George L. Ingraham.

"P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck 'has done nothing'?"

There is no question in my mind th...

Monitor March 9, 1918

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—Goldmark's over ture to "Sakuntala," which opened th seventeenth program of the Bosto Symphony Orchestra yesterday afte noon, may or may not be worth a pla in these concerts. That, after all, mus remain, like any purely personal ques tion, a ready and fruitful topic fo discussion in New York, Providence or wherever it is that they object to ...ograms of this orchestra. As it ...layed yesterday, the music was ...ed by an inspiration of perform... ...hat eluded the composer in the ...s of it. The remarkable attack ... band has never had better il... ...ion than in this overture, com... ...ice though the occasion for ... There is a certain looking fo... ...o Brahms in this work, though ...is in the attempted use of or... ...l color rather than in the in... The cumulation of the brass ...'tragic" overture gives a poign... ...tion; added brass in the "Sa... results merely in a tickling of ... The audience insisted on ...stra rising to acknowledge ...se.

...er column of this issue is ...tter of Tschaikowsky anent says the Russian, "seeks without trying to be pro... ...charge of profundity could ...against the composer be... concerto for 'cello and ...ich Mr. Malkin, who sits ...sk of the 'cellos, played ...s last performance in ...een by Pablo Casals, ...is and far-pervading ...ed a songfulness not ... Mr. Malkin strove ...t in the second move... the seeker after new ...o" rather than "an... ...e of his instrument ...e has a facile tech... ...an agreeable tone movement reached ...s of romantic feel...

...ere was a enjoyment in the ...lassics ...nd ...naled by no other ...t musical entertainment, espe... when they are so superbly ...d as was the second symphony, ...36, of Beethoven. Pioneers of the ...sic of our day, these pieces are still ...tent to give pleasure and profit and ...heir charm is a part of our musical experience which we hope long to keep fresh. In the second movement of this symphony appeared for a few moments the full power of the string section of the orchestra, like a quartet in the precision of its technique, but of a wonderful, permeating volume. Especially surprising was the volume coming from the second violins, which ordinarily are kept rather subdued.

Boston Music Notes

BOSTON, Mass.—There will be no symphony concerts the coming week as the orchestra is making its last trip of the season to the South. It will give its usual concerts in Philadelphia Monday night, New York Thursday night and Saturday afternoon, and Brooklyn Friday night.

MALKIN CLEVER IN SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Orchestra Gives Beethoven's Works in D Major, With the Goldmark Overture

By FRED J. McISAAC.

Joseph Malkin, the respected cellist of the Boston Symphony, was soloist at yesterday afternoon's concert. He played the Lalo concerto for violincello. The other numbers were the Goldmark Overture "Sakuntala" and the Beethoven Symphony in D major.

Doctor Muck has recently persisted in placing the symphony at the end of his program instead of the beginning. Whether it is a silent protest at the situation he has been in since we declared war on Germany, "the world turned upside down," or whether it is just an experiment, nobody knows.

I like to hear my symphony in the early half of the afternoon when I am fresh and eager, rather than after half an hour of a violoncello concerto, even when performed by such an excellent musician as Malkin.

Some of the conductor's traducers have been charging that he would not play works by Saint-Saens and D'Indy, because of the anti-German activity of those French composers. Just as he overwhelmed the people who didn't think he would play "The Star Spangled Banner" by playing it at every performance, so he has confounded these othe... ...itics by announcing the Saint... ...ns Symphony No. 3, for next wee...

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

NEW YORK HERALD
ess New York City
MAR 1 0 1918

Boston Orchestra Will Close Season with Two Concerts

Dr. Muck and His Men to Play Here on Thursday and Saturday—Other Concerts and Recitals Announced.

Concerts and Recitals.

TO-DAY.—AEOLIAN HALL, 3 P. M., concert, New York Symphony Society. Carnegie Hall, 3 P. M., piano recital, Josef Hofmann. Princess Theatre, 8:15 P. M., song recital, Samuel Ljunqvist.

MONDAY.—CARNEGIE HALL, 8:15 P. M., piano recital, Mme. Ethel Leginska. Aeolian Hall, 3 P. M., song recital, Miss Lotta Madden; 8:15 P. M., Concert New York Chamber Music Society.

TUESDAY.—CARNEGIE HALL, 8:15 P. M., concert, Cathedral choir. Aeolian Hall, 8:15 P. M., concert, Flonzaley Quartet.

WEDNESDAY.—AEOLIAN HALL, 3 P. M., piano recital, Harold Bauer.

THURSDAY.—CARNEGIE HALL, 8:15 P. M., concert, Boston Symphony Orchestra. Aeolian Hall, 8:15 P. M., recital, Chevalier Loverde.

FRIDAY.—AEOLIAN HALL, 8:15 P. M., song recital, Theodore von Hemert and Jacques Jolas.

SATURDAY.—CARNEGIE HALL, 2:30 P. M., concert, Boston Symphony Orchestra; 8:15, concert, Symphony Society. Aeolian Hall, 3 P. M., song recital, Miss Florence Macbeth; 8:15 P. M., concert, Union Symphony Orchestra.

To end its season in New York the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two concerts in Carnegie Hall this week, one on Thursday night and one on Saturday afternoon.

For the first concert Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the orchestra, has chosen Brahms' Symphony No. 3 in F major, op. 90; Sibelius' "Pohojola's Daughter," symphonic fantasia, of. 49, and "Night Ride and Sunrise," symphonic poem, op. 55, and Wagner's prelude to "Tristan und Isolde." On Saturday Mozart's symphony in E flat and Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," will be presented.

An overture, "Comes Autumn Time," by Leo Sowerby, twenty-three years old, an American composer now in Camp Grant, will begin the programme of the Symphony Society this afternoon in Aeolian Hall. George Barrère, flautist, will play Widor's Romance and Scherzo. Other numbers are Beethoven's Second Symphony and Walter Damrosch's concert arrangements of Wagner's "Processional of the Knights of the Holy Grail," from "Parsifal;" the love music and warning from "Tristan und Isolde" and "Brunnhilde's awakening and the finale from "Siegfried."

The Symphony Society's last pair of concerts for this season will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The same programme will be presented. Josef Hofmann will play Chopin's E minor piano concerto and the chromaticon by Dvorsky. Elgar's Symphony No. 1 in A flat ends the programme. The proceeds of Saturday night's concert will go to the American Friends of Musicians in France.

n TIMES
ress New York City
e

Sibelius Visit Recalled.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in one of its farewell programs for New York this week, will include two unfamiliar works of the Finnish composer, Jean Sibelius. It is recalled that at least one of these he himself produced in America on a visit to this country just before the war.

Sibelius came at the invitation of Carl Stoeckel as guest of the Litchfield County Choral Union for its twenty-eighth festival at Norfolk, Conn., June 2 to 4, 1914. On the evening of June 4 he conducted nine of his own works, leading off with the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter," which will be heard here next Thursday.

The Litchfield program included also Sibelius's four pieces of incidental music to Adolf Paul's tragedy, "King Christian II.," as well as his familiar "Swan of Tuonela," "Finlandia," and "Valse Triste," and his "Aallottaret" or "The Oceanides," this last performed for the first time on that occasion.

The conductor's stand was ornamented with the Finnish and American flags. As is the custom in the Norfolk "music festival" when a composer conducts his own work, the audience rose when Sibelius appeared, and there was the complimentary orchestral "tusch." At the end of the Sibelius portion of the [illegible] the chorus sang verses of the [illegible] national anthem.

188

Boston Post
March 10, 1918

The Passion Music

It has been definitely decided that the performance of Bach's Passion music in Symphony Hall Tuesday afternoon March 26, shall begin at 4 o'clock. At this first session the first part of the work will be given and will last between an hour and a half and an hour and three-quarters, so that the first session will be over at the very latest, counting all delays, by 6 o'clock. Then there will be an intermission until 8 o'clock, when the second part will be given. This lasts about an hour and a half and the entire concert will be over by 9:30. The same tickets will be used for both sessions.

The soloists so far engaged are Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Lambert Murphy, tenor, and Reinald Warrenrath, bass. All of these singers have had much experience with both music in general and the "Passion Music" in particular.

The first full choral rehearsal in Symphony Hall will be held the coming week under Mr. Townsend. The chorus will number 400, divided into two groups of 200 each. The boys' choir will will number 80 and the orchestra will number 74, divided into two orchestras, each having 16 violins, six violas, six 'cellos, 5 basses, two flutes and two oboes. There will also be the organ and piano.

N.Y. American
March 14, 1918

DR. MUCK DARED TO SHOW COLORS

Mrs. Jay Says Leader Must Answer or Cannot Direct Orchestra To-night.

Unless Dr. Karl Muck is willing to prove to-day that he is a Swiss, not a German citizen, a strong effort will be made to keep him from directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall.

The question of the famous musician's feeling toward America was first raised when it was charged he refused, several months ago, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Boston. Since then he has given eight concerts in New York, at all of which he played the national anthem. The orchestra is scheduled for two concerts in Carnegie Hall—one to-night and one Saturday afternoon.

The Department of Justice and the Commissioner of Licenses were appealed to yesterday to halt Dr. Muck's performance to-night. This appeal was made by subscribers to the Boston orchestra's concerts here, who had as spokesman Mrs. William Jay, wealthy society woman, of No. 850 Park avenue.

Commissioner of Licenses Gilchrist took no action on Mrs. Jay's request, but greater hope was extended at the office of the Department of Justice. Richard Fletcher, editor of The Chronicle, who accompanied Mrs. Jay to the office, said:

"I do not think Dr. Muck will appear here to-morrow night. I have good reason to believe that the wishes of New York citizens, who believe Dr. Muck is pro-German, will be properly interpreted by the authorities to-day."

Mrs. Jay, in an open letter to the orchestra leader, yesterday asked these questions:

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you answer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from ypublic musical life?"

From Boston yesterday came a statement from Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphon Orchestra. Major Higginson said:

"Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood and bears Swiss citizenship and passport to-day.

"I put the case before the Department of Justice in Washington, and received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia."

N.Y. Herald
March 14, 1918

DEMAND OUSTING OF DOKTOR MUCK IN CONCERT HERE

Subscribers to Fight to Finish on Boston Symphony Director.

MAJOR HIGGINSON DEFENDS PROTEGE

Leader Barred from Appearances in American Cities After Providence Affair.

Is Doktor Karl Muck, Royal Prussian General Music Director, to be permitted to direct the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night and Saturday afternoon?

How long would an American orchestra director be permitted to conduct concerts in Berlin?

Is New York to align herself with the patriotic cities of Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., and put up the bars against the Kaiser's personal musical director?

Many of the most prominent and oldest subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts in New York who have protested against the continuance of Doktor Muck as they call him, as director, are asking these questions. Their silent protests of leaving unoccupied their paid for seats have had no effect on the Kaiser's chief musician, nor upon Major Henry L. Higginson, the financial backer of the orchestra, and they have written a protest to him.

"This particular element of German propaganda will be continuously fought by us," said Mrs. William Jay, one of the best known of the Boston Symphony subscribers, in a letter to Major Higginson. And yesterday, when Mrs. Jay received a "rather curt and quite rude" letter from Major Higginson informing her that their correspondence in reference to Doktor Muck must cease, she said:—

Fight on "Doktor" to End.

"My correspondence with Major Higginson is ended, it is true; but my fight against Doktor Muck as the paid enemy agent of the Kaiser is not at an end. I intend to leave nothing undone that will prevent Doktor Muck's appearance again at the head of an orchestra in this my native city.

"It is so strange to me that the people of New York, whose sons have been called to the colors and whose lives may be ended by German bullets, will permit an enemy alien like Doktor Muck to appear here. He is the most dangerous kind of a German educator. Major Higginson stubbornly defends him, saying he has done nothing wrong.

"Does Major Higginson know he has done nothing wrong? Does Major Higginson know everything that man is doing? I doubt it. He has not even been able to obtain from Doktor Muck a statement of his nationality.

"You may say that I am taking steps which I believe will prevent the appearance of Doktor Muck again as an orchestra leader in this city."

Associated with Mrs. Jay in the protest to Major Higginson were Justice George L. Ingraham, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Mrs. William P. Douglas. Mrs. Wright said last night:—

"Doktor Muck's pro-German proclivities are such that I do not believe he should be allowed to lead any American orchestra during the war."

"Anthem Not Artistic."

Doktor Muck's troubles date from the time last autumn when Providence refused to permit him to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra there unless he played "The Star Spangled Banner." At first he refused to do so, and in an interview with Boston reporters he was quoted as saying:—

"To hell with your flag and your national anthem! It is not fit to be played in any artistic programme."

It was on that statement that Mr. Warfield, formerly Governor of Maryland, held a great mass meeting in Baltimore and caused the Police Board there to refuse to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear. At that mass meeting women shouted, "Kill Muck!"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 5, COLUMN 2, PART 2.)

Protest Activity of Karl Muck on Boston Symphony

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1, PART 2.)

Washington refused to permit him to enter the city, on the ground that he is an enemy alien, although his German friends spread the story that he was a native of Switzerland. Doktor Muck himself has persistently refused to declare his allegiance.

Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., barred him on the ground that he was an enemy alien and that his leadership of an orchestra was German propaganda.

New York city has been very patient with Doktor Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in which there are twenty-three enemy aliens. They have played here twice each month in November, December, January and February, and also in Brooklyn. It is true that each time they played "The Star Spangled Banner."

But Mrs. Jay said last night many of the subscribers to those concerts had refused to attend for patriotic reasons and as a protest against Major Higginson for retaining Doktor Muck in charge.

"I was surprised, however, to learn that our seats had been sold and occupied and that a full house, usually three-quarters German, greeted the Kaiser's chief musician," said Mrs. Jay.

A dozen or more prominent persons identified with the better musical circles of New York have taken up the matter in the last few days, and it was understood that steps were being taken to prevent the reappearance of Doktor Muck. They had hoped that Major Higginson would act, but being assured he would not, they will.

INTEND TO PLAY, SAYS MAJOR HIGGINSON

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Sunday.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was considerably aroused to-night when told of the criticisms of New York residents over the concert to be given by Dr. Karl Muck and his orchestra in New York next Thursday.

"You may state for me that when this whole matter came up last fall I went to the Department of Justice officials in Washington and had the whole matter out with them," said Major Higginson. "They told me where I could give my concerts and just what I could do. I can play anywhere in New York and I intend to do so.

"These persons are styled 'patriotic,' but I would suggest that they stop meddling with what is none of their business. The concert in New York next Thursday is not Dr. Muck's concert; it is my concert. The United States government is perfectly competent to handle the affairs of the country without any interference from meddling 'patriotic' persons who make nothing but trouble."

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 1 1 1918

DEMAND OUSTING OF DOKTOR MUCK IN CONCERT HERE

Subscribers to Fight to Finish on Boston Symphony Director.

MAJOR HIGGINSON DEFENDS PROTEGEE

Leader Barred from Appearances in American Cities After Providence Affair.

Is Doktor Karl Muck, Royal Prussian General Music Director, to be permitted to direct the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night and Saturday afternoon?

How long would an American orchestra director be permitted to conduct concerts in Berlin?

Is New York to align herself with the patriotic cities of Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., and put up the bars against the Kaiser's personal musical director?

Many of the most prominent and oldest subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts in New York who have protested against the continuance of Doktor Muck, as they call him, as director, are asking these questions. Their silent protests of leaving unoccupied their paid for seats have had no effect on the Kaiser's chief musician, nor upon Major Henry L. Higginson, the financial backer of the orchestra, and they have written a protest to him.

"This particular element of German propaganda will be continuously fought by us," said Mrs. William Jay, one of the best known of the Boston Symphony subscribers, in a letter to Major Higginson. And yesterday, when Mrs. Jay received a "rather curt and quite rude" letter from Major Higginson informing her that their correspondence in reference to Doktor Muck must cease, she said:—

Fight on "Doktor" to End.

"My correspondence with Major Higginson is ended, it is true; but my fight against Doktor Muck as the paid enemy agent of the Kaiser is not at an end. I intend to leave nothing undone that will prevent Doktor Muck's appearance again at the head of an orchestra in this my native city.

"It is so strange to me that the people of New York, whose sons have been called to the colors and whose lives may be ended by German bullets, will permit an enemy alien like Doktor Muck to appear here. He is the most dangerous kind of a German educator. Major Higginson stubbornly defends him, saying he has done nothing wrong.

"Does Major Higginson know he has done nothing wrong? Does Major Higginson know everything that man is doing? I doubt it. He has not even been able to obtain from Doktor Muck a statement of his nationality.

"You may say that I am taking steps which I believe will prevent the appearance of Doktor Muck again as an orchestra leader in this city."

Associated with Mrs. Jay in the protest to Major Higginson were Justice George L. Ingraham, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Mrs. William P. Douglas. Mrs. Wright said last night:—

"Doctor Muck's pro-German proclivities are such that I do not believe he should be allowed to lead any American orchestra during the war."

Doktor Muck's troubles date from the time last autumn when Providence refused to permit him to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra there unless he played "The Star Spangled Banner." At first he refused to do so, and in an interview with Boston reporters he was quoted as saying:—

"Anthem Not Artistic."

"To hell with your flag and your national anthem! It is not fit to be played in any artistic programme."

It was on that statement that Mr. Warfield, formerly Governor of Maryland, held a great mass meeting in Baltimore and caused the Police Board there to refuse to permit the Boston Symphony Orchestra to appear. At that mass meeting women shouted, "Kill Muck!"

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1, PART 2.)

Washington refused to permit him to enter the city, on the ground that he is an enemy alien, although his German friends spread the story that he was a native of Switzerland. Doktor Muck himself has persistently refused to declare his allegiance.

Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., barred him on the ground that he was an enemy alien and that his leadership of an orchestra was German propaganda.

New York city has been very patient with Doktor Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in which there are twenty-three enemy aliens. They have played here twice each month in November, December, January and February, and also in Brooklyn. It is true that each time they played "The Star Spangled Banner."

But Mrs. Jay said last night many of the subscribers to those concerts had refused to attend for patriotic reasons and as a protest against Major Higginson for retaining Doktor Muck in charge.

"I was surprised, however, to learn that our seats had been sold and occupied and that a full house, usually three-quarters German, greeted the Kaiser's chief musician," said Mrs. Jay.

A dozen or more prominent persons identified with the better musical circles of New York have taken up the matter in the last few days, and it was understood that steps were being taken to prevent the reappearance of Doktor Muck. They had hoped that Major Higginson would act, but being assured he would not, they will.

INTEND TO PLAY, SAYS MAJOR HIGGINSON

[SPECIAL DESPATCH TO THE HERALD.]

BOSTON, Mass., Sunday.—Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was considerably aroused to-night when told of the criticisms of New York residents over the concert to be given by Dr. Karl Muck and his orchestra in New York next Thursday.

"You may state for me that when this whole matter came up last fall I went to the Department of Justice officials in Washington and had the whole matter out with them," said Major Higginson. "They told me where I could give my concerts and just what I could do. I can play anywhere in New York and I intend to do so.

"These persons are styled 'patriotic,' but I would suggest that they stop meddling with what is none of their business. The concert in New York next Thursday is not Dr. Muck's concert; it is my concert. The United States government is perfectly competent to handle the affairs of the country without any interference from meddling 'patriotic' persons who make nothing but trouble."

Address:

Date

WOMEN ... TO BAN PLA... OF DR. MUCK

Mrs. William Jay Denounces the Leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

DECLARES HE IS PAID ENEMY AGENT OF KAISER.

Mrs. WILLIAM JAY

If Dr. Karl Muck leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the scheduled concert of that organization in Carnegie Hall next Thursday evening it will be in the face of the most vigorous protests from patriotic men and women of New York, led by Mrs. William Jay, one of the best known subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts.

Mrs. Jay denounces Dr. Muck as the "paid enemy agent of the Kaiser" and the "most dangerous kind of a German educator."

Associated with Mrs. Jay in her patriotic protest against the flaunting of German propaganda in the faces of loyal New York citizens are such well known persons as Justice George L. Ingraham, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Mrs. William P. Douglas, all symphony subscribers.

"Dr. Muck should not be allowed to lead any orchestra in America during the war," is what Mrs. Wright has to say about the matter.

On the other hand, referring to Mrs. Wright and her friends, Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief supporter of the orchestra led by the Royal Prussian General Music Director, with much heat denounces them as "interfering meddlers" who "make nothing but trouble."

From the tone of a letter which [illegible] addressed to Mrs. Jay, it appears that [illegible] ones for whom Mrs. Jay and her loyal American friends are making the most "trouble" are Major Higginson and his Royal Prussian General Musical Director, and not the United States government. The letter from the chief and [illegible] the only supporter that the Kaiser's [illegible] master has, aside from the twenty-three other enemy aliens in the orchestra, curtly and "rudely" informs Mrs. Jay that his correspondence with her is at an end.

Mrs. Jay is not at all worried [illegible] desire of Major Higginson to [illegible] patriotic missives of protest [illegible] determined that Americans in [illegible] New York shall not be again [illegible] the appearance of Dr. Muck. [illegible] she and her friends have to [illegible] see that he does not play here [illegible] Thursday night or Saturday afternoon [illegible] billed.

Among the cities which already have barred Dr. Muck are Providence, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit, Springfield, Baltimore and Philadelphia.

Major Higginson, when told of the patriotic movement in New York city, [illegible] ported in despatches from Boston as saying that the Department of Justice [illegible] told him he could give his concerts [illegible] "I can play anywhere in New York [illegible] intend to do so."

REDUCTION RATIO

12x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

MISSING
PAGE(S)

REDUCTION RATIO

17x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
Date MAR 15 1918

OPPOSITION GROWS TO DOKTOR MUCK AS CONCERT DIRECTOR

Estab 384

Sentiment Against Kaiser's Conductor Crystallizes Among Music Lovers Here.

COMMISSIONER MAY REVOKE HIS PERMIT

John F. Gilchrist Says Necessary Action Will Be Taken if Request Is Made.

Opposition to the appearance of Doktor Karl Muck, the Kaiser's own music director, as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on Thursday evening yesterday took such definite form as to indicate that the man who attempted to escape playing "The Star Spangled Banner" might decide to change his arrangements for that day.

Music lovers and patriotic Americans stood together in announcing that some action should be taken to prevent New York from patronizing the Prussian musician who has been excluded from at least six cities of the United States.

No official request had been made to John F. Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, to revoke the permit for the symphony orchestra's concert, that official said last night. But he added that he was ready to take such action as might be considered necessary whenever such application reached him.

Numerous Empty Seats Probable.

Miss Marion A. Turner, secretary of the Educational Dramatic League, of which Mrs. August Belmont is head, announced that she was permitting the seats for which she had subscribed and paid for to remain idle rather than give her indorsement to Muck and what he represents. Similar statements from other music lovers indicated that the Prussian leader may wave his baton before numerous empty seats if he persists in leading the orchestra Thursday evening.

Miss Turner made known her stand against Doktor Muck in this letter to Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Carnegie Hall who have made known their opposition to him:—

"Dear Mrs. Jay:—May I send you a word of thanks and appreciation for the stand you are taking in relation to Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Concerts.

"I am a music lover, but am obliged to consider such pleasures in the light of a luxury to be indulged in only with thought and care. This winter, however, I have allowed my subscription tickets for the Brooklyn concerts to remain idle, as I would not be a party to any question of indorsement of Dr. Muck and what he represents. I am ashamed of my cities and the fact that even one concert under such auspices has been permitted. If there is any way in which I can be of any of service in this work of righteous indignation I should be pleased to have you call upon me. Again I thank you."

Opposition Is crystallizing.

After a series of conferences at her home at No. 820 Park avenue, Mrs. Jay last evening issued this statement:

"Judging by the support and cooperation which have been offered to me in the last twenty-four hours, I should say that public opinion is crystallizing to such an extent that Doktor Muck will be barred officially if Mr. Higginson persists in disregarding the protest which has been submitted to him in all fairness.

"Doktor Muck's present battleline is founded on the fact that when the Boston Symphony was rejected by the Department of Justice in Washington, he was given permission to play elsewhere. This occurred months ago before the government had really got into its stride of ending the privileges of enemy aliens. Much water has flowed under the bridge since Major Higginson received his sanction from the authorities.

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1, PART 2.)

"And, may I ask why, if Doktor Muck is a dangerous alien in Washington, should he be considered a harmless alien in New York city—the great American port and centre of all federal activities?

"Isn't New York entitled to the same protection that is being given to Washington?

"Messages by telephone and letter have come to me from all sources including one of encouragement from that great, thinking woman—Miss Elisabeth Marbury. One of the boxholders was kind enough to ring me up and say that she would not occupy her box on Thursday night owing to her intense feeling about the Royal Prussian Musical Director. This lady is Mrs. Clarkson, and she told me that she was trying to see other boxholders who were sufficiently patriotic to stand by us."

Thus far, the only announcement made by Major N. L. Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra, is that he will continue Doktor Dr. Muck as leader of the organization in spite of complaints. His last word to Mrs. Jay, in reply to her request for information, was contained in this brief note:—

"Dear Madam:—

"I have your letter of March 7.

"It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence.

"As regards the act of 'Trading with the enemy,' I sought, in person, instructions from the Department of Justice, at Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care.

"Your very truly,

"N. L. HIGGINSON."

"But it must be remembered that that permission to which he refers was granted last November," said Mrs. Jay. "That was before the Bolsheviki had delivered Russia into the hands of Germany, changing the aspect of things here generally. Major Higginson's letter is intended to indicate that the government has given its approval to Dr. Muck's public appearances, which it has not at all."

Was Conductor for Kaiser.

Doktor Muck's affiliations in Germany are such as to show that he hands high not only with musicians there, but with the Kaiser himself. He is known as a Prussian because of his many years of residence and professional activity there, although he was born in Bavaria in 1860. He was a son of a Ministerial Counsellor of that South German kingdom.

He was a student at the German universities of Heidelberg and Leipsic. He advanced rapidly from one musical organization to another, until he finally was made conductor of the German Imperial Opera. The official standing and government supervision of this organization are accepted as sufficient evidence of his Germanic antecedents, as the Kaiser would tolerate no foreign blood in the veins of his orchestra leader.

Doktor Muck came to the United States at the urgent invitation of Major Higginson, financial backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, more than twelve years ago. Officially he was "loaned" by the Kaiser's opera organization. That he has been permitted to remain here even after this country has entered the war is accepted as sufficient evidence in the minds of many that Germany thinks his art is good Teutonic propaganda here. If it is his opponents are equally certain that it should be suppressed at once.

23 Enemy Aliens In Orchestra.

During his stay in the United States, and since the beginning of the war particularly, he has made associates of those who have been looked upon as the enemies, first of the cause of the Allies and then of the United States after this country entered the war. His orchestra gives employment to twenty-three enemy aliens, all of whom Doktor Muck says are "perfectly safe to have here."

After the United States became one of the Allies Dr. Muck resigned from the St. Botolph Club, one of Boston's leading social organizations. He continued to lead the orchestra, however, with the active backing of Major Higginson. Criticism of his continuance in that position did not become acute, however, until he definitely refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," in Providence, R. I. Later, however, he played the national anthem in Boston, after which he resigned as leader of the orchestra there.

But Major Higginson refused to accept the resignation and persuaded him to remain as director of the orchestra. It is due to this insistence on the part of Major Higginson, who has threatened to disband the orchestra if Doktor Muck leaves, that he still is at the head of the orchestra.

Hillquit Backer

N Y Sun
March 15, 1918

U-BOAT ATTACKS A HOSPITAL SHIP

Two Torpedoes Fired at Guilford Castle in Bristol Channel.

VESSEL REACHES PORT

450 Sick and Wounded Soldiers Brought Safely to Land.

LONDON, March 14.—For the second time within a fortnight German submarines have made a torpedo attack on a hospital ship flying Red Cross flags. The Admiralty to-day made this announcement:

The British hospital ship Guilford Castle, Capt. Thomas M. Long, R. N. R., homeward bound, was unsuccessfully attacked by an enemy submarine at the entrance to the Bristol Channel at 5:35 P. M. on March 10. She was flying Red Cross flags and had all the hospital lights on.

Two torpedoes were fired at the Guilford Castle, the first missing and the second hitting the vessel's bow. Although badly damaged she was able to reach port. There were many sick and wounded on board, who were transferred to a hospital.

The Guilford Castle had a remarkable escape. When the first torpedo, which passed astern, was observed the steamer slewed around, with the result that a second torpedo, which proved to be a "dud," struck the bow, tearing a big hole below the waterline through which the water poured.

The wounded were quickly assembled on deck and the boats were made ready and had been half lowered when it was found that the pumps would keep the water down. A wireless call for help was sent out and friendly destroyers appeared. Half a dozen tugs were ordered and the steamship made Avonmouth, where the wounded and the hospital staff were landed.

The Guilford Castle had 450 wounded on board from German East Africa. She was southwest of Lundy Island, in the entrance to Bristol Channel, on Sunday afternoon when the attack was made. It was full daylight and the sinking machines could not have been mistaken as they recently had been repainted.

On February 26 the Cunard Castle, a British hospital ship, was torpedoed and sunk by a submarine in the Bristol Channel with the loss of 156 lives. The Guilford Castle is a steamship of 8,000 tons gross. The Bristol Channel in which the attacks were made, is an arm of the Atlantic extending into the southwestern part of Great Britain between Wales and England.

BEGIN HOBO ROUNDUP.

Loafers in Jersey to Be Shipped to Farms.

Special Despatch to The Sun.

TRENTON, March 14.—State Commissioner of Labor Bryant said to-day that very of the hobos, swan song which he sent to all Sheriffs and municipal officers in the State this afternoon, enclosed blanks to be filled out by every vagrant coming under the provisions of the recently enacted anti-loafing law. Those who come under the law, he said, either won't or don't work. To escape being put to work under the law they must be either less than 16 or more than 50 years of age, otherwise, Mr. Bryant explained, the heretofore workless loafer will be summarily packed into a useful way occupation.

Most of the men who will be put to work by the operation of the law, Mr. Bryant said, will be shipped to farms, shipyards, munition factories and the like. The job of gathering them in will start as soon as Mr. Bryant's instructions to the Sheriffs have been distributed.

FIRE IN WATERBURY.

Beautiful Buckingham Building Partially Destroyed.

Special Despatch to The Sun.

WATERBURY, Conn., March 14.—The Buckingham Building, built by the late Hendrik philanthropist John H. Wilcox, more as an adjunct to the Waterbury Hospital, but the structure was almost totally destroyed by fire to-day. The building was unusual for its architecture and housed a great organ. Leading musical artists of America and Europe have given concerts in it. The original idea was over Sargent, Stafford White drew the plans, and as Mr. Whittemore's request provided an exterior that was a composite of a building of ancient Rome. The plaster friezes had crumbled from rigorous weather, but the structure was otherwise intact. The fire started on the fifth floor.

COLLAR NUMBER TWENTY-TWO

It's a jaunty, youthful shape that somehow "takes."

Not one of the new designs that we are constantly bringing out seem to quite fill its place.

Steid buyers tell us that they started using it when young, and seem to have acquired the habit.

So we make it season after season, because we do not care to disappoint the many wearers.

35 cents for one.
4.00 a dozen.

N Y Times
March 15, 1918

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Only Subscribers Admitted to Concert, Which Was Not Interrupted.

OPENS WITH OUR ANTHEM

Manager Shows Swiss Citizenship Papers Issued to Leader in 1881.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a sold-out house of all-season subscribers at Carnegie Hall last night, a concert to which the city authorities gave full protection. Mayor Hylan, it was said, ordered the Police Department to prevent any untoward occurrence, and at the last moment before the concert the special force detailed to guard the approaches, doors, and lobbies of the hall was trebled.

Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plain-clothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no nothers. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Opens With National Anthem.

Dr. Muck's entrance, at 8:20 o'clock, a few minutes later than usual, owing to delay in seating the crowd under these circumstances, was greeted with hearty applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The house rose as one and applauded for some moments while still standing after the national air. Again at the end of the first part of the concert, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, Dr. Muck deftly passed another ovation from himself to the orchestra. There were later two selections of the Finnish composer, Sibelius, and the people of Wagner's "African." Dr. Muck was recalled half a dozen times at the concert's close.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's founder, sat in the seat always reserved for him far down the centre aisle. He was seen by the audience as he walked forward to speak the audience and been asking the intermission, and had to rise and bow to applause, which was renewed when he presently resigned to his chair. It was an open question that the fidelity of the Boston Symphony rested largely with the fate of last night's event in New York. The result is set in the balance, but the chance gave every evidence of wishing to stand by Major Higginson in maintaining the premier symphony orchestra of this country under difficulties due to war.

The audience was naturally not the final judge of charges and counter-charges such as had been made about "enemy aliens" and "spies." Dr. Muck conducted his concert as if nothing had occurred.

Show Swiss Citizenship Papers.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer such charges made by Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nuchen in the Canton Zug, in Switzerland, on March 14, 1881, soon after the Muck's twenty-third birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there, when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age. The Chancellor of Zug Canton, in certifying the document, also added a line saying that the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection.

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as an set Muck's citizenship was an duly and apparently original document, dated June 12, 1917, by P. Barter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. The document, according to a translation appended and also authenticated by Mr. Barter was headed No. 641, Certificate of Citizenship.

Continued on Page Two.

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Continued from Page One.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the Canton of Neuhelm, in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland, hereby certify that Dr. Karl Muck, single, [illegible] occupation, [illegible] Given at Neuhelm, this 14th day of March, 1881.

The President,
signed KLEMENS ZURCHER,
Letter sign in the name of the Town Council,
signed A. LOB STAUB.

With the best recommendation of all authorities and their representative protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

Canton Chancellor of the Canton of Zug, signed A. WEBER.

Zug, March 15, 1881.

The certificate bears the seal of Neuhelm and various validations showing inspections from time to time.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 14.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Major H. L. Higginson's statement in The New York Times yesterday with reference to Dr. Muck and The Providence Journal makes it necessary to state that The Journal's attacks on Dr. Muck had nothing whatever to do with the action of the Presidents of all the Providence musical societies and the Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of this State in their effort to compel Dr. Muck to play the national anthem at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city on Oct. 30. These telegrams were sent to Major Higginson and the manager of the orchestra before The Providence Journal had made any attack whatever on Dr. Muck."

N Y Herald
March 14, 1918

MUCK AND HIS ENEMY ALIENS HERE TO-NIGHT

Patriotic Societies and Loyal Citizens by Thousands Protest in Vain.

KAISER'S DIREKTOR AND BAND REACH CITY

Carnegie Hall Swings Wide Its Doors to German Doktor Barred by a Half Dozen Other Cities.

Twenty-three enemy aliens, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Doktor Karl Muck, the Kaiser's own musical director, will be heard at Carnegie Hall to-night unless some unforeseen obstacle arises to-day to prevent their appearance.

The doors of Carnegie Hall will swing wide for the Kaiser's favorite in spite of ever increasing forms of protest from patriotic organizations and individuals throughout the city. No American in Berlin, argued those who opposed the appearance of Muck, would have the audacity even to suggest his leading an orchestra there, much less being permitted to do so.

When the Prussian Doktor waves his baton in New York he will be exercising a privilege which has been taken from him in a half dozen other cities because of his attempt to escape playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and his association with the enemies of this country.

The doors of theatres in Washington, Baltimore, Harrisburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., have been barred against Muck and his orchestra for the period of the war. Moreover, there are numerous other cities that have been classified by the orchestra management as "unprofitable" and will not be visited so long as the director of the Kaiser's Berlin opera continues his associations with it.

Bend Energies to Bar Doktor.

Meanwhile patriotic organizations, artists and patrons of music bent all their energies yesterday to prevent the appearance of an enemy alien here, when the patriotism of other cities had made it impossible for him to appear elsewhere. New York, they insisted, would drop far below the standards of altruism if it permitted in other matters if it permits Doktor Muck and his enemy aliens to appear here to-night.

The men and women subscribers to the symphony programme here made every effort to find some legal means of preventing what they insist will be a dark blot on the reputation of the city. But it was agreed that no law covers questions of patriotism and good taste and that some other method of barring Muck would have to be found to-day.

Incidentally, it became known that Department of Justice operatives are looking into every phase of the life of the Kaiser's favorite, both here and before his coming to this country. Whether their investigations will bear fruit before the curtain rises on his New York performance this evening was a matter of conjecture last night.

From Boston came verification of the report that a large proportion of the Muck orchestra was made up of enemy aliens, Germans predominate in the make-up of the organization. There are forty-one Germans on the orchestra's roster, but nineteen of whom have been naturalized as citizens of the United States, when a census of the membership was made last Christmas.

Nine Austrians in Orchestra.

Nine Austrians, of whom three are naturalized citizens of the United States, are among the orchestra's members, since the last census of the orchestra, which has been under the eyes of the government for months, it was announced that the number of enemy aliens had been cut down to twenty-three.

The first step taken by the forces opposing the Prussian director yesterday was a trip to the offices of Joan Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the orchestra. New York performances who are endeavoring to prevent the appearance of Muck here. Mrs. Jay presented the Commissioner with a portfolio containing hundreds of thousand letters and telegrams from men, women and organizations who announced that they were with her in her fight against Muck, and asked Mr. Gilchrist whether he did not consider them sufficient reason for revoking the permit under which the orchestra will play here.

"They might be if the orchestra received a protest direct from me," was the reply. "But the matter is entirely in the hands of the Carnegie Hall management. We issue no permit to the orchestra. Carnegie holds a license which, of course is revokable if there is any improper performance here. We can only wait until after the performance and take such action after it has been held as we may deem necessary. [illegible] before the appearance of Doktor Muck is entirely up to the management."

Owners of Hall Unmoved.

At the offices of the management of Carnegie Hall, C. Smith, representing the owners of the hall, said that the Muck appearance would be handled just as any other orchestra concerts here.

"If it is not deemed advisable for the city officials to stop the appearance of Doktor Muck, we can do nothing," said Mr. Smith. "We have contracted with the orchestra for the use of the hall on certain dates. We owe our private police and the city police will be present in the event of any demonstration. If anything unforeseen or undesirable occurs, that is up to the police."

It is not intended, however, that Doktor Muck shall be welcomed to the city without being given an opportunity to explain his attitude on numerous questions that he has, heretofore, ignored. Unless the secret service operatives stop him before he reaches here, he will be presented with a questionnaire that is expected to keep him busy for a few minutes.

A forerunner of what he may expect in that line is to be found in an open letter

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COL. 3.)

Imagine John Philip Sousa giving a concert in the opera house in Berlin tonight and playing "The Washington Post March" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever." Can't imagine it, can you? But Doktor Muck and his 23 alien enemy musicians are billed to give a concert tonight at Carnegie Hall.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va. The directoire lingerie which [illegible] exclusive [illegible] N. Y. office, the Plaza.

REDUCTION RATIO

12x

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
Date MAR 1 2 1918
Establ 384

OPPOSITION GROWS TO DOKTOR MUCK AS CONCERT DIRECTOR

Sentiment Against Kaiser's Conductor Crystallizes Among Music Lovers Here.

COMMISSIONER MAY REVOKE HIS PERMIT

John F. Gilchrist Says Necessary Action Will Be Taken if Request Is Made.

Opposition to the appearance of Doktor Karl Muck, the Kaiser's own music director, as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on Thursday evening yesterday took such definite form as to indicate that the man who attempted to escape playing "The Star Spangled Banner" might decide to change his arrangements for that day.

Music lovers and patriotic Americans stood together in announcing that some action should be taken to prevent New York from patronizing the Prussian musician who has been excluded from at least six cities of the United States.

No official request had been made to John F. Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, to revoke the permit for the symphony orchestra's concert, that official said last night. But he added that he was ready to take such action as might be considered necessary whenever such application reached him.

Numerous Empty Seats Probable.

Miss Marion A. Turner, secretary of the Educational Dramatic League, of which Mrs. August Belmont is head, announced that she was permitting the seats for which she had subscribed and paid for to remain idle rather than give her indorsement to Muck and what he represents. Similar statements from other music lovers indicated that the Prussian leader may wave his baton before numerous empty seats if he persists in leading the orchestra Thursday evening.

Miss Turner made known her stand against Doktor Muck in this letter to Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Carnegie Hall who have made known their opposition to him:—

"Dear Mrs. Jay:—May I send you a word of thanks and appreciation for the stand you are taking in regard to Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Concerts.

"I am a music lover, but am obliged to consider such pleasures in the light of a luxury to be indulged in only with thought and care. This winter, however, I have allowed my subscription tickets for the Brooklyn concerts to remain idle, as I would not be a party to any symptom of indorsement of Dr. Muck and what he represents. I am ashamed of my cities and the fact that even one concert under such auspices has been permitted. If there is any way in which I can help or be of service in this work of righteous indignation I should be pleased to have you call upon me. Again I thank you."

Opposition Is crystalizing.

After a series of conferences at her home at No. 850 Park avenue, Mrs. Jay last evening issued this statement:—

"Judging by the support and co-operation which have been offered to me in the last twenty-four hours, I should say that public opinion is crystalizing to such an extent that Doktor Muck will be barred officially if Mr. Higginson persists in disregarding the protest which has been submitted to him in all fairness.

"Doktor Muck's present battleline is founded on the fact that when the Boston Symphony was rejected by the Department of Justice in Washington, he was given permission to play elsewhere. This occurred months ago before the government had really got into its stride of ending the privileges of enemy aliens. Much water has flowed under the bridge since Major Higginson received his sanction from the authorities.

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1, PART 2.)

"And, may I ask why, if Doktor Muck is a dangerous alien in Washington, should he be considered a harmless alien in New York city—the great American port and centre of all federal activities?

"Isn't New York entitled to the same protection that is being given to Washington?

"Messages by telephone and letter have come to me from all sources including one of encouragement from that great, thinking woman—Miss Elisabeth Marbury. One of the boxholders was kind enough to ring me up and say that she would not occupy her box on Thursday night owing to her intense feeling about the Royal Prussian Musical Director. This lady is Mrs. Clarkson, and she told me that she was trying to see other boxholders who were sufficiently patriotic to stand by us."

Thus far, the only announcement made by Major N. L. Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra, is that he will continue to retain Dr. Muck as leader of the organization in spite of complaints. His last word to Mrs. Jay, in reply to her request for information, was contained in this brief note:—

"Dear Madam:—

"I have your letter of March 7.

"It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence.

"As regards the act of 'Trading with the enemy,' I sought, in person, instructions from the Department of Justice, at Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care.

"Your very truly,
"N. L. HIGGINSON."

"But it must be remembered that that permission to which he refers was granted last November," said Mrs. Jay. "That was before the Bolsheviki had delivered Russia into the hands of Germany, changing the aspect of things here generally. Major Higginson's letter is intended to indicate that the government has given its approval to Dr. Muck's public appearances, which it has not at all."

Was Conductor for Kaiser.

Doktor Muck's affiliations in Germany are such as to show that he htands high not only with musicians there, but with the Kaiser himself. He is known as a

N Y Sun
March 15, 1918

U-BOAT ATTACKS A HOSPITAL SHIP

Two Torpedoes Fired at Guilford Castle in Bristol Channel.

VESSEL REACHES PORT

450 Sick and Wounded Soldiers Brought Safely to Land.

LONDON, March 14.—For the second time within a fortnight German submarines have made a torpedo attack on a hospital ship flying Red Cross flags. The Admiralty to-day made this announcement:

The British hospital ship Guilford Castle, Capt. Thomas M. Lang, R. N. R., homeward bound, was unsuccessfully attacked by an enemy submarine at the entrance to the Bristol Channel at 5:35 P. M. on March 10. She was flying Red Cross flags and had all the hospital lights on.

Two torpedoes were fired at the Guilford Castle, the first missing and the second hitting the vessel's bow. Although badly damaged, she was able to reach port. There were many sick and wounded on board, who were transferred to a hospital.

The Guilford Castle had a remarkable escape. When the first torpedo, which passed astern, was observed the steamer slewed around, with the result that a second torpedo, which proved to be a "dud," struck the bow, tearing a big hole below the waterline through which the water poured.

The wounded were quickly assembled on deck and the boats were made ready and had been half lowered when it was found that the pumps would keep the water down. A wireless call for help was sent out and friendly destroyers appeared. Full steam ahead was ordered and the steamship made Avonmouth, where the wounded and the hospital staff were landed.

The Guilford Castle had 450 wounded on board from German East Africa. She was southwest of Lundy Island, in the entrance to Bristol Channel, on Sunday afternoon when the attack was made. It was full daylight and the ship's markings could not have been mistaken, as they recently had been repainted.

On February 26 the Glenart Castle, a British hospital ship, was torpedoed and sunk by a submarine in the Bristol Channel with the loss of 150 lives. The Guilford Castle is a steamship of 8,036 tons gross. The Bristol Channel, in which the attacks were made, is an arm of the Atlantic extending into the southwestern part of Great Britain between Wales and England.

BEGIN HOBO ROUNDUP.

Loafers in Jersey to Be Shipped to Farms.

Special Despatch to THE SUN

TRENTON, March 14.—State Commissioner of Labor Bryant sang the first verse of the hoboes' swan song when he sent to all Sheriffs and municipal officers in the State this afternoon enrolment blanks to be filled out by every one coming under the provisions of the recently enacted anti-loafing law. Those who come under the law are those who either won't or don't work. To escape being put to work under the law one must be either less than 18 or more than 50 years old. Otherwise, Mr. Bryant explained, the heretofore workless ones will be summarily pushed into a useful war occupation.

Most of the men who will be put to work by the operation of the law, Mr. Bryant said, will be shipped to the farms, shipyards, munition factories and the like. The job of gathering them up will start as soon as Mr. Bryant's instructions to the Sheriffs have been distributed.

FIRE IN WATERBURY.

Beautiful Buckingham Building Partially Destroyed.

Special Despatch to THE SUN

WATERBURY, Conn., March 14.—The Buckingham Building, built by the millionaire philanthropist John H. Whittemore as an adjunct to the Waterbury Hospital several years ago, was partially destroyed by fire to-day. The building was unusual for its architecture and housed a great organ. Leading musical artists of America and Europe have given concerts in it. The original cost was over $300,000. Stanford White drew the plans, and at Mr. Whittemore's request provided an exterior that was a counterpart of a building of ancient Rome. The plaster friezes had crumbled from rigorous weather, but the structure was otherwise intact. The fire started on the fifth floor.

COLLAR
NUMBER
TWENTY-TWO

It's a jaunty, youthful shape that somehow "takes."

Not one of the new designs that we are constantly bringing out seem to quite fill its place.

Staid buyers tell us that they started using it when young, and seem to have acquired the habit.

N Y Times
March 15, 1918

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Only Subscribers Admitted to Concert, Which Was Not Interrupted.

OPENS WITH OUR ANTHEM

Manager Shows Swiss Citizenship Papers Issued to Leader in 1881.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a sold-out house of all-season subscribers at Carnegie Hall last night, a concert to which the city authorities gave full protection. Mayor Hylan, it was said, ordered the Police Department to prevent any untoward occurrence, and at the last moment before the concert the special force detailed to guard the approaches, doors, and lobbies of the hall was trebled.

Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plain-clothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no nothers. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Opens With National Anthem.

Dr. Muck's entrance, at 8:30 o'clock, a few minutes later than usual, owing to delay in seating the crowd under these circumstances, was greeted with hearty applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The house rose as quickly, and applauded some moments while still standing after the national air. Again at the end of the first part of the concert, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, Dr. Muck deftly passed another ovation from himself to the orchestra. There were later two selections of the Finnish composer, Sibelius, and the prelude to Wagner's "Trixtan." Dr. Muck was recalled half a dozen times at the concert's close.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's founder, sat in the seat always reserved for him far down the centre aisle. He was sen by the audience as he walked forward to meet the conductor and men during the intermission, and had to turn and bow to applause, which was renewed when he presently returned to his chair. It was an open secret that the future of the Boston Symphony rested largely with the fate of last night's event in New York. The result is yet in the balance, but the subscribers gave every evidence of wishing to stand by Major Higginson in maintaining the premier symphony orchestra of this country under difficulties due to war.

The audience was naturally not the final judge of charges and counter-charges such as had been made about "enemy aliens" in the orchestra. Dr. Muck conducted his concert as if nothing had occurred.

Show Swiss Citizenship Papers.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age. The Chancellor of Zug Canton, in verifying the document, also added a line, "With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection."

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document, according to a translation will triumph if you stand united.

Continued on Page Two.

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Continued from Page One.

appended and also authenticated by Mr. Ritter was headed No. 644, Certificate of Citizenship.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the [illegible]n) of Neuheim, in the [illegible] hereby certify that the [illegible] Muck, single, [illegible] stances be re[illegible] community. Given at Neuhe[illegible] this [illegible] day of March 1881.

The President.
(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER,
in the name of the Town Council.
(Signed) C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation of all authorities and their representative protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

Chancellor of the Canton of Zug,
by the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

The certificate bore the seal of Neuheim and various validations showing inspections from time to time.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 14.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Major H. L. Higginson's statement in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday with reference to Dr. Muck and The Providence Journal makes it necessary to state that The Journal's attacks on Dr. Muck had nothing whatever to do with the action of the Presidents of all the Providence musical societies and the Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of this State in their effort to compel Dr. Muck to play the national anthem at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city on Oct. 30 last. These telegrams were sent to Major Higginson and the manager of the orchestra before The Providence Journal had made any attack whatever on Dr.

N Y Herald
March 14, 1918

MUCK AND HIS ENEMY ALIENS HERE TO-NIGHT

Patriotic Societies and Loyal Citizens by Thousands Protest in Vain.

KAISER'S DIREKTOR AND BAND REACH CITY

Carnegie Hall Swings Wide Its Doors to German Doktor Barred by a Half Dozen Other Cities.

Twenty-three enemy aliens, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Doktor Karl Muck, the Kaiser's own musical direktor, will be heard at Carnegie Hall to-night unless some unforeseen obstacle arises to-day to prevent their appearance.

The doors of Carnegie Hall will swing wide for the Kaiser's favorite in spite of ever increasing storm of protest from patriotic organizations and individuals throughout the city. No American in Berlin, argued those who opposed the appearance of Muck, would have the audacity even to suggest his leading an orchestra there, much less being permitted to do so.

When the Prussian conduktor waves his baton in New York he will be exercising a privilege which has been taken from him in a half dozen other cities because of his attempt to escape playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and his known association with the enemies of this country.

The doors of theatres in Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., have been barred against Muck and his orchestra for the period of the war. Moreover, there are numerous other cities that have been classified by the orchestra management as "unprofitable" and will not be visited as long as the direktor of the Kaiser's Berlin opera continues his associations with it.

Bend Energies to Bar Doktor.

Meanwhile preachers, patriotic organizations, artists and patrons of music bent all their energies yesterday to prevent the appearance of an enemy alien here, when the patriotism of other cities had made it impossible for him to appear elsewhere. New York, they insisted, would drop far below the standards of atriotism it has exhibited in other matters if it permits Doktor Muck and his enemy aliens to appear here to-night.

The men and women subscribers to the Boston Symphony programmes here made every effort to find some legal means of preventing what they insist will be a dark blot upon the reputation of the city. But it was agreed that no law covers questions of patriotism and good taste and that some other method of barring Muck would have to be found to-day.

Incidentally, it became known that Department of Justice operatives are looking into every phase of the life of the Kaiser's favorite, both here and before his coming to this country. Whether their investigations will bear fruit before the courtain rises on his New York performance this evening was a matter of conjecture last night.

From Boston came verification of the stories that a large proportion of the Muck orchestra was made up of enemy aliens. Germans predominate in the make-up of the organization. There are forty-one Germans on the orchestra's roster, but nineteen of whom have been naturalized as citizens of the United States, when a canvass of the membership was made last Christmas.

Nine Austrians in Orchestra.

Nine Austrians, of whom three are naturalized citizens of the United States, also are among the orchestra's members. Since the last census of the orchestra, which has been under the eyes of the government for months, it was announced that the number of enemy aliens had been cut down to twenty-three.

The first step taken by the forces opposing the Prussian direktor yesterday was a trip to the offices of John Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the orchestra's New York performances who are endeavoring to prevent the appearance of Muck here. Mrs. Jay presented the Commissioner with a portfolio containing nearly one thousand letters and telegrams from men, women and organizations who announced that they were with her in her fight against Muck, and asked Mr. Gilchrist whether he did not consider them sufficient reason for revoking the permit under which the orchestra will play here.

"They might be if the orchestra received a permit direct from me," was the reply. "But the matter is entirely in the hands of the Carnegie Hall management. We issue no permit to the orchestra. Carnegie holds a license which, of course is revokable if there is any improper performance there. We can only wait until after the performance and take such action after it has been held as we may deem necessary. [illegible] before the appearance of Doktor [illegible] k is entirely up to the hall management."

Owners of Hall Unmoved.

At the offices of the management of Carnegie Hall, C. C. Smith, representing the owners of the hall, said that the Muck appearance would be handled just as any other orchestra concerts here.

"If it is not deemed advisable for the city officials to stop the appearance of Doktor Muck, we can do nothing," said Mr. Smith. "We have contracted with the orchestra for the use of the hall on certain dates. We have our private police and the city police will be present in the event of any demonstration. If anything unforeseen or undesirable occurs, that is up to the police."

It is not intended, however, that Doktor Muck shall be welcomed to the city without being given an opportunity to explain his attitude on numerous questions that he has, heretofore, ignored. Unless the secret service operatives stop him before he reaches here, he will be presented with a questionnaire that is expected to keep him busy for a fw minutes.

A forerunner of what he may expect in that line is to be found in an open letter

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COL. 7.)

TO DOKTOR MUCK AS CONCERT DIRECTOR

Sentiment Against Kaiser's Conductor Crystallizes Among Music Lovers Here.

COMMISSIONER MAY REVOKE HIS PERMIT

John F. Gilchrist Says Necessary Action Will Be Taken if Request Is Made.

Opposition to the appearance of Doktor Karl Muck, the Kaiser's own music director, as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on Thursday evening yesterday took such definite form as to indicate that the man who attempted to escape playing "The Star Spangled Banner" might decide to change his arrangements for that day.

Music lovers and patriotic Americans stood together in announcing that some action should be taken to prevent New York from patronizing the Prussian musician who has been excluded from at least six cities of the United States.

No official request had been made to John F. Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, to revoke the permit for the symphony orchestra's concert, that official said last night. But he added that he was ready to take such action as might be considered necessary whenever such application reached him.

Numerous Empty Seats Probable.

Miss Marion A. Turner, secretary of the Educational Dramatic League, of which Mrs. August Belmont is head, announced that she was permitting the seats for which she had subscribed and paid for to remain idle rather than give her indorsement to Muck and what he represents. Similar statements from other music lovers indicated that the Prussian leader may wave his baton before numerous empty seats if he persists in leading the orchestra Thursday evening.

Miss Turner made known her stand against Doktor Muck in this letter to Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Carnegie Hall who have made known their opposition to him:—

"Dear Mrs. Jay:—May I send you a word of thanks and appreciation for the stand you are taking in regard to Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Concerts.

"I am a music lover, but am obliged to consider such pleasures in the light of a luxury to be indulged in only with thought and care. This winter, however, I have allowed my subscription tickets for the Brooklyn concerts to remain idle, as I would not be a party to any symptom of indorsement of Dr. Muck and what he represents. I am ashamed of my cities and the fact that even one concert under such auspices has been permitted. If there is any way in which I can help or be of service in this work of righteous indignation I should be pleased to have you call upon me. Again I thank you."

Opposition Is crystalizing.

After a series of conferences at her home at No. 850 Park avenue, Mrs. Jay last evening issued this statement:—

"Judging by the support and co-operation which have been offered to me in the last twenty-four hours, I should say that public opinion is crystalizing to such an extent that Doktor Muck will be barred officially if Mr. Higginson persists in disregarding the protest which has been submitted to him in all fairness.

"Doktor Muck's present battleline is founded on the fact that when the Boston Symphony was rejected by the Department of Justice in Washington, he was given permission to play elsewhere. This occurred months ago before the government had really got into its stride of ending the privileges of enemy aliens. Much water has flowed under the bridge since Major Higginson received his sanction from the authorities.

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1, PART 2.)

"And, may I ask why, if Doktor Muck is a dangerous alien in Washington, should he be considered a harmless alien in New York city—the great American port and centre of all federal activities?

"Isn't New York entitled to the same protection that is being given to Washington?

"Messages by telephone and letter have come to me from all sources including one of encouragement from that great, thinking woman—Miss Elisabeth Marbury. One of the boxholders was kind enough to ring me up and say that she would not occupy her box on Thursday night owing to her intense feeling about the Royal Prussian Musical Director. This lady is Mrs. Clarkson, and she told me that she was trying to see other boxholders who were sufficiently patriotic to stand by us."

Thus far, the only announcement made by Major N. L. Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra is that he will continue to retain Dr. Muck as leader of the organization in spite of complaints. His last word to Mrs. Jay, in reply to her request for information, was contained in this brief note:—

"Dear Madam:—

"I have your letter of March 7.

"It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence.

"As regards the act of 'Trading with the enemy,' I sought, in person, instructions from the Department of Justice, at Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care.

"Your very truly,

"N. L. HIGGINSON."

"But it must be remembered that that permission to which he refers was granted last November," said Mrs. Jay. "That was before the Bolsheviki had delivered Russia into the hands of Germany, changing the aspect of things here generally. Major Higginson's letter is intended to indicate that the government has given its approval to Dr. Muck's public appearances, which it has not at all."

Was Conductor for Kaiser.

Doktor Muck's affiliations in Germany are such as to show that he htands hign not only with musicians there, but with the Kaiser himself. He is known as a Prussian because of his many years of residence and professional activity there, although he was born in Bavaria in 1859. He was a son of a Ministerial Counsellor of that South German kingdom.

He was a student at the German universities of Heidelberg and Leipsic. He advanced rapidly from one musical organization to another, until he finally was made conductor of the German Imperial Opera. The official standing and government supervision of this organization are accepted as sufficient evidence of his Germanic antecedents, as the Kaiser would tolerate no foreign blood in the veins of his orchestra leader.

Doktor Muck came to the United States at the urgent invitation of Major Higginson, financial backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, more than twelve years ago. Officially he was "loaned" by the Kaiser's opera organization. That he has been permitted to remain here even after this country has entered the war is accepted as sufficient evidence in the minds of many that Germany thinks his art is good Teutonic propaganda here. If it is his opponents are equally certain that it should be suppressed at once.

23 Enemy Aliens In Orchestra.

During his stay in the United States, and since the beginning of the war particularly, he has made associates of those looked upon as the enemies

---

Two Torpedoes Fired at Guilford Castle in Bristol Channel.

VESSEL REACHES PORT

450 Sick and Wounded Soldiers Brought Safely to Land.

LONDON, March 14.—For the second time within a fortnight German submarines have made a torpedo attack on a hospital ship flying Red Cross flags. The Admiralty to-day made this announcement:

The British hospital ship Guilford Castle, Capt. Thomas M. Lang, R. N. R., homeward bound, was unsuccessfully attacked by an enemy submarine at the entrance to the Bristol Channel at 5:35 P. M. on March 10. She was flying Red Cross flags and had all the hospital lights on.

Two torpedoes were fired at the Guilford Castle, the first missing and the second hitting the vessel's bow. Although badly damaged, she was able to reach port. There were many sick and wounded on board, who were transferred to a hospital.

The Guilford Castle had a remarkable escape. When the first torpedo, which passed astern, was observed the steamer slewed around, with the result that a second torpedo, which proved to be a "dud," struck the bow, tearing a big hole below the waterline through which the water poured.

The wounded were quickly assembled on deck and the boats were made ready and had been half lowered when it was found that the pumps would keep the water down. A wireless call for help was sent out and friendly destroyers appeared. Full steam ahead was ordered and the steamship made Avonmouth, where the wounded and the hospital staff were landed.

The Guilford Castle had 450 wounded on board from German East Africa. She was southwest of Lundy Island, in the entrance to Bristol Channel, on Sunday afternoon when the attack was made. It was full daylight and the ship's markings could not have been mistaken, as they recently had been repainted.

On February 26 the Glenart Castle, a British hospital ship, was torpedoed and sunk by a submarine in the Bristol Channel with the loss of 150 lives. The Guilford Castle is a steamship of 8,036 tons gross. The Bristol Channel, in which the attacks were made, is an arm of the Atlantic extending into the southwestern part of Great Britain between Wales and England.

BEGIN HOBO ROUNDUP.

Loafers in Jersey to Be Shipped to Farms.

Special Despatch to THE SUN

TRENTON, March 14.—State Commissioner of Labor Bryant sang the first verse of the hoboes' swan song when he sent to all Sheriffs and municipal officers in the State this afternoon enrolment blanks to be filled out by every one coming under the provisions of the recently enacted anti-loafing law. Those who come under the law are those who either won't or don't work. To escape being put to work under the law one must be either less than 18 or more than 50 years old. Otherwise, Mr. Bryant explained, the heretofore workless ones will be summarily pushed into a useful war occupation.

Most of the men who will be put to work by the operation of the law, Mr. Bryant said, will be shipped to the farms, shipyards, munition factories and the like. The job of gathering them up will start as soon as Mr. Bryant's instructions to the Sheriffs have been distributed.

FIRE IN WATERBURY.

Beautiful Buckingham Building Partially Destroyed.

Special Despatch to THE SUN

WATERBURY, Conn., March 14.—The Buckingham Building, built by the millionaire philanthropist John H. Whittemore as an adjunct to the Waterbury Hospital several years ago, was partially destroyed by fire to-day. The building was unusual for its architecture and housed a great organ. Leading musical artists of America and Europe have given concerts in it. The original cost was over $300,000. Stanford White drew the plans, and at Mr. Whittemore's request provided an exterior that was a counterpart of a building of ancient Rome. The plaster friezes had crumbled from rigorous weather, but the structure was otherwise intact. The fire started on the fifth floor.

COLLAR NUMBER TWENTY-TWO

It's a jaunty, youthful shape that somehow "takes."

Not one of the new designs that we are constantly bringing out seem to quite fill its place.

Staid buyers tell us that they started using it when young, and seem to have acquired the habit.

So we make it season after season, because we do not care to disappoint the many wearers.

35 cents for one.
4.00 a dozen.

GUARDED BY POLICE

Only Subscribers Admitted to Concert, Which Was Not Interrupted.

OPENS WITH OUR ANTHEM

Manager Shows Swiss Citizenship Papers Issued to Leader in 1881.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a sold-out house of all-season subscribers at Carnegie Hall last night, a concert to which the city authorities gave full protection. Mayor Hylan, it was said, ordered the Police Department to prevent any untoward occurrence, and at the last moment before the concert the special force detailed to guard the approaches, doors, and lobbies of the hall was trebled.

Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plain-clothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no nothers. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Opens With National Anthem.

Dr. Muck's entrance, at 8:30 o'clock, a few minutes later than usual, owing to delay in seating the crowd under these circumstances, was greeted with hearty applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The house rose as quickly, and applauded some moments while still standing after the national air. Again at the end of the first part of the concert, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, Dr. Muck deftly passed another ovation from himself to the orchestra. There were later two selections of the Finnish composer, Sibelius, and the prelude to Wagner's "Trixtan." Dr. Muck was recalled half a dozen times at the concert's close.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's founder, sat in the seat always reserved for him far down the centre aisle. He was sen by the audience as he walked forward to meet the conductor and men during the intermission, and had to turn and bow to applause, which was renewed when he presently returned to his chair. It was an open secret that the future of the Boston Symphony rested largely with the fate of last night's event in New York. The result is yet in the balance, but the subscribers gave every evidence of wishing to stand by Major Higginson in maintaining the premier symphony orchestra of this country under difficulties due to war.

The audience was naturally not the final judge of charges and counter-charges such as had been made about "enemy aliens" in the orchestra. Dr. Muck conducted his concert as if nothing had occurred.

Show Swiss Citizenship Papers.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nuehelm, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age. The Chancellor of Zug Canton, in verifying the document, also added a line, "With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection."

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document, according to a translation will triumph if you stand united.

Continued on Page Two.

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Continued from Page One.

appended and also authenticated by Mr. Ritter was headed No. 644, Certificate of Citizenship.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the [illegible]n) of Neuheim, in the [illegible] hereby certify that the [illegible] Karl Muck, single, [illegible] Bavarian citizen [illegible] Bavarian [illegible] community.

Given at Neuh[illegible] this 4th day of March 1881.

The President.
(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER,
in the name of the Town Council.
(Signed) C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation of all authorities and their representative protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

Chancellor of the Canton of Zug,
by the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

The certificate bore the seal of Neuheim and various validations showing inspections from time to time.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 14.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Major H. L. Higginson's statement in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday with reference to Dr. Muck and The Providence Journal makes it necessary to state that The Journal's attacks on Dr. Muck had nothing whatever to do with the action of the Presidents of all the Providence musical societies and the Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of this State in their effort to compel Dr. Muck to play the national anthem at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city on Oct. 30 last. These telegrams were sent to Major Higginson and the manager of the orchestra before The Providence Journal had made any attack whatever on Dr. Muck."

N.Y. Times March 15, 1918

ENEMY ALIENS HERE TO-NIGHT

Patriotic Societies and Loyal Citizens by Thousands Protest in Vain.

KAISER'S DIREKTOR AND BAND REACH CITY

Carnegie Hall Swings Wide Its Doors to German Doktor Barred by a Half Dozen Other Cities.

Twenty-three enemy aliens, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Doktor Karl Muck, the Kaiser's own musical direktor, will be heard at Carnegie Hall to-night unless some unforeseen obstacle arises to-day to prevent their appearance.

The doors of Carnegie Hall will swing wide for the Kaiser's favorite in spite of ever increasing storm of protest from patriotic organizations and individuals throughout the city. No American in Berlin, argued those who opposed the appearance of Muck, would have the audacity even to suggest his leading an orchestra there, much less being permitted to do so.

When the Prussian conduktor waves his baton in New York he will be exercising a privilege which has been taken from him in a half dozen other cities because of his attempt to escape playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and his known association with the enemies of this country.

The doors of theatres in Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., have been barred against Muck and his orchestra for the period of the war. Moreover, there are numerous other cities that have been classified by the orchestra management as "unprofitable" and will not be visited as long as the direktor of the Kaiser's Berlin opera continues his associations with it.

Bend Energies to Bar Doktor.

Meanwhile preachers, patriotic organizations, artists and patrons of music bent all their energies yesterday to prevent the appearance of an enemy alien here, when the patriotism of other cities had made it impossible for him to appear elsewhere. New York, they insisted, would drop far below the standards of atriotism it has exhibited in other matters if it permits Doktor Muck and his enemy aliens to appear here to-night.

The men and women subscribers to the Boston Symphony programmes here made every effort to find some legal means of preventing what they insist will be a dark blot upon the reputation of the city. But it was agreed that no law covers questions of patriotism and good taste and that some other method of barring Muck would have to be found to-day.

Incidentally, it became known that Department of Justice operatives are looking into every phase of the life of the Kaiser's favorite, both here and before his coming to this country. Whether their investigations will bear fruit before the courtain rises on his New York performance this evening was a matter of conjecture last night.

From Boston came verification of the stories that a large proportion of the Muck orchestra was made up of enemy aliens. Germans predominate in the make-up of the organization. There are forty-one Germans on the orchestra's roster, but nineteen of whom have been naturalized as citizens of the United States, when a canvass of the membership was made last Christmas.

Nine Austrians in Orchestra.

Nine Austrians, of whom three are naturalized citizens of the United States, also are among the orchestra's members. Since the last census of the orchestra, which has been under the eyes of the government for months, it was announced that the number of enemy aliens had been cut down to twenty-three.

The first step taken by the forces opposing the Prussian direktor yesterday was a trip to the offices of John Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the orchestra's New York performances who are endeavoring to prevent the appearance of Muck here. Mrs. Jay presented the Commissioner with a portfolio containing nearly one thousand letters and telegrams from men, women and organizations who announced that they were with her in her fight against Muck, and asked Mr. Gilchrist whether he did not consider them sufficient reason for revoking the permit under which the orchestra will play here.

"They might be if the orchestra received a permit direct from me," was the reply. "But the matter is entirely in the hands of the Carnegie Hall management. We issue no permit to the orchestra. Carnegie holds a license which, of course is revokable if there is any improper performance there. We can only wait until after the performance and take such action after it has been held as we may deem necessary.

"Even before the appearance of Doktor Muck [illegible] the hall management."

Owners of Hall Unmoved.

At the offices of the management of Carnegie Hall, C. C. Smith, representing the owners of the hall, said that the Muck appearance would be handled just as any other orchestra concerts here.

"If it is not deemed advisable for the city officials to stop the appearance of Doktor Muck, we can do nothing," said Mr. Smith. "We have contracted with the orchestra for the use of the hall on certain dates. We have our private police and the city police will be present in the event of any demonstration. If anything unforeseen or undesirable occurs, that is up to the police."

It is not intended, however, that Doktor Muck shall be welcomed to the city without being given an opportunity to explain his attitude on numerous questions that he has, heretofore, ignored. Unless the secret service operatives stop him before he reaches here, he will be presented with a questionnaire that is expected to keep him busy for a fw minutes.

A forerunner of what he may expect in that line is to be found in an open letter

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COL. 3.)

Imagine John Philip Sousa giving a concert in the opera house in Berlin to-night and playing "The Washington Post March" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever!" Can't imagine it, can you? But Doktor Muck and his 23 alien enemy musicians are billed to give a concert to-night at Carnegie Hall.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.
The Greenbrier. Illustrated booklet.
Sulphur waters. N. Y. office, the Fa[illegible]

TO DOKTOR MUCK AS CONCERT DIRECTOR

Sentiment Against Kaiser's Conductor Crystallizes Among Music Lovers Here.

COMMISSIONER MAY REVOKE HIS PERMIT

John F. Gilchrist Says Necessary Action Will Be Taken if Request Is Made.

Opposition to the appearance of Doktor Karl Muck, the Kaiser's own music director, as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on Thursday evening yesterday took such definite form as to indicate that the man who attempted to escape playing "The Star Spangled Banner" might decide to change his arrangements for that day.

Music lovers and patriotic Americans stood together in announcing that some action should be taken to prevent New York from patronizing the Prussian musician who has been excluded from at least six cities of the United States.

No official request had been made to John F. Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, to revoke the permit for the symphony orchestra's concert, that official said last night. But he added that he was ready to take such action as might be considered necessary whenever such application reached him.

Numerous Empty Seats Probable.

Miss Marion A. Turner, secretary of the Educational Dramatic League, of which Mrs. August Belmont is head, announced that she was permitting the seats for which she had subscribed and paid for to remain idle rather than give her indorsement to Muck and what he represents. Similar statements from other music lovers indicated that the Prussian leader may wave his baton before numerous empty seats if he persists in leading the orchestra Thursday evening.

Miss Turner made known her stand against Doktor Muck in this letter to Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Carnegie Hall who have made known their opposition to him:—

"Dear Mrs. Jay:—May I send you a word of thanks and appreciation for the stand you are taking in regard to Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Concerts.

"I am a music lover, but am obliged to consider such pleasures in the light of a luxury to be indulged in only with thought and care. This winter, however, I have allowed my subscription tickets for the Brooklyn concerts to remain idle, as I would not be a party to any symptom of indorsement of Dr. Muck and what he represents. I am ashamed of my cities and the fact that even one concert under such auspices has been permitted. If there is any way in which I can help or be of service in this work of righteous indignation I should be pleased to have you call upon me. Again I thank you."

Opposition Is crystalizing.

After a series of conferences at her home, at which she tried to retain Dr. Muck as leader of the organization in spite of complaints. His last word to Mrs. Jay, in reply to her request for information, was contained in this brief note:—

"Dear Madam:—

"I have your letter of March 7.

"It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence.

"As regards the act of 'Trading with the enemy.' I sought, in person, instructions from the Department of Justice, at Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care.

"Your very truly,

"N. L. HIGGINSON."

"But it must be remembered that that permission to which he refers was granted last November," said Mrs. Jay. "That was before the Bolsheviki had delivered Russia into the hands of Germany, changing the aspect of things here generally. Major Higginson's letter is intended to indicate that the government has given its approval to Dr. Muck's public appearances, which it has not at all."

Was Conductor for Kaiser.

Doktor Muck's affiliations in Germany are such as to show that he htands hign not only with musicians there, but with the Kaiser himself. He is known as a Prussian because of his many years of residence and professional activity there, although he was born in Bavaria in 1859. He was a son of a Ministerial Counsellor of that South German kingdom.

He was a student at the German universities of Heidelberg and Leipsic. He advanced rapidly from one musical organization to another, until he finally was made conductor of the German Imperial Opera. The official standing and government supervision of this organization are accepted as sufficient evidence of his Germanic antecedents, as the Kaiser would tolerate no foreign blood in the veins of his orchestra leader.

Doktor Muck came to the United States at the urgent invitation of Major Higginson, financial backer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, more than twelve years ago. Officially he was "loaned" by the Kaiser's opera organization. That he has been permitted to remain here even after this country has entered the war is accepted as sufficient evidence in the minds of many that Germany thinks his art is good Teutonic propaganda here. If it is his opponents are equally certain that it should be suppressed at once.

23 Enemy Aliens In Orchestra.

During his stay in the United States, and since the beginning of the war particularly, he has made associates of those who have been looked upon as the enemies, first of the cause of the Allies and then of the United States after this country entered the war. His orchestra gives employment to twenty-three enemy aliens, all of whom Doktor Muck says are "perfectly safe to have here."

After the United States became one of the Allies Dr. Muck resigned from the St. Botolph Club, one of Boston's leading social organizations. He continued to lead the orchestra, however, with the active backing of Major Higginson. Criticism of his continuance in that position did not become acuote, however, until he definitely refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," in Providence, R. I. Later, however, he played the national anthem in Boston, after which he resigned as leader of the orchestra there.

But Major Higginson refused to accept the resignation and persuaded him to remain as director of the orchestra. It is due to this insistence on the part of Major Higginson, who has threatened to disband the orchestra if Doktor Muck leaves, that he still is at the head of the orchestra.

Hillquit Backer

A HOSPITAL SHIP

Two Torpedoes Fired at Guilford Castle in Bristol Channel.

VESSEL REACHES PORT

450 Sick and Wounded Soldiers Brought Safely to Land.

LONDON, March 14.—For the second time within a fortnight German submarines have made a torpedo attack on a hospital ship flying Red Cross flags. The Admiralty to-day made this announcement:

The British hospital ship Guilford Castle, Capt. Thomas M. Lang, R. N. R., homeward bound, was unsuccessfully attacked by an enemy submarine at the entrance to the Bristol Channel at 5:35 P. M. on March 10. She was flying Red Cross flags and had all the hospital lights on.

Two torpedoes were fired at the Guilford Castle, the first missing and the second hitting the vessel's bow. Although badly damaged, she was able to reach port. There were many sick and wounded on board, who were transferred to a hospital.

The Guilford Castle had a remarkable escape. When the first torpedo, which passed astern, was observed the steamer slewed around, with the result that a second torpedo, which proved to be a "dud," struck the bow, tearing a big hole below the waterline through which the water poured.

The wounded were quickly assembled on deck and the boats were made ready and had been half lowered when it was found that the pumps would keep the water down. A wireless call for help was sent out and friendly destroyers appeared. Full steam ahead was ordered and the steamship made Avonmouth, where the wounded and the hospital staff were landed.

The Guilford Castle had 450 wounded on board from German East Africa. She was southwest of Lundy Island, in the entrance to Bristol Channel, on Sunday afternoon when the attack was made. It was full daylight and the ship's markings could not have been mistaken, as they recently had been repainted.

On February 26 the Glenart Castle, a British hospital ship, was torpedoed and sunk by a submarine in the Bristol Channel with the loss of 150 lives. The Guilford Castle is a steamship of 8,036 tons gross. The Bristol Channel, in which the attacks were made, is an arm of the Atlantic extending into the southwestern part of Great Britain between Wales and England.

BEGIN HOBO ROUNDUP.

Loafers in Jersey to Be Shipped to Farms.

Special Despatch to THE SUN

TRENTON, March 14.—State Commissioner of Labor Bryant sang the first verse of the hoboes' swan song when he sent to all Sheriffs and municipal officers in the State this afternoon enrolment blanks to be filled out by every one coming under the provisions of the recently enacted anti-loafing law. Those who come under the law are those who either won't or don't work. To escape being put to work under the law one must be either less than 18 or more than 50 years old. Otherwise, Mr. Bryant explained, the heretofore workless ones will be summarily pushed into a useful war occupation.

Most of the men who will be put to work by the operation of the law, Mr. Bryant said, will be shipped to the farms, shipyards, munition factories and the like. The job of gathering them up will start as soon as Mr. Bryant's instructions to the Sheriffs have been distributed.

FIRE IN WATERBURY.

Beautiful Buckingham Building Partially Destroyed.

Special Despatch to THE SUN

WATERBURY, Conn., March 14.—The Buckingham Building, built by the millionaire philanthropist John H. Whittemore as an adjunct to the Waterbury Hospital several years ago, was partially destroyed by fire to-day. The building was unusual for its architecture and housed a great organ. Leading musical artists of America and Europe have given concerts in it. The original cost was over $300,000. Stanford White drew the plans, and at Mr. Whittemore's request provided an exterior that was a counterpart of a building of ancient Rome. The plaster friezes had crumbled from rigorous weather, but the structure was otherwise intact. The fire started on the fifth floor.

COLLAR
NUMBER
TWENTY-TWO

It's a jaunty, youthful shape that somehow "takes."

Not one of the new designs that we are constantly bringing out seem to quite fill its place.

Staid buyers tell us that they started using it when young, and seem to have acquired the habit.

So we make it season after season, because we do not care to disappoint the many wearers.

35 cents for one.
4.00 a dozen.

GUARDED BY POLICE

Only Subscribers Admitted to Concert, Which Was Not Interrupted.

OPENS WITH OUR ANTHEM

Manager Shows Swiss Citizenship Papers Issued to Leader in 1881.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a sold-out house of all-season subscribers at Carnegie Hall last night, a concert to which the city authorities gave full protection. Mayor Hylan, it was said, ordered the Police Department to prevent any untoward occurrence, and at the last moment before the concert the special force detailed to guard the approaches, doors, and lobbies of the hall was trebled.

Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plain-clothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no nothers. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Opens With National Anthem.

Dr. Muck's entrance, at 8:30 o'clock, a few minutes later than usual, owing to delay in seating the crowd under these circumstances, was greeted with hearty applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The house rose as quickly, and applauded some moments while still standing after the national air. Again at the end of the first part of the concert, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, Dr. Muck deftly passed another ovation from himself to the orchestra. There were later two selections of the Finnish composer, Sibelius, and the prelude to Wagner's "Trixtan." Dr. Muck was recalled half a dozen times at the concert's close.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's founder, sat in the seat always reserved for him far down the centre aisle. He was sen by the audience as he walked forward to meet the conductor and men during the intermission, and had to turn and bow to applause, which was renewed when he presently returned to his chair. It was an open secret that the future of the Boston Symphony rested largely with the fate of last night's event in New York. The result is yet in the balance, but the subscribers gave every evidence of wishing to stand by Major Higginson in maintaining the premier symphony orchestra of this country under difficulties due to war.

The audience was naturally not the final judge of charges and countercharges such as had been made about "enemy aliens" in the orchestra. Dr. Muck conducted his concert as if nothing had occurred.

Show Swiss Citizenship Papers.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age. The Chancellor of Zug Canton, in verifying the document, also added a line, "With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection."

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document, according to a translation will triumph if you stand united.

Continued on Page Two.

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Continued from Page One.

appended and also authenticated by Mr. Ritter was headed No. 644, Certificate of Citizenship.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the Town of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, hereby certify that the [illegible] Karl Muck, single, [illegible] Switzerland, [illegible] years of age, [illegible] Switzerland, [illegible] Switzerland, [illegible] Switzerland

N.Y. Tribune March 15, 1918

No Jarring Note In Audience at Muck Concert

Police at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie Hall last night and gave their symphony concert without the interruption that had been prophesied by Mrs. William Jay and other subscribers who have been conducting a campaign against the conductor's appearance in New York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the management, was provided. About fifty uniformed men and twenty detectives were stationed along the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street sides of Carnegie Hall and scattered among the audience, a few wearing evening dress. But there was no necessity for calling upon either the authority of the law or its strong right arm.

Long before the hour set for the concert to begin throngs crowded into the lobby, overflowing the steps and sidewalk in front of the hall and making the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his hand, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and when the anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms Symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium. About 10:15 the concert was finished, and the audience left the hall without incident.

Undeterred by their failrue to halt last night's concert, the subscribers, led by Mrs. Jay, will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, where the Boston Symphony is booked to play. Failing to halt Dr. Muck's appearance there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturady performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of ZBrooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be sub-

WORLD
ss: New York City
MAR 16 1918

R. MUCK IN BROOKLYN CONCERT IS NOT DISTURBED.

olice on Hand, but Not Needed—Conductor Gets a Cordial Welcome.

The scheduled performance of the ston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. rl Muck conducting, took place at s Brooklyn Academy of Music last ght without interruption or open otest. Plain clothes men were attered through the audience and n uniformed police from the Ber- n Street Station were outside, but ere was nothing for them to do. hree boxes and a few seats on the ain floor were unoccupied. The onductor received a cordial welcome om the audience, which he acknowl- ged, and the applause was general roughout the programme.

Charles B. Atkins, director of the ooklyn Institute, had received but e formal protest from a subscriber ainst the appearance of Dr. Muck. For Mrs. William Jay and her co- orkers in their efforts to prevent Dr. uck's performance, there is left the ance at the orchestra's final appear- ce this afternoon in Carnegie Hall. was stated yesterday that a man who aid he was a classmate of Attorney eneral Gregory had volunteered to do at he could to persuade Mr. Gregory and Dr. Muck's appearance here.

N.Y. World March 15, 1918

MUCK LEADS BAND AND ALL SURVIVE

Twenty-Five Policemen at Carnegie Hall Symphony Concert, but There Is No Disturbance to Quell.

THEY FADE AWAY WHEN THEY HEAR BRAHMS MUSIC.

"Star Spangled Banner" Is Played—Large Part of the Audience Plainly Is German.

The so-called Dr. Muck peril expected at Carnegie Hall last night at the ninth concert given by the Boston Symphony Society was lost in the heavy atmosphere surrounding the hall.

Twenty-five policemen, in command of Capt. Sackett of the West 47th Street Station, were at the front and rear entrances of the hall, with a few inside. Several plain clothesmen hovered about. Borough Inspector John O'Brien was also on hand.

The police had little to do except listen—for a few moments—to what Mr. Brahms had to say in his Third Symphony. As this was somewhat different from the offerings of John McCormack, there was soon an exodus of bluecoats.

The only trouble appeared to be difficulty in buying tickets. Many persons were turned away. Perhaps as an indication of protest against Dr. Muck's appearance three boxes in the first tier were vacant.

Absentees Not Known.

Charles Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said he did not know who the regular occupants were, as his list of boxholders was in Boston. There were a few empty seats on the main floor, but this is the case at every concert.

Those present did not appear to be in sympathy with the efforts of the few who for a week have been trying to get Major Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra, to remove Dr. Muck from the conductorship, or requested License Commissioner J. F. Gilchrist to revoke the license of the hall.

When Dr. Muck first came out on the stage the auditors gave him a rousing welcome and they applauded long and lustily after "The Star Spangled Banner." Throughout the programme there was more than the customary amount of applause for the conductor, some of it apparently a little forced and prolonged by what seemed to be the German portion of the audience—a good-sized portion.

The orchestra, after the symphony, stood in acknowledgment. Major Higgison was discovered as he was leaving the hall and was also applauded. The Major only walked a bit more hurriedly and did not acknowledge. Nor did he comment on the situation. Dr. Muck also was silent.

Mr. Ellis said the regular concert would be given in Brookly nto-day and the final concert of the season here in Carnegie Hall to-morrow.

No Power to Revoke License.

Regarding the concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music to-day, Commissioner Gilchrist said last night that, although he had been petitioned to revoke the license, he has no power to do so. The seats are all taken for the Brooklyn concert, as they are for to-morrow's Carnegie Hall affair, and Mr. Ellis says there are 300 on the waiting list who would like a chance to take up dropped subscriptions.

Besides the Brahms symphony, last night's programme had two numbers by Sibelius and Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" prelude. They were done with great care and delicacy, and the climax in the Wagner number was built up superbly.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH
Address: New York City
Date MAR 16 1918

NOW that we all know about Muck being a musical officer of the Kaiser, why not inform us as to what army Major Higginson belongs? Or is he just the drum-major of that Boston band?

BEAU BROADWAY.

N Y Sun March 13, 1918

DR. MANNING JOINS MUCK'S OPPONENTS

Tinity's Rector Enters Fight to Prevent Carnegie Hall Appearance.

CONDEMNS TOLERANCE

Says Presence of Prussian at Concert "Is Not Fitting Nor Decent."

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is serving as chaplain wit hthe 302d United States Engineers at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., yesterday entered the fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from conducting at the last Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for to-morrow night at Carnegie Hall. In supporting the effort to have the Kaiser's court musician ousted Dr. Manning said:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra? We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defence, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Mrs. William Jay, who has led the attack on Dr. Muck, gave out letters yesterday from persons who have joined in the effort to prevent the German conductor's appearance Thursday night, and gossip in musical circles had it that steps will be taken to exclude him from the programme on that evening.

Rumor was rampant that soldiers and sailors have been given, or will be given, free tickets to the performance in an effort to make the audience seem patriotic. This, according to a subscriber to the symphony here in New York, has been done to further the propaganda in Germany and other countries that Dr. Muck's efforts are sanctioned in many quarters in the United States.

"It is beyond me," said Mrs. Jay, "that any sensitive musician can persist, in the face of the righteous indignation of Americans, to thrust himself before their presence unless he were actuated by some deeper motive than merely arning his living."

A letter from Mrs. Henry Aston Crosby of 29 Washington Square to Mrs. Jay was among those given out for her yesterday. It read:

"There can be no half measures about the Muck case. It is either loyalty or treason. I am particularly interested in the attidue you have assumed, as there is but a handful of women in Boston, my daughter, Mrs. Allan Forbes, being one, who love their country more than their music and who have been willing to give up the Symphony seats. Is there no possibility of awakening in the minds of those who are in power the all important and vital need and duty of having justice done by public handing of spies until they are dealt with as other nations treat them. We the ignoring the most alarming menace, and it is an attitude which as a nation is ignoble."

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date

MUCK PLAYS IN BROOKLYN.

Boston Symphony Conductor Applauded—Police at Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its last concert in Brooklyn last evening before an audience of subscribers that filled the Academy and that welcomed Dr. Karl Muck with applause. Because of local protests, the police of the Bergen Street Station, under Captain Hayes, were on hand to check disturbances, not occur. The program in- ymphony of Mozart, a sere- chaikowsky, and Goldmark's Sakuntala."

nd Directors of the Brooklyn which manages the concerts, thout financial risk, met he day, and laid on the table for thirty days more a discussion of the orchestra's future concerts in Brooklyn next year. President A. Augustus Healy left for Atlantic City after the meeting, and no announcement of the action of the Directors was made.

k 1884

P. Traveller March 14, 1918

WORLD TAKES UP CUDGELS FOR MUCK

[New York World.]

In these busy times there are so many things of importance to do besides stirring up an agitation against Dr. Karl Muck. For instance, knitting sweaters for sailors, making surgical dressings for the Red Cross, selling thrift stamps and collecting books for war camp libraries. Any zealous person should be able to find an outlet for his patriotism without hunting far.

It hardly seems plausible that Congress had Dr. Muck exclusively in mind when it passed the espionage and trading with the enemy acts. So far as is known, the Boston Symphony orchestra has not been maintained for the purpose of planting bombs on transports or setting fires in munition works. Neither the Halifax disaster nor the Port Newark fire has been traced to it. Of course the government does not tell all that it knows. But by last accounts, Maj. Henry L. Higginson had not been interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., with the enemy aliens held there. The appalling state of affairs that alarms certain apprehensive persons appears to be largely a matter of personal feeling. The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Muck's leadership, has given many concerts here without shifting the situation on the western front. Its program calls for two more concerts this season. There is no occasion for anxious souls to hunt bomb-proof cellars or retire to their country estates in anticipation of danger from the orchestra's visit. No man or woman who is a conscientious objector is required to sit through a concert at Carnegie Hall. Anybody who dislikes Dr. Muck personally more than he likes symphony music is free to spend a pleasant afternoon or evening by himself humming a hymn of hate.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
Date MAR 16 1918.

day ride to and from his work.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck as leader, according to announcement, played in Carnegie Hall, and nothing happened. Not a single national disaster was reported in the morning newspapers.

First on the programme came Brahms's symphony in F major. As Dr. Muck raised his baton 100,000,000 people with bated breath waited for the first note. Not a munitions plant from Connecticut to California blew up. Then followed Sibelius's fantasia of "Pohjola's Daughter" and his "Night Ride and Sunrise." The suspense was nerve-racking. When the orchestra stopped playing, nowhere was the horizon lighted by the dull-red glare from a ship-yard in flames. The concert closed with the prelude from "Tristan and Isolde." When the end came and the audience rose to go, no word had come over the wires about the destruction of the Brooklyn Navy Yard or the capture of Fort Wadsworth by hostile forces armed with fiddles and trombones.

It was a fearful fiasco on Dr. Muck's part. After all the elaborate preparations, the Boston Symphony Orchestra furnished the ticket-holders with nothing more sensational than a concert of the usual excellence. Just the same, the country had a terribly narrow escape from something. About thirty subscribers turned in their tickets and several wrote letters to the newspapers.

From STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date

So as to insure absolute safety we suggest that Dr. Muck's outfit double up with the Police Department Band in future concerts in this city. Then if there should be any trouble the police musicians could drop their instruments and grab their night sticks.

Est 1884

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 18 1918

ADDS HER PROTEST.

To the Editor of the Herald:—

I wish to go on record as one more American woman who agrees most emphatically with Mrs. Jay and her supporters in considering it an outrage that Dr. Muck should be permitted to conduct in New York. It is a sinister and disgraceful thing that the Mayor of New York should allow it.

LOUISE DI C. BAKER.

Albany, N. Y., March 15, 1918.

tabl

N.Y. Tribune March 15, 1918

No Jarring Note In Audience at Muck Concert

Police at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie Hall last night and gave their symphony concert without the interruption that had been prophesied by Mrs. William Jay and other subscribers who have been conducting a campaign against the conductor's appearance in New York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the management, was provided. About fifty uniformed men and twenty detectives were stationed along the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street sides of Carnegie Hall and scattered among the audience, a few wearing evening dress. But there was no necessity for calling upon either the authority of the law or its strong right arm.

Long before the hour set for the concert to begin throngs crowded into the lobby, overflowing the steps and sidewalk in front of the hall and making the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his hand, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and when the anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms Symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium. About 10:15 the concert was finished, and the audience left the hall without incident.

Undeterred by their failrue to halt last night's concert, the subscribers, led by Mrs. Jay, will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, where the Boston Symphony is booked to play. Failing to halt Dr. Muck's appearance there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturady performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of ZBrooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be sub-

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date MAR 16 1918

R. MUCK IN BROOKLYN CONCERT IS NOT DISTURBED.

olice on Hand, but Not Needed—Conductor Gets a Cordial Welcome.

The scheduled performance of the ston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. rl Muck conducting, took place at Brooklyn Academy of Music last ght without interruption or open otest. Plain clothes men were attered through the audience and n uniformed police from the Ber- n Street Station were outside, but ere was nothing for them to do. hree boxes and a few seats on the ain floor were unoccupied. The onductor received a cordial welcome om the audience, which he acknowl- ged, and the applause was general roughout the programme.

Charles B. Atkins, director of the ooklyn Institute, had received but e formal protest from a subscriber ainst the appearance of Dr. Muck.

For Mrs. William Jay and her co- orkers in their efforts to prevent Dr. uck's performance, there is left the ance at the orchestra's final appear- ce this afternoon in Carnegie Hall. was stated yesterday that a man who ld he was a classmate of Attorney eneral Gregory had volunteered to do e for the ladies to persuade Mr. Gregory Muck's appearance here.

N.Y. World March 15, 1918

MUCK LEADS BAND AND ALL SURVIVE

Twenty-Five Policemen at Carnegie Hall Symphony Concert, but There Is No Disturbance to Quell.

THEY FADE AWAY WHEN THEY HEAR BRAHMS MUSIC.

"Star Spangled Banner" Is Played—Large Part of the Audience Plainly Is German.

The so-called Dr. Muck peril expected at Carnegie Hall last night at the ninth concert given by the Boston Symphony Society was lost in the heavy atmosphere surrounding the hall.

Twenty-five policemen, in command of Capt. Sackett of the West 47th Street Station, were at the front and rear entrances of the hall, with a few inside. Several plain clothesmen hovered about. Borough Inspector John O'Brien was also on hand.

The police had little to do except listen—for a few moments—to what Mr. Brahms had to say in his Third Symphony. As this was somewhat different from the offerings of John McCormack, there was soon an exodus of bluecoats.

The only trouble appeared to be difficulty in buying tickets. Many persons were turned away. Perhaps as an indication of protest against Dr. Muck's appearance three boxes in the first tier were vacant.

Absentees Not Known.

Charles Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said he did not know who the regular occupants were, as his list of boxholders was in Boston. There were a few empty seats on the main floor, but this is the case at every concert.

Those present did not appear to be in sympathy with the efforts of the few who for a week have been trying to get Major Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra, to remove Dr. Muck from the conductorship, or requested License Commissioner J. F. Gilchrist to revoke the license of the hall.

When Dr. Muck first came out on the stage the auditors gave him a rousing welcome and they applauded long and lustily after "The Star Spangled Banner." Throughout the programme there was more than the customary amount of applause for the conductor, some of it apparently a little forced and prolonged by what seemed to be the German portion of the audience—a good-sized portion.

The orchestra, after the symphony, stood in acknowledgment. Major Higgison was discovered as he was leaving the hall and was also applauded. The Major only walked a bit more hurriedly and did not acknowledge. Nor did he comment on the situation. Dr. Muck also was silent.

Mr. Ellis said the regular concert would be given in Brookly nto-day and the final concert of the season here in Carnegie Hall to-morrow.

No Power to Revoke License.

Regarding the concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music to-day, Commissioner Gilchrist said last night that, although he had been petitioned to revoke the license, he has no power to do so. The seats are all taken for the Brooklyn concert, as they are for to-morrow's Carnegie Hall affair, and Mr. Ellis says there are 300 on the waiting list who would like a chance to take up dropped subscriptions.

Besides the Brahms symphony, last night's programme had two numbers by Sibelius and Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" prelude. They were done with great care and delicacy, and the climax in the Wagner number was built up superbly.

From MORNING TELEGRAPH

Address: New York City

Date MAR 16 1918

NOW that we all k, of the Kaiser Major Higginson bel that Boston band?

eld rk 1884

N.Y. Sun March 13, 1918

DR. MANNING JOINS MUCK'S OPPONENTS

Tinity's Rector Enters Fight to Prevent Carnegie Hall Appearance.

CONDEMNS TOLERANCE

Says Presence of Prussian at Concert "Is Not Fitting Nor Decent."

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is serving as chaplain wit hthe 302d United States Engineers at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., yesterday entered the fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from conducting at the last Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for to-morrow night at Carnegie Hall. In supporting the effort to have the Kaiser's court musician ousted Dr. Manning said:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra? We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defence, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Mrs. William Jay, who has led the attack on Dr. Muck, gave out letters yesterday from persons who have joined in the effort to prevent the German conductor's appearance Thursday night, and gossip in musical circles had it that steps will be taken to exclude him from the programme on that evening.

Rumor was rampant that soldiers and sailors have been given, or will be given, free tickets to the performance in an effort to make the audience seem patrotic. This, according to a subscriber to the symphony here in New York, has been done to further the propaganda in Germany and other countries that Dr. Muck's efforts are sanctioned in many quarters in the United States.

"It is beyond me," said Mrs. Jay, "that any sensitive musician can persist, in the face of the righteous indignation of Americans, to thrust himself before their presence unless he were actuated by some deeper motive than merely arning his living."

A letter from Mrs. Henry Aston Crosby of 29 Washington Square to Mrs. Jay was among those given out for her yesterday. It read:

"There can be no half measures about the Muck case. It is either loyalty or treason. I am particularly interested in the attidue you have assumed, as there is but a handful of women in Boston, my daughter, Mrs. Allan Forbes, being one, who love their country more than their music and who have been willing to give up the Symphony seats. Is there no possibility of awakening in the minds of those who are in power the all important and vital need and duty of having justice done by public handing of spies until they are dealt with as other nations treat them. We the ignoring the most alarming menace, and it is an attitude which as a nation is ignoble."

om TIMES

ddress New York City

ate

MUCK PLAYS IN BROOKLYN.

Boston Symphony Conductor Applauded—Police at Concert.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its last concert in Brooklyn last evening before an audience of subscribers that filled the Academy and that welcomed Dr. Karl Muck with applause. Because of local protests, the police of the Bergen Street Station, under Captain Hayes, were on hand to check disturbances, which did not occur. The program included a symphony of Mozart, a serenade of Tschaikowsky, and Goldmark's overture, "Sakuntala."

Trustees and Directors of the Brooklyn Institute, which manages the concerts, though without financial risk, met earlier in the day, and laid on the table for thirty days more a discussion of the orchestra's future concerts in Brooklyn next year. President A. Augustus Healy left for Atlantic City after the meeting, and no announcement of the action of the Directors was made.

k 1884

P. Traveller March 4, 1918

WORLD TAKES UP CUDGELS FOR MUCK

[New York World.]

In these busy times there are so many things of importance to do besides stirring up an agitation against Dr. Karl Muck. For instance, knitting sweaters for sailors, making surgical dressings for the Red Cross, selling thrift stamps and collecting books for war camp libraries. Any zealous person should be able to find an outlet for his patriotism without hunting far.

It hardly seems plausible that Congress had Dr. Muck exclusively in mind when it passed the espionage and trading with the enemy acts. So far as is known, the Boston Symphony orchestra has not been maintained for the purpose of planting bombs on transports or setting fires in munition works. Neither the Halifax disaster nor the Port Newark fire has been traced to it. Of course the government does not tell all that it knows. But by last accounts, Maj. Henry L. Higginson had not been interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., with the enemy aliens held there. The appalling state of affairs that alarms certain apprehensive persons appears to be largely a matter of personal feeling. The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Muck's leadership, has given many concerts here without shifting the situation on the western front. Its program calls for two more concerts this season. There is no occasion for anxious souls to hunt bomb-proof cellars or retire to their country estates in anticipation of danger from the orchestra's visit. No man or woman who is a conscientious objector is required to sit through a concert at Carnegie Hall. Anybody who dislikes Dr. Muck personally more than he likes symphony music is free to spend a pleasant afternoon or evening by himself humming a hymn of hate.

From WORLD

Address: New York City

Date MAR 16 1918.

day ride to and from his work.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck as leader, according to announcement, played in Carnegie Hall, and nothing happened. Not a single national disaster was reported in the morning newspapers.

First on the programme came Brahms's symphony in F major. As Dr. Muck raised his baton 100,000,000 people with bated breath waited for the first note. Not a munitions plant from Connecticut to California blew up. Then followed Sibelius's fantasia of "Pohjola's Daughter" and his "Night Ride and Sunrise." The suspense was nerve-racking. When the orchestra stopped playing, nowhere was the horizon lighted by the dull-red glare from a ship-yard in flames. The concert closed with the prelude from "Tristan and Isolde." When the end came and the audience rose to go, no word had come over the wires about the destruction of the Brooklyn Navy Yard or the capture of Fort Wadsworth by hostile forces armed with fiddles and trombones.

It was a fearful fiasco on Dr. Muck's part. After all the elaborate preparations, the Boston Symphony Orchestra furnished the ticket-holders with nothing more sensational than a concert of the usual excellence. Just the same, the country had a terribly narrow escape from something. About thirty subscribers turned in their tickets and several wrote letters to the newspapers.

From STANDARD UNION

Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Date MAR 16 1918

So as to insure absolute safety we suggest that Dr. Muck's outfit double up with the Police Department Band in future concerts in this city. Then if there should be any trouble the police musicians could drop their instruments and grab their night sticks.

Est 1884

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City MAR 18 1918

ADDS HER PROTEST.

To the Editor of the Herald:—

I wish to go on record as one more American woman who agrees most emphatically with Mrs. Jay and her supporters in considering it an outrage that Dr. Muck should be permitted to conduct in New York. It is a sinister and disgraceful thing that the Mayor of New York should allow it.

LOUISE DI C. BAKER.

Albany, N. Y., March 15, 1918.

tabl

AMERICAN
New York City MAR 16 1918

We Should Make Our War Upon Armies, Not Upon Artists

THE good women who are firing verbal volleys of excoriation at the head of Dr. Muck seem to have fallen into the same error which has led some of their male compatriots at times to go off at half-cock.

If we understand Mrs. Jay and the ladies enlisted under her flag, their opposition to Dr. Muck is based upon the grounds that he is a German and an alien enemy, and that he once refused to permit his orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

If these things were true, the opposition to Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra would be entirely justified.

But, as it happens, Dr. Muck is NOT a German and is NOT an alien enemy and did NOT refuse to permit his orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" when requested to do so.

Dr. Muck was born in Bavaria at a time when Bavaria was not only not a part of the German Empire, but was actively and avowedly hostile to Prussia and to the formation of a German Empire dominated by Prussia. Largely on account of this feeling, the father of Dr. Muck emigrated from Bavaria to Switzerland when the musician was a child four years of age.

Reared in Switzerland from his infancy, Dr. Muck became, of his own choice, a Swiss citizen; and when he came to this country, as well as when he went to Germany, he traveled as a citizen of Switzerland, with a passport issued by the Government of Switzerland.

Being a Swiss citizen, and Switzerland and the United States being at peace and upon terms of amity, it is impossible, of course, that Dr. Muck can be an alien enemy any more than a resident Hollander can be an alien enemy.

As to the charge that Dr. Muck once refused to permit his orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner," we have the explicit denial of Colonel Higginson—a high-minded gentleman whose word is absolutely good in every circle—and the explicit affirmation of Colonel Higginson that Dr. Muck cheerfully and willingly directed the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra the very first time that he was requested to do so.

We must say that we have no great sympathy at any time with any outcry against great artists because those artists happen to be of foreign lineage.

It seems to us that to make verbal war and to invoke ostracism upon such artists as Kreisler and Frieda Hempel and Schumann-Heink and others who are of German or Austrian lineage is carrying patriotic feeling to an absurd limit of intolerance.

But while there is room for two minds in regard to that matter, there is no room for two minds in regard to Dr. Muck.

The opposition to Dr. Muck is based on the specific charges which we have recited, and since the evidence shows that these charges are based upon assumed facts, which are NOT facts, the charges necessarily fall to the ground of their own weight.

The patriotism that will finally win this war is not that sort of patriotism which goes about seeking occasion to create suspicion and ill-feeling at home, and which manifests itself in berating and in stirring up feeling against aliens who are resident in the country and who behave themselves properly and carefully under the circumstances.

The patriotism which will win the war is the patriotism which gives all that it has and lends all of its thoughts and all its energies to fighting, not an artist here or there, but the armed legions which under the Kaiser's direction and command confront our troops and the troops of the allies on the blood-stained soil of France and Italy.

It is the patriotism that DOES, and not the patriotism that TALKS, that will accomplish the terrific task of beating Germany. And, to tell the truth, the patriotism THAT DOES appeals to the good sense of the great body of the American people, and the patriotism THAT TALKS does not.

Let Dr. Muck direct his orchestra in peace. He will give us good music and patriotic music. It certainly would puzzle any sensible man to discover how that can comfort or aid the Kaiser.

n WORLD
ress: New York City MAR 16 1918

The Dr. Muck Peril.

To the Editor of The World:

Reading with interest your editorial "The Dr. Muck Peril" stirs me, as I have no doubt it stirs many other native Americans, to protest against such puerile arguments being brought in defense of Dr. Muck and those supporting him.

The point which his defenders seem not to take cognizance of is this: What right has any true, patriotic American to lend aid to any alien enemy who has the effrontery to remain in this country merely for what money he can make; who produces our national songs under protest, and shows by every move in this matter that he is singularly without the slightest sensitiveness in thrusting himself forward merely for pecuniary gain? How long do you think his attitude would be tolerated were he an American or Englishman in Germany at this time? Dr. Muck as Dr. Muck is but a cipher; it is the principle of the thing which matters—to exploit before the public at this time a man so foreign to our ideals. The attempted facetiousness of many of the remarks is about what could be expected of any defender of an alien subject so lacking in dignity and justice at a time when the flower of our youth is assembling here and abroad to defend our ideals.

We are eliminating German from our schools, we are interning suspicious characters—in fact, cleaning house to exterminate that which we have proved to our satisfaction to be the world menace—and here at this crucial period a few ill-advised people, who evidently are putting money interests before the national welfare, have taken up the cudgels in favor of what to healthy-minded Americans seems a pretty poor sample of one imbued with divine harmony. We Americans whose sons are now on the front, who stand firmly against Germany and her mediæval warfare, feel that we at least have a right to speak plainly and protest against sustaining an avowed enemy within our gates. FREE-THINKER.

New York, March 14.

AMERICAN
ss: New York City.
MAR 16 1918

MUCK'S BATON AGAIN A WINNER

Packed House in Brooklyn Applauds Symphony Leader Despite Mrs. Jay's Crusade.

Dr. Karl Muck went over the top again last night with his baton and carried the second line trenches of his critics. He conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn Academy of Music amid the plaudits of a crowd which packed the house, save for about half of the boxes.

Mrs. William Jay, society woman and leader of the subscribers who have bitterly assailed Mr. Muck as pro-German, worked hard all day to prevent his appearance in Brooklyn. Their failure to stop the concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night went against them.

"If the law did not uphold you in Manhattan, it would not in Brooklyn," was the answer to most of their protests.

As a precaution against any one starting a demonstration, ten uniformed policemen were on duty outside of the Academy, and about fifteen detectives in civilian clothes were within.

Dr. Muck was loudly applauded at the end of the "Star Spangled Banner," which, as usual, was the opening number. He won further applause by his masterly leadership of Mozart's Symphony in E flat. Tschaikowsky's Serenade for strings and a work by Goldmark.

Mrs. Jay yesterday issued an appeal to Boston Symphony concert subscribers to send their tickets to her. The tickets desired are those calling for seats at the matineee in Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

Mrs. Jay announced that she wished to obtain the tickets for a definite purpose, in furtherance of the crusade "against this pro-German organization."

Associates of Mrs. Jay in the fight declared the leader of the opposition to Dr. Muck has a plan which will prove successful in preventing further appearances of Dr. Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city.

Commenting upon the announced Swiss citizenship of Dr. Muck, Mrs. Jay said yesterday:

"I have the deepest respect in the world for a pro-American German and the greatest contempt for a pro-German Swiss. I think I am voicing the sentiments of the American people when I say I think a man should be judged by the feelings in his heart rather than by the papers in his pockets."

Mrs. Jay refused to give any details of her plan for the matinee this afternoon.

EVENING SUN
ess: New York City

BROOKLYN MAY BAR MUCK HEREAFTER

Institute to Act Soon on Further Appearances.

Formal action against a future appearance in the Brooklyn Institute of Dr. Karl Muck at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was expected to be announced to-day by authorization of the board following action taken last Wednesday.

Though Dr. Muck was received with anything but disfavor by the good sized audience at the Institute last night, it is firmly believed that the contract for the yearly appearance of the Muck organization in Brooklyn Institute will be terminated for the duration of the war. No intimation of the board's action was made known, but the sentiment of members was expressed as being in favor of sacrificing art to patriotism.

The audience last night was fully as cordial a one as that which greeted the Boston organization and its conductor at Carnegie Hall. In spite of vehement protests on the part of Mrs. William Jay and her anti-Muck following and their determined efforts to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance in Brooklyn, the programme went off smothly, and at the end of the first part Dr. Muck received three curtain calls. On the third he had the entire orchestra rise and acknowledge the applause, which was followed by a fresh outburst of approval from the audience.

One box and 200 seats in the orchestra remained unoccupied last night, which was taken to indicate the attitude of certain persons alligned with the Jay or anti-Muck faction. Few policemen were to be seen and from the start it appeared there would be no marked objection to the performance.

Representatives of twenty-three Grand Army posts registered a protest against Muck's appearance at Brooklyn at a meeting yesterday in Borough Hall.

RAM
w York City.

Mrs. Jay Continues Fight to Prevent Dr. Muck from Appearing in City Again

She and Associates Ask Subscribers to Concert to Act To-Day—Director Will Be Barred from Brooklyn Academy—Institute Acts.

Continuing their fight against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck as director of Major N. L. Higginson's Boston Symphony Orchestra, which contains twenty-two enemy aliens, Mrs. William Jay and her patriotic associates have issued an appeal to all subscribers to the concerts to contribute their seats for this afternoon's concert in Carnegie Hall to her committee. The appeal reads:—

"'Subscribers for the Boston Symphony Concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval to Dr. Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending their tickets at once to Mrs. William Jay, No. 850 Park avenue."

Brooklyn Friday night became a candidate for an honorary position in the list of patriotic American cities which have barred their doors against Dr. Muck.

That the Brooklyn Institute, which heretofore has contracted for the appearance of the Muck orchestra in Brooklyn each season, had "taken definite action which was construed as the farewell to his case for next season" became known while the Prussian director was waving his baton at the final concert of the orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Just what the action had been none of the trustees would reveal. They said that they had bound themselves not to make public a statement of their action until to-day. Meanwhile it was announced significantly that when art and patriotism conflicted it was time to sacrifice art.

Dr. Muck bid his adieus to Brooklyn before a house that was studded with vacant seats. Although the management of the Academy of Music took pains to make it known that every seat had been sold and that there were a few "standees" in the rear of the auditorium, it was obvious that something out of the ordinary had prevented regular subscribers to the concerts from occupying their accustomed places, for which they had paid at the beginning of the season.

Half a dozen uniformed policemen had been stationed about the doors of the Academy of Music and numerous detectives were to be seen about the rear of the house with the opening of the concert. But they had nothing to do, as the audience appeared more curious to see Muck than to take active part in a demonstration for or against him.

When told of the eleventh hour assertions of Doktor Muck's associates that he possessed naturalization papers proving him to be a citizen of Switzerland, neither Mrs. Jay nor any of her supporters would believe that the documents were genuine. They said that such papers would have been produced long ago, when Muck first was accused of undue friendliness for the enemies of this nation, had they been genuine.

Representatives of twenty-three posts of the Grand Army of the Republic at a meeting at the Borough Hall, in Brooklyn, joined their voices to the many protests against the appearance of Muck at the Academy of Music. They passed a resolution which described the action of those responsible for the Prussian's appearance as "a disgrace to Brooklyn."

a EVENING WORLD
ress: New York City.
MAR 16 1918

DR. MUCK IN BROOKLYN CONCERT IS NOT DISTURBED

Police on Hand, but Not Needed—Conductor Gets a Cordial Welcome.

The scheduled performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Karl Muck conducting, took place at the Brooklyn Academy of Music last night without interruption or open protest. Plain clothes men were scattered through the audience and ten uniformed police from the Bergen Street Station were outside, but there was nothing for them to do. Three boxes and a few seats on the main floor were unoccupied. The conductor received a cordial welcome from the audience, which he acknowledged, and the applause was general throughout the programme.

Charles B. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute, had received but one formal protest from a subscriber against the appearance of Dr. Muck.

For Mrs. William Jay and her coworkers in their efforts to prevent Dr. Muck's performance, there is left the chance at the orchestra's final appearance this afternoon in Carnegie Hall. It was stated yesterday that a man who said he was a classmate of Attorney General Gregory had volunteered to do all he could to persuade Mr. Gregory to end Dr. Muck's appearance here.

EVENING GLOBE
ss New York City

A Guttural Symphony.

Editor Globe:—Between the pauses I chanced to take a stroll in the foyer of Carnegie Hall at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon, and an unpleasant feature was the loud conversation of nearly twenty German enemy aliens, belonging to the organization, in the "Hun" language. In any allied capital this would not be permitted under similar circumstances, but we, with an overabundance of tolerance, do allow this language to be spoken freely and boisterously in our most popular concert hall. More than twenty musicians—German enemy aliens—are members of this musical body, and what is more regrettable, they are sanctioned by the Bostonian backers, Americans, and protected by the manager, C. A. Ellis.

We ask ourselves if the unchristian murderer, the kaiser and his beastly son, William the Hangman, would permit twenty-three American musicians to play in Oomplatz, Berlin. They would not. It is not too late to apply Cicero's tirade against Catiline, "Quousque tandem abutere Catilina patientiam nostra," etc. How long will we tolerate our national pride to be insulted by our "enemies within" and with the official sanction of our own American backers from Boston, the city pride of America? And this for the sake of the alluring dollar!

Dr. Muck conducts the "Star-Spangled Banner" in the most uninspiring manner; he appears to be bored when directing our national hymn. Why not relinquish the baton, or make him relinquish entirely? We have as conductors Henry Hadley, Victor Herbert, and others who could fill the gap left by the doctor, the confused Swiss-Prussian German. JOSEPH DE VALDOR.

New York, March 15.

SUN
ess: New York City MAR 16 1918

BROOKLYN AUDIENCE CORDIAL TO MUCK

Crowded House Gives Conductor Ovation but His 'Sacrifice' Is Hinted.

MAY NOT PLAY IN 1919

Institute Trustees to Make Announcement of Action To-day.

An audience fully as cordial though not so large as the one which had greeted him in Carnegie Hall the night before welcomed Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Academy of Music in Brooklyn last night, thus enabling the conductor to score once more against the faction which has sought to bar him from the stages of the city as pro-German.

From the fact that he was permitted to appear over the vehement and varied protests of his antagonists and was heartily received by a house almost as crowded as the one at Carnegie Hall, there can be no doubt that the advantage was all with Dr. Muck and against Mrs. William Jay and her anti-Muck followers, but a significant thing was in the air—signs that carried more than a hope of comfort for the discomforted.

Engagement in 1919 Unlikely.

These signs indicates that the triumph of Dr. Muck, though unmarred last night and flawless, probably will be the last he will have in Brooklyn during the war. Despite the warmth of his reception and the loyalty of the orchestra subscribers, who turned out in their sartorial best to all but fill the Academy opera house from footlight to high gallery, it is pretty definitely established that the Brooklyn Institute has declined to renew its contract for the season ahead.

The concerts in Brooklyn are held under the auspices of the Institute. Prof. C. D. Atkins, director of the Institute, admitted last night that the board had taken definite action Wednesday, but declined to say of just what this action consisted. The board had decided to reserve announcement until to-day, he said, and had sworn him to secrecy.

Prof. Atkins chatted about the controversy and finally asked—he had come in at the conclusion of the first part of the programme—whether any disturbance had marked the initial stages of the concert. Answered in the negative, he remarked:

"I am glad of that. Everything seems to be as still as a pond."

The conversation then switched to the ovation at Carnegie and back to the controversy involving the pro-Muck and the anti-Muck factions. The latter drew forth this significant comment:

"It is too bad that a great artist should have to be sacrificed to patriotism, but that I suppose is what we must expect in a time like this. Sincere people are likely to be carried away by patriotism and after all it is higher than art."

Vacant Seats Are in Blocks.

This in itself would seem to indicate that Dr. Muck is to be sacrificed, in so far at least as Brooklyn is concerned.

To this comment regarding "the sacrifice of a great artist," Prof. Atkins would add nothing last night, but suggested instead that THE SUN reporter call him up at 10 o'clock this morning.

So far as the concert goes, the evening in Brooklyn passed off much as had that at Carnegie. There were fewer policemen and about the same enthusiasm. One box was vacant, as were about 200 seats in the orchestra and the two balconies. A rather significant feature of these vacant seats was the fact that they occurred in groups, as though Mrs. Jay's agents in Brooklyn had succeeded in keeping more subscribers away than Mrs. Jay had done in New York.

At the end of the first part of the programme Dr. Muck received three curtain calls, and on the third had the entire orchestra rise and acknowledge the applause, at which there was a fresh outburst of handclapping which outdid what had gone before.

Apparently undaunted by her failure either to bar Dr. Muck from the leading role as conductor of the Carnegie Hall concert or to influence the orchestra followers to remain away through appeals to their patriotism, Mrs. Jay had returned to the fray bright and early yesterday morning in an eleventh hour attempt to save Brooklyn from "desecration and invasion." The persistency and bitterness which have marked her campaign against the conductor were in no whit abated.

Mrs. Jay spoke pointedly, as follows:

"I have the greatest respect for a pro-American German, as I have the greatest contempt for a pro-German Swiss. I believe I am expressing a truly American sentiment when I say a man should be judged by the feelings in his heart and not by the papers in his pocket."

New Attack Indicated.

On the other hand, there were many messages of sympathy. One was couched in this wise:

"The spectacle before the American public to-day was that of a semi-triumphant pro-German and a semi-defeated American woman."

A move that more than indicates that Mrs. Jay and her followers intended to bring the fight back to Manhattan in an effort to prevent the concert in Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon, in the event they failed to prevent the doctor's appearance in Brooklyn, was taken yesterday and seems to promise some supreme and dramatic effort. The appeal is for seats to be placed at the disposal of Mrs. Jay. The appeal says:

"Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concert matinee at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval of Dr. Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization (Boston Symphony) by sending their tickets at once to Mrs. William Jay, 850 Park avenue."

A rather interesting fact was learned yesterday in connection with the controversy. Major Higginson, "father" of the Boston Symphony, and Mrs. Jay's late husband, Col. William Jay, served in the same regiment during the civil war. Major Higginson has been Dr. Muck's principal defender and champion against the charges of pro-Germanism and the report, since denied, that Dr. Muck had refused to lead "The Star Spangled Banner."

When the controversy once before was at the flood Major Higginson refused to accept Dr. Muck's resignation.

Representatives of twenty-three Grand Army posts met at Borough Hall in Brooklyn yesterday and registered a sharp protest against the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck at the Academy of Music last night.

EVENING JOURNAL
ss: New York.
MAR 15 1918

CROWD CALMLY LISTENS TO KARL MUCK

Boston Orchestra Gives Scheduled Carnegie Hall Concert Undisturbed.

Probably for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in New York—a matter of thirty-two years—uniformed policemen were detailed within the auditorium last evening. But except for their not greatly obtrusive presence and the exhibition of a purposeful demonstration of reassertive cordiality toward the orchestra's conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, Carnegie Hall presented much the same aspect as on other evenings this season during the Boston band's visits. Two adjoining boxes of the first tier remained empty in blank disapproval of the continued presence of Dr. Muck at the conductor's desk, and here and there were to be discerned a few pairs of seats unoccupied. And that was all that appeared as the sum total in result of the renewed agitation against the Swiss citizen and native of Darmstadt.

Since it does not fall within the duties of the reviewer of musical happenings to enter into discussion of the pros and cons of the existing controversy, the matter will not be commented upon in this place. Nevertheless, as a matter of observation, it may be pointed out that the reception given Dr. Muck could not have been more vigorous had he been an American musician only just returned from the sort of treatment accorded such in Berlin or Munich since August, 1914. One would like to believe that the persons who indulged in this outburst were Americans grown somewhat overzealous in the spirit of fair play, but their comments the while they were smiting palm upon palm—so far as they were within hearing—were not reassuring.

Following the effusive demonstration toward Dr. Muck, he led the orchestra in the American anthem, and it seemed to be played with more spirit than at the concerts heretofore this season.

Thenceforward the musical business of the evening was undertaken without more than a ripple of occasionally over-stressed applause. Dr. Muck played the Third Symphony of Brahms, two pieces of Jan Sibelius, the Finn—the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the symphonic poem, "Night Ride and Sunrise"—and the prelude to "Tristan und Isolde."

Within the writer's offhand recollection, the two Sibelius pieces had never been played in New York before. They are both relatively recent, the first having been published in 1906 and the second in 1909. The former was played under the composer's direction, during his unobtrusive visit to the United States in the Summer of 1914—at the Norfolk Festival, in June. One finds no record of any performance of the latter until that of the Boston Orchestra in Boston something over a year ago. It is not difficult to understand the reason thereof. The piece is very long-drawn out, monotonous and lacking in the usual originality of inspiration of Sibelius—so nearly a pot-boiler as he ever permits himself.

But the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter," is the great Finn in some of his greatness. Once more he has found his impetus in the national epic, the "Kalevala"—in the story of the disheartening journey of Vainamoinen homeward after his unsuccessful quest for the young Princess of the far northern land of Pohjola. The hero, now old and slack, sees the Princess sitting on a rainbow, high in the blue air, weaving a silver fabric with a golden shuttle. Her beauty stirs him anew, but he suffers the fate of the old and worn and continues his sledge journey alone.

Sibelius has given musical illustration to this strangely realistic symbolism in his most characteristic fashion. He seems never at a loss for some new orchestral effect to express his ideas, and here a startling piece of suggestion of the aged hero's sledge ride is given in the upper strings, and at times by a high harp plucking against almost the whole orchestra. The poem of Pohjola's Princess spinning on her rainbow is also vividly but delicately limned, but above all the ancient hero and his ancient passion is subtly touched.

Dr. Muck was especially successful with this Sibelius piece, although the orchestra here was not always up to its traditional precision in attack, nor was the horn tone all that it should have been. Dr. Muck did not make the dramatic quality of the Brahms Third Symphony—now the least frequently played of the four—less of a puzzle than it often is. A little more tumult in the finale might have clarified things somewhat, and a little less rigid deliberation in the middle two movements might have kept one more alert to fill out the significance of the opening allegro.

MORNING TELEGRAPH
ess: New York City
MAR 15 1918

Spoken, Written and Published Protests Against Appearance of Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Gathers Large Audience at Carnegie Hall and Not an Uprising.

LEADER RECEIVES AN OVATION

While Men in Uniform Guarded the Outside and Men Inside in Evening Dress Stood Ready for Battle, the Criticized Musician Aroused Everybody by Leading the National Anthem.

Last night New York witnessed its first symphony concert under the auspices of the police, Borough Police Inspector O'Brien and Captain Sackett of the West Forty-seventh street police station, with an orchestra of about 100 policemen, performing a perfectly harmonious program with completely muted nightsticks and to the absolute exclusion of any discord.

Long before "Herr Doktor" Muck Royal Prussian General Music Director and also director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived with his musicians, squads of bluecoats had been stationed at all of the entrances to Carnegie Hall and strategically distributed in the door sconces of Seventh avenue, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-sixth streets.

As many more strong-arm guardians of law and order, painfully and imperfectly disguised in conventional, or orchestral, black, with patent leather boots and shiny toppers, had been admitted to the foyer and lobbies, where they quickly became as inconspicuous in the crowds as revolving lighthouses on a rockbound shore.

The occasion of this extraordinary demonstration of the combined majesty of law and music was the fifth concert of the Boston Symphony Society given in defiance of the written, spoken and published protests of a number of prominent New York subscribers to the Boston organization, insisting that Dr. Muck, being an alien enemy, a court musician to the Kaiser and a fomenter of Hun kultur, should not be permitted to lead an American orchestra in New York now or at any time during the war against Germany.

Audience Strongly Pro-Muck.

Conductor Muck arrived in a taxi soon after 8 o'clock and was escorted by the doorman through a double line of uniformed policemen. The concert hall was virtually full from orchestra to dome when, at 8.20, the much-discussed German conductor, who declares he is a Swiss, walked out to the front of the stage. His appearance was the signal for a loud, emphatic and sustained salvo of hand-clapping which became more noisy as he bowed repeatedly.

The tumult of applause continued for several minutes and caused a cold smile of satisfaction to show for a moment on the usually impassive and almost saturnine face of the objectionable favorite of the Kaiser.

The orchestra then stood, the audience rising unanimously, for the customary playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," upon the playing of which precious anthem of our flag, Doktor Muck's professional life, even in Boston, for a time depended. Indeed, it was his refusal to play that air which started the wave of indignant protest which now finds its expression in the rising slogan of patriotic music lovers everywhere in this country: "Dr. Muck must go." Last evening he played perfunctorily and with the cold indication that it is a concession granted grudgingly by Muck, who is quoted as having said to the newspaper reporters of Boston:

"To hell with your flag and your national anthem! It is not fit to be played in any artistic program."

It was upon the insulting strength of that "artistic" utterance that Muck and his orchestra were barred out of Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., and although he submitted to the ultimatum issued by the authorities of Boston with a bad grace the public press throughout the country has echoed and re-echoed the demand for his dismissal.

Hundreds Are Turned Away.

Curiosity mongers and probably many zealously patriotic young men swelled the crowd which gathered at Carnegie Hall to witness and, perhaps, to participate in the expected demonstration of protest which they, as well as the police, anticipated. But the bona-fide audience of incurable music fans, followers of the Boston director and his magnificent orchestra, was one certainly the mos

(Continued Page 2, Column 6.)

has greeted Dr. M
they revelled in t
gram they literall
and were at no
manifest delight
efforts to preven

ELECTIONS WILL HINDOO'S T
(AT HOT

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date MAR 15 19

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Only Subscribers Admitted to Concert, Which Was Not Interrupted.

OPENS WITH OUR ANTHEM

Manager Shows Swiss Citizenship Papers Issued to Leader in 1881.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a sold-out house of all-season subscribers at Carnegie Hall last night, a concert to which the city authorities gave full protection. Mayor Hylan, it was said, ordered the Police Department to prevent any untoward occurrence, and at the last moment before the concert the special force detailed to guard the approaches, doors, and lobbies of the hall was trebled.

Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plain-clothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no others. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Opens With National Anthem.

Dr. Muck's entrance, at 8:30 o'clock, a few minutes later than usual, owing to delay in seating the crowd under these circumstances, was greeted with hearty applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The house rose as quickly, and applauded some moments while still standing after the national air. Again at the end of the first part of the concert, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, Dr. Muck deftly passed another ovation from himself to the orchestra.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's founder, sat in the seat always reserved for him far down the centre aisle. He was seen by the audience as he walked forward to meet the conductor and men during the intermission, and had to turn and bow to applause, which was renewed when he presently returned to his chair. It was an open secret that the future of the Boston Symphony rested largely with the fate of last night's event in New York.

Show Swiss Citizenship Papers.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age.

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document, according to a translation appended and also authenticated by Mr. Ritter was headed No. 644, Certificate of Citizenship.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certity that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1859, he (is) our citizen, and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virtue of which we give the definite assurance that the above-mentioned citizen shall at any time and under all circumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim this 4th day of March 1881.

The President.
(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER,
in the name of the Town Council.
(Signed) C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signatures is acknowledged.

Chancellory of the Canton of Zug,
by the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

The certificate bore the seal of Neu-

Continued on Page Eleven.

heim and various validations showing inspections from time to time.

Two More Concerts Here.

Brahms's third symphony, with its rugged portrayal of the life struggles of great musical natures such as have been written in tones from Beethoven's time till now, was a work well calculated to draw the listener from thoughts outside the musical field. Its beautiful allegretto third part earned especial applause, while the andante just before put to flight the last official guardian of the peace of the hall in a manner to give joy to the anti-Brahmins.

Sibelius's fantasia of "Pohjola's Daughter" and his "Night Ride and Sunrise" were played as the composer himself could not have heard them when he conducted his music as a guest at an American festival some years ago. The Wagner "Tristan" prelude was heard by at least one famous Isolde, while Fritz Kreisler, who has retired from concerts for the period of the war, was a guest in another box.

Tonight the orchestra will play in Brooklyn, where another subscription audience fills the Academy, and no seats or admissions will be sold. Tomorrow a third audience will hear at Carnegie Hall the last Boston Symphony concert in New York this season, an event that may be also significant as to the possibility of return another year.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 14.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Major H. L. Higginson's statement in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday with reference to Dr. Muck and The Providence Journal makes it necessary to state that The Journal's attacks on Dr. Muck had nothing whatever to do with the action of the Presidents of all the Providence musical societies and the Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of this State in their effort to compel Dr. Muck to play the national anthem at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city on Oct. 30 last. These telegrams were sent to Major Higginson and the manager of the orchestra before The Providence Journal had made any attack whatever on Dr. Muck."

Name STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date MAR 16 1918

NO POLICE NEEDED AT MUCK'S CONCERT

Detectives Enjoy the Music as Event Passes Without Sign of Trouble.

OVATION FOR CONDUCTOR.

Orchestra Plays Mozart, Tschaikowsky and Goldmark.

With uniformed policemen, plain clothes men and Sixth Branch detectives on guard, the Karl Muck concert at the Academy of Music last night proved as exciting as a strawberry festival. A Boy Scout would have been sufficient protection for the eminent musicians and their auditors, judging from the utter lack of anything even approaching trouble.

There was no doubt about the police; they were everywhere in evidence—big, husky ones stood in the rear lobby, and the gentle listener could have been sure there were others scattered through the audience, disguised as Philharmonic subscribers. All they saw was a stage full of flowers and fiddlers; all they heard was music. Most of them stayed through the whole of the programme and then hurried back to their precincts to answer the anxious and envious queries of their brother officers as to how went the Mozart symphony in E-flat major, the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings, opus 48, and the Goldmark overture to "Sakuntala," opus 13.

The effect of the anti-Muck propaganda was unmistakable, and to the good people who signed the petition to bar him from Brooklyn it was disturbing. It resolved the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra into a personal ovation for Karl Muck. He was violently applauded at every turn, and his orchestra arose three times—a most unusual demonstration. The audience was large—one deserted box and a few empty seats downstairs being the only vacancies discernible.

The concert itself had plenty of "punch." Muck and his musicians, always to be depended on for rare tone and flawless technique, quite outdid themselves with a performance that had fire and vim, especially in its second half.

The "Star Spangled Banner," as usual, was played first. The first half of the programme was the Mozart symphony, dainty, melancholy and elaborately orchestrated in the archaic style. The Tschaikowsky serenade, though with fewer instruments, seemingly had much greater volume. Its waltz movement would have sent a musical comedy audience home whistling, and it had an all-Russian finale, with rhythm contagious enough to make a Bolshevik get down from his soap-box and bob his feet and whiskers in time to it. Goldmark's brilliant, almost Wagnerian overture, was a fitting climax. At its close Muck was recalled again and again.

So ended the thirty-seventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so far as Brooklyn is concerned. Many in the audience seemed to have serious doubts, not unmixed with regrets, that there will be any such events here next year—at least with Dr. Karl Muck in the role of conductor.

POST
New York City
MAR 16 1918

DR. CARL MUCK'S LAST CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Will Close New York Season This Afternoon.

Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give their last concert of the season in New York at Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

The orchestra played in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn last night before a large audience, which applauded the leader freely. As a precaution a detail of police was stationed about the hall to check any disturbance, but they had nothing to do. Trustees and directors of the Brooklyn Institute, which manage the concerts, met early in the day and laid on the table for thirty days a discussion of the orchestra's concerts in Brooklyn ntxt year.

SUN

ess: New York City. MAR 16 1918

BROOKLYN AUDIENCE CORDIAL TO MUCK

owded House Gives Conductor Ovation but His 'Sacrifice' Is Hinted.

IAY NOT PLAY IN 1919

nstitute Trustees to Make Announcement of Action To-day.

An audience fully as cordial though ot so large as the one which had greeted im in Carnegie Hall the night before elcomed Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of he Boston Symphony Orchestra to the cademy of Music in Brooklyn last ight, thus enabling the conductor to core once more against the faction which has sought to bar him from the tages of the city as pro-German.

From the fact that he was permitted o appear over the vehement and varied rotests of his antagonists and was eartily received by a house almost as rowded as the one at Carnegie Hall, here can be no doubt that the advanage was all with Dr. Muck and against Mrs. William Jay and her anti-Muck folowers, but a significant thing was in the air—signs that carried more than a hope of comfort for the discomforted.

Engagement in 1919 Unlikely.

These signs indicates that the triumph of Dr. Muck, though unmarred last night and flawless, probably will be the last he will have in Brooklyn during the war. Despite the warmth of his reception and the loyalty of the orchestra subscribers, who turned out in their sartorial best to all but fill the Academy opera house from footlight to high gallery, it is pretty definitely established that the Brooklyn Institute has declined to renew its contract for the season ahead.

The concerts in Brooklyn are held under the auspices of the Institute. Prof. C. D. Atkins, director of the institute, admitted last night that the board had taken definite action Wednesday, but declined to say of just what this action consisted. The board had decided to reserve announcement until to-day, he said, and had sworn him to secrecy.

Prof. Atkins chatted about the controversy and finally asked—he had come in at the conclusion of the first part of the programme—whether any disturbance had marked the initial stages of the concert. Answered in the negative, he remarked:

"I am glad of that. Everything seems to be as still as a pond."

The conversation then switched to the ovation at Carnegie and back to the controversy involving the pro-Muck and the anti-Muck factions. The latter drew forth this significant comment:

"It is too bad that a great artist should have to be sacrificed to patriotism, but that I suppose is what we must expect in a time like this. Sincere people are likely to be carried away by patriotism and after all it is higher than art."

Vacant Seats Are in Blocks.

This in itself would seem to indicate that Dr. Muck is to be sacrificed, in so far at least as Brooklyn is concerned.

To this comment regarding "the sacrifice of a great artist," Prof. Atkins would add nothing last night, but suggested instead that THE SUN reporter call him up at 10 o'clock this morning.

So far as the concert goes, the evening in Brooklyn passed off much as had that at Carnegie. There were fewer policemen and about the same enthusiasm. One box was vacant, as were about 200 seats in the orchestra and the two balconies. A rather significant feature of these vacant seats was the fact that they occurred in groups, as though Mrs. Jay's agents in Brooklyn had succeeded in keeping more subscribers away than Mrs. Jay had done in New York.

At the end of the first part of the programme Dr. Muck received three curtain calls, and on the third had the entire orchestra rise and acknowledge the applause, at which there was a fresh outburst of handclapping which outdid what had gone before.

Apparently undaunted by her failure either to bar Dr. Muck from the leading role as conductor of the Carnegie Hall concert or to influence the orchestra followers to remain away through appeals to their patriotism, Mrs. Jay had returned to the fray bright and early yesterday morning in an eleventh hour attempt to save Brooklyn from "desecration and invasion." The persistency and bitterness which have marked her campaign against the conductor were in no whit abated.

Mrs. Jay spoke pointedly, as follows:

"I have the greatest respect for a pro-American German, as I have the greatest contempt for a pro-German Swiss. I believe I am expressing a truly American sentiment when I say a man should be judged by the feelings in his heart and not by the papers in his pocket."

New Attack Indicated.

On the other hand, there were many messages of sympathy. One was couched in this wise:

"The spectacle before the American public to-day was that of a semi-triumphant pro-German and a semi-defeated American woman."

A move that more than indicates that Mrs. Jay and her followers intended to bring the fight back to Manhattan in an effort to prevent the concert in Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon, in the event they failed to prevent the doctor's appearance in Brooklyn, was taken yesterday and seems to promise some supreme and dramatic effort. The appeal is for seats to be placed at the disposal of Mrs. Jay. The appeal says:

"Subscribers to the Boston Symphony concert matinee at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval of Dr. Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization (Boston Symphony) by sending their tickets at once to Mrs. William Jay, 850 Park avenue."

A rather interesting fact was learned yesterday in connection with the controversy. Major Higginson, "father" of the Boston Symphony, and Mrs. Jay's late husband, Col. William Jay, served in the same regiment during the civil war. Major Higginson has been Dr. Muck's principal defender and champion against the charges of pro-Germanism and the report, since denied, that Dr. Muck had refused to lead "The Star Spangled Banner."

When the controversy once before was at the flood Major Higginson refused to accept Dr. Muck's resignation.

Representatives of twenty-three Grand Army posts met at Borough Hall in Brooklyn yesterday and registered a sharp protest against the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck at the Academy of Music last night.

EVENING JOURNAL

ss: New York.

MAR 15 1918

CROWD CALMLY LISTENS TO KARL MUCK

Boston Orchestra Gives Scheduled Carnegie Hall Concert Undisturbed.

Probably for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in New York—a matter of thirty-two years—uniformed policemen were detailed within the auditorium last evening. But except for their not greatly obtrusive presence and the exhibition of a purposeful demonstration of reassertive cordiality toward the orchestra's conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, Carnegie Hall presented much the same aspect as on other evenings this season during the Boston band's visits. Two adjoining boxes of the first tier remained empty in blank disapproval of the continued presence of Dr. Muck at the conductor's desk, and here and there were to be discerned a few pairs of seats unoccupied. And that was all that appeared as the sum total in result of the renewed agitation against the Swiss citizen and native of Darmstadt.

Since it does not fall within the duties of the reviewer of musical happenings to enter into discussion of the pros and cons of the existing controversy, the matter will not be commented upon in this place. Nevertheless, as a matter of observation, it may be pointed out that the reception given Dr. Muck could not have been more vigorous had he been an American musician only just returned from the sort of treatment accorded such in Berlin or Munich since August, 1914. One would like to believe that the persons who indulged in this outburst were Americans grown somewhat overzealous in the spirit of fair play, but their comments the while they were smiting palm upon palm—so far as they were within hearing—were not reassuring.

Following the effusive demonstration toward Dr. Muck, he led the orchestra in the American anthem, and it seemed to be played with more spirit than at the concerts heretofore this season.

Thenceforward the musical business of the evening was undertaken without more than a ripple of occasionally over-stressed applause. Dr. Muck played the Third Symphony of Brahms, two pieces of Jan Sibelius, the Finn—the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the symphonic poem, "Night Ride and Sunrise"—and the prelude to "Tristan und Isolde."

Within the writer's offhand recollection, the two Sibelius pieces had never been played in New York before. They are both relatively recent, the first having been published in 1906 and the second in 1909. The former was played under the composer's direction, during his unobtrusive visit to the United States in the Summer of 1914—at the Norfolk Festival, in June. One finds no record of any performance of the latter until that of the Boston Orchestra in Boston something over a year ago. It is not difficult to understand the reason thereof. The piece is very long-drawn out, monotonous and lacking in the usual originality of inspiration of Sibelius—so nearly a pot-boiler as he ever permits himself.

But the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter," is the great Finn in some of his greatness. Once more he has found his impetus in the national epic, the "Kalevala"—in the story of the disheartening journey of Vainamoinen homeward after his unsuccessful quest for the young Princess of the far northern land of Pohjola. The hero, now old and slack, sees the Princess sitting on a rainbow, high in the blue air, weaving a silver fabric with a golden shuttle. Her beauty stirs him anew, but he suffers the fate of the old and worn and continues his sledge journey alone.

Sibelius has given musical illustration to this strangely realistic symbolism in his most characteristic fashion. He seems never at a loss for some new orchestral effect to express his ideas, and here a startling piece of suggestion of the aged hero's sledge ride is given in the upper strings, and at times by a high harp plucking against almost the whole orchestra. The poem of Pohjola's Princess spinning on her rainbow is also vividly but delicately limned, but above all the ancient hero and his ancient passion is subtly touched.

Dr. Muck was especially successful with this Sibelius piece, although the orchestra here was not always up to its traditional precision in attack, nor was the horn tone all that it should have been. Dr. Muck did not make the dramatic quality of the Brahms Third Symphony—now the least frequently played of the four—less of a puzzle than it often is. A little more tumult in the finale might have clarified things somewhat, and a little less rigid deliberation in the middle two movements might have kept one more alert to fill out the significance of the opening allegro.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

ss: New York City

MAR 15 1918

Spoken, Written and Published Protests Against Appearance of Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Gathers Large Audience at Carnegie Hall and Not an Uprising.

LEADER RECEIVES AN OVATION

While Men in Uniform Guarded the Outside and Men Inside in Evening Dress Stood Ready for Battle, the Criticized Musician Aroused Everybody by Leading the National Anthem.

Last night New York witnessed its first symphony concert under the auspices of the police, Borough Police Inspector O'Brien and Captain Sackett of the West Forty-seventh street police station, with an orchestra of about 100 policemen, performing a perfectly harmonious program with completely muted nightsticks and to the absolute exclusion of any discord.

Long before "Herr Doktor" Muck, Royal Prussian General Music Director and also director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived with his musicians, squads of bluecoats had been stationed at all of the entrances to Carnegie Hall and strategically distributed in the door sconces of Seventh avenue, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-sixth streets.

As many more strong-arm guardians of law and order, painfully and imperfectly disguised in conventional, or orchestral, black, with patent leather boots and shiny toppers, had been admitted to the foyer and lobbies, where they quickly became as inconspicuous in the crowds as revolving lighthouses on a rockbound shore.

The occasion of this extraordinary demonstration of the combined majesty of law and music was the fifth concert of the Boston Symphony Society given in defiance of the written, spoken and published protests of a number of prominent New York subscribers to the Boston organization, insisting that Dr. Muck, being an alien enemy, a court musician to the Kaiser and a fomenter of Hun kultur, should not be permitted to lead an American orchestra in New York now or at any time during the war against Germany.

Audience Strongly Pro-Muck.

Conductor Muck arrived in a taxi soon after 8 o'clock and was escorted by the doorman through a double line of uniformed policemen. The concert hall was virtually full from orchestra to dome when, at 8.20, the much-discussed German conductor, who declares he is a Swiss, walked out to the front of the stage. His appearance was the signal for a loud, emphatic and sustained salvo of hand-clapping which became more noisy as he bowed repeatedly.

The tumult of applause continued for several minutes and caused a cold smile of satisfaction to show for a moment on the usually impassive and almost saturnine face of the objectionable favorite of the Kaiser.

The orchestra then stood, the audience rising unanimously, for the customary playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," upon the playing of which precious anthem of our flag, Doktor Muck's professional life, even in Boston, for a time depended. Indeed, it was his refusal to play that air which started the wave of indignant protest which now finds its expression in the rising slogan of patriotic music lovers everywhere in this country: "Dr. Muck must go." Last evening he played perfunctorily and with the cold indication that it is a concession granted grudgingly by Muck, who is quoted as having said to the newspaper reporters of Boston:

"To hell with your flag and your national anthem! It is not fit to be played in any artistic program."

It was upon the insulting strength of that "artistic" utterance that Muck and his orchestra were barred out of Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., and although he submitted to the ultimatum issued by the authorities of Boston with a bad grace the public press throughout the country has echoed and re-echoed the demand for his dismissal.

Hundreds Are Turned Away.

Curiosity mongers and probably many zealously patriotic young men swelled the crowd which gathered at Carnegie Hall to witness and, perhaps, to participate in the expected demonstration of protest which they, as well as the police, anticipated. But the bona-fide audience of incurable music fans, followers of the Boston director and his magnificent

(Continued Fe 2, Column 6.)

orchestra, was one certainly the mos
has greeted Dr. M
they revelled in t
gram they literall
and were at no
manifest delight
efforts to preven

SELECTIONS WIL
HINDOO'S T
(AT HOT

TIMES

ddress New York City

ate

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Only Subscribers Admitted to Concert, Which Was Not Interrupted.

OPENS WITH OUR ANTHEM

Manager Shows Swiss Citizenship Papers Issued to Leader in 1881.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a sold-out house of all-season subscribers at Carnegie Hall last night, a concert to which the city authorities gave full protection. Mayor Hylan, it was said, ordered the Police Department to prevent any untoward occurrence, and at the last moment before the concert the special force detailed to guard the approaches, doors, and lobbies of the hall was trebled.

Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plain-clothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no others. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Opens With National Anthem.

Dr. Muck's entrance, at 8:30 o'clock, a few minutes later than usual, owing to delay in seating the crowd under these circumstances, was greeted with hearty applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The house rose as quickly, and applauded some moments while still standing after the national air. Again at the end of the first part of the concert, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, Dr. Muck deftly passed another ovation from himself to the orchestra.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's founder, sat in the seat always reserved for him far down the centre aisle. He was seen by the audience as he walked forward to meet the conductor and men during the intermission, and had to turn and bow to applause, which was renewed when he presently returned to his chair. It was an open secret that the future of the Boston Symphony rested largely with the fate of last night's event in New York.

Show Swiss Citizenship Papers.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Nueheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age.

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document, according to a translation appended and also authenticated by Mr. Ritter was headed No. 611, Certificate of Citizenship.

It read:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1859, he (is) our citizen, and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virtue of which we give the definite assurance that the above-mentioned citizen shall at any time and under all circumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim this 4th day of March 1881.

The President.
(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER.
in the name of the Town Council.
(Signed) C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signatures is acknowledged.

Chancellery of the Canton of Zug,
by the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

The certificate bore the seal of Neu-

Continued on Page Eleven.

heim and various validations showing inspections from time to time.

Two More Concerts Here.

Brahms's third symphony, with its rugged portrayal of the life struggles of great musical natures such as have been written in tones from Beethoven's time till now, was a work well calculated to draw the listener from thoughts outside the musical field. Its beautiful allegretto third part earned especial applause, while the andante just before put to flight the last official guardian of the peace of the hall in a manner to give joy to the anti-Brahmins.

Sibelius's fantasia of "Pohjola's Daughter" and his "Night Ride and Sunrise" were played as the composer himself could not have heard them when he conducted his music as a guest at an American festival some years ago. The Wagner "Tristan" prelude was heard by at least one famous Isolde, while Fritz Kreisler, who has retired from concerts for the period of the war, was a guest in another box.

Tonight the orchestra will play in Brooklyn, where another subscription audience fills the Academy, and no seats or admissions will be sold. Tomorrow a third audience will hear at Carnegie Hall the last Boston Symphony concert in New York this season, an event that may be also significant as to the possibility of return another year.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 14.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Major H. L. Higginson's statement in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday with reference to Dr. Muck and The Providence Journal makes it necessary to state that The Journal's attacks on Dr. Muck had nothing whatever to do with the action of the Presidents of all the Providence musical societies and the Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of this State in their effort to compel Dr. Muck to play the national anthem at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city on Oct. 30 last. These telegrams were sent to Major Higginson and the manager of the orchestra before The Providence Journal had made any attack whatever on Dr. Muck."

n STANDARD UNION

ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 16 1918

NO POLICE NEEDED AT MUCK'S CONCERT

Detectives Enjoy the Music as Event Passes Without Sign of Trouble.

OVATION FOR CONDUCTOR.

Orchestra Plays Mozart, Tschaikowsky and Goldmark.

With uniformed policemen, plain clothes men and Sixth Branch detectives on guard, the Karl Muck concert at the Academy of Music last night proved as exciting as a strawberry festival. A Boy Scout would have been sufficient protection for the eminent musicians and their auditors, judging from the utter lack of anything even approaching trouble.

There was no doubt about the police; they were everywhere in evidence—big, husky ones stood in the rear lobby, and the gentle listener could have been sure there were others scattered through the audience, disguised as Philharmonic subscribers. All they saw was a stage full of flowers and fiddlers; all they heard was music. Most of them stayed through the whole of the programme and then hurried back to their precincts to answer the anxious and envious queries of their brother officers as to how went the Mozart symphony in E-flat major, the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings, opus 48, and the Goldmark overture to "Sakuntala," opus 13.

The effect of the anti-Muck propaganda was unmistakable, and to the good people who signed the petition to bar him from Brooklyn it was disturbing. It resolved the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra into a personal ovation for Karl Muck. He was violently applauded at every turn, and his orchestra arose three times—a most unusual demonstration. The audience was large—one deserted box and a few empty seats downstairs being the only vacancies discernible.

The concert itself had plenty of "punch." Muck and his musicians, always to be depended on for rare tone and flawless technique, quite outdid themselves with a performance that had fire and vim, especially in its second half.

The "Star Spangled Banner," as usual, was played first. The first half of the programme was the Mozart symphony, dainty, melancholy and elaborately orchestrated in the archaic style. The Tschaikowsky serenade, though with fewer instruments, seemingly had much greater volume. Its waltz movement would have sent a musical comedy audience home whistling, and it had an all-Russian finale, with rhythm contagious enough to make a Bolshevik get down from his soap-box and bob his feet and whiskers in time to it. Goldmark's brilliant, almost Wagnerian overture, was a fitting climax. At its close Muck was recalled again and again.

So ended the thirty-seventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so far as Brooklyn is concerned. Many in the audience seemed to have serious doubts, not unmixed with regrets, that there will be any such events here next year—at least with Dr. Karl Muck in the role of conductor.

POST

New York City

MAR 16 1918

DR. CARL MUCK'S LAST CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Will Close New York Season This Afternoon.

Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give their last concert of the season in New York at Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

The orchestra played in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn last night before a large audience, which applauded the leader freely. As a precaution a detail of police was stationed about the hall to check any disturbance, but they had nothing to do. Trustees and directors of the Brooklyn Institute, which manage the concerts, met early in the day and laid on the table for thirty days a discussion of the orchestra's concerts in Brooklyn ntxt year.

REDUCTION RATIO 17x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 1.1 1.25 1.4 1.6 1.8 2.0 2.2 2.5 2.8 3.2 3.6 4.0 4.5 5.0 5.6 6.3

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

EVENING JOURNAL
New York.
MAR 15 1918

CROWD CALMLY LISTENS TO KARL MUCK

Boston Orchestra Gives Scheduled Carnegie Hall Concert Undisturbed.

Probably for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in New York—a matter of thirty-two years—uniformed policemen were detailed within the auditorium last greatly. But except for their not greatly obtrusive presence and the exhibition of a purposeful demonstration of reassertive cordiality towards the orchestra's conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, Carnegie Hall presented much the same aspect as on other evenings this season during the Boston band's visits. The two adjoining boxes of the first tier remained empty in blank disapproval of the continued presence of Dr. Muck at the conductor's desk, and here and there were to be discerned a few pairs of seats unoccupied. And that was all that appeared as the sum total in result of the renewed agitation against the Swiss citizen and native of Darmstadt.

Since it does not fall within the duties of the reviewer of musical happenings to enter into discussion of the pros and cons of the existing controversy, the matter will not be commented upon in this place. Nevertheless, as a matter of observation, it may be pointed out that the petition given Dr. Muck could not have been more vigorous had he been an American musician only just returned from the sort of treatment accorded such in Berlin or Munich since August, 1914. One would like to believe that the persons who indulged in this outburst were Americans grown somewhat overzealous in the spirit of fair play, but their comments the while they were smiting him upon palm—so far as they were within hearing—were not reassuring. Following the effusive demonstration toward Dr. Muck, he led the orchestra in the American anthem, and it seemed to be played with more spirit than at the concerts heretofore this season.

Thenceforward the musical business of the evening was undertaken without more than a ripple of occasional over-stressed applause. Dr. Muck played the Third Symphony of Brahms, two pieces of Jan Sibelius, the Finn—the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the symphonic poem, "Night Ride and Sunrise"—and the prelude to "Tristan and Isolde."

Within the writer's offhand recollection, the two Sibelius pieces had never been played in New York before. They are both relatively recent, the first having been published in 1906 and the second in 1909. The former was played under the composer's direction, during his unobtrusive visit to the United States in the Summer of 1914, at the Norfolk festival, in June. One finds no record of any performance of the latter till that of the Boston Orchestra in Boston something over a year ago. It is not difficult to understand the reason thereof. The piece is very long-drawn out, monotonous and lacking in the usual originality of inspiration of Sibelius—so nearly a boiler as he ever permits himself. But the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter," is the great Finn in one of his greatness. Once more he found his impetus in the national epic, the "Kalevala"—in the story of disheartening journey of Vainamoinen homeward after his unsuccessful quest for the young Princess, the far northern land of Pohjola. A hero, now old and slack, sees the princess sitting on a rainbow, high in the blue air, weaving a silver fabric with a golden shuttle. Her beauty stirs him anew, but he suffers the jeers of the old and worn and comes his sledge journey alone. Sibelius has given musical illustration to this strangely realistic symbolism in his most characteristic fashion. He seems never at a loss for some new orchestral effect to express his ideas, and [illegible] startling [illegible] of suggestion [illegible] hero's [illegible] upper [illegible] harp [illegible] whole [illegible] [illegible]

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
MAR 15 1918

Spoken, Written and Published Protests Against Appearance of Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Gathers Large Audience at Carnegie Hall and Not an Uprising.

LEADER RECEIVES AN OVATION

While Men in Uniform Guarded the Outside and Men Inside in Evening Dress Stood Ready for Battle, the Criticized Musician Aroused Everybody by Leading the National Anthem.

Last night New York witnessed its first symphony concert under the auspices of the police, Borough Police Inspector O'Brien and Captain Sackett of the West Forty-seventh street police station, with an orchestra of about 100 policemen, performing a perfectly harmonious program with completely muted nightsticks and to the absolute exclusion of any discord.

Long before "Herr Doktor" Muck, Royal Prussian General Music Director and also director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived with his musicians, squads of bluecoats had been stationed at all of the entrances to Carnegie Hall and strategically distributed in the door sconces of Seventh avenue, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-sixth streets.

As many more strong-arm guardians of law and order, painfully and imperfectly disguised in conventional, or orchestral, black, with patent leather boots and shiny toppers, had been admitted to the foyer and lobbies. There they quickly became as inconspicuous in the crowds as revolving lighthouses on a rockbound shore.

The occasion of this extraordinary demonstration of the combined majesty of law and music was the fifth concert of the Boston Symphony Society given in defiance of the written, spoken and published protests of a number of prominent New York subscribers to the Boston organization, insisting that Dr. Muck, being an alien enemy, a court musician to the Kaiser and a fomenter of Hun kultur, should not be permitted to lead an American orchestra in New York now or at any time during the war against Germany.

Audience Strongly Pro-Muck.

Conductor Muck arrived in a taxi soon after 8 o'clock and was escorted by the doorman through a double line of uniformed policemen. The concert hall was virtually full from orchestra to dome when, at 8.20, the much-discussed German conductor, who declares he is a Swiss, walked out to the front of the stage. His appearance was the signal for a loud, emphatic and sustained salvo of hand-clapping which became more noisy as he bowed repeatedly.

The tumult of applause continued for several minutes and caused a cold smile of satisfaction to show for a moment on the usually impassive and almost saturnine face of the objectionable favorite of the Kaiser.

The orchestra then stood, the audience rising unanimously, for the customary playing of "The Star Spangled Banner." Upon the playing of which precious anthem of our flag, Doktor Muck's professional life, even in Boston, for a time depended. Indeed, it was his refusal to play that air which started the wave of indignant protest which now finds its expression in the rising slogan of patriotic music lovers everywhere in this country: "Dr. Muck must go." Last evening he played perfunctorily and with the cold indication that it is a concession granted grudgingly by Muck, who is quoted as having said to the newspaper reporters of Boston:

"To hell with your flag and your national anthem! It is not fit to be played in any artistic program."

It was upon this insulting strength of that "artistic" utterance that Muck and his orchestra were barred out of Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., and although he submitted to the ultimatum issued by the authorities of Boston with a bad grace the public press throughout the country has echoed and re-echoed the demand for his dismissal.

Hundreds Are Turned Away.

Curiosity mongers and probably many zealously patriotic young men swelled the crowd which gathered at Carnegie Hall to witness and, perhaps, to participate in the expected demonstration of protest which they, as well as the police, anticipated. But the bona-fide audience of incurable music fans, followers of the Boston director and his magnificent orchestra, was one [illegible] certainly the mos[illegible] has greeted Dr. [illegible] they revelled in t[illegible] gram they literall[illegible] and were at no [illegible] manifest delight [illegible] efforts to preven[illegible]

(Continued Fe 2, Column 6.)

SELECTIONS WIL[illegible]
HINDOO'S T[illegible]
(AT HOT[illegible]

om TIMES
ddress New York City
ate

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Only Subscribers Admitted to Concert, Which Was Not Interrupted.

OPENS WITH OUR ANTHEM

Manager Shows Swiss Citizenship Papers Issued to Leader in 1881.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted his concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a sold-out house of all-season subscribers at Carnegie Hall last night, a concert to which the city authorities gave police protection. Mayor Hylan, it was said, ordered the Police Department to prevent any upward difficulties and at the last moment he was the center of a special force detailed to guard the approaches, doors, and lobbies in the hall was trebled.

Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Cooney of the Detective Bureau, twenty plain-clothes men were present in the auditorium while inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and [illegible] police men were [illegible] Not [illegible] ticket or standing commission was sold.

Opens With National Anthem.

Dr. Muck's entrance, at 8.20 o'clock, a few minutes later than usual, evidently to delay in seating the crowd under these circumstances, was greeted with hearty applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play "The Star Spangled Banner." The house rose as quickly, and applauded some moments while still standing after the national air. Again at the end of the first part of the concert, the Brahms symphony No. 3, in F, Muck deftly passed another ovation from himself to the orchestra, Major Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's founder, sat in the seat always reserved for him far down the centre aisle. He was seen by the audience as he walked toward it to meet the conductor and men during the intermission, and had to rise and bow to the applause, which was renewed when he presently returned to his chair. It was no open secret that the future of the Boston Symphony rested largely with the fate of last night's event in New York.

Show Swiss Citizenship Papers.

The orchestra management however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age.

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document authenticated by the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document, according to a translation [illegible] [illegible]

STANDARD UNION
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

NO POLICE NEEDED AT MUCK'S CONCERT

Detectives Enjoy the Music as Event Passes Without Sign of Trouble.

OVATION FOR CONDUCTOR.

Orchestra Plays Mozart, Tschaikowsky and Goldmark.

With uniformed policemen, plain clothes men and Sixth Branch detectives on guard, the Karl Muck concert at the Academy of Music last night proved as exciting as a strawberry festival. A Boy Scout would have been sufficient protection for the eminent musicians and their auditors, judging from the utter lack of anything even approaching trouble.

There was no doubt about the police; they were everywhere in evidence—big, husky ones stood in the rear lobby, and the gentle listener could have been sure there were others scattered through the audience, disguised as Philharmonic subscribers. All they saw was a stage full of flowers and fiddlers, all they heard was music. Most of them stayed through the whole of the programme and then hurried back to their precincts to answer the anxious and anxious queries of their brother officers as to how went the Mozart symphony in E-flat major, the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings, opus 48, and the Goldmark overture to "Sakuntala," opus 13.

The effect of the anti-Muck propaganda was unmistakable, and to the good people who signed the petition to bar him from Brooklyn it was disturbing. It resolved the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra into a personal ovation for Karl Muck. He was violently applauded at every turn, and his orchestra arose three times—a most unusual demonstration. The audience, was large—one deserted box and a few empty seats downstairs being the only vacancies discernible.

The concert itself had plenty of "punch." Muck and his musicians, always to be depended on for rare tone and flawless technique, quite outdid themselves with a performance that had fire and vim, especially in the second half.

The "Star Spangled Banner," as usual, was played first. The first half of the programme was the Mozart symphony, dainty, melodious and elaborately orchestrated in the archaic style. The Tschaikowsky serenade, though with fewer instruments, seemingly had much greater volume. Its waltz movement would have sent a musical comedy audience home whistling, and it had an all-Russian finale, with rhythm contagious enough to make a Bolshevik get feet from his soap-box and heels into his feet and whiskers in time to it. Goldmark's brilliant, almost Wagnerian overture, was a fitting climax. At its close Muck was recalled again and again.

So ended the thirty-seventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so far as Brooklyn is concerned. Many in the audience seemed to have serious doubts, not unmixed with regrets, that there will be any such events here next year—at least with Dr. Karl Muck in the role of conductor.

POST
New York City
MAR 16 1918

DR. CARL MUCK'S LAST CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Will Close New York Season This Afternoon.

Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give their last concert of the season in New York at Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

The orchestra plays in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn last night before a large audience, which applauded the leader freely. As a precaution a detail of police was stationed about the hall to check any disturbances but they had nothing to do. Trustees and directors of the [illegible] which manage[illegible] ly in the day and thirty days a dis[illegible] stra's concerts in [illegible]

om POST
ldress New York City
ate
MAR 16 1918

Having examined carefully Dr. Muck's certificate of Swiss citizenship and convinced ourselves of its authenticity, we are prepared to state that never was the andante of Brahms's Third Symphony played with such vigor, control of nuance, and inspiring musicianship as it was last night.

IBUNE
New York City
MAR 15 1918

No Jarring Note In Audience at Muck Concert

Police at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie Hall last night and gave their symphony concert without the interruption that had been prophesied by Mrs. William Jay and other subscribers who have been conducting a campaign against the conductor's appearance in New York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the management, was provided. About [illegible] uniformed men and twenty detectives were stationed along the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street sides of Carnegie Hall and scattered among the audience, a few wearing evening dress. But there was no necessity for calling upon either the authority of the law or its strong arm.

Long before the hour set for the concert to begin throngs crowded into the lobby, overflowing the steps and sidewalk in front of the hall and making the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his baton, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and when the anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium.

Undeterred by their failure to halt last night's concert, the subscribers led by Mrs. Jay will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] Muck's appearance [illegible] there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturday performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of Brooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be subscribers were appended.

Charles Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, refused to make any statement.

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight

Mrs. Jay did not reveal what had happened to her final "trump card."

"Of course, I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and who attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is a leading figure after what is known of his sympathies in this conflict between American ideals and German ideas of conquering the universe," she said last evening.

"What he represents is so opposite to everything which the American people have lived and fought for that I cannot believe Americans will tolerate him or any one who supports him now. It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation as to the City of New York under the guise of art or a similar subterfuge. At any rate, our efforts will go on as usual."

Twenty-four seats which were turned over yesterday to Mrs. Jay by subscribers were given to the Secret Service men who occupied them last evening. During the day [illegible] received many letters from people who assured her of their moral support in her efforts to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in New York. Edwin M. Warfield, former Governor of Maryland; Gertrude Atherton, Mrs. Frederick Leavens, Mrs. Robert Ide, Mrs. George T. Bliss and Mrs. Carroll J. [illegible] were among the writers.

SUN
ss: New York City.

DR. MUCK WINS OVATION; FOES' CAMPAIGN FAILS

"Star Spangled Banner" Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiastic Pitch.

NATIVITY STILL MOOTED

Federal Officials Refuse to Interfere Despite Protests by Many Women.

[illegible] Carnegie Hall last night [illegible] Muck's appearance [illegible] Mrs. William Jay [illegible] Mrs. Jay [illegible] Muck's appearance [illegible] Mrs. Jay [illegible] Muck's appearance [illegible] Mrs. Jay [illegible] Muck's appearance

EVENING JOURNAL
New York.
MAR 15 1918

CROWD CALMLY LISTENS TO KARL MUCK

Boston Orchestra Gives Scheduled Carnegie Hall Concert Undisturbed.

Probably for the first time in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in New York—a matter of thirty-two years—uniformed policemen were detailed within the auditorium last evening. But except for their not greatly obtrusive presence and the exhibition of a purposeful demonstration of reassertive cordiality toward the orchestra's conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, Carnegie Hall presented much the same aspect as on other evenings this season, during the Boston band's visits. Two adjoining boxes of the first tier remained empty in blank disapproval of the continued presence of Dr. Muck at the conductor's desk, and here and there were to be discerned a few gaps in rows of seats unoccupied. And that was all that appeared as the sum total in result of the renewed agitation against the Swiss citizen and naturalized of Darmstadt.

Since it does not fall within the duties of the reviewer of musical happenings to enter into discussion of the pros and cons of the existing controversy, the matter will not be commented upon in this place. Nevertheless, as a matter of observation, it may be pointed out that the reception given Dr. Muck could not have been more vigorous had he been an American musician only just returned from the sort of treatment accorded such in Berlin or Munich since August, 1914. One would have to believe that the persons who indulged in this display were Americans grown somewhat overzealous in the spirit of fair play, but their comments the while they were smiting them upon palms—so far as they were within hearing—were not reassuring. Following the effusive demonstration toward Dr. Muck, he led the orchestra in the American anthem, and it seemed to be played with more spirit than at the concerts heretofore this season.

Thenceforward the musical business of the evening was undertaken without more than a ripple of occasional over-stressed applause. Dr. Muck played the Third Symphony of Brahms, two pieces of Jan Sibelius, "Finn—the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the symphonic poem, "Night Ride and Sunrise"—and the prelude to "Tristan and Isolde."

Within the writer's offhand recollection, the two Sibelius pieces had never been played in New York before. They are both relatively recent, the first having been published in 1906 and the second in 1909. The former was played under the competent direction, during his unobtrusive visit to the United States in the Summer of 1914—at the Norfolk festival, in June. One finds no record of any performance of the latter save that of the Boston Orchestra in Boston something over a year ago. It is not difficult to understand the reason thereof. The piece is very long-drawn out, monotonous and lacking in the usual originality of inspiration of Sibelius—so nearly a bore as he ever permits himself. But the symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter," is the great Finn in one of his greatness. Once more he has found his impetus in the national epic, the "Kalevala"—in the story of the disheartening journey of Vainamoinen homeward after his unsuccessful quest for the young Princess of the far northern land of Pohjola, a hero, now old and slack, sees the princess sitting on a rainbow, high in the blue air, weaving a silver fabric with a golden shuttle. Her beauty wins him anew, but he suffers the fate of the old and worn and comes his sledge journey alone.

Sibelius has given musical illustration to this strangely realistic symbolism in his most characteristic fashion. He seems never at a loss for some new orchestral effect to express his ideas, and the startling effect of suggestion [illegible] his hero's sledge ride is [illegible] upper strings, and harp [illegible] whole [illegible] Pohjola's [illegible] is [illegible] and [illegible] touched. [illegible] successful [illegible] although the [illegible] always up to [illegible] attention in attack, nor [illegible] all that it should [illegible] Dr. Muck did not make [illegible] quality of the Brahms symphony—now the least freshly played of the four—less of a [illegible] than it often is. A little more [illegible] in the finale might have clarified things somewhat, and a little less [illegible] deliberation in the middle two movements might have kept one more [illegible] to fill out the significance of the closing allegro.

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
MAR [illegible]

Spoken, Written and Published Protests Against Appearance of Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Gathers Large Audience at Carnegie Hall and Not an Uprising.

LEADER RECEIVES AN OVATION

While Men in Uniform Guarded the Outside and Men Inside in Evening Dress Stood Ready for Battle, the Criticized Musician Aroused Everybody by Leading the National Anthem.

Last night New York witnessed its first symphony concert under the auspices of the police, Borough Police Inspector O'Brien and Captain Sackett of the West Forty-seventh street police station, with an orchestra of about 100 policemen, performing a perfectly harmonious program with completely muted nightsticks and to the absolute exclusion of any discord.

Long before "Herr Doktor" Muck, Royal Prussian General Music Director and also director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived with his musicians, squads of bluecoats had been stationed at all of the entrances to Carnegie Hall and strategically distributed in the door sconces of Seventh avenue, West Forty-seventh Street Station, and Fifty-seventh and Fifty-sixth streets.

As many more strong-arm guardians of law and order, painfully and imperfectly disguised in conventional, or formal, black, with patent leather boots and shiny toppers, had been admitted to the foyer and lobbies. There they evidently became as inconspicuous in the crowds as revolving lighthouses on a rockbound shore.

The occasion of this extraordinary demonstration of the combined majesty of law and music was the fifth concert of the Boston Symphony Society given in defiance of the written, spoken and published protests of a number of prominent New York subscribers to the Boston organization, insisting that Dr. Muck, being an alien enemy, a court musician to the Kaiser and a fomenter of Hun kultur, should not be permitted to lead an American orchestra in New York now or at any time during the war against Germany.

Audience Strongly Pro-Muck.

Conductor Muck arrived in a taxi soon after 8 o'clock and was escorted by the doorman through a double line of uniformed policemen. The concert hall was virtually full from orchestra to dome when, at 8.20, the much-discussed German conductor, who declares he is a Swiss, walked out to the front of the stage. His appearance was the signal for a loud, emphatic and sustained salvo of hand-clapping which became more noisy as he bowed repeatedly.

The tumult of applause continued for several minutes and caused a cold smile of satisfaction to show for a moment on the usually impassive and almost saturnine face of the objectionable favorite of the Kaiser.

The orchestra then stood, the audience rising unanimously, for the customary playing of "The Star Spangled Banner." Upon the playing of which precious anthem of our flag, Doktor Muck's professional life, even in Boston, for a time depended. Indeed, it was his refusal to play that air which started the wave of indignant protest which now finds its expression in the rising slogan of patriotic music lovers everywhere in this country: "Dr. Muck must go." Last evening he played perfunctorily and with the cold indication that it is a concession granted grudgingly by Muck, who is quoted as having said to the newspaper reporters of Boston:

"To hell with your flag and your national anthem! It is not fit to be played in any artistic program."

It was upon the insulting strength of that "artistic" utterance that Muck and his orchestra were barred out of Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., and although he submitted to the ultimatum issued by the authorities of Boston with a bad grace the public press throughout the country has echoed and re-echoed the demand for his dismissal.

Hundreds Are Turned Away.

Curiosity mongers and probably many zealously patriotic young men swelled the crowd which gathered at Carnegie Hall to witness and, perhaps, to participate in the expected demonstration of protest which they, as well as the police, anticipated. But the bona-fide audience of incurable music fans, followers of the Boston director and his magnificent orchestra, was one [illegible] certainly the most [illegible] has greeted Dr. M[illegible] they revelled in t[illegible] gram they literall[illegible] and were at no [illegible] manifest delight [illegible] efforts to preven[illegible]

(Continued Fe 2, Column 6.)

SELECTIONS WIL[illegible]
HINDOO'S T[illegible]
(AT HOT[illegible]

[illegible] TIMES
[illegible]ddress New York City
[illegible]ate

MUCK PLAYS HERE, GUARDED BY POLICE

Only Subscribers Admitted to Concert, Which Was Not Interrupted.

OPENS WITH OUR ANTHEM

Manager Shows Swiss Citizenship Papers Issued to Leader in 1881.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a sold-out house of all-season subscribers at Carnegie Hall last night, a concert to which the city authorities gave police protection. Mayor Hylan, it was said, ordered the Police Department to prevent any unpleasant incidents and at the last moment he ordered the special force detailed to guard the approaches, doors, and lobbies in the hall was trebled.

Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gilden, Acting Captain Carey of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plain-clothes men were present in the auditorium while Inspector Henry, Captain Ryan Sackett of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The entire staff was on the alert for admit subscribers and no others. No ticket or standing admission was sold.

Opens With National Anthem.

Dr. Muck's entrance, at 8.20 [illegible] few minutes later than usual, owing to delay in seating the crowd under these circumstances, was greeted with hearty applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play "The Star-Spangled Banner." The house rose quickly, and applauded some moments while still standing after the national air. At the end of the first part of the concert, the Brahms Symphony No. 3, Dr. Muck deftly passed another ovation from himself to the orchestra. Major Henry Lee Higginson, the orchestra's founder, sat in the second aisle, always reserved for him far down centre aisle. He was seen by the audience as he walked forward to meet the conductor and men during the intermission, and had to turn and bow to applause, which was renewed when he presently returned to his chair. It was an open secret that the future of the Boston Symphony rested largely with the fate of last night's event in New York.

Show Swiss Citizenship Papers.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Sarnen in the Canton of Zug, on Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of six years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age.

The evidence exhibited by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, as to Dr. Muck's citizenship was an old and apparently original document, authenticated June 12, 1917, by H. Ritter, the Swiss Minister at Washington. This document, according to a translation, [illegible]

[illegible] POST
[illegible]ldress New York City
[illegible]te

DR. CARL MUCK'S LAST CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Will Close New York Season This Afternoon.

Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give their last concert of the season in New York at Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

The orchestra played in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn last night before a large audience, which applauded the leader freely. As a precaution a detail of police was stationed about the hall to check any disturbance, but they had nothing to do. Trustees and directors of the [illegible] which manage[illegible] ly in the day and [illegible] thirty days a disastrer's concerts in [illegible]

Having examined carefully Dr. Muck's certificate of Swiss citizenship and convinced ourselves of its authenticity, we are prepared to state that never was the andante of Brahms's Third Symphony played with such vigor, control of nuance, and inspiring musicianship as was last night.

[illegible] STANDARD UNION
[illegible]ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

NO POLICE NEEDED AT MUCK'S CONCERT

Detectives Enjoy the Music as Event Passes Without Sign of Trouble.

OVATION FOR CONDUCTOR.

Orchestra Plays Mozart, Tschaikowsky and Goldmark.

With uniformed policemen, plain clothes men and Sixth Branch detectives on guard, the Karl Muck concert at the Academy of Music last night proved as exciting as a strawberry festival. A Boy Scout would have been sufficient protection for the eminent musicians and their auditors, judging from the utter lack of anything even approaching trouble.

There was no doubt about the police; they were everywhere in evidence—big, husky ones stood in the rear lobby, and the gentle listener could have been sure there were others scattered through the audience, disguised as Philharmonic subscribers. All they saw was a stage full of flowers and fiddlers, all they heard was music. Most of them stayed through the whole of the programme and then hurried back to their precincts to answer the anxious and envious queries of their brother officers as to how went the Mozart symphony in E-flat major, the Tschaikowsky serenade for strings, opus 48, and the Goldmark overture to "Sakuntala," opus 13.

The effect of the anti-Muck propaganda was unmistakable, and to the good people who signed the petition to bar him from Brooklyn it was disturbing. It received the concert-goers into a personal ovation for Karl Muck. He was violently applauded at every turn, and his orchestra arose three times—a most unusual demonstration. The audience was large—one deserted box and a few empty seats downstairs being the only vacancies discernible.

The concert itself had plenty of "punch." Muck and his musicians, always to be depended on for rare tone and flawless technique, quite outdid themselves with a performance that had fire and vim, especially in its second half.

The "Star Spangled Banner," as usual, was played first. The first half of the programme was the Mozart symphony, chiefly melodious and elaborately orchestrated in the archaic style. The Tschaikowsky serenade, though with fewer instruments, seemingly had much greater volume. It was a happy movement, would have sent a musical comedy audience home whistling, and it had an all-Russian finale, with rhythm contagious enough to make a Bolshevik set down from his soap-box and bob his feet and whiskers in time to it. Goldmark's brilliant, almost Wagnerian overture, was a fitting climax. At its close Muck was recalled again and again, for, ended the thirty-seventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so far as Brooklyn is concerned. Many in the audience seemed to have serious doubts, not unmixed with regrets, that there will be any such events here next year—at least with Dr. Karl Muck in the role of conductor.

[illegible] POST
[illegible] New York City
[illegible]

DR. CARL MUCK'S LAST CONCERT

Boston Orchestra Will Close New York Season This Afternoon.

Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give their last concert of the season in New York at Carnegie Hall this afternoon.

The orchestra played in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn last night before a large audience, which applauded the leader freely. As a precaution a detail of police was stationed about the hall to check any disturbance, but they had nothing to do. Trustees and directors of the [illegible] which manage[illegible] ly in the day and [illegible] thirty days a disastrer's concerts in [illegible]

Having examined carefully Dr. Muck's certificate of Swiss citizenship and convinced ourselves of its authenticity, we are prepared to state that never was the andante of Brahms's Third Symphony played with such vigor, control of nuance, and inspiring musicianship as was last night.

[illegible] IBUNE
New York City
MAR 15 1918

No Jarring Note In Audience at Muck Concert

Police at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie Hall last night and gave their symphony concert without the interruption that had been prophesied by Mrs. William Jay and other subscribers who have been conducting a campaign against the conductor's appearance in New York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the management, was provided. About [illegible] uniformed men and twenty detectives were stationed along the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street sides of Carnegie Hall and scattered among the audience, a few wearing evening dress. But there was no necessity for calling upon either the authority of the law or its strong arm.

Long before the hour set for the concert to begin throngs crowded into the lobby, overflowing the steps and sidewalk in front of the hall and making the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his hand, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and as the last anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium.

Undeterred by their failure to halt last night's concert, the subscribers led by Mrs. Jay will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, when the Boston Symphony is booked to play. Failing to halt Dr. Muck's appearance there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturday performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of Brooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be subscribers were appended.

Charles Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, refused to make any statement.

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight

Mrs. Jay did not reveal what had happened to her final "trump card."

"Of course, I have nothing to say about any American-born citizen of this country and who attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is a leading figure after what is known of his sympathies in this conflict between America and Germany—about his idea of conquering the universe," she said last evening.

"What he represents is so opposite to everything which the American people have fought and bought for that I cannot believe America will tolerate him or any one who supports him now. It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and to the City of New York under the guise of art or a similar subterfuge. At any rate, our efforts will go on as usual."

Twenty-four seats, which were turned over yesterday to Mrs. Jay by subscribers were given to the Secret Service men who occupied them last evening. During the day Mrs. Jay received many letters from per[illegible] who assured her of their moral support in her efforts to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in New York. Edwin M. Warfield, former Governor of Maryland; Gertrude Atherton, Mrs. Frederick Leavens, Mrs. Robert Ide, Mrs. George T. Bliss and Mrs. Carroll J. [illegible] among the writers.

[illegible] SUN
[illegible]ss: New York City.

DR. MUCK WINS OVATION; FOES' CAMPAIGN FAILS

"Star Spangled Banner" Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiastic Pitch.

NATIVITY STILL MOOTED

Federal Officials Refuse to Interfere Despite Protests by Many Women.

[illegible]

Germans Cheer Vigorously.

[illegible]

Standing Room All Filled.

[illegible]

Precautions Unnecessary.

[illegible]

Disgrace to City, Says Mrs. Jay.

[illegible]

Those in the Audience.

[illegible]

His Resignation Reported.

[illegible]

TENSION TIGHTENS.

[illegible]

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

[illegible]

Many Secret Service Men There.

[illegible]

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 2, PART 2.)

[illegible] NEW YORK HERALD
New York City

NEW YORK BOWS HEAD IN SHAME AS MUCK LEADS

Kaiser's Favorite Is Permitted to Direct Symphony Concert Here.

GERMANS APPLAUD THEIR HERO LOUDLY

Close Associate Says Conductor Will Resign End of This Season.

[illegible]

Germans Cheer Vigorously.

[illegible]

Standing Room All Filled.

[illegible]

Precautions Unnecessary.

[illegible]

Disgrace to City, Says Mrs. Jay.

[illegible]

Those in the Audience.

[illegible]

His Resignation Reported.

[illegible]

TENSION TIGHTENS.

[illegible]

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

[illegible]

Many Secret Service Men There.

[illegible]

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 2, PART 2.)

[illegible] AMERICAN
[illegible]ddress: New York City.

MUCK LEADS CONCERT WITH POLICE GUARD

Cordon Thrown Around Carnegie Hall as Prelude to Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme

Vacant Boxes Testify to Efficacy of Mrs. William Jay's German Sympathizer Campaign

The tramp, tramp, tramp of police feet, and the tap, tap, tap of police clubs on the pavement around Carnegie Hall last night played a monotonous prelude to the concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra later gave under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck.

A cordon of more than fifty uniformed patrolmen was thrown around the auditorium an hour before the concert was scheduled to start. In the lobby, and within the hall, were perhaps thirty detectives in civilian clothes.

Among the early arrivals was a group of handsome men in stylishly cut evening clothes. They stuck close together and held frequent conferences in whispers.

"Are they some of the alleged German supporters of Dr. Muck?" asked a reporter of one of the doormen.

IN BECKER'S OLD SQUAD.

"Heavens, no!" he exclaimed. "They are gentlemen of the Police Strong Arm Squad, formerly commanded by the late Lieutenant Becker, in disguise."

In a little while limousines were discharging fashionable parties at the Fifty-seventh street entrance. The concert-goers passed through police lines and into the hall. There was an atmosphere of tension on all sides. At 8:30 Dr. Muck drove up in a motor car. Several policemen stepped to his side and escorted him to the stage. By this time the auditorium was packed.

In the first tier, however, there were 12 boxes vacant. They testified to the efficacy of the fight Mrs. William Jay, a society woman, has made against Dr. Muck, alleged pro-German and German sympathizer, appearing.

It was learned afterwards that Mrs. Jay had turned over twenty-four seats to the Department of Justice. Mrs. George T. Bliss, another woman of society, living at No. 9 East Sixty-fourth street, gave her box to secret service men. Many of these seats were used.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony, and a constant defender of Dr. Muck, was a conspicuous figure in another box. He seldom comes to New York to hear the concerts of the orchestra, but was on hand early last night.

TENSION TIGHTENS.

The tension tightened as the orchestra men stopped the ensemble of discord incident to the "tuning up process." Then Dr. Muck appeared, bowing, with baton in hand.

He received an ovation.

Three times Dr. Muck turned and bowed to the enthusiastic throng before the hand-clapping ceased.

The silence was shattered by the crash of the opening strains of the "Star Spangled Banner," which Dr. Muck led with vigor. Another round of hand-clapping, and the orchestra proceeded with its programme.

AUDIENCE ATTENTIVE.

The first half of the orchestra's programme was a Brahms symphony. The great audience was exceedingly attentive, and alert eyes watched every wave of Dr. Muck's baton. It was plain that many of the throng had not come solely because of a love for music.

When the symphony was finished there was vociferous applause. Dr. Muck turned, smiling, and bowed his recognition. The applause continued for some time and Dr. Muck was forced to bow six times in recognition of the ovation.

At the conclusion of the concert the throng again applauded the conductor vigorously, making conclusive his triumph, at least so far as the audience which heard him last night was concerned.

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

Mrs. Jay and her cohorts, although disappointed in their failure to stop last night's concert, will fight on to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance this evening at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn.

All day yesterday those opposed to Dr. Muck bombarded the police commissioner, the Licenses and Federal authorities in a vain effort to prevent the concert last night in Carnegie Hall.

They will wage the fight more vigorously to-day. Two anti-Muck factions in Brooklyn already are circulating petitions among the symphony subscribers in Brooklyn, requesting the Commissioner of Licenses to revoke the license for the concert to-night. One petition had 65 names on it last evening.

Mrs. Jay has received numerous letters and telegrams commending her for her fight on Dr. Muck. One of the tributes came yesterday from Gertrude Atherton, the novelist. Another was written on the stationery of the War Department, and bore the [illegible]

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date MAR [illegible]

Dr. Muck Plays Again Without Causing a Riot

Second Concert Is Given in Brooklyn With U. S. Flags as Drapery

Again nothing happened. Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their scheduled performance last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The second concert, like that of Thursday, was played in perfect tranquillity, without a sign of the disturbance expected by the forces who have been opposing the conductor's appearance. There were few vacant seats. Four large American flags were draped on the platform.

Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers who are campaigning to wrest Dr. Muck's baton from his hand, has not yet located the "trump card" which was lost in the shuffle Thursday night. It may turn up to-day, however, in time to cause a demonstration at the Symphony Orchestra's last concert in Carnegie Hall, for Mrs. Jay has sent out an appeal for tickets dated this afternoon.

"Subscribers for the Boston Symphony concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval of Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending these tickets by messenger at once to Mrs. William Jay, 850 Park Avenue," reads the appeal.

It is intimated by persons close to Mrs. Jay that if enough seats are secured before the matinee there will be some sort of protest against Dr. Muck.

The directors of the Brooklyn Institute, who engaged Dr. Muck, would not divulge last night what was discussed at their special meeting. It is understood, however, that the meeting was called to decide upon what course of action should be adopted in regard to Dr. Muck.

"It is a pity that art and patriotism sometimes conflict," said Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute. From which it may be inferred that Dr. Muck will not be engaged for next season.

An indignation meeting at which twenty-three Grand Army posts were represented was held in Borough Hall, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon to protest against last night's concert. A resolution declaring the performance to be a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn was passed unanimously. Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 399, presided.

Upon request the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have shown Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship papers, authenticated June 12, 1917, by Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. The certificate was given Dr. Muck by the town of Neuheim, in the canton of Zug, on March 4, 1881, soon after he came of age. His father, a Bavarian, had settled there, and had become naturalized when Dr. Muck was six years old.

TRIBUNE
[illegible]: New York City
MAR [illegible] 1918

Music

Boston Symphony Concert Proves One of the Best of Season

Dr. Muck's performance was one of the best of the season. The Brahms third symphony, one of the most difficult of works to present in its true proportions, he conducted with a rhythmic sweep and a wealth of shading which lifted it into the domain of the noblest poetry. The mystical final movement, in particular, received a wonderfully eloquent reading, which was acknowledged by the audience by repeated recalls.

Two of the more recent Sibelius tone poems, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the "Night Ride and Sunrise," both extraordinarily rich in descriptive detail, formed the bulk of the second part of the programme. The former is a composite picture of that strange character of Finnish legend who was part girl, part witch and part virago. The latter is a musical panorama of familiar type. Both represent the fresh inspiration of one of the most distinguished composers of the day, and both were admirably played. The "Tristan" prelude closed the programme.

[illegible] Tauscher.
Others in the audi[illegible] Whitney, Mr. and [illegible] Wilhelm Funk, Altre[illegible] Mrs. Frank Scott G[illegible] Daniel Gregory Maso[illegible] C. Aldred, Mr. and [illegible] the Misses Mary Cro[illegible] cette A. Post, Ablei[illegible] reisler, Miss Helen [illegible] Franz Arens, Whi[illegible] Loemmenich, Dr. E[illegible] Herbert Wither[illegible] old Auer, Otto Well, [illegible] spoon, F. Morris Class, Baron and Baroness de Meyer, William C. Carl and Miss Winifred Christie.

The group of subscribers to the orchestra's programme who had opposed Doktor Muck's appearance here as a disgrace to the city had not given up the fight. At a closed meeting called by Mrs. William Jay it was agreed that every effort should be made to arouse public interest in a movement to prevent a repetition of what they characterized as a blotch upon the otherwise proud patriotic record of the city."

Many Secret Service Men There.

Mrs. George T. Bliss, No. 9 East [illegible] eighth street, headed a group of women who, refusing to use their tickets to the concert, placed them at the disposal of government investigators. Twenty-four

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 2, PART 2.)

REDUCTION RATIO

12x

2.5 mm abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

TRIBUNE
New York City MAR 15 1918

No Jarring Note In Audience at Muck Concert

Police at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie Hall last night and gave their symphony concert without the interruption that had been prophesied by Mrs. William Jay and other subscribers who have been conducting a campaign against the conductor's appearance in New York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the management, was provided. About fifty uniformed men and twenty detectives were stationed along the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street sides of Carnegie Hall and scattered among the audience, a few wearing evening dress. But there was no necessity for calling upon either the authority of the law or its strong right arm.

Long before the hour set for the concert to begin throngs crowded into the lobby, overflowing the steps and sidewalk in front of the hall and making the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his hand, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and when the anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium.

Undeterred by their failure to halt last night's concert, the subscribers led by Mrs. Jay will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, where the Boston Symphony is booked to play. Failing to halt Dr. Muck's appearance there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturady performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of Brooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be subscribers were appended.

Charles Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, refused to make any statement.

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight

Mrs. Jay did not reveal what had happened to her final "trump card."

"Of course, I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and who attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is a leading figure after what is known of his sympathies in this conflict between American ideals and German ideas of conquering the universe," she said last evening.

"What he represents is so opposite to everything which the American people have lived and fought for that I cannot believe America will tolerate him or any one who supports him now. It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and to the City of New York under the guise of art or a similar subterfuge. At any rate, our efforts will go on as usual."

Twenty-four seats which were turned over yesterday to Mrs. Jay by subscribers were given to the Secret Service men who occupied them last evening. During the day Mrs. Jay received many letters from per[illegible] who assured her of their moral suppo[illegible] in her efforts to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in New York. Edwin M. Warfield, former Governor of Maryland; Gertrude Atherton, Mrs. Frederick Leavens, Mrs. Robert Ide, Mrs. George T. Bliss and Mrs. Carroll J. [illegible] were among the writers.

From POST
Address New York City
Date MAR 16 1918

Having examined carefully Dr. Muck[illegible] certificate of Swiss citizenship and con[illegible] vinced ourselves of its authenticity, w[illegible] are prepared to state that never was th[illegible] andante of Brahms's Third Symphon[illegible] played with such vigor, control of nu[illegible] ance, and inspiring musicianship as [illegible] was last night.

SUN
New York MAR 15 1918

DR. MUCK WINS OVATION; FOES' CAMPAIGN FAILS

"Star Spangled Banner" Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiastic Pitch.

NATIVITY STILL MOOTED

Federal Officials Refuse to Interfere Despite Protests by Many Women.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall last night, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing in that role on the ground that he is a German citizen and pro-German in sympathy.

The question whether Dr. Muck actually is pro-German, as Mrs. Jay and her followers allege, or is a citizen of Switzerland, as he asserts, with no interests in Germany, still remains unsettled, but the concert last night left no doubt of the fact that the anti-Muck campaign caused no falling off in attendance. All seats and standing room had been sold three-quarters of an hour before the concert began.

Dr. Muck entered the hall at 8:15 o'clock through a double line of uniformed policemen. Not a single voice protested, and five minutes later the conductor was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers.

Standing Room All Filled.

Fewer than thirty seats were vacant. And against these few protestants (if their absence is to be taken as a protest) were the standees filling every foot of space the fire laws permit and a crowded outer lobby filled with more than 200 persons insisting on their right to pay admissions.

As individuals in the crowd outside clamored for the management in their eagerness to attend Dr. Muck turned from the applauding audience and lifted his baton. Instantly the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" floated into the vast auditorium. The entire audience arose.

After the playing of the anthem the loud applause was taken up again and long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The enthusiasm in the end touched the high mark with encores six times repeated, to each of which Dr. Muck responded, smiling and bowing.

The precautions taken by the police with a view to seeing that the concert, permitted by the proper authorities, passed off without interruption or untoward incident were notably unusual. There were fifty men in uniform and any number of plain clothes men in the lobby on the Fifty-seventh street side, at the Fifty-sixth street entrance and forming a chain guard around the building.

Precautions Unnecessary.

Judging from the humor of the crowd, the remarks and the utter absence of hostile incident, the precautions taken by the authorities at the requests of both the Carnegie Hall and the orchestra managements might have been dispensed with without fear of trouble. Only one protest was heard, and that aired in the usual tones of conversation.

Neither Dr. Muck nor Charles Ellis, manager of the orchestra, had anything to say after the concert, which closed at 10:15. Dr. Muck merely shook his head. Mr. Ellis said:

"Oh, no, there is nothing to say. It is all over."

The last suggested relief. If Mrs. Jay has her way, however, there is to be no let up in the campaign. Two petitions already are circulating in Brooklyn with a view to cancellation of the concert to be given in the Academy of Music to-night. The petitions are being circulated by H. S. Gladman and Dr. Henry A. Fairbairn. The statement given out on behalf of Mrs. Jay was as follows:

"Of course I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is the leading figure. But what Dr. Muck represents is so opposed to everything the American people have fought for and stand for that I cannot believe a loyal American will tolerate him or any one who supports him.

Disgrace to City, Says Mrs. Jay.

"It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and city under the name and guise of art," Mrs. Jay added.

Mrs. Jay, according to her spokesman, wished the conductor's title spelt with a K—Doktor.

This spokesman accounted for some seats that might otherwise have been empty by saying that at least twelve pairs had been offered to a Federal department and accepted, not counting the seats of Mrs. George T. Bliss, 9 East Sixty-eighth street. Mrs. Bliss had offered her seats direct and not through Mrs. Jay. Mrs. Jay supposed, she said, that these seats were occupied by Federal agents.

In support of her contention that Dr. Muck is pro-German and probably a dangerous alien, Mrs. Jay gave out copies of several letters, including one from John R. Rathom, editor of the Providence Journal, in which the editor calls attention to an article published in that paper in May, 1915.

This article charged Dr. Muck with giving $300 to Frederick Greisheimer in California for the use of the Fatherland after the latter had indorsed the torpedoing of the Lusitania. Mr. Rathom asserted that this charge has never been denied.

There were several letters from Brooklyn and one from former Governor Edwin Warfield of Maryland. The latter congratulated Mrs. Jay as "a loyal, patriotic American citizen."

The orchestra is to give a matinee concert to-morrow.

Splendid Performance Given.

The programme last night comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagners "Tristan and Isolde." The playing of the national anthem pre-

Continued from First Page.

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City MAR 15 1918

NEW YORK BOWS HEAD IN SHAME

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1, PART 2)

other seats were contributed for a like purpose, with the result that the hall was studded with Secret Service operatives, who not only were interested in Muck, but made notes upon the individuals and actions to be seen in the audience.

John Phillips, member of the East Orange Rifles, a volunteer orgapization that has been substituted for the fighting militia who have gont to the front, expressed his indignation when he discovered that there was no militant demonstration before Carnegie Hall.

"Why, I expected to see 5,000 people outside this hall ready to tear it down in order to prevent this enemy alien from appearing here," he said. "I can't understand why New York would permit itself to be so disgraced. I was a member of the committee that prevented Fritz Kreisler from playing in East Orange. We had a vigilance committee. What's the matter with New York's patriotism?"

Others Still Angry.

"Of course, I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and then attends a performance at which Doktor Much is a leading figure," said Mrs. Jay at the end of her conference. "I will say, however, that this is a fight to a finish, and we will not stop until such disgraceful exhibition have been stopped."

The Brooklyn opposition to Doktor Muck took the form of two petitions which are being circulated among subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts there. Both documents, bearing the names of approximately two hundred seat holders, were forwarded to Mrs. Jay and the New York from half a dozen other cities [illegible] his admitted attachment to the cause of Teutonic barbarism held undisputed sway at Carnegie Hall as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Germans Cheer Vigorously.

From the standpoint of the numerous Germans who crowded into the hall, the reception given to their hero—the Kaiser's favorite—was indeed a gratifying one. From the moment he stepped from behind the wings and into their view they vigorously applauded him. He turned and bowed three times to their uproarious greeting.

But the enthusiasm was entirely that of the Teutonic element in the house. Many of those present were significantly quiet during the applause, while thirteen empty boxes in the first tier of boxes and forty-two empty seats on the main floor were evidence of the widespread feeling against the orchestra's management for permitting the appearance of the Prussian leader in the face of the growing storm of criticism from patriotic organizations and individuals.

His Resignation Reported.

But Doktor Muck himself is credited with having succumbed to the insistent demand for his retirement, even if his financial backer, Major N. L. Higginson, insists upon his standing firm against all critics. Both Muck and his enemy aliens, it was said by a close associate of the Prussian musician, are slated to leave the orchestra at the end of the present season.

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season," a member of the orchestra and intimate friend of the Doktor said during the intermission.

"He would have done it earlier," the informant added, "but he is bound by a contract to Major Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The twenty-three enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go, also."

Plays National Anthem.

Doktor Muck, ever appreciative of dramatic climaxes, strode upon the platform after his audience had waited several minutes for his appearance—and long after other members of the orchestra had been in their seats. After the applause had subsided and he had ceased bowing he leaned over and bowed to his orchestra members. He waved his baton and they rose to play "The Star Spangled Banner," which he repeatedly had announced as "not being fit for an artist to play," until he was forced to do so by being barred from five cities formerly on the programme of the orchestra.

The direktor perfunctorily waved his baton while the orchestra played the national anthem. At the close of the number there was another burst of applause, obviously directed at the leader and not for the patriotic air which he had refused to play in Providence, R. I.

Then, returning to his printed programme and the Teutonic symphonies, among which he felt more at home, Muck addressed himself to the duties of the evening and left no opportunity for the criticism that he was acting his part perfunctorily.

Those in the Audience.

Among those at the concert were Mrs. Samuel Untermyer, who had several guests. Near her, in another tier loge, was Mrs. James F. D. Lanier, and her party included Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Rosen.

The wife of Captain Hans Tauscher, who was permitted to return to Ger-

AMERICAN
New York City. MAR 15 1918

MUCK LEADS CONCERT WITH

belligerents last night as an evidence of their intention to continue the struggle.

The petitions, which are being circulated by Henry A. Fairbairn and H. S. Gladwin, both bear this introductory paragraph:—

"We, the undersigned, protest against Dr. Karl Muck coming to this town, as we regard him as a dangerous alien, having been a close friend of Von Bernstorff and is now a representative of the Kaiser, as he acknowledges in Who Is Who, of 1916 and 1917."

Interviewers Are Avoided.

Doktor Muck, accompanied by Major Higginson and N. R. Brennan, assistant manager for the organization, reached the St. Regis Hotel in the morning from Boston. But the direktor and his financial backer immediately dropped out of the public view from the moment they reached the lobby of the hotel, leaving Mr. Brennan to make what replies he could to those who had expressed indignation at the appearance of the Prussian musician here.

"We can say nothing in reply to Mrs. Jay's remarks," said Mr. Brennan, with a wave of his hand. "She represents a small group and, of course, cannot speak for the large number of men and women who have purchased tickets to hear the orchestra. Doktor Muck is just like any other artist"—

"But he has refused to play the national anthem, has criticised it and refused to make replies to questions that have been put to him by a respectably large proportion of the public," was suggested to him.

"No, he never refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' It will be played to-night," andswered Mr. Brennan.

cut evening [illegible] together and held frequent conferences in whispers.

"Are they some of the alleged German supporters of Dr. Muck?" asked a reporter of one of the doormen.

IN BECKER'S OLD SQUAD.

"Heavens, no!" he exclaimed. "They are the members of the Police Strong Arm Squad, formerly commanded by the late Lieutenant Becker, in disguise."

In a little while limousines were discharging fashionable parties at the Fifty-seventh street entrance. The concert-goers passed through police lanes and into the hall. There was an atmosphere of tension on all sides. At 8:10 Dr. Muck drove up in a motor car. Several policemen stepped to his side and escorted him to the stage. By this time the auditorium was packed.

In the first tier, however, there were 13 boxes vacant. They testified to the efficacy of the fight Mrs. William Jay, society woman, has made against Dr. Muck, alleged pro-German and German sympathizer, appearing.

It was learned afterwards that Mrs. Jay had turned over twenty-four seats to the Department of Justice. Mrs. George T. Bliss, another woman of society, living at No. 9 East Sixty-fourth street, gave her box to secret service men. Many of these seats were used.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony, and a constant defender of Dr. Muck, was a conspicuous figure in another box. He seldom comes to New York to hear the concerts of the orchestra, but was on hand early last night.

TENSION TIGHTENS.

The tension tightened as the orchestra men stopped the ensemble of discord incident to the "tuning up process." Then Dr. Muck appeared, bowing, with baton in hand.

He received an ovation.

Three times Dr. Muck turned and bowed to the enthusiastic throng before the hand-clapping ceased.

The silence was shattered by the crash of the opening strains of the "Star Spangled Banner," which Dr. Muck led with vigor. Another round of hand-clapping, and the orchestra proceeded with its programme.

AUDIENCE ATTENTIVE.

The first half of the orchestra's programme was a Brahms symphony. The great audience was exceedingly attentive, and alert eyes watched every wave of Dr. Muck's baton. It was plain that many of the throng had not come solely because of a love for music.

When the symphony was finished there was vociferous applause. Dr. Muck turned, smiling, and bowed his recognition. The applause continued for some time and Dr. Muck was forced to bow six times in recognition of the ovation.

At the conclusion of the concert the throng again applanded the conductor vigorously, making conclusive his triumph, at least so far as the audience which heard him last night was concerned.

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

Mrs. Jay and her cohorts, although disappointed in their failure to stop last night's concert, will fight on to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance this evening at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn.

All day yesterday those opposed to Dr. Muck besieged the police, Commissioner of Licenses and Federal authorities in a vain effort to prevent the concert last night in Carnegie Hall.

They will wage the fight more vigorously to-day. Two anti-Muck factions in Brooklyn already are circulating petitions among the symphony subscribers in Brooklyn, requesting the Commissioner of Licenses to revoke the license for the concert to-night. One petition had 65 names on it last evening.

Mrs. Jay has received numerous letters and telegrams commending her for her fight on Dr. Muck. One of the tributes came yesterday from Gertrude Atherton, the novelist. Another was written on the stationery of the War Department, and bore the [illegible] right."

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date MAR 16 1918

Dr. Muck Plays Again Without Causing a Riot

Second Concert Is Given in Brooklyn With U. S. Flags as Drapery

Again nothing happened. Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their scheduled performance last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The second concert, like that of Thursday, was played in perfect tranquillity, without a sign of the disturbance expected by the forces who have been opposing the conductor's appearance. There were few vacant seats. Four large American flags were draped on the platform. Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers who are campaigning to wrest Dr. Muck's baton from his hand, has not yet located the "trump card" which was lost in the shuffle Thursday night. It may turn up to-day, however, in time to cause a demonstration at the Symphony Orchestra's last concert in Carnegie Hall, for Mrs. Jay has sent out an appeal for tickets dated this afternoon.

"Subscribers for the Boston Symphony concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval of Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending these tickets by messenger at once to Mrs. William Jay, 850 Park Avenue," reads the appeal.

It is intimated by persons close to Mrs. Jay that if enough seats are secured before the matinee there will be some sort of protest against Dr. Muck.

The directors of the Brooklyn Institute, who engaged Dr. Muck, would not divulge last night what was discussed Thursday at their special meeting. It is understood, however, that the meeting was called to decide upon what course of action should be adopted in regard to Dr. Muck.

"It is a pity that art and patriotism sometimes conflict," said Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute. From which it may be inferred that Dr. Muck will not be engaged for next season.

An indignation meeting at which twenty-three Grand Army posts were represented was held in Borough Hall, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon to protest against last night's concert. A resolution declaring the performance to be a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn was passed unanimously. Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 399, presided.

Upon request the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have shown Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship papers, authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. The certificate was given Dr. Muck by the town of Neuheim, in the canton of Zug, on March 4, 1881, soon after he came of age. His father, a Bavarian, had settled there, and had become naturalized when Dr. Muck was six years old.

TRIBUNE
New York City MAR 15 1918

Music

Boston Symphony Concert Proves One of the Best of Season

Dr. Muck's performance was one of the best of the season. The Brahms third symphony, one of the most difficult of works to present in its true proportions, he conducted with a rhythmic sweep and a wealth of shading which lifted it into the domain of the noblest poetry. The mystical final movement, in particular, received a wonderfully eloquent reading, which was acknowledged by the audience by repeated recalls.

Two of the more recent Sibelius tone poems, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the "Night Ride and Sunrise," both extraordinarily rich in descriptive detail, formed the bulk of the second part of the programme. The former is a composite picture of that strange character of Finnish legend who was part girl, part witch and part virago. The latter is a musical panorama of familiar type. Both represent the fresh inspiration of one of the most distinguished composers of the day, and both were admirably played. The "Tristan" prelude closed the programme.

[illegible] man. Cou[illegible] another [illegible] the [illegible] party [illegible] her [illegible] Tauscher.

Others in the audie[illegible] Whitney, Mr. and [illegible] Wilhelm Funk, Alfred [illegible] Mrs. Frank Scott G[illegible] Daniel Gregory Maso[illegible] F. Aldred, Mr. and [illegible] the Misses Mary Cro[illegible] ette A. Post, Adler [illegible] reisler, Miss Helen [illegible] ranz Arens, Willi[illegible] Louis Loommenich, Dr. F[illegible] rsch, Leopold Auer, Otto Weil, [illegible] Herbert Witherspoon, F. Morris Class, Baron and Baroness de Meyer, William C. Carl and Miss Winifred Christie.

The group of subscribers to the orchestra's programme who had opposed Doktor Muck's appearance here as a disgrace to the city had not given up the fight. At a closed meeting called by Mrs. William Jay it was agreed that every effort should be made to arouse public interest in a movement to prevent a repetition of what they characterized as "a blotch upon the otherwise proud patriotic record of the city."

Many Secret Service Men Th[illegible]

Mrs. George T. Bliss, No. 9 East [illegible] eighth street, headed a group of wo[illegible] who, refusing to use their tickets to the concert, placed them at the disposal of government investigators. Twenty-four

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 2, PART 2)

TRIBUNE
New York City
MAR 15 1918

No Jarring Note In Audience at Muck Concert

Police at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie Hall last night and gave their symphony concert without the interruption that had been prophesied by Mrs. William Jay and other subscribers who have been conducting a campaign against the conductor's appearance in New York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the management, was provided. About fifty uniformed men and twenty detectives were stationed along the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street sides of Carnegie Hall and scattered among the audience, a few wearing evening dress. But there was no necessity for calling upon either the authority of the law or its strong right arm.

Long before the hour set for the concert to begin throngs crowded into the lobby, overflowing the steps and sidewalk in front of the hall and making the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his hand, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and when the anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium.

Undeterred by their failure to halt last night's concert, the subscribers led by Mrs. Jay will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, where the Boston Symphony is booked to play. Failing to halt Dr. Muck's appearance there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturady performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of Brooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be subscribers were appended.

Charles Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, refused to make any statement.

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight

Mrs. Jay did not reveal what had happened to her final "trump card."

"Of course, I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and who attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is a leading figure after what is known of his sympathies in this conflict between American ideals and German ideas of conquering the universe," she said last evening.

"What he represents is so opposite to everything which the American people have lived and fought for that I cannot believe America will tolerate him or any one who supports him now. It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and to the City of New York under the guise of art or a similar subterfuge. At any rate, our efforts will go on as usual."

Twenty-four seats which were turned over yesterday to Mrs. Jay by subscribers were given to the Secret Service men who occupied them last evening. During the day Mrs. Jay received many letters from per[illegible] who assured her of their moral suppo[illegible] in her efforts to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in New York. Edwin M. Warfield, former Governor of Maryland; Gertrude Atherton, Mrs. Frederick Leavens, Mrs. Robert Ide, Mrs. George T. Bliss and Mrs. Carroll J. [illegible] were among the writers.

From POST
Address New York City
Date MAR 16 1918

Having examined carefully Dr. Muck[illegible] certificate of Swiss citizenship and co[illegible] vinced ourselves of its authenticity, w[illegible] are prepared to state that never was th[illegible] andante of Brahms's Third Symphon[illegible] played with such vigor, control of nu[illegible] ance, and inspiring musicianship as i[illegible] was last night.

SUN
New York City
MAR 15 1918

DR. MUCK WINS OVATION; FOES' CAMPAIGN FAILS

"Star Spangled Banner" Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiastic Pitch.

NATIVITY STILL MOOTED

Federal Officials Refuse to Interfere Despite Protests by Many Women.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall last night, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing in that role on the ground that he is a German citizen and pro-German in sympathy.

The question whether Dr. Muck actually is pro-German, as Mrs. Jay and her followers allege, or is a citizen of Switzerland, as he asserts, with no interests in Germany, still remains unsettled, but the concert last night left no doubt of the fact that the anti-Muck campaign caused no falling off in attendance. All seats and standing room had been sold three-quarters of an hour before the concert began.

Dr. Muck entered the hall at 8:15 o'clock through a double line of uniformed policemen. Not a single voice protested, and five minutes later the conductor was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers.

Standing Room All Filled.

Fewer than thirty seats were vacant. And against these few protestants (if their absence is to be taken as a protest) were the standees filling every foot of space the fire laws permit and a crowded outer lobby filled with more than 200 persons insisting on their right to pay admissions.

As individuals in the crowd outside clamored for the management in their eagerness to attend Dr. Muck turned from the applauding audience and lifted his baton. Instantly the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" floated into the vast auditorium. The entire audience arose.

After the playing of the anthem the loud applause was taken up again and long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The enthusiasm in the end touched the high mark with encores six times repeated, to each of which Dr. Muck responded, smiling and bowing.

The precautions taken by the police with a view to seeing that the concert, permitted by the proper authorities, passed off without interruption or untoward incident were notably unusual. There were fifty men in uniform and any number of plain clothes men in the lobby on the Fifty-seventh street side, at the Fifty-sixth street entrance and forming a chain guard around the building.

Precautions Unnecessary.

Judging from the humor of the crowd, the remarks and the utter absence of inimical incident, the precautions taken by the authorities at the requests of both the Carnegie Hall and the orchestra managements might have been dispensed with without fear of trouble. Only one protest was heard, and that aired in the usual tones of conversation.

Neither Dr. Muck nor Charles Ellis, manager of the orchestra, had anything to say after the concert, which closed at 10:15. Dr. Muck merely shook his head. Mr. Ellis said:

"Oh, no, there is nothing to say. It is all over."

The last suggested relief. If Mrs. Jay has her way, however, there is to be no let up in the campaign. Two petitions already are circulating in Brooklyn with a view to cancellation of the concert to be given in the Academy of Music to-night. The petitions are being circulated by H. S. Gladman and Dr. Henry A. Fairbairn. The statement given out on behalf of Mrs. Jay was as follows:

"Of course I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is the leading figure. But what Dr. Muck represents is so opposed to everything the American people have fought for and stand for that I cannot believe a loyal American will tolerate him or any one who supports him.

Disgrace to City, Says Mrs. Jay.

"It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and city under the name and guise of art," Mrs. Jay added.

Mrs. Jay, according to her spokesman, wished the conductor's title spelt with a K—Doktor.

This spokesman accounted for some seats that might otherwise have been empty by saying that at least twelve pairs had been offered to a Federal department and accepted, not counting the seats of Mrs. George T. Bliss, 9 East Sixty-eighth street. Mrs. Bliss had offered her seats direct and not through Mrs. Jay. Mrs. Jay supposed, she said, that these seats were occupied by Federal agents.

In support of her contention that Dr. Muck is pro-German and probably a dangerous alien, Mrs. Jay gave out copies of several letters, including one from John R. Rathom, editor of the Providence Journal, in which the editor calls attention to an article published in that paper in May, 1915.

This article charged Dr. Muck with giving $300 to Frederick Greisheimer in California for the use of the Fatherland after the latter had indorsed the torpedoing of the Lusitania. Mr. Rathom asserted that this charge has never been denied.

There were several letters from Brooklyn and one from former Governor Edwin Warfield of Maryland. The latter congratulated Mrs. Jay as "a loyal, patriotic American citizen."

The orchestra is to give a matinee concert to-morrow.

Splendid Performance Given.

The programme last night comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagners "Tristan and Isolde."

Continued from First Page.

The playing of the national anthem pre-

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 15 1918

NEW YORK BOWS HEAD IN SHAME AS MUCK LEADS

Kaiser's Favorite Is Permitted to Direct Symphony Concert Here.

GERMANS APPLAUD THEIR HERO LOUDLY

Close Associate Says Conductor Will Resign at End of This Season.

New York last night bowed its head in shame as it stepped down from its proud position in the first rank of the patriotic cities of the nation.

For Father Knickerbocker, possessor of an enviable reputation for patriotic war service, was compelled to play the unwilling host to Doktor Karl Muck, music direktor extraordinary to the Kaiser, and his twenty-three enemy alien associates.

While fifty uniformed policemen and a horde of government Secret Service men looked on, the man who has been barred from half a dozen other cities because of his admitted attachment to the cause of Teutonic barbarism held undisputed sway at Carnegie Hall as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Germans Cheer Vigorously.

From the standpoint of the numerous Germans who crowded into the hall, the reception given to their hero—the Kaiser's favorite—was indeed a gratifying one. From the moment he stepped from behind the wings and into their view they vigorously applauded him. He turned and bowed three times to their uproarious greeting.

But the enthusiasm was entirely that of the Teutonic element in the house. Many of those present were significantly quiet during the applause, while thirteen empty boxes in the first tier of boxes and forty-two empty seats on the main floor were evidence of the widespread feeling against the orchestra's management for permitting the appearance of the Prussian leader in the face of the growing storm of criticism from patriotic organizations and individuals.

His Resignation Reported.

But Doktor Muck himself is credited with having succumbed to the insistent demand for his retirement, even if his financial backer, Major N. L. Higginson, insists upon his standing firm against all critics. Both Muck and his enemy aliens, it was said by a close associate of the Prussian musician, are slated to leave the orchestra at the end of the present season.

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season," a member of the orchestra and intimate friend of the Doktor said during the intermission.

"He would have done it earlier," the informant added, "but he is bound by a contract to Major Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The twenty-three enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go, also."

Plays National Anthem.

Doktor Muck, ever appreciative of dramatic climaxes, strode upon the platform after his audience had waited several minutes for his appearance—and long after other members of the orchestra had been in their seats. After the applause had subsided and he had ceased bowing he leaned over and bowed to his orchestra members. He waved his baton and they rose to play "The Star Spangled Banner," which he repeatedly had announced as "not being fit for an artist to play," until he was forced to do so by being barred from five cities formerly on the programme of the orchestra.

The direktor perfunctorily waved his baton while the orchestra played the national anthem. At the close of the number there was another burst of applause, obviously directed at the leader and not for the patriotic air which he had refused to play in Providence, R. I.

Then, returning to his printed programme and the Teutonic symphonies, among which he felt more at home, Muck addressed himself to the duties of the evening and left no opportunity for the criticism that he was acting his part perfunctorily.

Those in the Audience.

Among those at the concert were Mrs. Samuel Untermyer, who had several guests. Near her, in another tier loge, was Mrs. James F. D. Lanier, and her party included Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Rosen.

The wife of Captain Hans Tauscher, who was permitted to return to Ger-

AMERICAN
New York City.
MAR 15 1918

MUCK LEADS CONCERT WITH POLICE GUARD

Cordon Thrown Around Carnegie Hall as Prelude to Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme

Vacant Boxes Testify to Efficacy of Mrs. William Jay's German Sympathizer Campaign

The tramp, tramp, tramp of police feet, and the tap, tap, tap of police clubs on the pavement around Carnegie Hall last night played a monotonous prelude to the concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra later gave under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck.

A cordon of more than fifty uniformed patrolmen was thrown around the auditorium an hour before the concert was scheduled to start. In the lobby, and within the hall, were perhaps thirty detectives in civilian clothes.

Among the early arrivals was a group of handsome men in stylishly cut evening clothes. They stuck close together and held frequent conferences in whispers.

"Are they some of the alleged German supporters of Dr. Muck?" asked a reporter of one of the doormen.

IN BECKER'S OLD SQUAD.

"Heavens, no!" he exclaimed. "They are the members of the Police Strong Arm Squad, formerly commanded by the late Lieutenant Becker, in disguise."

In a little while limousines were discharging fashionable parties at the Fifty-seventh street entrance. The concert-goers passed through police lanes and into the hall. There was an atmosphere of tension on all sides. At 8:10 Dr. Muck drove up in a motor car. Several policemen stepped to his side and escorted him to the stage. By this time the auditorium was packed.

In the first tier, however, there were 13 boxes vacant. They testified to the efficacy of the fight Mrs. William Jay, society woman, has made against Dr. Muck, alleged pro-German and German sympathizer, appearing.

It was learned afterwards that Mrs. Jay had turned over twenty-four seats to the Department of Justice. Mrs. George T. Bliss, another woman of society, living at No. 9 East Sixty-fourth street, gave her box to secret service men. Many of these seats were used.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony, and a constant defender of Dr. Muck, was a conspicuous figure in another box. He seldom comes to New York to hear the concerts of the orchestra, but was on hand early last night.

TENSION TIGHTENS.

The tension tightened as the orchestra men stopped the ensemble of discord incident to the "tuning up process." Then Dr. Muck appeared, bowing, with baton in hand.

He received an ovation.

Three times Dr. Muck turned and bowed to the enthusiastic throng before the hand-clapping ceased.

The silence was shattered by the crash of the opening strains of the "Star Spangled Banner," which Dr. Muck led with vigor. Another round of hand-clapping, and the orchestra proceeded with its programme.

AUDIENCE ATTENTIVE.

The first half of the orchestra's programme was a Brahms symphony. The great audience was exceedingly attentive, and alert eyes watched every wave of Dr. Muck's baton. It was plain that many of the throng had not come solely because of a love for music.

When the symphony was finished there was vociferous applause. Dr. Muck turned, smiling, and bowed his recognition. The applause continued for some time and Dr. Muck was forced to bow six times in recognition of the ovation.

At the conclusion of the concert the throng again applanded the conductor vigorously, making conclusive his triumph, at least so far as the audience which heard him last night was concerned.

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

Mrs. Jay and her cohorts, although disappointed in their failure to stop last night's concert, will fight on to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance this evening at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn.

All day yesterday those opposed to Dr. Muck besieged the police, Commissioner of Licenses and Federal authorities in a vain effort to prevent the concert last night in Carnegie Hall.

They will wage the fight more vigorously to-day. Two anti-Muck factions in Brooklyn already are circulating petitions among the symphony subscribers in Brooklyn, requesting the Commissioner of Licenses to revoke the license for the concert to-night. One petition had 65 names on it last evening.

Mrs. Jay has received numerous letters and telegrams commending her for her fight on Dr. Muck. One of the tributes came yesterday from Gertrude Atherton, the novelist. Another was written on the stationery of the War Department, and bore the [illegible] fight."

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date MAR 16 1918

Dr. Muck Plays Again Without Causing a Riot

Second Concert Is Given in Brooklyn With U. S. Flags as Drapery

Again nothing happened. Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their scheduled performance last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The second concert, like that of Thursday, was played in perfect tranquillity, without a sign of the disturbance expected by the forces who have been opposing the conductor's appearance. There were few vacant seats. Four large American flags were draped on the platform.

Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers who are campaigning to wrest Dr. Muck's baton from his hand, has not yet located the "trump card" which was lost in the shuffle Thursday night. It may turn up to-day, however, in time to cause a demonstration at the Symphony Orchestra's last concert in Carnegie Hall, for Mrs. Jay has sent out an appeal for tickets dated this afternoon.

"Subscribers for the Boston Symphony concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval of Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending these tickets by messenger at once to Mrs. William Jay, 850 Park Avenue," reads the appeal.

It is intimated by persons close to Mrs. Jay that if enough seats are secured before the matinee there will be some sort of protest against Dr. Muck.

The directors of the Brooklyn Institute, who engaged Dr. Muck, would not divulge last night what was discussed Thursday at their special meeting. It is understood, however, that the meeting was called to decide upon what course of action should be adopted in regard to Dr. Muck.

"It is a pity that art and patriotism sometimes conflict," said Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute. From which it may be inferred that Dr. Muck will not be engaged for next season.

An indignation meeting at which twenty-three Grand Army posts were represented was held in Borough Hall, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon to protest against last night's concert. A resolution declaring the performance to be a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn was passed unanimously. Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 399, presided.

Upon request the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have shown Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship papers, authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. The certificate was given Dr. Muck by the town of Neuheim, in the canton of Zug, on March 4, 1881, soon after he came of age. His father, a Bavarian, had settled there, and had become naturalized when Dr. Muck was six years old.

TRIBUNE
New York City
MAR 15 1918

Music

Boston Symphony Concert Proves One of the Best of Season

Dr. Muck's performance was one of the best of the season. The Brahms third symphony, one of the most difficult of works to present in its true proportions, he conducted with a rhythmic sweep and a wealth of shading which lifted it into the domain of the noblest poetry. The mystical final movement, in particular, received a wonderfully eloquent reading, which was acknowledged by the audience by repeated recalls.

Two of the more recent Sibelius tone poems, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the "Night Ride and Sunrise," both extraordinarily rich in descriptive detail, formed the bulk of the second part of the programme. The former is a composite picture of that strange character of Finnish legend who was part girl, part witch and part virago. The latter is a musical panorama of familiar type. Both represent the fresh inspiration of one of the most distinguished composers of the day, and both were admirably played. The "Tristan" prelude closed the programme.

man, [illegible] Cou[illegible] another [illegible] the [illegible] party [illegible] her [illegible] Tauscher.

Others in the audie[illegible] Whitney, Mr. and [illegible] Wilhelm Funk, Alfred [illegible] Mrs. Frank Scott G[illegible] Daniel Gregory Mason, [illegible] Aldred, Mr. and [illegible] he Misses Mary Cro[illegible] [illegible]ette A. Post, Abler[illegible] [illegible]reisler, Miss Helen [illegible] [illegible]ranz Arens, Willi[illegible] [illegible]ouis [illegible]oemmenich, Dr. [illegible]sch, Leopold Auer, Otto Weil, [illegible]erbert Witherspoon, F. Morris Class, Baron and Baroness de Meyer, William C. Carl and Miss Winifred Christie.

The group of subscribers to the orchestra's programme who had opposed Doktor Muck's appearance here as a disgrace to the city had not given up the fight. At a closed meeting called by Mrs. William Jay it was agreed that every effort should be made to arouse public interest in a movement to prevent a repetition of what they characterized as "a blotch upon the otherwise proud patriotic record of [illegible] city."

Many Secret Service Men Th[illegible]

Mrs. George T. Bliss, No. 9 East [illegible] eighth street, headed a group of wo[illegible] who, refusing to use their tickets to the concert, placed them at the disposal of government investigators. Twenty-four

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 2, PART 2.)

TRIBUNE
New York City
MAR 15 1918

No Jarring Note In Audience at Muck Concert

Police at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie Hall last night and gave their symphony concert without the interruption that had been prophesied by Mrs. William Jay and other subscribers who have been conducting a campaign against the conductor's appearance in New York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the management, was provided. About fifty uniformed men and twenty detectives were stationed along the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street sides of Carnegie Hall and scattered among the audience, a few wearing evening dress. But there was no necessity for calling upon either the authority of the law or its strong right arm.

Long before the hour set for the concert to begin throngs crowded into the lobby, overflowing the steps and sidewalk in front of the hall and making the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his hand, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and when the anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium.

Undeterred by their failure to halt last night's concert, the subscribers led by Mrs. Jay will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, where the Boston Symphony is booked to play. Failing to halt Dr. Muck's appearance there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturady performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of Brooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be subscribers were appended.

Charles Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, refused to make any statement.

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight

Mrs. Jay did not reveal what had happened to her final "trump card."

"Of course, I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and who attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is a leading figure after what is known of his sympathies in this conflict between American ideals and German ideas of conquering the universe," she said last evening.

"What he represents is so opposite to everything which the American people have lived and fought for that I cannot believe America will tolerate him or any one who supports him now. It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and to the City of New York under the guise of art or a similar subterfuge. At any rate, our efforts will go on as usual."

Twenty-four seats which were turned over yesterday to Mrs. Jay by subscribers were given to the Secret Service men who occupied them last evening. During the day Mrs. Jay received many letters from per[illegible] who assured her of their moral suppo[illegible] in her efforts to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in New York. Edwin M. Warfield, former Governor of Maryland; Gertrude Atherton, Mrs. Frederick Leavens, Mrs. Robert Ide, Mrs. George T. Bliss and Mrs. Carroll J. [illegible] were among the writers.

om POST
ddress New York City
ate MAR 16 1918

Having examined carefully Dr. Muck[illegible] certificate of Swiss citizenship and co[illegible] vinced ourselves of its authenticity, w[illegible] are prepared to state that never was th[illegible] andante of Brahms's Third Symphon[illegible] played with such vigor, control of nu[illegible] ance, and inspiring musicianship as [illegible] was last night.

SUN
ss: New York City MAR 15 1918

DR. MUCK WINS OVATION; FOES' CAMPAIGN FAILS

"Star Spangled Banner" Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiastic Pitch.

NATIVITY STILL MOOTED

Federal Officials Refuse to Interfere Despite Protests by Many Women.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall last night, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing in that role on the ground that he is a German citizen and pro-German in sympathy.

The question whether Dr. Muck actually is pro-German, as Mrs. Jay and her followers allege, or is a citizen of Switzerland, as he asserts, with no interests in Germany, still remains unsettled, but the concert last night left no doubt of the fact that the anti-Muck campaign caused no falling off in attendance. All seats and standing room had been sold three-quarters of an hour before the concert began.

Dr. Muck entered the hall at 8:15 o'clock through a double line of uniformed policemen. Not a single voice protested, and five minutes later the conductor was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers.

Standing Room All Filled.

Fewer than thirty seats were vacant. And against these few protestants (if their absence is to be taken as a protest) were the standees filling every foot of space the fire laws permit and a crowded outer lobby filled with more than 200 persons insisting on their right to pay admissions.

As individuals in the crowd outside clamored for the management in their eagerness to attend Dr. Muck turned from the applauding audience and lifted his baton. Instantly the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" floated into the vast auditorium. The entire audience arose.

After the playing of the anthem the loud applause was taken up again and long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The enthusiasm in the end touched the high mark with encores six times repeated, to each of which Dr. Muck responded, smiling and bowing.

The precautions taken by the police with a view to seeing that the concert, permitted by the proper authorities, passed off without interruption or untoward incident were notably unusual. There were fifty men in uniform and any number of plain clothes men in the lobby on the Fifty-seventh street side, at the Fifty-sixth street entrance and forming a chain guard around the building.

Precautions Unnecessary.

Judging from the humor of the crowd, the remarks and the utter absence of inimical incident, the precautions taken by the authorities at the requests of both the Carnegie Hall and the orchestra managements might have been dispensed with without fear of trouble. Only one protest was heard, and that aired in the usual tones of conversation.

Neither Dr. Muck nor Charles Ellis, manager of the orchestra, had anything to say after the concert, which closed at 10:15. Dr. Muck merely shook his head. Mr. Ellis said:

"Oh, no, there is nothing to say. It is all over."

The last suggested relief. If Mrs. Jay has her way, however, there is to be no let up in the campaign. Two petitions already are circulating in Brooklyn with a view to cancellation of the concert to be given in the Academy of Music to-night. The petitions are being circulated by H. S. Gladman and Dr. Henry A. Fairbairn. The statement given out on behalf of Mrs. Jay was as follows:

"Of course I have nothing to say of any American who loves his country and attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is the leading figure. But what Dr. Muck represents is so opposed to everything the American people have fought for and stand for that I cannot believe a loyal American will tolerate him or any one who supports him.

Disgrace to City, Says Mrs. Jay.

"It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and city under the name and guise of art," Mrs. Jay added.

Mrs. Jay, according to her spokesman, wished the conductor's title spelt with a K—Doktor.

This spokesman accounted for some seats that might otherwise have been empty by saying that at least twelve pairs had been offered to a Federal department and accepted, not counting the seats of Mrs. George T. Bliss, 9 East Sixty-eighth street. Mrs. Bliss had offered her seats direct and not through Mrs. Jay. Mrs. Jay supposed, she said, that these seats were occupied by Federal agents.

In support of her contention that Dr. Muck is pro-German and probably a dangerous alien, Mrs. Jay gave out copies of several letters, including one from John R. Rathom, editor of the Providence Journal, in which the editor calls attention to an article published in that paper in May, 1915.

This article charged Dr. Muck with giving $300 to Frederick Greisheimer in California for the use of the Fatherland after the latter had indorsed the torpedoing of the Lusitania. Mr. Rathom asserted that this charge has never been denied.

There were several letters from Brooklyn and one from former Governor Edwin Warfield of Maryland. The latter congratulated Mrs. Jay as "a loyal, patriotic American citizen."

The orchestra is to give a matinee concert to-morrow.

Splendid Performance Given.

The programme last night comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagners "Tristan and Isolde." The playing of the national anthem pre-

Continued from First Page.

m NEW YORK HERALD
dress New York City
te MAR 15 1918

NEW YORK BOWS HEAD IN SHAME AS MUCK LEADS

Kaiser's Favorite Is Permitted to Direct Symphony Concert Here.

GERMANS APPLAUD THEIR HERO LOUDLY

Close Associate Says Conductor Will Resign at End of This Season.

New York last night bowed its head in shame as it stepped down from its proud position in the first rank of the patriotic cities of the nation.

For Father Knickerbocker, possessor of an enviable reputation for patriotic war service, was compelled to play the unwilling host to Doktor Karl Muck, music direktor extraordinary to the Kaiser, and his twenty-three enemy alien associates.

While fifty uniformed policemen and a horde of government Secret Service men looked on, the man who has been barred from half a dozen other cities because of his admitted attachment to the cause of Teutonic barbarism held undisputed sway at Carnegie Hall as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Germans Cheer Vigorously.

From the standpoint of the numerous Germans who crowded into the hall, the reception given to their hero—the Kaiser's favorite—was indeed a gratifying one. From the moment he stepped from behind the wings and into their view they vigorously applauded him. He turned and bowed three times to their uproarious greeting.

But the enthusiasm was entirely that of the Teutonic element in the house. Many of those present were significantly quiet during the applause, while thirteen empty boxes in the first tier of boxes and forty-two empty seats on the main floor were evidence of the widespread feeling against the orchestra's management for permitting the appearance of the Prussian leader in the face of the growing storm of criticism from patriotic organizations and individuals.

His Resignation Reported.

But Doktor Muck himself is credited with having succumbed to the insistent demand for his retirement, even if his financial backer, Major N. L. Higginson, insists upon his standing firm against all critics. Both Muck and his [illegible]emy aliens, it was said by a close associate of the Prussian musician, are slated to leave the orchestra at the end of the present season.

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season," a member of the orchestra and intimate friend of the Doktor said during the intermission.

"He would have done it earlier," the informant added, "but he is bound by a contract to Major Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The twenty-three enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go, also."

Plays National Anthem.

Doktor Muck, ever appreciative of dramatic climaxes, strode upon the platform [illegible] his audience had waited several min[illegible] for his appearance—and long after [illegible] members of the orchestra had been [illegible] seats. After the applause had sub[illegible]d he had ceased bowing he leaned [illegible] bowed to his orchestra members. [illegible]is baton and they rose to play [illegible]ar Spangled Banner," which he [illegible]lly had announced as "not being [illegible] an artist to play," until he was [illegible]o do so by being barred from five [illegible]ormerly on the programme of the [illegible]ra.

[illegible] direktor perfunctorily waved his [illegible] while the orchestra played the na[illegible] anthem. At the close of the num[illegible]ere was another burst of applause, [illegible]usly directed at the leader and not [illegible] the patriotic air which he had refused [illegible]lay in Providence, R. I.

[illegible]en, returning to his printed programme [illegible] the Teutonic symphonies, among [illegible] he felt more at home, Muck ad[illegible] himself to the duties of the even[illegible] left no opportunity for the crit[illegible] that he was acting his part per[illegible]

Those in the Audience.

[illegible]hose at the concert were Mrs. [illegible]termyer, who had several [illegible] her, in another tier loge, [illegible]es F. D. Lanier, and her [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. [illegible]

[illegible] Captain Hans Tauscher [illegible] permitted to return to Ger[illegible]

AMERICAN
ess: New York City.
MAR 15 1918

MUCK LEADS CONCERT WITH POLICE GUARD

Cordon Thrown Around Carnegie Hall as Prelude to Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme

Vacant Boxes Testify to Efficacy of Mrs. William Jay's German Sympathizer Campaign

The tramp, tramp, tramp of police feet, and the tap, tap, tap of police clubs on the pavement around Carnegie Hall last night played a monotonous prelude to the concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra later gave under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck.

A cordon of more than fifty uniformed patrolmen was thrown around the auditorium an hour before the concert was scheduled to start. In the lobby, and within the hall, were perhaps thirty detectives in civilian clothes.

Among the early arrivals was a group of handsome men in stylishly cut evening clothes. They stuck close together and held frequent conferences in whispers.

"Are they some of the alleged German supporters of Dr. Muck?" asked a reporter of one of the doormen.

IN BECKER'S OLD SQUAD.

"Heavens, no!" he exclaimed. "They are the members of the Police Strong Arm Squad, formerly commanded by the late Lieutenant Becker, in disguise."

In a little while limousines were discharging fashionable parties at the Fifty-seventh street entrance. The concert-goers passed through police lanes and into the hall. There was an atmosphere of tension on all sides. At 8:10 Dr. Muck drove up in a motor car. Several policemen stepped to his side and escorted him to the stage. By this time the auditorium was packed.

In the first tier, however, there were 13 boxes vacant. They testified to the efficacy of the fight Mrs. William Jay, society woman, has made against Dr. Muck, alleged pro-German and German sympathizer, appearing.

It was learned afterwards that Mrs. Jay had turned over twenty-four seats to the Department of Justice. Mrs. George T. Bliss, another woman of society, living at No. 9 East Sixty-fourth street, gave her box to secret service men. Many of these seats were used.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony, and a constant defender of Dr. Muck, was a conspicuous figure in another box. He seldom comes to New York to hear the concerts of the orchestra, but was on hand early last night.

TENSION TIGHTENS.

The tension tightened as the orchestra men stopped the ensemble of discord incident to the "tuning up process." Then Dr. Muck appeared, bowing, with baton in hand.

He received an ovation.

Three times Dr. Muck turned and bowed to the enthusiastic throng before the hand-clapping ceased.

The silence was shattered by the crash of the opening strains of the "Star Spangled Banner," which Dr. Muck led with vigor. Another round of hand-clapping, and the orchestra proceeded with its programme.

AUDIENCE ATTENTIVE.

The first half of the orchestra's programme was a Brahms symphony. The great audience was exceedingly attentive, and alert eyes watched every wave of Dr. Muck's baton. It was plain that many of the throng had not come solely because of a love for music.

When the symphony was finished there was vociferous applause. Dr. Muck turned, smiling, and bowed his recognition. The applause continued for some time and Dr. Muck was forced to bow six times in recognition of the ovation.

At the conclusion of the concert the throng again applanded the conductor vigorously, making conclusive his triumph, at least so far as the audience which heard him last night was concerned.

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

Mrs. Jay and her cohorts, although disappointed in their failure to stop last night's concert, will fight on to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance this evening at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn.

All day yesterday those opposed to Dr. Muck besieged the police, Commissioner of Licenses and Federal authorities in a vain effort to prevent the concert last night in Carnegie Hall.

They will wage the fight more vigorously to-day. Two anti-Muck factions in Brooklyn already are circulating petitions among the symphony subscribers in Brooklyn, requesting the Commissioner of Licenses to revoke the license for the concert to-night. One petition had 65 names on it last evening.

Mrs. Jay has received numerous letters and telegrams commending her for her fight on Dr. Muck. One of the tributes came yesterday from Gertrude Atherton, the novelist. Another was written on the stationery of the War Department, and bore the [illegible] fight."

From TRIBUNE
Address: New York City
Date MAR 16 1918

Dr. Muck Plays Again Without Causing a Riot

Second Concert Is Given in Brooklyn With U. S. Flags as Drapery

Again nothing happened. Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their scheduled performance last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The second concert, like that of Thursday, was played in perfect tranquillity, without a sign of the disturbance expected by the forces who have been opposing the conductor's appearance. There were few vacant seats. Four large American flags were draped on the platform.

Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers who are campaigning to wrest Dr. Muck's baton from his hand, has not yet located the "trump card" which was lost in the shuffle Thursday night. It may turn up to-day, however, in time to cause a demonstration at the Symphony Orchestra's last concert in Carnegie Hall, for Mrs. Jay has sent out an appeal for tickets dated this afternoon.

"Subscribers for the Boston Symphony concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval of Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending these tickets by messenger at once to Mrs. William Jay, 850 Park Avenue," reads the appeal.

It is intimated by persons close to Mrs. Jay that if enough seats are secured before the matinee there will be some sort of protest against Dr. Muck.

The directors of the Brooklyn Institute, who engaged Dr. Muck, would not divulge last night what was discussed Thursday at their special meeting. It is understood, however, that the meeting was called to decide upon what course of action should be adopted in regard to Dr. Muck.

"It is a pity that art and patriotism sometimes conflict," said Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute. From which it may be inferred that Dr. Muck will not be engaged for next season.

An indignation meeting at which twenty-three Grand Army posts were represented was held in Borough Hall, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon to protest against last night's concert. A resolution declaring the performance to be a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn was passed unanimously. Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 399, presided.

Upon request the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have shown Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship papers, authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. The certificate was given Dr. Muck by the town of Neuheim, in the canton of Zug, on March 4, 1881, soon after he came of age. His father, a Bavarian, had settled there, and had become naturalized when Dr. Muck was six years old.

TRIBUNE
s: New York City
MAR 15 1918

Music

Boston Symphony Concert Proves One of the Best of Season

Dr. Muck's performance was one of the best of the season. The Brahms third symphony, one of the most difficult of works to present in its true proportions, he conducted with a rhythmic sweep and a wealth of shading which lifted it into the domain of the noblest poetry. The mystical final movement, in particular, received a wonderfully eloquent reading, which was acknowledged by the audience by repeated recalls.

Two of the more recent Sibelius tone poems, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the "Night Ride and Sunrise," both extraordinarily rich in descriptive detail, formed the bulk of the second part of the programme. The former is a composite picture of that strange character of Finnish legend who was part girl, part witch and part virago. The latter is a musical panorama of familiar type. Both represent the fresh inspiration of one of the most distinguished composers of the day, and both were admirably played. The "Tristan" prelude closed the programme.

[illegible]man. [illegible] Cou[illegible] another [illegible] the [illegible] party [illegible] her [illegible] Tauscher.

Others in the audi[illegible] Whitney, Mr. and [illegible] Wilhelm Funk, Alfre[illegible] Mrs. Frank Scott G[illegible] Daniel Gregory Masq[illegible] E. Aldred, Mr. and [illegible] he Misses Mary Cro[illegible] ette A. Post, Ab[illegible] reisler, Miss Helen [illegible] ranz Arens, Wil[illegible] louis [illegible]oemmenich, Dr. F[illegible] [illegible]sch, Leo[illegible]old Auer, Otto Weil, [illegible]erbert Witherspoon, F. Morris Class, Baron and Baroness de Meyer, William C. Carl and Miss Winifred Christie.

The group of subscribers to the orchestra's programme who had opposed Doktor Muck's appearance here as a disgrace to the city had not given up the fight. At a closed meeting called by Mrs. William Jay it was agreed that every effort should be made to arouse public interest in a movement to prevent a repetition of what they characterized as "a blotch upon the otherwise proud patriotic record of [illegible] city."

Many Secret Service Men Th[illegible]

Mrs. George T. Bliss, No. 9 East [illegible] eighth street, headed a group of wo[illegible] who, refusing to use their tickets to the concert, placed them at the disposal of government investigators. Twenty-four

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 2, PART 2)

o Jarring Note n Audience at Muck Concert

ice at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie all last night and gave their symhony concert without the interruption hat had been prophesied by Mrs. Willam Jay and other subscribers who ave been conducting a campaign gainst the conductor's appearance in ew York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the anagement, was provided. About ifty uniformed men and twenty deectives were stationed along the ifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street ides of Carnegie Hall and scattered mong the audience, a few wearing vening dress. But there was no necesity for calling upon either the auhority of the law or its strong right arm.

Long before the hour set for the oncert to begin throngs crowded into he lobby, overflowing the steps and idewalk in front of the hall and makng the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his hand, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and when the anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium.

Undeterred by their failure to halt last night's concert, the subscribers led by Mrs. Jay will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, where the Boston Symphony is booked to play. Failing to halt Dr. Muck's appearance there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturady performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of Brooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be subscribers were appended.

Charles Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, refused to make any statement.

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight

Mrs. Jay did not reveal what had happened to her final "trump card."

"Of course, I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and who attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is a leading figure after what is known of his sympathies in this conflict between American ideals and German ideas of conquering the universe," she said last evening.

"What he represents is so opposite to everything which the American people have lived and fought for that I cannot believe America will tolerate him or any one who supports him now. It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and to the City of New York under the guise of art or a similar subterfuge. At any rate, our efforts will go on as usual."

Twenty-four seats which were turned over yesterday to Mrs. Jay by subscribers were given to the Secret Service men who occupied them last evening. During the day Mrs. Jay received many letters from per who assured her of their moral suppo her efforts to prevent Dr. Muck appearing in New York. Edwi Warfield, former Governor of M land; Gertrude Atherton, Mrs. erick Leavens, Mrs. Robert Ide, George T. Bliss and Mrs. Carro were among the writers.

om POST
dress New York City
ate MAR 16 1918

Having examined carefully Dr. Muc certificate of Swiss citizenship and co vinced ourselves of its authenticity, are prepared to state that never was th andante of Brahms's Third Symphon played with such vigor, control of nuance, and inspiring musicianship as it was last night.

DR. MUCK WINS OVATION; FOES' CAMPAIGN FAILS

"Star Spangled Banner" Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiastic Pitch.

NATIVITY STILL MOOTED

Federal Officials Refuse to Interfere Despite Protests by Many Women.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall last night, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing in that role on the ground that he is a German citizen and pro-German in sympathy.

The question whether Dr. Muck actually is pro-German, as Mrs. Jay and her followers allege, or is a citizen of Switzerland, as he asserts, with no interests in Germany, still remains unsettled, but the concert last night left no doubt of the fact that the anti-Muck campaign caused no falling off in attendance. All seats and standing room had been sold three-quarters of an hour before the concert began.

Dr. Muck entered the hall at 8:15 o'clock through a double line of uniformed policemen. Not a single voice protested, and five minutes later the conductor was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers.

Standing Room All Filled.

Fewer than thirty seats were vacant. And against these few protestants (if their absence is to be taken as a protest) were the standees filling every foot of space the fire laws permit and a crowded outer lobby filled with more than 200 persons insisting on their right to pay admissions.

As individuals in the crowd outside clamored for the management in their eagerness to attend Dr. Muck turned from the applauding audience and lifted his baton. Instantly the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" floated into the vast auditorium. The entire audience arose.

After the playing of the anthem the loud applause was taken up again and long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The enthusiasm in the end touched the high mark with encores six times repeated, to each of which Dr. Muck responded, smiling and bowing.

The precautions taken by the police with a view to seeing that the concert, permitted by the proper authorities, passed off without interruption or untoward incident were notably unusual. There were fifty men in uniform and any number of plain clothes men in the lobby on the Fifty-seventh street side, at the Fifty-sixth street entrance and forming a chain guard around the building.

Precautions Unnecessary.

Judging from the humor of the crowd, the remarks and the utter absence of hinimical incident, the precautions taken by the authorities at the requests of both the Carnegie Hall and the orchestra managements might have been dispensed with without fear of trouble. Only one protest was heard, and that aired in the usual tones of conversation.

Neither Dr. Muck nor Charles Ellis, manager of the orchestra, had anything to say after the concert, which closed at 10:15. Dr. Muck merely shook his head. Mr. Ellis said:

"Oh, no, there is nothing to say. It is all over."

The last suggested relief. If Mrs. Jay has her way, however, there is to be no let up in the campaign. Two petitions already are circulating in Brooklyn with a view to cancellation of the concert, [illegible] after the latter had indorsed the torpedoing of the Lusitania. Mr. Rathom asserted that this charge has never been denied.

There were several letters from Brooklyn and one from former Governor Edwin Warfield of Maryland. The latter congratulated Mrs. Jay as "a loyal, patriotic American citizen."

The orchestra is to give a matinee concert to-morrow.

Splendid Performance Given.

The programme last night comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagners "Tristan and Isolde." The playing of the national anthem preceded the programme.

Continued from First Page.

The orchestra gave a splendid performance of the Brahms symphony, the master's third. Dr. Muck is in his own kingdom when he interprets the works of Brahms. Last night his reading was significant for rare tonal clarity, a marvellous treatment of dynamics and beauty in depth of style.

The andante especially gave a rare display in delicacy of nuance and fine phrasing. At the end of the whole performance the approval shown by the audience was very warm. Dr. Muck had the orchestra stand and share in it and again he himself received several recalls.

The first of the two pieces by Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter," was first performed in this country under the composer's baton at a Norfolk, Conn., festival concert in June, 1914. It is a symphonic fantasia of descriptive character and treats of a rune in the Finnish epic "Kalevela," in which a maiden of Pohjola, which means the north country and, according to Philip Hale's programme notes, "is sometimes identified with Lapland," sits on a rainbow and is wooed by a Scandinavian deity called Wainamoinen, who with heavy heart for having failed to meet a test the maiden put to him finally rides away. It is music which is varied in type and effective.

The second piece, "Night Ride and Sunrise," a symphonic poem, is without any printed explanation. There is pictured in it a galloping horseman, whose ride is long, and the rising of the sun, loudly proclaimed. The score has some passages of striking color.

Wishes More Were Like Muck.

During the afternoon some of the opponents of Dr. Muck made a last effort to prevent his appearance by trying to prevail upon the Federal authorities to intern him. The offices of the New York Port Alien Enemy Bureau, the Department of Justice, the United States Marshal and the United States Attorney were all appealed to, but in vain.

William Wallace, Jr., Deputy Attorney-General, in charge of the first named organization, said to the complainants: "As long as a man con- [illegible] than an orchestra

NEW YORK BOWS HEAD IN SHAME AS MUCK LEADS

Kaiser's Favorite Is Permitted to Direct Symphony Concert Here.

GERMANS APPLAUD THEIR HERO LOUDLY

Close Associate Says Conductor Will Resign at End of This Season.

New York last night bowed its head in shame as it stepped down from its prominent position in the first rank of the patriotic cities of the nation.

For Father Knickerbocker, possessor of an enviable reputation for patriotic war service, was compelled to play the unwilling host to Doktor Karl Muck, music direktor extraordinary to the Kaiser, and his twenty-three enemy alien associates.

While fifty uniformed policemen and a horde of government Secret Service men looked on, the man who has been barred from half a dozen other cities because of his admitted attachment to the cause of Teutonic barbarism held undisputed sway at Carnegie Hall as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Germans Cheer Vigorously.

From the standpoint of the numerous Germans who crowded into the hall, the reception given to their hero—the Kaiser's favorite—was indeed a gratifying one. From the moment he stepped from behind the wings and into their view they vigorously applauded him. He turned and bowed three times to their uproarious greeting.

But the enthusiasm was entirely that of the Teutonic element in the house. Many of those present were significantly quiet during the applause, while thirteen empty boxes in the first tier of boxes and forty-two empty seats on the main floor were evidence of the widespread feeling against the orchestra's management for permitting the appearance of the Prussian leader in the face of the growing storm of criticism from patriotic organizations and individuals.

His Resignation Reported.

But Doktor Muck himself is credited with having succumbed to the insistent demand for his retirement, even if his financial backer, Major N. L. Higginson, insists upon his standing firm against all critics. Both Muck and his twenty aliens, it was said by a close associate of the Prussian musician, are slated to leave the orchestra at the end of the present season.

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season," a member of the orchestra and intimate friend of the Doktor said during the intermission.

"He would have done it earlier," the informant added, "but he is bound by a contract to Major Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The twenty-three enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go, also."

Plays National Anthem.

Doktor Muck, ever appreciative of dramatic climaxes, strode upon the platform after his audience had waited several minutes for his appearance—and long after other members of the orchestra had been in their seats. After the applause had subsided and he had ceased bowing he leaned over and bowed to his orchestra members. Raised his baton and they rose to play "The Star Spangled Banner," which he repeatedly had announced as "not being for an artist to play," until he was forced to do so by being barred from five works formerly on the programme of the orchestra.

The direktor perfunctorily waved his men while the orchestra played the national anthem. At the close of the number there was another burst of applause, vigorously directed at the leader and not at the patriotic air which he had refused to play in Providence, R. I.

Returning to his printed programme [illegible] the Teutonic symphonies, among which he felt more at home, Muck addressed himself to the duties of the evening. [illegible] left no opportunity for the critics to say that he was acting his part perfunctorily.

Those in the Audience.

Among those at the concert were Mrs. [illegible] Ochsenmyer, who had several [illegible] her, in another tier loge, [illegible] Mrs. F. D. Lanier, and her [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. [illegible]

Captain Hans Tauscher, [illegible] permitted to return to Ger-

MUCK LEADS CONCERT WITH POLICE GUARD

Cordon Thrown Around Carnegie Hall as Prelude to Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme

Vacant Boxes Testify to Efficacy of Mrs. William Jay's German Sympathizer Campaign

The tramp, tramp, tramp of police feet, and the tap, tap, tap of police clubs on the pavement around Carnegie Hall last night played a monotonous prelude to the concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra later gave under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck.

A cordon of more than fifty uniformed patrolmen was thrown around the auditorium an hour before the concert was scheduled to start. In the lobby, and within the hall, were perhaps thirty detectives in civilian clothes.

Among the early arrivals was a group of handsome men in stylishly cut evening clothes. They stuck close together and held frequent conferences in whispers.

"Are they some of the alleged German supporters of Dr. Muck?" asked a reporter of one of the doormen.

IN BECKER'S OLD SQUAD.

"Heavens, no!" he exclaimed. "They are the members of the Police Strong Arm Squad, formerly commanded by the late Lieutenant Becker, in disguise."

In a little while limousines were discharging fashionable parties at the Fifty-seventh street entrance. The concert-goers passed through police lanes and into the hall. There was an atmosphere of tension on all sides. At 8:10 Dr. Muck drove up in a motor car. Several policemen stepped to his side and escorted him to the stage. By this time the auditorium was packed.

In the first tier, however, there were 13 boxes vacant. They testified to the efficacy of the fight Mrs. William Jay, society woman, has made against Dr. Muck, alleged pro-German and German sympathizer, appearing.

It was learned afterwards that Mrs. Jay had turned over twenty-four seats to the Department of Justice. Mrs. George T. Bliss, another woman of society, living at No. 9 East Sixty-fourth street, gave her box to secret service men. Many of these seats were used.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony, and a constant defender of Dr. Muck, was a conspicuous figure in another box. He seldom comes to New York to hear the concerts of the orchestra, but was on hand early last night.

TENSION TIGHTENS.

The tension tightened as the orchestra men stopped the ensemble of discord incident to the "tuning up process." Then Dr. Muck appeared, bowing, with baton in hand.

He received an ovation.

Three times Dr. Muck turned and bowed to the enthusiastic throng before the hand-clapping ceased.

The silence was shattered by the crash of the opening strains of the "Star Spangled Banner," which Dr. Muck led with vigor. Another round of hand-clapping, and the orchestra proceeded with its programme.

AUDIENCE ATTENTIVE.

The first half of the orchestra's programme was a Brahms symphony. The great audience was exceedingly attentive, and alert eyes watched every wave of Dr. Muck's baton. It was plain that many of the throng had not come solely because of a love for music.

When the symphony was finished there was vociferous applause. Dr. Muck turned, smiling, and bowed his recognition. The applause continued for some time and Dr. Muck was forced to bow six times in recognition of the ovation.

At the conclusion of the concert the throng again applanded the conductor vigorously, making conclusive his triumph, at least so far as the audience which heard him last night was concerned.

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

Mrs. Jay and her cohorts, although disappointed in their failure to stop last night's concert, will fight on to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance this evening at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn.

All day yesterday those opposed to Dr. Muck besieged the police, Commissioner of Licenses and Federal authorities in a vain effort to prevent the concert last night in Carnegie Hall.

They will wage the fight more vigorously to-day. Two anti-Muck factions in Brooklyn already are circulating petitions among the symphony subscribers in Brooklyn, requesting the Commissioner of Licenses to revoke the license for the concert to-night. One petition had 65 names on it last evening.

Mrs. Jay has received numerous letters and telegrams commending her for her fight on Dr. Muck. One of the tributes came yesterday from Gertrude Atherton, the novelist. Another was written on the stationery of the War Department, and bore the [illegible] the fight."

Dr. Muck Plays Again Without Causing a Riot

Second Concert Is Given in Brooklyn With U. S. Flags as Drapery

Again nothing happened. Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their scheduled performance last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The second concert, like that of Thursday, was played in perfect tranquillity, without a sign of the disturbance expected by the forces who have been opposing the conductor's appearance. There were few vacant seats. Four large American flags were draped on the platform.

Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers who are campaigning to wrest Dr. Muck's baton from his hand, has not yet located the "trump card" which was lost in the shuffle Thursday night. It may turn up to-day, however, in time to cause a demonstration at the Symphony Orchestra's last concert in Carnegie Hall, for Mrs. Jay has sent out an appeal for tickets dated this afternoon.

"Subscribers for the Boston Symphony concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval of Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending these tickets by messenger at once to Mrs. William Jay, 850 Park Avenue," reads the appeal.

It is intimated by persons close to Mrs. Jay that if enough seats are secured before the matinee there will be some sort of protest against Dr. Muck.

The directors of the Brooklyn Institute, who engaged Dr. Muck, would not divulge last night what was discussed Thursday at their special meeting. It is understood, however, that the meeting was called to decide upon what course of action should be adopted in regard to Dr. Muck.

"It is a pity that art and patriotism sometimes conflict," said Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute. From which it may be inferred that Dr. Muck will not be engaged for next season.

An indignation meeting at which twenty-three Grand Army posts were represented was held in Borough Hall, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon to protest against last night's concert. A resolution declaring the performance to be a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn was passed unanimously. Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 399, presided.

Upon request the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have shown Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship papers, authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. The certificate was given Dr. Muck by the town of Neuheim, in the canton of Zug, on March 4, 1881, soon after he came of age. His father, a Bavarian, had settled there, and had become naturalized when Dr. Muck was six years old.

TRIBUNE
s: New York City
MAR 15 1918

Music

Boston Symphony Concer Proves One of the Best of Season

Dr. Muck's performance was one of the best of the season. The Brahms third symphony, one of the most difficult of works to present in its true proportions, he conducted with a rhythmic sweep and a wealth of shading which lifted it into the domain of the noblest poetry. The mystical final movement, in particular, received a wonderfully eloquent reading, which was acknowledged by the audience by repeated recalls.

Two of the more recent Sibelius tone poems, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the "Night Ride and Sunrise," both extraordinarily rich in descriptive detail, formed the bulk of the second part of the programme. The former is a composite picture of that strange character of Finnish legend who was part girl, part witch and part virago. The latter is a musical panorama of familiar type. Both represent the fresh inspiration of one of the most distinguished composers of the day, and both were admirably played. The "Tristan" prelude closed the programme.

man. Cou
anothe the party her Tauscher.
Others in the audie
Whitney, Mr. and
Wilhelm Funk, Alfred
Mrs. Frank Scott G
Daniel Gregory Mason
F. Aldred, Mr. and he Misses Mary Cro
ette A. Post, Ahlen reisler, Miss Helen
ranz Arens, Willi
oemmenich, Dr. Fr [illegible] rsch, Leo-old Auer, Otto Weil, [illegible] erbert Witherspoon, F. Morris Class, Baron and Baroness de Meyer, William C. Carl and Miss
Winifred Christie.

The group of subscribers to the orchestra's programme who had opposed Doktor Muck's appearance here as a disgrace to the city had not given up the fight. At a closed meeting called by Mrs. William Jay it was agreed that every effort should be made to arouse public interest in a movement to prevent a repetition of what they characterized as "a blotch upon the otherwise proud patriotic record of the city."

Many Secret Service Men There.

Mrs. George T. Bliss, No. 9 East Sixty-eighth street, headed a group of women who, refusing to use their tickets to the concert, placed them at the disposal of government investigators. Twenty-four

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 2, PART 2)

o Jarring Note n Audience at Muck Concert

ice at Carnegie Hall Have Nothing to Do but Enjoy Music

Dr. Carl Muck and his Boston Symony Orchestra appeared at Carnegie all last night and gave their symhony concert without the interruption hat had been prophesied by Mrs. Willam Jay and other subscribers who ave been conducting a campaign gainst the conductor's appearance in ew York City.

Extra police protection, asked by the anagement, was provided. About ifty uniformed men and twenty deectives were stationed along the ifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Street ides of Carnegie Hall and scattered mong the audience, a few wearing vening dress. But there was no necesity for calling upon either the authority of the law or its strong right arm.

Long before the hour set for the oncert to begin throngs crowded into he lobby, overflowing the steps and idewalk in front of the hall and making the path of the ticket holders a difficult one to traverse. All applicants for standing room were turned away, whatever seats left by the regular subscribers to the concerts having been sold days ago.

Just before 8:30 Dr. Muck walked to his place, baton in hand. Pausing to bow his acknowledgment of the applause that greeted his appearance, he raised his hand, and the orchestra sounded the first chord of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The audience arose, and when the anthem was finished they gave the leader another hearty round of applause.

Ovation for Conductor

As soon as the house was quiet the orchestra began to play the Brahms symphony, that was the first number of the evening's programme. At the conclusion of the three first movements there was the customary applause, and following the last the audience recalled Dr. Muck again and again to bow his acknowledgments, their enthusiasm amounting to an ovation.

While the police and detectives remained at their posts outside and in the hall the rest of the programme was played. Three boxes on the left were unoccupied, as were about thirty seats in the orchestra and auditorium.

Undeterred by their failure to halt last night's concert, the subscribers led by Mrs. Jay will carry their fight to Brooklyn to-morrow night, where the Boston Symphony is booked to play. Failing to halt Dr. Muck's appearance there, they will try to prevent his conducting at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Saturady performance is the last of this season's series in New York.

Two petitions, one headed by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn and the other by H. S. Gladwin, of Brooklyn, were sent to Mrs. Jay yesterday in opposition to to-night's concert. Nearly a hundred signatures of persons said to be subscribers were appended.

Charles Ellis, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, refused to make any statement.

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight

Mrs. Jay did not reveal what had happened to her final "trump card."

"Of course, I have nothing to say about any American who loves his country and who attends or supports a performance at which Dr. Muck is a leading figure after what is known of his sympathies in this conflict between American ideals and German ideas of conquering the universe," she said last evening.

"What he represents is so opposite to everything which the American people have lived and fought for that I cannot believe America will tolerate him or any one who supports him now. It is for those who love their country to take a stand which will prevent a repetition of such a disgrace to the nation and to the City o York under the guise of art or s lar subterfuge. At any rate, o forts will go on as usual."

Twenty-four seats which turned over yesterday to Mrs. J subscribers were given to the Service men who occupied then evening. During the day Mrs. Ja ceived many letters from per assured her of their moral supp her efforts to prevent Dr. Muck appearing in New York. Edw Warfield, former Governor of land; Gertrude Atherton, Mrs. erick Leavens, Mrs. Robert Ide George T. Bliss and Mrs. Car

T CONCER

Close Ne ternoon.

Boston Sym heir last con York at Car he Academy night before plauded the tion a detail out the hall ut they had directors of ich manage he day and days a disconcerts in

om POST

dress New York City

ate MAR 16 1916

Having examined carefully Dr. certificate of Swiss citizenship an vinced ourselves of its authentic are prepared to state that never w andante of Brahms's Third Symp played with named organization, said to the complainants: "As long as a man con-

DR. MUCK WINS OVATION; FOES' CAMPAIGN FAILS

"Star Spangled Banner" Stirs Big Audience to Enthusiastic Pitch.

NATIVITY STILL MOOTED

Federal Officials Refuse to Interfere Despite Protests by Many Women.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Dr. Karl Muck, played to a crowded house in Carnegie Hall last night, despite the bitter campaign of Mrs. William Jay and others to prevent the conductor from appearing in that role on the ground that he is a German citizen and pro-German in sympathy.

The question whether Dr. Muck actually is pro-German, as Mrs. Jay and her followers allege, or is a citizen of Switzerland, as he asserts, with no interests in Germany, still remains unsettled, but the concert last night left no doubt of the fact that the anti-Muck campaign caused no falling off in attendance. All seats and standing room had been sold three-quarters of an hour before the concert began.

Dr. Muck entered the hall at 8:15 o'clock through a double line of uniformed policemen. Not a single voice protested, and five minutes later the conductor was bowing to an audience that received him with handclaps and cheers.

Standing Room All Filled.

Fewer than thirty seats were vacant. And against these few protestants (if their absence is to be taken as a protest) were the standees filling every foot of space the fire laws permit and a crowded outer lobby filled with more than 200 persons insisting on their right to pay admissions.

As individuals in the crowd outside clamored for the management in their eagerness to attend Dr. Muck turned from the applauding audience and lifted his baton. Instantly the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" floated into the vast auditorium. The entire audience arose.

After the playing of the anthem the loud applause was taken up again and long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The enthusiasm in the end touched the high mark with encores six times repeated, to each of which Dr. Muck responded, smiling and bowing.

The precautions taken by the police with a view to seeing that the concert, permitted by the proper authorities, passed off without interruption or untoward incident were notably unusual. There were fifty men in uniform and any number of plain clothes men in the lobby on the Fifty-seventh street side, at the Fifty-sixth street entrance and forming a chain guard around the building.

Precautions Unnecessary.

Judging from the humor of the crowd, the remarks and the utter absence of inimical incident, the precautions taken by the authorities at the requests of both the Carnegie Hall and the orchestra managements might have been dispensed with without fear of trouble. Only one protest was heard, and that aired in the usual tones of conversation.

Neither Dr. Muck nor Charles Ellis, manager of the orchestra, had anything significant for rare tonal clarity, marvellous treatment of dynamics and beauty in depth of style.

The andante especially gave a rare display in delicacy of nuance and fine phrasing. At the end of the whole performance the approval shown by the audience was very warm. Dr. Muck had the orchestra stand and share in it and again he himself received several recalls.

The first of the two pieces by Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter," was first performed in this country under the composer's baton at a Norfolk, Conn., festival concert in June, 1914. It is a symphonic fantasia of descriptive character and treats of a rune in the Finnish epic "Kalevela," in which a maiden of Pohjola, which means the north country and, according to Philip Hale's programme notes, "is sometimes identified with Lapland," sits on a rainbow and is wooed by a Scandinavian deity called Wainamoinen, who with heavy heart for having failed to meet a test the maiden put to him finally rides away. It is music which is varied in type and effective.

The second piece, "Night Ride and Sunrise," a symphonic poem, is without any printed explanation. There is pictured in it a galloping horseman, whose ride is long, and the rising of the sun, loudly proclaimed. The score has some passages of striking color.

Wishes More Were Like Muck.

During the afternoon some of the opponents of Dr. Muck made a last effort to prevent his appearance by trying to prevail upon the Federal authorities to intern him. The offices of the New York Port Alien Enemy Bureau, the Department of Justice, the United States Marshal and the United States Attorney were all appealed to, but in vain.

William Wallace, Jr., Deputy Attorney-General, in charge of the first named organization, said to the complainants: "As long as a man conducts nothing worse than an orchestra I can see no reason for his internment. I wish that more of our Germans were musicians. It might serve to keep a lot of them out of mischief."

One Federal official said that a visitor "with blood in her eye," had demanded Dr. Muck's immediate arrest, and had waxed highly indignant when asked to furnish a reason.

Marshal McCarthy was visited by a woman who told him that "a very dear friend" had told her that she had heard Dr. Muck at a recent concert make a contemptuous remark to his concertmeister about his American audience. She refused to furnish the name of the friend who had heard the remark.

In fact so numerous were the complaints against the distinguished conductor, and of such an untangible nature, that there was a general disposition in all of the Federal offices to become extremely busy when visitors would mention Dr. Muck's name.

ORITUARIES

HEAD IN SHAME AS MUCK LEADS

Kaiser's Favorite Is Permitted to Direct Symphony Concert Here.

GERMANS APPLAUD THEIR HERO LOUDLY

Close Associate Says Conductor Will Resign at End of This Season.

New York last night bowed its head in shame as it stepped down from its proud position in the first rank of the patriotic cities of the nation.

For Father Knickerbocker, possessor of an enviable reputation for patriotic war service, was compelled to play the unwilling host to Doktor Karl Muck, music direktor extraordinary to the Kaiser, and his twenty-three enemy alien associates.

While fifty uniformed policemen and a horde of government Secret Service men looked on, the man who has been barred from half a dozen other cities because of his admitted attachment to the cause of Teutonic barbarism held undisputed sway at Carnegie Hall as the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Germans Cheer Vigorously.

From the standpoint of the numerous Germans who crowded into the hall, the reception given to their hero—the Kaiser's favorite—was indeed a gratifying one. From the moment he stepped from behind the wings and into their view they vigorously applauded him. He turned and bowed three times to their uproarious greeting.

But the enthusiasm was entirely that of the Teutonic element in the house. Many of those present were significantly quiet during the applause, while thirteen empty boxes in the first tier of boxes and forty-two empty seats on the main floor were evidence of the widespread feeling against the orchestra's management for permitting the appearance of the Prussian leader in the face of the growing storm of criticism from patriotic organizations and individuals.

His Resignation Reported.

But Doktor Muck himself is credited with having succumbed to the insistent demand for his retirement, even if his financial backer, Major N. L. Higginson, insists upon his standing firm against all critics. Both Muck and his enemy aliens, it was said by a close associate of the Prussian musician, are slated to leave the orchestra at the end of the present season.

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season," a member of the orchestra and intimate friend of the Doktor said during the intermission.

"He would have done it earlier," the informant added, "but he is bound by a contract to Major Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The twenty-three enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go, also."

Plays National Anthem.

Doktor Muck, ever appreciative of dramatic climaxes, strode upon the platform er his audience had waited several mins for his appearance—and long after er members of the orchestra had been eir seats. After the applause had subd and he had ceased bowing he leaned and bowed to his orchestra members. d his baton and they rose to play Star Spangled Banner," which he atedly had announced as "not being or an artist to play," until he was d to do so by being barred from five s formerly on the programme of the estra.

e direktor perfunctorily waved his while the orchestra played the nal anthem. At the close of the numhere was another burst of applause, ously directed at the leader and not he patriotic air which he had refused ay in Proyidence, R. I.

n, returning to his printed programme he Teutonic symphonies, among on he felt more at home. Muck adhimself to the duties of the evenurt left no opportunity for the critat he was acting his part perfty.

hose in the Audience.

those at the concert were Mrs. ntermyer, who had several r her, in another tier loge, nes F. D. Lanier, and her d Mr. and Mrs. Walter T.

Captain Hans Tauscher, ermitted to return to Ger-

MUCK LEADS CONCERT WITH POLICE GUARD

Cordon Thrown Around Carnegie Hall as Prelude to Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme

Vacant Boxes Testify to Efficacy of Mrs. William Jay's German Sympathizer Campaign

The tramp, tramp, tramp of police feet, and the tap, tap, tap of police clubs on the pavement around Carnegie Hall last night played a monotonous prelude to the concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra later gave under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck.

A cordon of more than fifty uniformed patrolmen was thrown around the auditorium an hour before the concert was scheduled to start. In the lobby, and within the hall, were perhaps thirty detectives in civilian clothes.

Among the early arrivals was a group of handsome men in stylishly cut evening clothes. They stuck close together and held frequent conferences in whispers.

"Are they some of the alleged German supporters of Dr. Muck?" asked a reporter of one of the doormen.

IN BECKER'S OLD SQUAD.

"Heavens, no!" he exclaimed. "They are the members of the Police Strong Arm Squad, formerly commanded by the late Lieutenant Becker, in disguise."

In a little while limousines were discharging fashionable parties at the Fifty-seventh street entrance. The concert-goers passed through police lanes and into the hall. There was an atmosphere of tension on all sides. At 8:10 Dr. Muck drove up in a motor car. Several policemen stepped to his side and escorted him to the stage. By this time the auditorium was packed.

In the first tier, however, there were 13 boxes vacant. They testified to the efficacy of the fight Mrs. William Jay, society woman, has made against Dr. Muck, alleged pro-German and German sympathizer, appearing.

It was learned afterwards that Mrs. Jay had turned over twenty-four seats to the Department of Justice. Mrs. George T. Bliss, another woman of society, living at No. 9 East Sixty-fourth street, gave her box to secret service men. Many of these seats were used.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony, and a constant defender of Dr. Muck, was a conspicuous figure in another box. He seldom comes to New York to hear the concerts of the orchestra, but was on hand early last night.

TENSION TIGHTENS.

The tension tightened as the orchestra men stopped the ensemble of discord incident to the "tuning up process." Then Dr. Muck appeared, bowing, with baton in hand.

He received an ovation.

Three times Dr. Muck turned and bowed to the enthusiastic throng before the hand-clapping ceased.

The silence was shattered by the crash of the opening strains of the "Star Spangled Banner," which Dr. Muck led with vigor. Another round of hand-clapping, and the orchestra proceeded with its programme.

AUDIENCE ATTENTIVE.

The first half of the orchestra's programme was a Brahms symphony. The great audience was exceedingly attentive, and alert eyes watched every wave of Dr. Muck's baton. It was plain that many of the throng had not come solely because of a love for music.

When the symphony was finished there was vociferous applause. Dr. Muck turned, smiling, and bowed his recognition. The applause continued for some time and Dr. Muck was forced to bow six times in recognition of the ovation.

At the conclusion of the concert the throng again applanded the conductor vigorously, making conclusive his triumph, at least so far as the audience which heard him last night was concerned.

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

Mrs. Jay and her cohorts, although disappointed in their failure to stop last night's concert, will fight on to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance this evening at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn.

All day yesterday those opposed to Dr. Muck besieged the police, Commissioner of Licenses and Federal authorities in a vain effort to prevent the concert last night in Carnegie Hall.

They will wage the fight more vigorously to-day. Two anti-Muck factions in Brooklyn already are circulating petitions among the symphony subscribers in Brooklyn, requesting the Commissioner of Licenses to revoke the license for the concert to-night. One petition had 65 names on it last evening.

Mrs. Jay has received numerous letters and telegrams commending her for her fight on Dr. Muck. One of the tributes came yesterday from Gertrude Atherton, the novelist. Another was written on the stationery of the War Department, and bore the

the fight."

Again Without Causing a Riot

Second Concert Is Given in Brooklyn With U. S. Flags as Drapery

Again nothing happened. Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Symphony Orchestra gave their scheduled performance last evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The second concert, like that of Thursday, was played in perfect tranquillity, without a sign of the disturbance expected by the forces who have been opposing the conductor's appearance. There were few vacant seats. Four large American flags were draped on the platform.

Mrs. William Jay, leader of the subscribers who are campaigning to wrest Dr. Muck's baton from his hand, has not yet located the "trump card" which was lost in the shuffle Thursday night. It may turn up to-day, however, in time to cause a demonstration at the Symphony Orchestra's last concert in Carnegie Hall, for Mrs. Jay has sent out an appeal for tickets dated this afternoon.

"Subscribers for the Boston Symphony concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval of Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending these tickets by messenger at once to Mrs. William Jay, 850 Park Avenue," reads the appeal.

It is intimated by persons close to Mrs. Jay that if enough seats are secured before the matinee there will be some sort of protest against Dr. Muck.

The directors of the Brooklyn Institute, who engaged Dr. Muck, would not divulge last night what was discussed Thursday at their special meeting. It is understood, however, that the meeting was called to decide upon what course of action should be adopted in regard to Dr. Muck.

"It is a pity that art and patriotism sometimes conflict," said Charles D. Atkins, director of the institute. From which it may be inferred that Dr. Muck will not be engaged for next season.

An indignation meeting at which twenty-three Grand Army posts were represented was held in Borough Hall, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon to protest against last night's concert. A resolution declaring the performance to be a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn was passed unanimously. Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 399, presided.

Upon request the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have shown Dr. Muck's Swiss citizenship papers, authenticated June 12, 1917, by P. Ritter, then the Swiss Minister at Washington. The certificate was given Dr. Muck by the town of Neuheim, in the canton of Zug, on March 4, 1881, soon after he came of age. His father, a Bavarian, had settled there, and had become naturalized when Dr. Muck was six years old.

TRIBUNE

New York City

MAR 15 1918

Music

Boston Symphony Concer Proves One of the Best of Season

Dr. Muck's performance was one of the best of the season. The Brahms third symphony, one of the most difficult of works to present in its true proportions, he conducted with a rhythmic sweep and a wealth of shading which lifted it into the domain of the noblest poetry. The mystical final movement, in particular, received a wonderfully eloquent reading, which was acknowledged by the audience by repeated recalls.

Two of the more recent Sibelius tone poems, "Pohjola's Daughter" and the "Night Ride and Sunrise," both extraordinarily rich in descriptive detail, formed the bulk of the second part of the programme. The former is a composite picture of that strange character of Finnish legend who was part girl, part witch and part virago. The latter is a musical panorama of familiar type. Both represent the fresh inspiration of one of the most distinguished composers of the day, and both were admirably played. The "Tristan" prelude closed the programme.

man. Cou
anothe the party
Tauscher. her

Others in the audie
Whitney, Mr. and
Wilhelm Funk, Alfred
Mrs. Frank Scott G
Daniel Gregory Masq
F. Aldred, Mr. and
he Misses Mary Cro
ette A. Post, Abler
reisler, Miss Helen
ranz Arens, Willi
oemmenich, Dr. F old Auer, Otto Weil, erbert Witherspoon, F. Morris Class, Baron and Baroness de Meyer, William C. Carl and Miss Winifred Christie.

louis
sch, Leo-

The group of subscribers to the orchestra's programme who had opposed Doktor Muck's appearance here as a disgrace to the city had not given up the fight. At a closed meeting called by Mrs. William Jay it was agreed that every effort should be made to arouse public interest in a movement to prevent a repetition of what they characterized as "a blotch upon the otherwise proud patriotic record of the city."

Many Secret Service Men There.

Mrs. George T. Bliss, No. 9 East sixty-eighth street, headed a group of women who, refusing to use their tickets to the concert, placed them at the disposal of government investigators. Twenty-four

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 2, PART 2)

TELEGRAM
New York City.
MAR 15 1918

Defying Dr. Muck Insult, Soldier's Widow Pictures Vigorous Tactics Abroad

Mrs. Ida Mankin Found Other Parts of World Less Gentle with Arrogant Huns.

HAS PICTURE TO SHOW WHAT HAPPENED IN DURBAN.

Mrs. Ida Mankin, a soldier's daughter and a soldier's widow, has written to the EVENING TELEGRAM a vigorous protest against the apathy of New York toward the Doktor Karl Muck incident. Just returned from a trip around the world, she tells of the vigorous tactics pursued in other quarters of the globe in connection with Hun arrogance. The accompanying picture is the evidence she offers to show the hostility of the residents of Durban, South Africa, toward Prussian inhabitants after the sinking of the Lusitania. Her letter follows:—

"Why should loyal American citizens and patriotic societies have to rally to Mrs. William Jay's support to suppress Dr. Karl Muck from appearing in New York? Is he immune? Can't he be interned the same as any other enemy? It is due American soldiers at the front that enemies at home should be suppressed. Other countries hunt them out, bar them from all business, put a ban on all German goods and even arrest merchants having such goods in their possession.

"As I have recently returned from a trip around the world, and having kept myself posted on events in Australia and New Zealand and South Africa, am enclosing a snapshot of a large German business place in Durban, South Africa, which is now in ruins, wrecked by citizens after the sinking of the Lusitania. There are many such ruins to be seen in Durban and other African cities. While we were in Pietermaritzburg, where the Germans are interned, there was a revolt of prisoners, but, needless to tell you, they were promptly dealt with.

"I agree with Dr. Davis, the Kaiser's dentist, that it is surprising how much liberty is allowed Germans in this country. Perhaps it would encourage the Sammies if they knew the Karl Mucks were curbed in their actions, and I am voicing the sentiment of the masses when I assert that our "Star Spangled Banner" is sweeter music to our American ears than all the Kaiser-Muck music that can be invented.

"Why should we have to stand any Muck arrogance? Those that enjoy such performances might take a trip to Berlin and see how they would enjoy Hun Kultur at close range. It would make better Americans of them were they compelled to hear the insults that almost make us hate the very name of German.

"Who is Major Higginson, and why does the U. S. A. grant him any favor that he can ignore our sentiments and insult our intelligence to suit himself? If this Muck man took a trip through Australia he wouldn't dare look like a German, let alone boasting he was one, nor would he refuse to play "God Save the King." In South Africa it would be no better. He probably would have to keep under cover, so it is up to us to preserve the honor of our country by taking care of all the Karl Mucks that come our way. Let him be interned like any other menace to our safety and comfort. We owe it to the boys at the front.

"This poorly expresses the opinion of an old-fashioned loyal American. Being sixty years old, maybe I am behind the modern times. But, then, I am a soldier's daughter and a soldier's widow, and perhaps I see things old style. Anyhow, 'safety first.'

"Mrs. IDA MANKIN.

"New York."

This picture shows Mrs. Ida Mankin standing in front of a German owned building in Durban, South Africa, wrecked by infuriated residents after the sinking of the Lusitania.

TELEGRAM
New York City.
MAR 15 1918

HUN SYMPATHIZERS HEAR MUCK CONCERT

Kaiser's Favorite Music Director Conducts Orchestra in Carnegie Hall and Is Received with "Hochs"—Patriots to Seek Change in Laws.

Backed by Germans, German sympathizers and long haired and flowing tied musical fanatics Dr. Karl Muck, the Kaiser's favorite musical director, insulted the patriotism of New York city by leading his orchestra in a concert at Carnegie Hall as he and his financial backer, Major N. L. Higginson, boasted they would. Mrs. William Jay and her patriotic supporters who put up a valiant fight to avert the disgrace from the city, found that no law existed of which they could avail themselves to stop the concert.

They lost their first encounter against the Muck-Higginson brand of German propaganda, but they are determined to see if the law cannot be changed so as to prevent a recurrence of the Carnegie Hall Prussian symposium.

Thirteen boxes were empty in the first tier and on the main floor forty-two seats were upoccupied. Outs ide of this the audience of German and German lovers, with the exception of the police and detectives present to protect the sacred person of the Royal Prussian Music Director, applauded Dr. Muck and the twenty-two enemy aliens with him to the echo.

Besides the fifty plain clothes policemen scattered through the audience of German and pro-Germans were nearly 100 agents of the Department of Justice and Secret Service men.

Acknowledges "Hochs."

But there was little use for them, for the patriots of the city were not present. They had come valiantly to the support of Mrs. Jay and refused to countenance by their presence the flaunting of Prussian Kultur in the largest city of the United States. Their seats, bought in advance because many of them are regular subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts, were turned over to the local and federal officials to use as they saw fit.

Dr. Muck made a characteristic appearance on the stage after the other members of the orchestra and when quiet prevailed in the house.

Tumultuous applause, cheers and whispereh "Hochs" greeted the Kaiser's Own, and he bowed again and again in acknowledging the fact that so many pro-Germans could be found in the leading city of America.

When the cheering and "Hoching" ceased Dr. Muck took his place in the centre of the orchestra and, raising his baton, started playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

This was greeted with renewed applause from the audience and here and there one could hear the Muck sympathizers whisper:—"Wasn't it nice of him to play that, and he played it so well?"

"Doktor Muck Will Resign."

Then came the printed part of the programme. Hungarian, Austrian, Prussian harmonies swelled in teutonic volume and depth of tone through the hall, and with each succeeding number both the royal Prussian music director and his highly artistic audience became more and more thrilled with delight at the transportation of a little of the atmosphere of the Fatherland into New York.

Finally the Prussian rhapsody was over, but when the audience had left to wander in their dreams through the Rhine country one of the members of the orchestra who would not let his name be used said:—

"Doktor Karl Muck will resign his position as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the close of the present season. He would have done it earlier, but he is bound by a contract to Major Higginson. He did not want him to go. Next season, however, we will be without the Doktor. An American, or perhaps a friendly alien, will be selected to take his place. Dr. Muck probably will go back to Europe. The twenty-three enemy alien members of the orchestra, in all probability, will go also."

WORLD
ess: New York City
MAR 15

MUCK LEADS BAND AND ALL SURVIVE

Twenty-Five Policemen at Carnegie Hall Symphony Concert, but There Is No Disturbance to Quell.

THEY FADE AWAY WHEN THEY HEAR BRAHMS MUSIC.

"Star Spangled Banner" Is Played—Large Part of the Audience Plainly Is German.

The so-called Dr. Muck peril expected at Carnegie Hall last night at the ninth concert given by the Boston Symphony Society was lost in the heavy atmosphere surrounding the hall.

Twenty-five policemen, in command of Capt. Sackett of the West 47th Street Station, were at the front and rear entrances of the hall, with a few inside. Several plain clothes men hovered about. Borough Inspector John O'Brien was also on hand.

The police had little to do except listen—for a few moments—to what Mr. Brahms had to say in his Third Symphony. As this was somewhat different from the offerings of John McCormack, there was soon an exodus of bluecoats.

The only trouble appeared to be difficulty in buying tickets. Many persons were turned away. Perhaps as an indication of protest against Dr. Muck's appearance three boxes in the first tier were vacant.

Absentees Not Known.

Charles Ellis, manager of the orchestra, said he did not know who the regular occupants were, as his list of boxholders was in Boston. There were a few empty seats on the main floor, but this is the case at every concert.

Those present did not appear to be in sympathy with the efforts of the few who for a week have been trying to get Major Higginson, sponsor for the orchestra, to remove Dr. Muck from the conductorship, or requested License Commissioner J. F. Gilchrist to revoke the license of the hall.

When Dr. Muck first came out on the stage the auditors gave him a rousing welcome and they applauded long and lustily after "The Star Spangled Banner." Throughout the programme there was more than the customary amount of applause for the conductor, some of it apparently a little forced and prolonged by what seemed to be the German portion of the audience—a good-sized portion.

The orchestra, after the symphony, stood in acknowledgment. Major Higginson was discovered as he was leaving the hall and was also applauded. The Major only walked a bit more hurriedly and did not acknowledge. Nor did he comment on the situation. Dr. Muck also was silent.

Mr. Ellis said the regular concert would be given in Brooklyn to-day and the final concert of the season here in Carnegie Hall to-morrow.

No Power to Revoke License.

Regarding the concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music to-day, Commissioner Gilchrist said last night that, although he had been petitioned to revoke the license, he has no power to do so. The seats are all taken for the Brooklyn concert, as they are for to-morrow's Carnegie Hall affair, and Mr. Ellis says there are 300 on the waiting list who would like a chance to take up dropped subscriptions.

Besides the Brahms symphony, last night's programme had two numbers by Sibelius and Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" prelude. They were done with great care and delicacy, and the climax in the Wagner number was built up superbly.

Richard Fletcher, representing Mrs. William Jay, said last night that the campaign against Dr. Muck would be continued.

"We'll get him out if it takes two years," he added. "We'll prove what we say is right."

Mr. Fletcher said Mrs. Jay had received from Commssioner Gilchrist copies of the protests he had received against the appearane of Dr. Muck. There were seventy names in all.

EVENING GLOBE
New York City

Music.

Muck Leads Boston Band Again —Other Music.

In spite of all that was undertaken with a view to preventing Dr. Muck from conducting a concert of the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last evening, the concert took place and he conducted it. The hall was well guarded by policemen against the possibility of disturbance, and no disturbance was visible or audible beyond an ineffectual hiss or two that was lost immediately in the tempest of applause that greeted the conductor.

Dr. Muck was more than ten minutes late in appearing on the platform. The audience by that time nearly filled the body of the house, though some ten boxes stood empty. Only four, however, remained empty throughout the concert. Ordinarily, of course, every seat at a local concert of this orchestra is filled. The few vacancies on the floor last night and the four persistently empty boxes were therefore more conspicuous than they would be at most concerts.

The entrance of Dr. Muck was the sign for resounding and long continued applause. Then the audience rose while he conducted a rather perfunctory-sounding performance of the "Star-Spangled Banner." Again applause loud and long. Then the audience settled itself for the programme. But at each interval of the Brahms symphony, which stood first, it demonstrated its approval with uncommon emphasis, and at the end of the work recalled Dr. Muck many times. As usual with him in the event of such an ovation he summoned the players to rise and acknowledge the applause with him. At the end of the programme the audience was not in such a hurry to disperse that many of its members could not wait to insure the conductor several further recalls.

The Brahms symphony, the glorious F major symphony, less favored this season by conductors hereabouts than its successor in E minor, received under the direction of Dr. Muck a performance truly glorious, such a performance as has given the band from Boston, and its present conductor their great renown. The symphony made the first part of the programme. The second consisted of two pieces by the Finn Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter," a symphonic fantasia, and "Night Ride and Sunrise," a symphonic poem, and the prelude to "Tristan und Isolde."

I do not recall a previous performance of either of the Sibelius pieces in New York. "Pohjola's Daughter" is distinctly of the greater Sibelius, the Sibelius of "The Swan of Tuonela," some of the symphonies, the violin concerto. It is wild, picturesque, lyrical, vividly descriptive of the ride of the wounded and disappointed Vainamoinen, one of the heroes of the Finnish epic "Kalevela," who sought to woo Louhi's daughter, but could not meet the requirements of the exacting and capricious maiden.

The other ride ("Night Ride and Sunrise") is in the main a dreary affair. It starts promisingly, with the suggestion of adventure to come in the bleak northern night, but then, though night and ride are long, nothing happens until sunrise, which is accomplished with a great deal of noise and no imaginative novelty. Both compositions were played superbly, and so, needless to say, was the prelude to "Tristan und Isolde."

The last Carnegie Hall concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for this season is announced for to-morrow afternoon, with Mozart's symphony in E flat and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" suite as the programme.

PITTS SANBORN.

EVENING JOURNAL
New York.
MAR 15 1918

STAR SPANGLED BANNER PLAYED BY DR. MUCK IN N.Y.

"The Star Spangled Banner" was played by Dr. Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the beginning of their concert in Carnegie Hall. Many police guarded the hall and there was a big sprinkling of detectives in the crowd which filled the house, owing to suggestions of trouble arising over Dr. Muck's previous difficulties regarding playing the national anthem and the question of his German citizenship.

A large crowd gathered outside the hall demanding admission, but the supply of tickets had been exhausted.

TELEGRAM
New York City.
MAR

WHILE DR. MUCK LED.

Dr. Muck led the Boston Symphon Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night.

Mothers, wives, sisters and other relatives sat in homes from which the light had gone forever, mourning brave hearts under the sod on French battlefields, victims of Prussian hate and greed.

But Dr. Muck, of Darmstadt, and his band mostly of alien Germans, entertained a gathering of unthinking idlers and un-American persons with music.

Mayor Hylan breathing fire and slaughter over the morals of an opera house and a classic dancer was silent touching this foreign attack on the patriotic sentiment of the Empire City. His license department disclaimed any jurisdiction. Mr. Higginson, of Boston, and Carnegie Hall are of more consequence than patriotic sentiment.

The Department of Justice is reported to have given Mr. Higginson's German band a clean bill of health.

Hearts breaking over their dead are in no mood to either listen to or hear of harmonies rendered by alien enemies and lest any "be stirred to a sudden flood of mutiny" there was a sufficient force of police on hand to prevent any disturbance.

Nero fiddled while Rome burned. Let's have a picture of Muck cheerfully conducting—under police protection—while hearts were breaking.

Somewhere in France there are American soldiers who have been condemned to death. They are sentries who slept on post. Tired with the heat and burden of battle and long vigils they were overcome with drowsiness. The offense in military life is unpardonable.

But we say forgive them. Or if they pay the penalty let some others do the same.

Our sentinels here are sleeping.

STANDARD UNION
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MUCK NOT COMING BACK TO BROOKLYN

Institute Invites Boston Symphony If It Can Substitute Another Leader.

TRUSTEES GIVE OUT TEXT.

Action Held Back Until Concert Series Was Over.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is invited to come to Brooklyn again, but not Dr. Karl Muck, its director.

Brooklyn Institute trustees to-day gave out the text of the following resolution, passed at a meeting Thursday night, but withheld from publication until after last night's concert:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the [illegible] has already sent a letter

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
Date March 15

BROOKLYN ACTS TO BAR ITS DOORS TO DOKTOR MUCK

Institute Directors to Sacrifice "Art" in Conflict with Patriotism.

Brooklyn last night became a candidate for an honorary position in the list of patriotic American cities which have barred their doors against Doktor Karl Muck, most prominent of enemy aliens in the United States as yet uninterned and head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

That the Brooklyn Institute, which heretofore has contracted for the appearance of the Muck orchestra in Brooklyn each season, had "taken definite action which was construed as the farewell of in his case for next season" became known last evening while the Prussian direktor was waving his baton at the final concert of the orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Just what the action had been none of the trustees would reveal. They said that they had bound themselves not to make public a statement of their action concerning Doktor Muck until this morning. Meanwhile it was announced significantly that when art and patriotism conflicted it was time to sacrifice art—the Brooklyn organization to the favorite of the Kaiser.

Many Vacant Seats in House.

Doktor Muck bid his adieus to Brooklyn before a house that was studded with vacant seats. Although the management of the Academy of Music took pains to make it known that every seat had been sold and that there were a few "standees" in the rear of the auditorium, it was obvious that something out of the ordinary had prevented regular subscribers to the concerts from occupying their accustomed places, for which they had paid at the beginning of the season.

Doktor Muck was received with vigorous applause when he made his initial appearance, but it was of brief duration. He stood beneath two spreading American flags and waved his baton to the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" and at its close bowed a response to those who again applauded him.

Half a dozen uniformed policemen had been stationed about the doors of the Academy of Music and numerous detectives were to be seen about the rear of the house with the opening of the concert. But they had nothing to do, as the audience appeared more curious to see Muck than to take active part in a demonstration for or against him.

Fight Against Him Continued.

Meanwhile there were evidences that the fight against him had not been dropped by the subscribers to the New York concerts of the Boston orchestra. Patriotic men and women who having seats to this afternoon's concert at Carnegie Hall, but who would remain away because of the protest against Muck were called upon to contribute their tickets to a committee investigating the Prussian direktor.

In an appeal published in the advertising columns of the HERALD and other morning newspapers to-day the committee said:—

AN APPEAL.

Subscribers for the Boston Symphony Concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval to Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending their tickets at once to Mrs. William Jay, No. 850 Park avenue.

What the protesting subscribers intend to do with the tickets thus obtained did not become known. Neither Mrs. Jay nor any of her supporters would make known their intentions other than to repeat their assertions that they would not tolerate any breach of the peace or objectionable demonstration against the Prussian.

Defence Society Backs Crusade.

When told of the eleventh hour assertions of Doktor Muck's associates that he possessed naturalization papers proving him to be a citizen of Switzerland, neither Mrs. Jay nor any of her supporters would believe that the documents were genuine. They said that such papers would have been produced long ago, when Muck first was accused of undue friendliness for the enemies of this nation, had they been genuine.

In a letter to the HERALD William Guggenheim, chairman of the American Defence Society, yesterday said:—

"The NEW YORK HERALD is right when it states that 'New York bows its head in shame as Muck leads.'

"As chairman of the New York Vigilance Committee of the American Defence Society, I desire to say that we gave the Muck matter serious thought. We believe that, on account of his utterances and his entire attitude, Dr. Muck should be interned. Naturally such a procedure is in the hands of the federal authorities, and our society cannot do more than suggest internment and aggressively work for its enforcement.

"In this connection I wish to state that last February our committee took active steps to prevent the holding of several meetings of the People's Council of Workmen. Touching on this matter in a recent report to our Board of Trustees, I stated as follows:—

"'Permitting those to go unpunished who make utterances of the kind that were indulged in does not reflect credit upon the community, as it indicates too great a tolerance and therefore an unconscious and likely unintentional support of sedition and disloyalty.'"

Representatives of twenty-three posts of the Grand Army of the Republic at a meeting at the Borough Hall, in Brooklyn

CITIZEN
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

POLICE GUARD AT THE ACADEMY

To Prevent Any Disturbance at Concert.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA TO APPEAR TO-NIGHT

Dr. Karl Muck Will Conduct—Swiss Citizenship Papers Shown—Petitions Against the Concert Receive Many Signatures.

The Academy of Music will be patrolled by several policemen and detectives this evening at the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Society, under the direction of Karl Muck. The concert will be given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society, according to arrangements made early in the season.

Deputy Police Commissioner John Leach declared to-day that the police did not expect any trouble, but, nevertheless, there would be a number of uniformed policemen outside the building and several detectives inside occupying seats. This arrangement was the result of a conference between the Deputy Commissioner and Borough Inspector Thomas H. Murphy.

Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, when asked this morning if there had been a flow of letters protesting against the holding of the concert, said that he had not received any complaints until this morning, when he received a letter from a woman in Brooklyn, who had bought a seat for the concert.

Leach said this morning that he had unofficially received information that a petition was being circulated in the borough protesting against the affair, but it had not been brought to his attention.

The petitions of protest referred to by Commissioner Leach are being circulated by Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, and by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn, and both have obtained many signatures of prominent Brooklyn residents.

Dr. Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night. Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey, of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plainclothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett, of the West Forty-seventh street station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no others. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Dr. Muck was greeted with applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play, "The Star Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck conducted his concert as if nothing had occurred.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of 6 years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age.

To-night the orchestra will play in Brooklyn, as stated, where subscription audience will fill the Academy and no seats or admissions will be sold. To-morrow a third audience will hear at Carnegie Hall the last Boston Symphony concert in New York this season.

From POST
Address New York City

MRS. JAY STILL AGAINST MUCK.

Attempt to Prevent Symphony Concert in Brooklyn To-night.

Mrs. William Jay continued her fight against Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to-day by attempting to stop the concert set for to-night in the Academy of Music.

When Mrs. Jay was asked about Dr. Muck proving his Swiss citizenship she said, "I have profound respect for a pro-American German and profound contempt for a pro-German Swiss. I believe that the American people will think that a man should be judged by the feelings in his heart, and not by the papers in his pockets."

TELEGRAM
ess: New York City.
MAR 15 1918

Again a New York audience permitted itself to listen to Dr. Karl Muck, the friend and confidant of the Kaiser, presenting an all-German programme in Carnegie Hall last night.

Are we at war with Germany?

STANDARD UNION
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

VETERANS PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK

"Disgrace to Citizens of Brooklyn," Say G. A. R. Representatives.

POLICE GUARD FOR CONCERT

Bluecoats Outside Academy and Plainclothesmen In.

Representatives of twenty-three G. A. R. Posts in Brooklyn met at Borough Hall at noon to-day to protest against permitting Dr. Karl Muck to act as conductor of the Symphony Concert scheduled for to-night at the Academy of Music. Seventeen veterans who attended the meeting signed the following resolution:

"We unanimously protest against Dr. Karl Muck acting as conductor at the Academy of Music. We consider it a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn."

Commander U. P. Eshleman, of Mackenzie Post, presided at the meeting. The signers of the resolution were:

Augustus P. Ticknor, U. P. Eshleman, Edward A. Dubey, Charles H. Ramsden, Harry A. Nimpain, John H. Tully, Dr. R. Estes, Walter Scott, H. C. Draper, Charles H. Hawxhurst, R. S. Maddren, Joseph F. Ludcam, Charles G. Meyers, William A. Hooton, A. J. Jensen, Root A. Harrisson and William P. Griffith.

Uniformed policemen on the outside and plain clothes men on the inside will stand guard at the Academy to-night.

Deputy Commissioner Leach said to-day that with one exception he had received no protest against Muck's appearance. The exception was from a woman subscriber who said her seat would be vacant.

"I anticipate no trouble," said Mr. Leach to-day, "but I am going to have the police there just the same."

"I realize that no legal action can prevent Muck's appearance in Brooklyn to-night, but I hope that popular opinion will act where the law is tied," said Mrs. William Jay, who led the unsuccessful fight to bar Dr. Muck in Manhattan last night. She told of having seen 140 Brooklyn signatures to the petitions seeking to prevent his appearance.

POST
ess New York City

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck, though he was for years one of the Wagner conductors at Bayreuth, is really a born interpreter of Brahms, as his fine reading of that composer's third symphony in Carnegie Hall last night proved. Two Finnish numbers on the programme were comparative novelties. "Pohjola's Daughter" was conducted by the composer in Norfolk in 1914; it i a tone poem of a high order of beauty not only of theme, but of treatment an color. "Night Ride and Sunrise" is n so good, but is of interest nevertheles The prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" clos the programme. Strange to say, the was an element of novelty about this, to for it was played without the "Liebesto and with the ending that Wagner a ranged for a concert in Paris in 18 five years before "Tristan and Isol had its first performance in Munich Seidl once played it at Brighton Be at a concert consisting solely of W ner's overtures and preludes; but performances in this form have been rare. The ending is practically nothing but an adaptation of the end of the Liebestod, transposed from B to A, and differently orchestrated.

Dr. Muck was much applauded when he stepped on the platform. There was no disturbance, or even hint of it.

SUN
New York City.
MAR 15 1918

The word "muck" means in provincial English to work hard, to toil; and there can be no doubt that Dr. Muck works hard at his artistic calling under existing conditions.

EVENING MAIL
ess: New York City
MAR 15 1918

23 G. A. R. POSTS ASSAIL DR. MUCK

Brooklyn Organizations Protest Against Concert—Police to Guard.

Representatives of twenty-three Grand Army posts met to-day in Brooklyn at Borough Hall and adopted a resolution protesting against Dr. Karl Muck's being permitted to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert this evening in the Academy of Music, that borough.

Hugh P. Eshleman, commander of McKenzie Post G. A. R., presided. The resolution read: "We unanimously protest against Dr. Muck's acting as conductor at the Academy of Music. We consider it a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn."

Deputy Police Commissioner Leach to-day conferred with Borough Inspector Murphy, after which it was announced that in addition to having uniformed policemen and plainclothes men inside the Academy of Music auditorium to-night, police reserves would be mobilized at strategic points. No disturbance is expected, however.

The concert is one of a series subscribed for by members of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Science and the Philharmonic Society. One of the concerts in the series was given last November and was a decided success.

Charles B. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute, said to-day the only protest he had received had come from a woman subscriber whose name he would not divulge. He added he had heard that a petition of protest had been in circulation in Brooklyn for two or three days, but he had no personal knowledge of it.

EVENING MAIL
ss: New York City
MAR 15 1918

BOSTON'S ORCHESTRA.

IT would have been a pity if any well intentioned individuals had succeeded in stopping last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, for Dr. Muck's programme, by far the best of the season, contained both the greatest piece of absolute music ever written, the third symphony of Brahms, and the prelude to the world's greatest piece of dramatic music, Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," not to speak of two exceedingly interesting unfamiliar compositions of Jan Sibelius.

Although the auditorium was guarded by a large force of special policemen, there was no sign of a demonstration against the much discussed German conductor of the Boston orchestra. Rather was he given more than the usual ovation, not only at his first appearance, but again after the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner," with a climax of applause at the conclusion of the symphony. There may have been some enemy propaganda mixed with this demonstration, as has been claimed, but the greater part of it unquestionably represented a sincere tribute to the world's leading orchestra.

If there were occasional signs of individual nervousness, the interpretations in general, particularly of the noble symphony, scarcely left room for improvement. The colorful symphonic poems of Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," not only gave a touch of novelty to the programme, but added to the orchestra's reputation for virtuosity.

LOVERDE'S WORKS

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date

Dr. Muck's Position.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The question as to Dr. Muck would appear to me very simple. If our Government finds him transgressing its laws or abusing his privileges, he will doubtless be interned, and I hope obliged to work at useful labor and not allowed to live in idle luxury. If he is not in any way "giving comfort to the enemy," but doing his best under the circumstances, why should we imitate the brutal Germans in our behavior to him and act as we think they would act in our situation? Do we not justly pride ourselves on our superior fairness and Christian mercy? Let those who cannot endure the sight of a German at liberty, however well-behaved he may be, stay away from the concerts, not selling their tickets, but if they are sufficiently generous, giving them to the poor students at the music settlement schools, many of whom, being of German parentage themselves, will not share the prejudice against Dr. Muck and his orchestra, and will be unfeignedly grateful for a chance to hear the beautiful music.

M. L. MASON.

New York, March 13, 1918.

Boston American
March 16, 1918

Orchestra Up Against It.

Some of those testy people who can't understand why the Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to employ Germans do not realize the isolated position of Boston's orchestra since the war. It is the only great orchestra in the country which is not unionized. Union musicians will not play with non-union men. If the large body of enemy aliens in the orchestra, who are strictly obeying the President's regulations regarding Germans in this country, were discharged, it would be necessary to send abroad for men to replace them.

While it is possible to drop four or five men a season from a big orchestra without affecting its tone, the substitution of twenty or more new players would seriously damage it for several seasons. I doubt if a score of first class musicians capable of replacing the Germans could be secured in France and Italy at the present time, since the young musicians, and middle-aged as well, are all at the front.

It was a simple matter for the Philadelphia orchestra to drop its Germans, since the musicians union promptly replaced them with competent players. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is up against it.

When our government considers it desirable to prevent enemy aliens performing in public, Major Higginson and Manager Ellis will hasten to eliminate them no matter at what cost to the orchestra. But up to the present no murmur has come from official circles.

One great reform has already been brought about this season; bad symphonic works by mediocre German composers of the present day have not been stuffed down our throats. Good music knows no nationality, but if only racial prejudice stops bad music something has been gained.

Transcript
March 16, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Mr. Chadwick's "Symphonic Sketches" and Saint-Saens's "Organ Symphony" from Dr. Muck—Mr. Heifetz in Second Hearing—Mme. Gabrilowitsch as Bettered Singer—A New String Quartet

TWO composers divide Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall—the American, Chadwick; the Frenchman, Saint-Saëns. From the Bostonian comes his "Symphonic Sketches" restored to the active repertory by Dr. Muck and heard with pleasure more than once in recent years. In none of his later music has Mr. Chadwick written with such liveliness of mood, freshness of imagination, readiness of hand and clear American quality, especially in the first sketch, "Jubilee," and the last, "A Vagrom Ballad." From the Parisian comes his symphony in C minor, largest of scale, amplest of invention and deepest of feeling of all his symphonic music, enriched, besides, with a notable organ part. The orchestra has not played the piece since it visited San Francisco in the spring of 1915. There Saint-Saëns heard it and made speed to congratulate Dr. Muck upon the eloquence of the performance.

On Thursday evening, conductor and orchestra for the sixth in their series of concerts in Sanders Theatre. They will then be heard in Chaikovsky's symphony in F minor—one of the "high points" of the musical year; in Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture and in the "Good-Friday" music from "Parsifal." The agreeable tenor, Mr. Hackett, many times heard at Symphony Hall, will assist the orchestra. His airs are Ottavio's "Il Mio Tesoro" from Mozart's opera, "Don Juan" and "Waft her, Angels" from Händel's oratorio, "Jephtha."

Globe
March 17, 1918

Arthur Hackett Symphony Soloist in Cambridge

The sixth Symphony concert of the season in Cambridge will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, March 21, at 8. The soloist will be that justly admired tenor, Arthur Hackett, who will then appear for the first time as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra. Mr Hackett has appeared at several of the choral concerts in which the orchestra has taken part, but he is to make his first appearance as soloist in the Symphony series. He will sing Don Ottavio's air, "Il mio tesoro" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and for his second number, the Recitative, "Deeper and Deeper Still," and the air, "Waft Her, Angels," from Handel's oratorio, "Jephtha."

The orchestral numbers will be the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky in F-Minor, the Good Friday Magic from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the "Leonora" Overture of Beethoven.

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
Date Mar 15

BROOKLYN ACTS TO BAR ITS DOORS TO DOKTOR MUCK

Institute Directors to Sacrifice "Art" in Conflict with Patriotism.

Brooklyn last night became a candidate for an honorary position in the list of patriotic American cities which have barred their doors against Doktor Karl Muck, most prominent of enemy aliens in the United States as yet uninterned and head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

That the Brooklyn Institute, which heretofore has contracted for the appearance of the Muck orchestra in Brooklyn each season, had "taken definite action which was construed as the farewell of in his case for next season" became known last evening while the Prussian direktor was waving his baton at the final concert of the orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Just what the action had been none of the trustees would reveal. They said that they had bound themselves not to make public a statement of their action concerning Doktor Muck until this morning. Meanwhile it was announced significantly that when art and patriotism conflicted it was time to sacrifice art—the Brooklyn organization to the favorite of the Kaiser.

Many Vacant Seats in House.

Doktor Muck bid his adieus to Brooklyn before a house that was studded with vacant seats. Although the management of the Academy of Music took pains to make it known that every seat had been sold and that there were a few "standees" in the rear of the auditorium, it was obvious that something out of the ordinary had prevented regular subscribers to the concerts from occupying their accustomed places, for which they had paid at the beginning of the season.

Doktor Muck was received with vigorous applause when he made his initial appearance, but it was of brief duration. He stood beneath two spreading American flags and waved his baton to the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" and at its close bowed a response to those who again applauded him.

Half a dozen uniformed policemen had been stationed about the doors of the Academy of Music and numerous detectives were to be seen about the rear of the house with the opening of the concert. But they had nothing to do, as the audience appeared more curious to see Muck than to take active part in a demonstration for or against him.

Fight Against Him Continued.

Meanwhile there were evidences that the fight against him had not been dropped by the subscribers to the New York concerts of the Boston orchestra. Patriotic men and women who having seats to this afternoon's concert at Carnegie Hall, but who would remain away because of the protest against Muck were called upon to contribute their tickets to a committee investigating the Prussian direktor.

In an appeal published in the advertising columns of the HERALD and other morning newspapers to-day the committee said:—

AN APPEAL.

Subscribers for the Boston Symphony Concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval to Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending their tickets at once to Mrs. William Jay, No. 850 Park avenue.

What the protesting subscribers intend to do with the tickets thus obtained did not become known. Neither Mrs. Jay nor any of her supporters would make known their intentions other than to repeat their assertions that they would not tolerate any breach of the peace or objectionable demonstration against the Prussian.

Defence Society Backs Crusade.

When told of the eleventh hour assertions of Doktor Muck's associates that he possessed naturalization papers proving him to be a citizen of Switzerland, neither Mrs. Jay nor any of her supporters would believe that the documents were genuine. They said that such papers would have been produced long ago, when Muck first was accused of undue friendliness for the enemies of this nation, had they been genuine.

In a letter to the HERALD William Guggenheim, chairman of the American Defence Society, yesterday said:—

"The NEW YORK HERALD is right when it states that 'New York bows its head in shame as Muck leads.'

"As chairman of the New York Vigilance Committee of the American Defence Society, I desire to say that we gave the Muck matter serious thought. We believe that, on account of his utterances and his entire attitude, Dr. Muck should be interned. Naturally such a procedure is in the hands of the federal authorities, and our society cannot do more than suggest internment and aggressively work for its enforcement.

"In this connection I wish to state that last February our committee took active steps to prevent the holding of several meetings of the People's Council of Workmen. Touching on this matter in a recent report to our Board of Trustees, I stated as follows:—

"'Permitting those to go unpunished who make utterances of the kind that were indulged in does not reflect credit upon the community, as it indicates too great a tolerance and therefore an unconscious and likely unintentional support of sedition and disloyalty.'"

Representatives of twenty-three posts of the Grand Army of the Republic at a meeting at the Borough Hall, in Brooklyn

CITIZEN
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

POLICE GUARD AT THE ACADEMY

To Prevent Any Disturbance at Concert.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA TO APPEAR TO-NIGHT

Dr. Karl Muck Will Conduct—Swiss Citizenship Papers Shown—Petitions Against the Concert Receive Many Signatures.

The Academy of Music will be patrolled by several policemen and detectives this evening at the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Society, under the direction of Karl Muck. The concert will be given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society, according to arrangements made early in the season.

Deputy Police Commissioner John Leach declared to-day that the police did not expect any trouble, but, nevertheless, there would be a number of uniformed policemen outside the building and several detectives inside occupying seats. This arrangement was the result of a conference between the Deputy Commissioner and Borough Inspector Thomas H. Murphy.

Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, when asked this morning if there had been a flow of letters protesting against the holding of the concert, said that he had not received any complaints until this morning, when he received a letter from a woman in Brooklyn, who had bought a seat for the concert.

Leach said this morning that he had unofficially received information that a petition was being circulated in the borough protesting against the affair, but it had not been brought to his attention.

The petitions of protest referred to by Commissioner Leach are being circulated by Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, and by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn, and both have obtained many signatures of prominent Brooklyn residents.

Dr. Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night. Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey, of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plainclothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett, of the West Forty-seventh street station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no others. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Dr. Muck was greeted with applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play, "The Star Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck conducted his concert as if nothing had occurred.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of 6 years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age.

To-night the orchestra will play in Brooklyn, as stated, where subscription audience will fill the Academy and no seats or admissions will be sold. To-morrow a third audience will hear at Carnegie Hall the last Boston Symphony concert in New York this season.

From POST
Address New York City

MRS. JAY STILL AGAINST MUCK

Attempt to Prevent Symphony Concert in Brooklyn To-night.

Mrs. William Jay continued her fight against Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to-day by attempting to stop the concert set for to-night in the Academy of Music.

When Mrs. Jay was asked about Dr. Muck proving his Swiss citizenship she said, "I have profound respect for a pro-American German and profound contempt for a pro-German Swiss. I believe that the American people will think that a man should be judged by the feelings in his heart, and not by the papers in his pockets."

TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
MAR 15 1918

Again a New York audience permitted itself to listen to Dr. Karl Muck, the friend and confidant of the Kaiser, presenting an all-German programme in Carnegie Hall last night.

Are we at war with Germany?

STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

VETERANS PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK

"Disgrace to Citizens of Brooklyn," Say G. A. R. Representatives.

POLICE GUARD FOR CONCERT

Bluecoats Outside Academy and Plainclothesmen In.

Representatives of twenty-three G. A. R. Posts in Brooklyn met at Borough Hall at noon to-day to protest against permitting Dr. Karl Muck to act as conductor of the Symphony Concert scheduled for to-night at the Academy of Music. Seventeen veterans who attended the meeting signed the following resolution:

"We unanimously protest against Dr. Karl Muck acting as conductor at the Academy of Music. We consider it a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn."

Commander U. P. Eshleman, of Mackenzie Post, presided at the meeting. The signers of the resolution were:

Augustus P. Ticknor, U. P. Eshleman, Edward A. Dubey, Charles H. Ramsden, Harry A. Nimpain, John H. Tully, Dr. R. Estes, Walter Scott, H. C. Draper, Charles H. Hawxhurst, R. S. Maddren, Joseph F. Ludcam, Charles G. Meyers, William A. Hooton, A. J. Jensen, Root A. Harrisson and William P. Griffith.

Uniformed policemen on the outside and plain clothes men on the inside will stand guard at the Academy to-night.

Deputy Commissioner Leach said to-day that with one exception he had received no protest against Muck's appearance. The exception was from a woman subscriber who said her seat would be vacant.

"I anticipate no trouble," said Mr. Leach to-day, "but I am going to have the police there just the same."

"I realize that no legal action can prevent Muck's appearance in Brooklyn to-night, but I hope that popular opinion will act where the law is tied," said Mrs. William Jay, who led the unsuccessful fight to bar Dr. Muck in Manhattan last night. She told of having seen 140 Brooklyn signatures to the petitions seeking to prevent his appearance.

POST
Address New York City

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck, though he was for years one of the Wagner conductors at Bayreuth, is really a born interpreter of Brahms, as his fine reading of that composer's third symphony in Carnegie Hall last night proved. Two Finnish numbers on the programme were comparative novelties. "Pohjola's Daughter" was conducted by the composer in Norfolk in 1914; it is a tone poem of a high order of beauty, not only of theme, but of treatment and color. "Night Ride and Sunrise" is not so good, but is of interest nevertheless. The prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" closed the programme. Strange to say, there was an element of novelty about this, too; for it was played without the "Liebestod," and with the ending that Wagner arranged for a concert in Paris in 1860, five years before "Tristan and Isolde" had its first performance in Munich. Seidl once played it at Brighton Beach at a concert consisting solely of Wagner's overtures and preludes; but performances in this form have been rare. The ending is practically nothing but an adaptation of the end of the Liebestod, transposed from B to A, and differently orchestrated.

Dr. Muck was much applauded when he stepped on the platform. There was no disturbance, or even hint of it.

SUN
Address: New York City.
MAR 15 1918

The word "muck" means in provincial English to work hard, to toil; and there can be no doubt that Dr. MUCK works hard at his artistic calling under existing conditions.

EVENING MAIL
Address: New York City
MAR 15 1918

23 G. A. R. POSTS ASSAIL DR. MUCK

Brooklyn Organizations Protest Against Concert—Police to Guard.

Representatives of twenty-three Grand Army posts met to-day in Brooklyn at Borough Hall and adopted a resolution protesting against Dr. Karl Muck's being permitted to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert this evening in the Academy of Music, that borough.

Hugh P. Eshleman, commander of McKenzie Post G. A. R., presided. The resolution read: "We unanimously protest against Dr. Muck's acting as conductor at the Academy of Music. We consider it a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn."

Deputy Police Commissioner Leach to-day conferred with Borough Inspector Murphy, after which it was announced that in addition to having uniformed policemen and plainclothes men inside the Academy of Music auditorium to-night, police reserves would be mobilized at strategic points. No disturbance is expected, however.

The concert is one of a series subscribed for by members of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Science and the Philharmonic Society. One of the concerts in the series was given last November and was a decided success.

Charles B. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute, said to-day the only protest he had received had come from a woman subscriber whose name he would not divulge. He added he had heard that a petition of protest had been in circulation in Brooklyn for two or three days, but he had no personal knowledge of it.

EVENING MAIL
Address: New York City
MAR 15 1918

BOSTON'S ORCHESTRA.

IT would have been a pity if any well intentioned individuals had succeeded in stopping last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, for Dr. Muck's programme, by far the best of the season, contained both the greatest piece of absolute music ever written, the third symphony of Brahms, and the prelude to the world's greatest piece of dramatic music, Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," not to speak of two exceedingly interesting unfamiliar compositions of Jan Sibelius.

Although the auditorium was guarded by a large force of special policemen, there was no sign of a demonstration against the much discussed German conductor of the Boston orchestra. Rather was he given more than the usual ovation, not only at his first appearance, but again after the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner," with a climax of applause at the conclusion of the symphony. There may have been some enemy propaganda mixed with this demonstration, as has been claimed, but the greater part of it unquestionably represented a sincere tribute to the world's leading orchestra.

If there were occasional signs of individual nervousness, the interpretations in general, particularly of the noble symphony, scarcely left room for improvement. The colorful symphonic poems of Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," not only gave a touch of novelty to the programme, but added to the orchestra's reputation for virtuosity.

LOVERDE'S WORKS

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date

Dr. Muck's Position.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The question as to Dr. Muck would appear to be very simple. If our Government finds him transgressing its laws or abusing his privileges, he will doubtless be interned, and be obliged to work at useful labor and be allowed to live in idle luxury. If he is not in any way "giving comfort to the enemy," but doing his best under the circumstances, why should we imitate the brutal Germans in our behavior to him and act as we think they would act in our situation? Do we not justly pride ourselves on our superior fairness and Christian mercy? Let those who cannot endure the sight of a German at liberty, however well-behaved he may be, stay away from the concerts, not selling their tickets, but if they are sufficiently generous, giving them to the poor students at the music settlement schools, many of whom, being of German parentage themselves, will not share the prejudice against Dr. Muck and his orchestra, and will be unfeignedly grateful for a chance to hear the beautiful music.

M. L. MASON.

New York, March 13, 1918.

Boston American
March 16, 1918

Orchestra Up Against It.

Some of those testy people who can't understand why the Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to employ Germans do not realize the isolated position of Boston's orchestra since the war. It is the only great orchestra in the country which is not unionized. Union musicians will not play with non-union men. If the large body of enemy aliens in the orchestra, who are strictly obeying the President's regulations regarding Germans in this country, were discharged, it would be necessary to send abroad for men to replace them.

While it is possible to drop four or five men a season from a big orchestra without affecting its tone, the substitution of twenty or more new players would seriously damage it for several seasons. I doubt if a score of first class musicians capable of replacing the Germans could be secured in France and Italy at the present time, since the young musicians, and middle-aged as well, are all at the front.

It was a simple matter for the Philadelphia orchestra to drop its Germans, since the musicians union promptly replaced them with competent players. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is up against it.

When our government considers it desirable to prevent enemy aliens performing in public, Major Higginson and Manager Ellis will hasten to eliminate them no matter at what cost to the orchestra. But up to the present no murmur has come from official circles.

One great reform has already been brought about this season; bad symphonic works by mediocre German composers of the present day have not been stuffed down our throats. Good music knows no nationality, but if only racial prejudice stops bad music something has been gained.

Transcript
March 16, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Mr. Chadwick's "Symphonic Sketches" and Saint-Saens's "Organ Symphony" from Dr. Muck—Mr. Heifetz in Second Hearing—Mme. Gabrilowitsch as Bettered Singer—A New String Quartet

TWO composers divide Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concerts of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall—the American, Chadwick; the Frenchman, Saint-Saëns. From the Bostonian comes his "Symphonic Sketches" restored to the active repertory by Dr. Muck and heard with pleasure more than once in recent years. In none of his later music has Mr. Chadwick written with such liveliness of mood, freshness of imagination, readiness of hand and clear American quality, especially in the first sketch, "Jubilee," and the last, "A Vagrom Ballad." From the Parisian comes his symphony in C minor, largest of scale, amplest of invention and deepest of feeling of all his symphonic music, enriched, besides, with a notable organ part. The orchestra has not played the piece since it visited San Francisco in the spring of 1915. There Saint-Saëns heard it and made speed to congratulate Dr. Muck upon the eloquence of the performance.

On Thursday evening, conductor and orchestra for the sixth in their series of concerts in Sanders Theatre. They will then be heard in Chaikovsky's symphony in F minor—one of the "high points" of the musical year; in Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture and in the "Good-Friday" music from "Parsifal." The agreeable tenor, Mr. Hackett, many times heard at Symphony Hall, will assist the orchestra. His airs are Ottavio's "Il Mio Tesoro" from Mozart's opera, "Don Juan" and "Waft her, Angels" from Händel's oratorio, "Jephtha."

Globe
March 17, 1918

Arthur Hackett Symphony Soloist in Cambridge

The sixth Symphony concert of the season in Cambridge will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, March 21, at 8. The soloist will be that justly admired tenor, Arthur Hackett, who will then appear for the first time as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra. Mr Hackett has appeared at several of the choral concerts in which the orchestra has taken part, but he is to make his first appearance as soloist in the Symphony series. He will sing Don Ottavio's air, "Il mio tesoro" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and for his second number, the Recitative, "Deeper and Deeper Still," and the air, "Waft Her, Angels," from Handel's oratorio, "Jeptha."

The orchestral numbers will be the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky in F-Minor, the Good Friday Magic from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Third "Leonora" Overture of Beethoven.

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
Date March 15

BROOKLYN ACTS TO BAR ITS DOORS TO DOKTOR MUCK

Institute Directors to Sacrifice "Art" in Conflict with Patriotism.

Brooklyn last night became a candidate for an honorary position in the list of patriotic American cities which have barred their doors against Doktor Karl Muck, most prominent of enemy aliens in the United States as yet uninterned and head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

That the Brooklyn Institute, which heretofore has contracted for the appearance of the Muck orchestra in Brooklyn each season, had "taken definite action which was construed as the farewell of in his case for next season" became known last evening while the Prussian direktor was waving his baton at the final concert of the orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Just what the action had been none of the trustees would reveal. They said that they had bound themselves not to make public a statement of their action concerning Doktor Muck until this morning. Meanwhile it was announced significantly that when art and patriotism conflicted it was time to sacrifice art—the Brooklyn organization to the favorite of the Kaiser.

Many Vacant Seats in House.

Doktor Muck bid his adieus to Brooklyn before a house that was studded with vacant seats. Although the management of the Academy of Music took pains to make it known that every seat had been sold and that there were a few "standees" in the rear of the auditorium, it was obvious that something out of the ordinary had prevented regular subscribers to the concerts from occupying their accustomed places, for which they had paid at the beginning of the season.

Doktor Muck was received with vigorous applause when he made his initial appearance, but it was of brief duration. He stood beneath two spreading American flags and waved his baton to the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" and at its close bowed a response to those who again applauded him.

Half a dozen uniformed policemen had been stationed about the doors of the Academy of Music and numerous detectives were to be seen about the rear of the house with the opening of the concert. But they had nothing to do, as the audience appeared more curious to see Muck than to take active part in a demonstration for or against him.

Fight Against Him Continued.

Meanwhile there were evidences that the fight against him had not been dropped by the subscribers to the New York concerts of the Boston orchestra. Patriotic men and women who having seats to this afternoon's concert at Carnegie Hall, but who would remain away because of the protest against Muck were called upon to contribute their tickets to a committee investigating the Prussian direktor.

In an appeal published in the advertising columns of the HERALD and other morning newspapers to-day the committee said:—

AN APPEAL.

Subscribers for the Boston Symphony Concert matinee to-day at Carnegie Hall who intend to leave their seats vacant to signify their disapproval to Doktor Muck's conducting will help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of this organization by sending their tickets at once to Mrs. William Jay, No. 850 Park avenue.

What the protesting subscribers intend to do with the tickets thus obtained did not become known. Neither Mrs. Jay nor any of her supporters would make known their intentions other than to repeat their assertions that they would not tolerate any breach of the peace or objectionable demonstration against the Prussian.

Defence Society Backs Crusade.

When told of the eleventh hour assertions of Doktor Muck's associates that he possessed naturalization papers proving him to be a citizen of Switzerland, neither Mrs. Jay nor any of her supporters would believe that the documents were genuine. They said that such papers would have been produced long ago, when Muck first was accused of undue friendliness for the enemies of this nation, had they been genuine.

In a letter to the HERALD William Guggenheim, chairman of the American Defence Society, yesterday said:—

"The NEW YORK HERALD is right when it states that 'New York bows its head in shame as Muck leads.'

"As chairman of the New York Vigilance Committee of the American Defence Society, I desire to say that we gave the Muck matter serious thought. We believe that, on account of his utterances and his entire attitude, Dr. Muck should be interned. Naturally such a procedure is in the hands of the federal authorities, and our society cannot do more than suggest internment and aggressively work for its enforcement.

"In this connection I wish to state that last February our committee took active steps to prevent the holding of several meetings of the People's Council of Workmen. Touching on this matter in a recent report to our Board of Trustees, I stated as follows:—

"'Permitting those to go unpunished who make utterances of the kind that were indulged in does not reflect credit upon the community, as it indicates too great a tolerance and therefore an unconscious and likely unintentional support of sedition and disloyalty.'"

Representatives of twenty-three posts of the Grand Army of the Republic at a meeting at the Borough Hall, in Brooklyn

CITIZEN
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

POLICE GUARD AT THE ACADEMY

To Prevent Any Disturbance at Concert.

BOSTON ORCHESTRA TO APPEAR TO-NIGHT

Dr. Karl Muck Will Conduct—Swiss Citizenship Papers Shown—Petitions Against the Concert Receive Many Signatures.

The Academy of Music will be patrolled by several policemen and detectives this evening at the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Society, under the direction of Karl Muck. The concert will be given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society, according to arrangements made early in the season.

Deputy Police Commissioner John Leach declared to-day that the police did not expect any trouble, but, nevertheless, there would be a number of uniformed policemen outside the building and several detectives inside occupying seats. This arrangement was the result of a conference between the Deputy Commissioner and Borough Inspector Thomas H. Murphy.

Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, when asked this morning if there had been a flow of letters protesting against the holding of the concert, said that he had not received any complaints until this morning, when he received a letter from a woman in Brooklyn, who had bought a seat for the concert.

Leach said this morning that he had unofficially received information that a petition was being circulated in the borough protesting against the affair, but it had not been brought to his attention.

The petitions of protest referred to by Commissioner Leach are being circulated by Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, and by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn, and both have obtained many signatures of prominent Brooklyn residents.

Dr. Muck conducted the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night. Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Detective Captain Gildea, Acting Captain Carey, of the Detective Bureau, and twenty plainclothes men were present in the auditorium, while Inspector Henry, Captain Byron Sackett, of the West Forty-seventh street station, and twenty-five policemen were outside. The Carnegie Hall staff was on the alert to admit subscribers and no others. Not a ticket or standing admission was sold.

Dr. Muck was greeted with applause, which he acknowledged by bowing once, and then signaling the orchestra to rise and play, "The Star Spangled Banner." Dr. Muck conducted his concert as if nothing had occurred.

The orchestra management, however, chose to answer recent questions as to Dr. Muck's citizenship by making public for the first time the certificate that was given him by the town of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, in Switzerland, on March 4, 1881, soon after Dr. Muck's twenty-first birthday. His father, a Bavarian, had settled and become naturalized there when Karl Muck was a child of 6 years, and he had his son naturalized on coming of age.

To-night the orchestra will play in Brooklyn, as stated, where subscription audience will fill the Academy and no seats or admissions will be sold. To-morrow a third audience will hear at Carnegie Hall the last Boston Symphony concert in New York this season.

From POST
Address New York City

MRS. JAY STILL AGAINST MUCK.

Attempt to Prevent Symphony Concert in Brooklyn To-night.

Mrs. William Jay continued her fight against Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to-day by attempting to stop the concert set for to-night in the Academy of Music.

When Mrs. Jay was asked about Dr. Muck proving his Swiss citizenship she said, "I have profound respect for a pro-American German and profound contempt for a pro-German Swiss. I believe that the American people will think that a man should be judged by the feelings in his heart, and not by the papers in his pockets."

TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
MAR 15 1918

Again a New York audience permitted itself to listen to Dr. Karl Muck, the friend and confidant of the Kaiser, presenting an all-German programme in Carnegie Hall last night.

Are we at war with Germany?

STANDARD UNION
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

VETERANS PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK

"Disgrace to Citizens of Brooklyn," Say G. A. R. Representatives.

POLICE GUARD FOR CONCERT

Bluecoats Outside Academy and Plainclothesmen In.

Representatives of twenty-three G. A. R. Posts in Brooklyn met at Borough Hall at noon to-day to protest against permitting Dr. Karl Muck to act as conductor of the Symphony Concert scheduled for to-night at the Academy of Music. Seventeen veterans who attended the meeting signed the following resolution:

"We unanimously protest against Dr. Karl Muck acting as conductor at the Academy of Music. We consider it a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn."

Commander U. P. Eshleman, of Mackenzie Post, presided at the meeting. The signers of the resolution were:

Augustus P. Ticknor, U. P. Eshleman, Edward A. Dubey, Charles H. Ramsden, Harry A. Nimpain, John H. Tully, Dr. R. Estes, Walter Scott, H. C. Draper, Charles H. Hawxhurst, R. S. Maddren, Joseph F. Ludcam, Charles G. Meyers, William A. Hooton, A. J. Jensen, Root A. Harrisson and William P. Griffith.

Uniformed policemen on the outside and plain clothes men on the inside will stand guard at the Academy to-night.

Deputy Commissioner Leach said to-day that with one exception he had received no protest against Muck's appearance. The exception was from a woman subscriber who said her seat would be vacant.

"I anticipate no trouble," said Mr. Leach to-day, "but I am going to have the police there just the same."

"I realize that no legal action can prevent Muck's appearance in Brooklyn to-night, but I hope that popular opinion will act where the law is tied," said Mrs. William Jay, who led the unsuccessful fight to bar Dr. Muck in Manhattan last night. She told of having seen 140 Brooklyn signatures to the petitions seeking to prevent his appearance.

POST
Address New York City

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck, though he was for years one of the Wagner conductors at Bayreuth, is really a born interpreter of Brahms, as his fine reading of that composer's third symphony in Carnegie Hall last night proved. Two Finnish numbers on the programme were comparative novelties. "Pohjola's Daughter" was conducted by the composer in Norfolk in 1914; it is a tone poem of a high order of beauty not only of theme, but of treatment and color. "Night Ride and Sunrise" is not so good, but is of interest nevertheless. The prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" closed the programme. Strange to say, there was an element of novelty about this, too, for it was played without the "Liebestod" and with the ending that Wagner arranged for a concert in Paris in 18[illegible] five years before "Tristan and Isolde" had its first performance in Munich. Seidl once played it at Brighton Beach at a concert consisting solely of Wagner's overtures and preludes; but performances in this form have been rare. The ending is practically nothing but an adaptation of the end of the Liebestod, transposed from B to A, and differently orchestrated.

Dr. Muck was much applauded when he stepped on the platform. There was no disturbance, or even hint of it.

SUN
New York City.
MAR 15 1918

The word "muck" means in provincial English to work hard, to toil; and there can be no doubt that Dr. Muck works hard at his artistic calling under existing conditions.

EVENING MAIL
Address: New York City
MAR 15 1918

23 G. A. R. POSTS ASSAIL DR. MUCK

Brooklyn Organizations Protest Against Concert—Police to Guard.

Representatives of twenty-three Grand Army posts met to-day in Brooklyn at Borough Hall and adopted a resolution protesting against Dr. Karl Muck's being permitted to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert this evening in the Academy of Music, that borough.

Hugh P. Eshleman, commander of McKenzie Post G. A. R., presided. The resolution read: "We unanimously protest against Dr. Muck's acting as conductor at the Academy of Music. We consider it a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn."

Deputy Police Commissioner Leach to-day conferred with Borough Inspector Murphy, after which it was announced that in addition to having uniformed policemen and plainclothes men inside the Academy of Music auditorium to-night, police reserved would be mobilized at strategic points. No disturbance is expected, however.

The concert is one of a series subscribed for by members of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Science and the Philharmonic Society. One of the concerts in the series was given last November and was a decided success.

Charles B. Atkins, director of the Brooklyn Institute, said to-day the only protest he had received had come from a woman subscriber whose name he would not divulge. He added he had heard that a petition of protest had been in circulation in Brooklyn for two or three days, but he had no personal knowledge of it.

EVENING MAIL
Address: New York City
MAR 15 1918

BOSTON'S ORCHESTRA.

IT would have been a pity if any well intentioned individuals had succeeded in stopping last evening's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, for Dr. Muck's programme, by far the best of the season, contained both the greatest piece of absolute music ever written, the third symphony of Brahms, and the prelude to the world's greatest piece of dramatic music, Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," not to speak of two exceedingly interesting unfamiliar compositions of Jan Sibelius.

Although the auditorium was guarded by a large force of special policemen, there was no sign of a demonstration against the much discussed German conductor of the Boston orchestra. Rather was he given more than the usual ovation, not only at his first appearance, but again after the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner," with a climax of applause at the conclusion of the symphony. There may have been some enemy propaganda mixed with this demonstration, as has been claimed, but the greater part of it unquestionably represented a sincere tribute to the world's leading orchestra.

If there were occasional signs of individual nervousness, the interpretations in general, particularly of the noble symphony, scarcely left room for improvement. The colorful symphonic poems of Sibelius, "Pohjola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," not only gave a touch of novelty to the programme, but added to the orchestra's reputation for virtuosity.

LOVERDE'S WORKS

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date

Dr. Muck's Position.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The question as to Dr. Muck would appear to me very simple. If our Government finds him transgressing its laws or abusing his privileges, he will doubtless be interned, and I hope obliged to work at useful labor and not allowed to live in idle luxury. If he is not in any way "giving comfort to the enemy," but doing his best under the circumstances, why should we imitate the brutal Germans in our behavior to him and act as we think they would act in our situation? Do we not justly pride ourselves on our superior fairness and Christian mercy? Let those who cannot endure the sight of a German at liberty, however well-behaved he may be, stay away from the concerts, not selling their tickets, but if they are sufficiently generous, giving them to the poor students at the music settlement schools, many of whom, being of German parentage themselves, will not share the prejudice against Dr. Muck and his orchestra, and will be unfeignedly grateful for a chance to hear the beautiful music.

M. L. MASON.

New York, March 13, 1918.

Boston American
March 16, 1918

Orchestra Up Against It.

Some of those testy people who can't understand why the Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to employ Germans do not realize the isolated position of Boston's orchestra since the war. It is the only great orchestra in the country which is not unionized. Union musicians will not play with non-union men. If the large body of enemy aliens in the orchestra, who are strictly obeying the President's regulations regarding Germans in this country, were discharged, it would be necessary to send abroad for men to replace them.

While it is possible to drop four or five men a season from a big orchestra without affecting its tone, the substitution of twenty or more new players would seriously damage it for several seasons. I doubt if a score of first class musicians capable of replacing the Germans could be secured in France and Italy at the present time, since the young musicians, and middle-aged as well, are all at the front.

It was a simple matter for the Philadelphia orchestra to drop its Germans, since the musicians union promptly replaced them with competent players. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is up against it.

When our government considers it desirable to prevent enemy aliens performing in public, Major Higginson and Manager Ellis will hasten to eliminate them no matter at what cost to the orchestra. But up to the present no murmur has come from official circles.

One great reform has already been brought about this season; bad symphonic works by mediocre German composers of the present day have not been stuffed down our throats. Good music knows no nationality, but if only racial prejudice stops bad music something has been gained.

Transcript
March 16, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

Mr. Chadwick's "Symphonic Sketches" and Saint-Saens's "Organ Symphony" from Dr. Muck—Mr. Heifetz in Second Hearing—Mme. Gabrilowitsch as Bettered Singer—A New String Quartet

TWO composers divide Dr. Muck's programme for the Symphony Concert of next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall—the American, Chadwick; the Frenchman, Saint-Saëns. From the Bostonian comes his "Symphonic Sketches" restored to the active repertory by Dr. Muck and heard with pleasure more than once in recent years. In none of his later music has Mr. Chadwick written with such liveliness of mood, freshness of imagination, readiness of hand and clear American quality, especially in the first sketch, "Jubilee," and the last, "A Vagrom Ballad." From the Parisian comes his symphony in C minor, largest of scale, amplest of invention and deepest of feeling of all his symphonic music, enriched, besides, with a notable organ part. The orchestra has not played the piece since it visited San Francisco in the spring of 1915. There Saint-Saëns heard it and made speed to congratulate Dr. Muck upon the eloquence of the performance.

On Thursday evening, conductor and orchestra for the sixth in their series of concerts in Sanders Theatre. They will then be heard in Chaikovsky's symphony in F minor—one of the "high points" of the musical year; in Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture and in the "Good-Friday" music from "Parsifal." The agreeable tenor, Mr. Hackett, many times heard at Symphony Hall, will assist the orchestra. His airs are Ottavio's "Il Mio Tesoro" from Mozart's opera, "Don Juan" and "Waft her, Angels" from Händel's oratorio, "Jephtha."

Globe
March 17, 1918

Hackett Symphony Soloist in Cambridge

[illegible]xth Symphony concert of the [illegible] in Cambridge will be given in [illegible] Theatre next Thursday evening, [illegible]arch 21, at 8. The soloist will [illegible]tly admired tenor, Arthur Hac[illegible] will then appear for the fir[illegible] soloist with the Symphon[illegible]ra. Mr Hackett has appeared [illegible]eral of the choral concerts in [illegible] the orchestra has taken part [illegible] is to make his first appearance [illegible]ist in the Symphony series. He [illegible]g Don Ottavio's air, "Il mio [illegible] from Mozart's "Don Giovanni." [illegible] his second number, the Recitative [illegible] "Deeper and Deeper Still," and the [illegible]aft Her, Angels," from Handel's [illegible] "Jeptha."

[illegible] orchestral numbers will be the [illegible] Symphony of Tschaikowsky in [illegible] the Good Friday Magic from [illegible] "Parsifal" and the [illegible] Overture of Beethoven.

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

MAR 14 1918

CALLS ON DR. MUCK FOR PROOF THAT HE IS SWISS CITIZEN

Mrs. Jay's War on Symphony Conductor Gets No Official Aid.

Promising interesting developments to-day, which will decide definitely whether Dr. Karl Muck will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall, or will be prevented by the authorities, Mrs. William Jay of No. 850 Park Avenue has made public an open letter she has addressed to him.

Major Henry L. Higginson, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, defended Dr. Muck in Boston yesterday. He said that he had gone over the whole question with the Department of Justice in Washington, and the conductor had received permission to play anywhere in the United States except the District of Columbia.

"The orchestra will play to-night with Dr. Muck," said Major Higginson, "and those who object to Dr. Muck or the nationality of any of the players can stay away if they don't want to hear the music."

The management of Carnegie Hall told reporters that the whole [illegible] was out of its hands. Major H[illegible]son has made a contract for a [illegible]lated number of concerts ther[illegible] Muck and his orchestra have a[illegible] appeared there several times this sea[illegible]son. The orchestra played "The Sta[illegible] Spangled Banner" under his leadership.

The hall managers asserted they could not prevent the concert to-night without exposing themselves to a suit. They said that if the concert to-night offended the dignity or peace of New York, action was up to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

Mrs. Jay visited Commissioner Gilchrist yesterday afternoon.

"I told Mrs. Jay," he said later, "that the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not need a special license for its concert. The annual license issued to the hall by the city covers all public entertainments. This department at present sees no reason why it should prevent Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra. There is no evidence that the law is being violated or the public peace or decency endangered. If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or the Nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt action will be taken. If Dr. Muck is an enemy alien that comes under Federal jurisdiction and is out of my hands entirely."

"The statement that Dr. Muck is a Swiss is not borne out by facts," said Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, speaking for Mrs. Jay. "He was born in Germany of German parents. If you want to know how German he is, just read 'Who's Who.' My information indicates he has the status of an enemy alien."

"Who's Who" gives Dr. Muck's birthplace as Darmstadt, Germany. He studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig, was conductor at various opera houses in Germany and in 1908 was named as musical director of the Prussian Court by the Kaiser.

Mrs. Jay's letter to Dr. Muck follows:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra.

"There has been brought to my attention an excerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of the Chronicle dated Oct. 23, 1917. There was this referenc to you: 'Bear in mind that Doktor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends there.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen? If so, when were you naturalized? Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

STANDARD UNION

Brooklyn, N. Y.

CAN'T STOP MUCK'S APPEARANCE HERE

Powerless to Prevent Any Affair Booked by Academy, Says Gilchrist.

PETITION HAD 80 SIGNERS.

Higginson Insists He Had Federal Sanction.

The fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck's appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-morrow night at the Academy of Music has failed, according to License Commissioner J. F. Gilchrist.

That he cannot revoke Muck's license was stated to-day by Mr. Gilchrist. He explained that the Boston Symphony Orchestra requires no license to appear. The Academy of Music has its own separate license, which is good for one year, under which any event may be given in either of its auditoriums.

Commissioner Gilchrist had received from Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, the petition signed by eighty Brooklynites, protesting against Dr. Muck's public appearance on the ground that he is a friend of Von Bernstorff and a dangerous enemy alien.

There were also petitions from a large number of persons in Manhattan protesting against Muck's appearance in Carnegie Hall to-night and Saturday afternoon. These were disposed of in the same way.

Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to-day again insisted he had the express permission of the Federal Department of Justice for his musicians and their conductor to appear anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia.

Acting Chief Inspector John J. Daly when asked what action the police would take in regard to Karl Muck's concert to-night at Carnegie Hall, he replied the only action he would take would be to supply the performance with adequate police protection.

Lieut. Fuller Potter, of the Intelligence Bureau, who is absent from the

GREEKS MEET GREEK.

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City

MAR 1[illegible]18

"Poof for the Americans!"

Expressing regret that he is not in Germany to fight for the Kaiser, Charles Schroeder hurls a characteristic Prussian "poof" at America and Americans, and goes to jail.

In what does the attitude of Herr Schroeder differ from that of Herr Doktor Muck and his twenty-three—count 'em—fellow aliens of the Boston Symphony Orchestra save that the honest Schroeder comes out in the open with his poofs.

Herr Doktor Muck, however, is able to poof and get away with it. Could Lieutenant John Philip Sousa or Mr. Walter Damrosch if in Germany poof Germans and Germany with impunity? The question answers itself—and the answer ought to be sufficient to shape the course of all patriotic Americans.

But, say his apologists, Herr Doktor Muck does not refuse to lead his alien crew in playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

It is profanation to permit Herr Doktor Muck and his crew to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

From EVENING GLOBE

Address: New York City

Date.....

CARNEGIE HALL ASKS POLICE AID

Manager Insists on Carrying Out Contract for Concert to Be Conducted by Dr. Muck.

FEARS SUIT FOR DAMAGES

Chief Inspector Daly Promises to Have Policemen on Hand to Prevent Trouble.

The management of Carnegie Hall has asked the Police Department to furnish protection for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert announced to be conducted by Dr. Karl Muck to-night.

Acting Chief Inspector Daly said he would send sufficient policemen to Carnegie Hall to afford every protection to Dr. Muck and his orchestra, and drastic police action would be taken in the event that any one attempted to interfere with the concert.

"We are in a position where we cannot refuse to allow the concert to go on to-night," said the manager of Carnegie Hall to-day. "We have a contract that we must fulfil, and, as the commissioner of licenses has refused to revoke the license for the concert, we are in no position to act. If we refused to permit the concert to be given, there might be a very good case for damages against us—not only damages for the loss of the money paid for tickets, but also damages to the reputation of Dr. Muck and the organization.

"Dr. Muck insists he is not an enemy alien, and it is not strange that he should refuse to go on trial on such a charge at this time and in this way. We are placed in a position where we are unable to do anything but carry out our contract with the Boston Symphony. However, under our license we are entitled to police protection, and we must give police protection, so we have asked the police commissioner to give it to us."

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight.

Mrs. William Jay has not given up hope of stopping the concert. She announced to-day that the matter is now in the hands of Captain Fuller

(Continued on Second Page.)

BALFOUR CONFERS WITH BAKER IN FRANCE

[illegible]om CITIZEN

[illegible]dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

[illegible]te.....

MUCK WILL NOT BE BARRED.

The effort which has been made to prevent the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck as the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Carnegie Hall recitals seemed to have failed this morning, when License Commissioner John Gilchrist positively announced that he would not interfere.

The commissioner was appealed to by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the forces opposed to Dr. Muck, after the management of Carnegie Hall had pointed out that, under the terms of a contract it had entered into with the orchestra, it was powerless to prevent the appearance of Dr. Muck or to dictate to the orchestra in any way.

Dr. Muck will appear also tomorrow night at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

EAGLE

[illegible]dress: Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 1 2 191[illegible]

STILL AFTER DR. MUCK.

Miss Turner's Seats at Symphony Concerts Vacant.

Rather than seem to approve of the presence of Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by attending the concerts of the orchestra at the Academy of Music, Miss Marion A. Turner has allowed to remain vacant during the whole season the seats she had subscribed and paid for. Miss Turner is secretary of the Educational Dramatic League of which Mrs. August Belmont is the head, and the discussion of whether or not Dr. Muck will be permitted to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its scheduled concert in Manhattan on Thursday evening has prompted her to make her position known. It is possible that Commissioner of Licenses John F. Gilchrist will revoke the permit for the concert.

TIMES

Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 1 5 1918

G. A. R. VETERANS OPPOSE MUCK'S CONCERT HERE

Pass Resolution Calling Appearance a Disgrace.

POLICE TAKE PRECAUTIONS

Dr. Atkins Says There Is No Official Protest.

Twenty-three Grand Army Posts were represented at an indignation meeting held in the Borough Hall this afternoon to protest against Dr. Karl Muck directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Academy of Music this evening.

The resolution which the veterans adopted was personally signed by seventeen of them and was passed without a dissenting vote. The resolution states that the action of those responsible for permitting Dr. Muck to appear on the Academy platform is a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn.

Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 300, presided. The Grand Army men who signed the resolution, in addition to Commander Eshleman, are the following: Col. Edward A. Dubey, Augustus P. Ticknor, Charles H. Ramsden, Harry A. Nimpain, John H. Tully, E. R. Estes, Walter Scott, H. C. Draper, Charles H. Hawxshurst, R. S. Maddren, Joseph F. Ludlam, Charles G. Meyers, William A. Hooton, A. J. Jenson, Robert A. Harrison and William Patten Griffith.

Nevertheless, Dr. Karl Muck is expected to lead the orchestra unmolested at the Academy tonight, following the failure of his foes to interfere with the Carnegie Hall concert last night. Precautions will be taken, however, to prevent any demonstration.

First Deputy Police Commissioner John Leach said today that he had received no protest from any source against the concert and that he had not received any requests for police protection.

"But," said the Deputy Commissioner, "I am going to have the police there, just the same, more as a measure of precaution than anything else. I have told Borough Inspector Thomas H. Murphy to make the necessary arrangements and he has told me that he will have uniformed men on the outside and a number of plainclothesmen scattered through the audience. I don't think there will be any trouble, but we are taking no chances."

Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, admitted today when seen by a Times reporter, that he had received one protest against tonight's affair. He said it came in the morning's mail and was from a woman subscriber, who said she disapproved of the concert and would show her disapproval by remaining away, leaving her seats vacant.

Mr. Atkins said further that he had heard unofficially that during the last three or four days a petition had been circulated among Brooklynites protesting against the concert. The petition, however, according to Mr. Atkins, had not been formally presented to him.

Strong efforts were made to have Commissioner Gilchrist revoke the license for tonight's concert at the Academy. He said that, while he had been petitioned to do so, he did not have the power. The interest in the concert here is so great that there are said to be three hundred names on the waiting list, in case any ticket-holders drop out.

A double line of uniformed policemen guarded Dr. Muck when he entered Carnegie Hall and there were several plainclothes men scattered about the hall. Borough Inspector John O'Brien and Captain Sackett were on hand to take charge in case of an emergency.

Not thirty seats were vacant at Carnegie Hall and only three boxes, indicating that very few subscribers had taken Mrs. Jay's suggestion to remain away as a protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck.

Dr. Muck began with "The Star Spangled Banner" and after the playing of the anthem the applause was long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The program comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohiola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolda."

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the or-[illegible]under, was present. It was [illegible]cret that the future of the [illegible]phony rested largely with [illegible] last night's event in New

EVENING WORLD

New York City.

MAR 14 1918

CALLS ON DR. MUCK FOR PROOF THAT HE IS SWISS CITIZEN

Mrs. Jay's War on Symphony Conductor Gets No Official Aid.

Promising interesting developments to-day, which will decide definitely whether Dr. Karl Muck will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall, or will be prevented by the authorities, Mrs. William Jay of No. 850 Park Avenue has made public an open letter she has addressed to him.

Major Henry L. Higginson, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, defended Dr. Muck in Boston yesterday. He said that he had gone over the whole question with the Department of Justice in Washington, and the conductor had received permission to play anywhere in the United States except the District of Columbia.

"The orchestra will play to-night with Dr. Muck," said Major Higginson, "and those who object to Dr. Muck or the nationality of any of the players can stay away if they don't want to hear the music."

The management of Carnegie Hall told reporters that the whole matter was out of its hands. Major Higginson has made a contract for a stipulated number of concerts there. Dr. Muck and his orchestra have already appeared there several times this season. The orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner" under his leadership.

The hall managers asserted they could not prevent the concert to-night without exposing themselves to a suit. They said that if the concert to-night offended the dignity or peace of New York, action was up to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

Mrs. Jay visited Commissioner Gilchrist yesterday afternoon.

"I told Mrs. Jay," he said later, "that the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not need a special license for its concert. The annual license issued to the hall by the city covers all public entertainments. This department at present sees no reason why it should prevent Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra. There is no evidence that the law is being violated or the public peace or decency endangered. If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or the Nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt action will be taken. If Dr. Muck is an enemy alien that comes under Federal jurisdiction and is out of my hands entirely."

"The statement that Dr. Muck is a Swiss is not borne out by facts," said Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, speaking for Mrs. Jay. "He was born in Germany of German parents. If you want to know how German he is, just read 'Who's Who.' My information indicates he has the status of an enemy alien."

"Who's Who" gives Dr. Muck's birthplace as Darmstadt, Germany. He studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig, was conductor at various opera houses in Germany and in 1908 was named as musical director of the Prussian Court by the Kaiser.

Mrs. Jay's letter to Dr. Muck follows:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra.

"There has been brought to my attention an excerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of the Chronicle dated Oct. 23, 1917. There was this referenc to you: 'Bear in mind that Doktor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends there.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen? If so, when were you naturalized? Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

STANDARD UNION

Brooklyn, N. Y.

CAN'T STOP MUCK'S APPEARANCE HERE

Powerless to Prevent Any Affair Booked by Academy, Says Gilchrist.

PETITION HAD 80 SIGNERS.

Higginson Insists He Had Federal Sanction.

The fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck's appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-morrow night at the Academy of Music has failed, according to License Commissioner J. F. Gilchrist.

That he cannot revoke Muck's license was stated to-day by Mr. Gilchrist. He explained that the Boston Symphony Orchestra requires no license to appear. The Academy of Music has its own separate license, which is good for one year, under which any event may be given in either of its auditoriums.

Commissioner Gilchrist had received from Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, the petition signed by eighty Brooklynites, protesting against Dr. Muck's public appearance on the ground that he is a friend of Von Bernstorff and a dangerous enemy alien.

There were also petitions from a large number of persons in Manhattan protesting against Muck's appearance in Carnegie Hall to-night and Saturday afternoon. These were disposed of in the same way.

Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to-day again insisted he had the express permission of the Federal Department of Justice for his musicians and their conductor to appear anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia.

Acting Chief Inspector John J. Daly when asked what action the police would take in regard to Karl Muck's concert to-night at Carnegie Hall, he replied the only action he would take would be to supply the performance with adequate police protection.

Lieut. Fuller Potter, of the Intelligence Bureau, who is absent from the

EVENING GLOBE

New York City

CARNEGIE HALL ASKS POLICE AID

Manager Insists on Carrying Out Contract for Concert to Be Conducted by Dr. Muck.

FEARS SUIT FOR DAMAGES

Chief Inspector Daly Promises to Have Policemen on Hand to Prevent Trouble.

The management of Carnegie Hall has asked the Police Department to furnish protection for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concert announced to be conducted by Dr. Karl Muck to-night.

Acting Chief Inspector Daly said he would send sufficient policemen to Carnegie Hall to afford every protection to Dr. Muck and his orchestra, and drastic police action would be taken in the event that any one attempted to interfere with the concert.

"We are in a position where we cannot refuse to allow the concert to go on to-night," said the manager of Carnegie Hall to-day. "We have a contract that we must fulfil, and, as the commissioner of licenses has refused to revoke the license for the concert, we are in no position to act. If we refused to permit the concert to be given, there might be a very good case for damages against us—not only damages for the loss of the money paid for tickets, but also damages to the reputation of Dr. Muck and the organization.

"Dr. Muck insists he is not an enemy alien, and it is not strange that he should refuse to go on trial on such a charge at this time and in this way. We are placed in a position where we are unable to do anything but carry out our contract with the Boston Symphony. However, under our license we are entitled to police protection, and we must give police protection, so we have asked the police commissioner to give it to us."

Mrs. Jay to Keep Up Fight.

Mrs. William Jay has not given up hope of stopping the concert. She announced to-day that the matter is now in the hands of Captain Fuller

(Continued on Second Page.)

BALFOUR CONFERS WITH BAKER IN FRANCE

CITIZEN

Brooklyn, N. Y.

GREEKS MEET GREEK.

NEW YORK HERALD

New York City

MAR 1 8

"Poof for the Americans!"

Expressing regret that he is not in Germany to fight for the Kaiser, Charles Schroeder hurls a characteristic Prussian "poof" at America and Americans, and goes to jail.

In what does the attitude of Herr Schroeder differ from that of Herr Doktor Muck and his twenty-three—count 'em—fellow aliens of the Boston Symphony Orchestra save that the honest Schroeder comes out in the open with his poofs.

Herr Doktor Muck, however, is able to poof and get away with it. Could Lieutenant John Philip Sousa or Mr. Walter Damrosch if in Germany poof Germans and Germany with impunity? The question answers itself—and the answer ought to be sufficient to shape the course of all patriotic Americans.

But, say his apologists, Herr Doktor Muck does not refuse to lead his alien crew in playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

It is profanation to permit Herr Doktor Muck and his crew to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

MUCK WILL NOT BE BARRED.

The effort which has been made to prevent the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck as the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Carnegie Hall recitals seemed to have failed this morning, when License Commissioner John Gilchrist positively announced that he would not interfere.

The commissioner was appealed to by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the forces opposed to Dr. Muck, after the management of Carnegie Hall had pointed out that, under the terms of a contract it had entered into with the orchestra, it was powerless to prevent the appearance of Dr. Muck or to dictate to the orchestra in any way.

Dr. Muck will appear also tomorrow night at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

EAGLE

Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 1 2 1918

STILL AFTER DR. MUCK.

Miss Turner's Seats at Symphony Concerts Vacant.

Rather than seem to approve of the presence of Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by attending the concerts of the orchestra at the Academy of Music, Miss Marion A. Turner has allowed to remain vacant during the whole season the seats she had subscribed and paid for. Miss Turner is secretary of the Educational Dramatic League of which Mrs. August Belmont is the head, and the discussion of whether or not Dr. Muck will be permitted to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its scheduled concert in Manhattan on Thursday evening has prompted her to make her position known. It is possible that Commissioner of Licenses John F. Gilchrist will revoke the permit for the concert.

TIMES

Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAR 1 5 1918

G. A. R. VETERANS OPPOSE MUCK'S CONCERT HERE

Pass Resolution Calling Appearance a Disgrace.

POLICE TAKE PRECAUTIONS

Dr. Atkins Says There Is No Official Protest.

Twenty-three Grand Army Posts were represented at an indignation meeting held in the Borough Hall this afternoon to protest against Dr. Karl Muck directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Academy of Music this evening.

The resolution which the veterans adopted was personally signed by seventeen of them and was passed without a dissenting vote. The resolution states that the action of those responsible for permitting Dr. Muck to appear on the Academy platform is a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn.

Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 330, presided. The Grand Army men who signed the resolution, in addition to Commander Eshleman, are the following: Col. Edward A. Dubey, Augustus P. Ticknor, Charles H. Ramsden, Harry A. Nimpain, John H. Tully, E. R. Estes, Walter Scott, H. C. Draper, Charles H. Hawxshurst, R. S. Maddren, Joseph F. Ludlam, Charles G. Meyers, William A. Hooton, A. J. Jenson, Robert A. Harrison and William Patten Griffith.

Nevertheless, Dr. Karl Muck is expected to lead the orchestra unmolested at the Academy tonight, following the failure of his foes to interfere with the Carnegie Hall concert last night. Precautions will be taken, however, to prevent any demonstration.

First Deputy Police Commissioner John Leach said today that he had received no protest from any source against the concert and that he had not received any requests for police protection.

"But," said the Deputy Commissioner, "I am going to have the police there, just the same, more as a measure of precaution than anything else. I have told Borough Inspector Thomas H. Murphy to make the necessary arrangements and he has told me that he will have uniformed men on the outside and a number of plainclothesmen scattered through the audience. I don't think there will be any trouble, but we are taking no chances."

Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, admitted today when seen by a Times reporter, that he had received one protest against tonight's affair. He said it came in the morning's mail and was from a woman subscriber, who said she disapproved of the concert and would show her disapproval by remaining away, leaving her seats vacant.

Mr. Atkins said further that he had heard unofficially that during the last three or four days a petition had been circulated among Brooklynites protesting against the concert. The petition, however, according to Mr. Atkins, had not been formally presented to him.

Strong efforts were made to have Commissioner Gilchrist revoke the license for tonight's concert at the Academy. He said that, while he had been petitioned to do so, he did not have the power. The interest in the concert here is so great that there are said to be three hundred names on the waiting list, in case any ticket-holders drop out.

A double line of uniformed policemen guarded Dr. Muck when he entered Carnegie Hall and there were several plainclothes men scattered about the hall. Borough Inspector John O'Brien and Captain Sackett were on hand to take charge in case of an emergency.

Not thirty seats were vacant at Carnegie Hall and only three boxes, indicating that very few subscribers had taken Mrs. Jay's suggestion to remain away as a protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck.

Dr. Muck began with "The Star Spangled Banner" and after the playing of the anthem the applause was long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The program comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohiola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolda."

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the or- under, was present. It was cret that the future of the phony rested largely with last night's event in New

EVENING WORLD
New York City.
MAR 14 1918

CALLS ON DR. MUCK FOR PROOF THAT HE IS SWISS CITIZEN

Mrs. Jay's War on Symphony Conductor Gets No Official Aid.

Promising interesting developments to-day, which will decide definitely whether Dr. Karl Muck will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall, or will be prevented by the authorities, Mrs. William Jay of No. 850 Park Avenue has made public an open letter she has addressed to him.

Major Henry L. Higginson, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, defended Dr. Muck in Boston yesterday. He said that he had gone over the whole question with the Department of Justice in Washington, and the conductor had received permission to play anywhere in the United States except the District of Columbia.

"The orchestra will play to-night with Dr. Muck," said Major Higginson, "and those who object to Dr. Muck or the nationality of any of the players can stay away if they don't want to hear the music."

The management of Carnegie Hall told reporters that the whole [illegible] was out of its hands. Major H[illegible]son has made a contract for a [illegible]lated number of concerts ther[illegible] Muck and his orchestra have a[illegible] appeared there several times this sea[illegible]son. The orchestra played "The Sta[illegible] Spangled Banner" under his leader[illegible]ship.

The hall managers asserted they could not prevent the concert to-nigh[illegible] without exposing themselves to a suit. They said that if the concert to-night offended the dignity or peace of New York, action was up to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

Mrs. Jay visited Commissioner Gilchrist yesterday afternoon.

"I told Mrs. Jay," he said later, "that the Boston Symphony Orchestra did not need a special license for its concert. The annual license issued to the hall by the city covers all public entertainments. This department at present sees no reason why it should prevent Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra. There is no evidence that the law is being violated or the public peace or decency endangered. If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or the Nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt action will be taken. If Dr. Muck is an enemy alien that comes under Federal jurisdiction and is out of my hands entirely."

"The statement that Dr. Muck is a Swiss is not borne out by facts," said Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, speaking for Mrs. Jay. "He was born in Germany of German parents. If you want to know how German he is, just read 'Who's Who.' My information indicates he has the status of an enemy alien."

"Who's Who" gives Dr. Muck's birthplace as Darmstadt, Germany. He studied at Heidelberg and Leipzig, was conductor at various opera houses in Germany and in 1908 was named as musical director of the Prussian Court by the Kaiser.

Mrs. Jay's letter to Dr. Muck follows:

"As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra.

"There has been brought to my attention an excerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of the Chronicle dated Oct. 23, 1917. There was this referenc to you: 'Bear in mind that Doktor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends there.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightenment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen? If so, when were you naturalized? Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German Army? Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

STANDARD UNION
s: Brooklyn, N. Y.

CAN'T STOP MUCK'S APPEARANCE HERE

Powerless to Prevent Any Affair Booked by Academy, Says Gilchrist.

PETITION HAD 80 SIGNERS.

Higginson Insists He Had Federal Sanction.

The fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck's appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-morrow night at the Academy of Music has failed, according to License Commissioner J. F. Gilchrist.

That he cannot revoke Muck's license was stated to-day by Mr. Gilchrist. He explained that the Boston Symphony Orchestra requires no license to appear. The Academy of Music has its own separate license, which is good for one year, under which any event may be given in either of its auditoriums.

Commissioner Gilchrist had received from Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, the petition signed by eighty Brooklynites, protesting against Dr. Muck's public appearance on the ground that he is a friend of Von Bernstorff and a dangerous enemy alien.

There were also petitions from a large number of persons in Manhattan protesting against Muck's appearance in Carnegie Hall to-night and Saturday afternoon. These were disposed of in the same way.

Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to-day again insisted he had the express permission of the Federal Department of Justice for his musicians and their conductor to appear anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia.

Acting Chief Inspector John J. Daly when asked what action the police would take in regard to Karl Muck's concert to-night at Carnegie Hall, he replied the only action he would take would be to supply the performance with adequate police protection.

Lieut. Fuller Potter, of the Intelligence Bureau, who is absent from the

From EVENING GLOBE
Address: New York City

(Continued from First Page.)

Potter at Police Headquarters, and that before time for the concert he would have convincing evidence that would require him to act.

"In spite of what Dr. Muck says about his Swiss citizenship," said Mrs. Jay, "in the eyes of the German law he is a subject of the kaiser, and he is a sympathizer with Germany in this war."

Mrs. Jay said the wife of a certain member of the organization was prepared to go before the proper authorities with proof that the orchestra is a nest of German propaganda. There are twenty-three alien enemy members in the orchestra, this woman will say, and besides there are many who have been naturalized who are still German at heart and assisting in German propaganda.

Another witness who is expected to go before the authorities, according to Mrs. Jay, is a New Yorker of the highest standing, who says he can prove that Dr. Muck is a German sympathizer at this time.

"Major Higginson says he will appeal for American fair play at Carnegie Hall to-night," said Mrs. Jay. "How is it possible for him to make an appeal to Americans when every patriotic organization is making every possible effort to keep Americans away from the concert? And the church is represented in the antagonism to Dr. Muck by Dr. Manning. The hall will be filled with pro-German sympathizers and they are the only ones that Major Higginson will be in a position to appeal to for American fair play."

Captain Potter, who is a United States officer attached to the intelligence bureau at Police Headquarters, said he hadn't heard anything in the matter as suggested by Mrs. Jay.

Storm Began in October.

The storm that has been swirling around the head of Dr. Muck started last October, when he failed to have "The Star-Spangled Banner" on the programme at the start of the orchestra's season. The affair developed velocity when Providence, R. I., demanded that the national anthem be played, and the demand was refused. Major Higginson, organizer of the orchestra, then declared that the anthem had no place in a purely harmonic programme. The following day Dr. Muck declared that the anthem would not be played by his organization.

"The playing of merely national or political compositions is not our business," he said. "Art is greater than any national considerations."

Later on in the same statement Dr. Muck said: "I am not a naturalized American citizen. Naturally, one would not expect me to do exactly the same as if I were an American citizen."

Walter Damrosch's View.

In reply to what Dr. Muck said, Walter Damrosch of this city declared:

"If Dr. Muck had spoken up like a man and said: 'How can you expect me, as a loyal citizen of Germany, to conduct "The Star-Spangled Banner" when you know that my sentiments in this war are in sympathy with my own country?' fair-minded Americans would have accepted this attitude."

However, within a week Dr. Muck and Major Higginson reconsidered their attitude, and the national anthem was played in the New York concert of Nov. 6 and at other concerts since that time.

GREEKS MEET GREEK.

NEW YORK HERALD
ess New York City
MAR [illegible] 13

"Poof for the Americans!"

Expressing regret that he is not in Germany to fight for the Kaiser, Charles Schroeder hurls a characteristic Prussian "poof" at America and Americans, and goes to jail.

In what does the attitude of Herr Schroeder differ from that of Herr Doktor Muck and his twenty-three—count 'em—fellow aliens of the Boston Symphony Orchestra save that the honest Schroeder comes out in the open with his poofs.

Herr Doktor Muck, however, is able to poof and get away with it. Could Lieutenant John Philip Sousa or Mr. Walter Damrosch if in Germany poof Germans and Germany with impunity? The question answers itself—and the answer ought to be sufficient to shape the course of all patriotic Americans.

But, say his apologists, Herr Doktor Muck does not refuse to lead his alien crew in playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

It is profanation to permit Herr Doktor Muck and his crew to play "The Star Spangled Banner."

MUCK WILL NOT BE BARRED.

The effort which has been made to prevent the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck as the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Carnegie Hall recitals seemed to have failed this morning, when License Commissioner John Gilchrist positively announced that he would not interfere.

The commissioner was appealed to by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the forces opposed to Dr. Muck, after the management of Carnegie Hall had pointed out that, under the terms of a contract it had entered into with the orchestra, it was powerless to prevent the appearance of Dr. Muck or to dictate to the orchestra in any way.

Dr. Muck will appear also tomorrow night at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

EAGLE
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 12 191[illegible]

STILL AFTER DR. MUCK.

Miss Turner's Seats at Symphony Concerts Vacant.

Rather than seem to approve of the presence of Dr. Karl Muck as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by attending the concerts of the orchestra at the Academy of Music, Miss Marion A. Turner has allowed to remain vacant during the whole season the seats she had subscribed and paid for. Miss Turner is secretary of the Educational Dramatic League of which Mrs. August Belmont is the head, and the discussion of whether or not Dr. Muck will be permitted to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its scheduled concert in Manhattan on Thursday evening has prompted her to make her position known. It is possible that Commissioner of Licenses John F. Gilchrist will revoke the permit for the concert.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

G. A. R. VETERANS OPPOSE MUCK'S CONCERT HERE

Pass Resolution Calling Appearance a Disgrace.

POLICE TAKE PRECAUTIONS

Dr. Atkins Says There Is No Official Protest.

Twenty-three Grand Army Posts were represented at an indignation meeting held in the Borough Hall this afternoon to protest against Dr. Karl Muck directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Academy of Music this evening.

The resolution which the veterans adopted was personally signed by seventeen of them and was passed without a dissenting vote. The resolution states that the action of those responsible for permitting Dr. Muck to appear on the Academy platform is a disgrace to the citizens of Brooklyn.

Commander Ulrich P. Eshleman, McKenzie Post 399, presided. The Grand Army men who signed the resolution, in addition to Commander Eshleman, are the following: Col. Edward A. Dubey, Augustus P. Ticknor, Charles H. Ramsden, Harry A. Nimpain, John H. Tully, E. R. Estes, Walter Scott, H. C. Draper, Charles H. Hawxshurst, R. S. Maddren, Joseph F. Ludlam, Charles G. Meyers, William A. Hooton, A. J. Jenson, Robert A. Harrison and William Patten Griffith.

Nevertheless, Dr. Karl Muck is expected to lead the orchestra unmolested at the Academy tonight, following the failure of his foes to interfere with the Carnegie Hall concert last night. Precautions will be taken, however, to prevent any demonstration.

First Deputy Police Commissioner John Leach said today that he had received no protest from any source against the concert and that he had not received any requests for police protection.

"But," said the Deputy Commissioner, "I am going to have the police there, just the same, more as a measure of precaution than anything else. I have told Borough Inspector Thomas H. Murphy to make the necessary arrangements and he has told me that he will have uniformed men on the outside and a number of plainclothesmen scattered through the audience. I don't think there will be any trouble, but we are taking no chances."

Charles D. Atkins, director of the Institute, admitted today when seen by a Times reporter, that he had received one protest against tonight's affair. He said it came in the morning's mail and was from a woman subscriber, who said she disapproved of the concert and would show her disapproval by remaining away, leaving her seats vacant.

Mr. Atkins said further that he had heard unofficially that during the last three or four days a petition had been circulated among Brooklynites protesting against the concert. The petition, however, according to Mr. Atkins, had not been formally presented to him.

Strong efforts were made to have Commissioner Gilchrist revoke the license for tonight's concert at the Academy. He said that, while he had been petitioned to do so, he did not have the power. The interest in the concert here is so great that there are said to be three hundred names on the waiting list, in case any ticket-holders drop out.

A double line of uniformed policemen guarded Dr. Muck when he entered Carnegie Hall and there were several plainclothes men scattered about the hall. Borough Inspector John O'Brien and Captain Sackett were on hand to take charge in case of an emergency.

Not thirty seats were vacant at Carnegie Hall and only three boxes, indicating that very few subscribers had taken Mrs. Jay's suggestion to remain away as a protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck.

Dr. Muck began with "The Star Spangled Banner" and after the playing of the anthem the applause was long continued. The intensity and duration of the demonstration seemed to be forced for the purpose of showing approval of Dr. Muck's artistic popularity.

The program comprised Brahms's symphony in F major; by Sibelius, "Pohiola's Daughter" and "Night Ride and Sunrise," and the prelude to Wagner's "Tristan and Isolda."

Major Henry Lee Higginson, the or[illegible]under, was present. It was [illegible]cret that the future of the [illegible]phony rested largely with [illegible] last night's event in New

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 14 1918

MUCK WILL NOT BE BARRED HERE

Because Commissioner Refuses to Interfere.

MRS. WM. JAY'S PLANS FAIL

Appeals to U. S. Authorities in Hope of Eleventh Hour Ban.

The effort which has been made to prevent the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck as the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Carnegie Hall recitals seemd to have failed this morning, when License Commissioner John Gilchrist positvely announced that he would not interfere.

The commission was appealed to by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the forces opposed to Dr. Muck, after the management of Carnegie Hall had pointed out that under the terms of a contract it had entered into with the orchestra it was powerless to prevent the appearance of Dr. Muck or to dictate to the orchestra in any way.

"If Dr. Muck is to be prevented from directing the orchestra at its Carnegie Hall recitals it will have to be through the action of the authorities," an assistant to the manager explained. "The contract we have with the orchestra gives us no right to interfere. We cannot say to the orchestra that it is to have a director of our own choosing.

"We are obliged by our contract—which is similar to the contract obtained by the orchestra for twelve years—to have the hall in readiness, and even to furnish protection for the orchestra against illegal interruptions."

Mrs. Jay Keeps Up Fight.

License Commissioner Gilchrist was not willing to accept the onus of the situation when first approached by Mrs. Jay, but this did not dismay her, and she renewed her fight this morning. She also appealed to the Federal authorities in the hope of an eleventh hour ban on Dr. Muck.

Finally, she addressed an open letter to Dr. Muck which, she hoped would prove Dr. Muck's standing as an enemy alien. In this letter she asked him the following questions:

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you answer these questions through the press of New York city, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

Higginson to Attend Recital.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will attend the first recital of the orchestra to-night. He was not moved from his loyalty to Dr. Muck by Mrs. Jay's latest attack.

"I have conferred with the Department of Justice as to Dr. Muck's standing," he said. "There is no reason why he should not appear, and he will appear. Those who do not want to hear him can remain away."

EVENING WORLD
New York City.
MAR 13 1918

CHARGES PRO-GERMANISM BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

Mrs. William Jay of No. 850 Park Avenue, who is conducting a campaign to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert at Carnegie Hall to-morrow, said to-day she has been informed that the orchestra management had distributed free tickets to soldiers and sailors to give its recent concert audiences an appearance of being patriotic.

Mrs. Jay said she talked with Admiral Usher at the Navy Yard and Gen. Mann at Governor's Island, and both assured her an order would be issued that no man wearing an American uniform would be permitted to accept free tickets for the Boston Symphony during its coming visit.

"The abominable use that is being made of our soldiers and sailors to support an enemy alien in his arrogant conduct could only have sprung from the modern German mind," Mrs. Jay commented.

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 14 1918

Police to Attend Muck Concert

Squad Will Be Assigned to Prevent Any Disturbance—License Commissioner Declines to Interfere.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in New York city to-day to conduct the first of the two recitals of the orchestra in Carnegie Hall to-night. He registered at the St. Regis. Commissioner John Gilchrist of the Bureau of Licenses, the Police Department and the management of Carnegie Hall all announced that so far as they were concerned there would be no interference with the concert or the appearance of Dr. Muck.

Acting Chief Police Inspector Daly announced that not only would the department not interfere but would have extra policemen on hand to see that the concert was not interrupted.

It had been suggested that persons hostile to Dr. Muck might attempt to create a disturbance, and it is the intention of the Police Department effectually to guard against this.

"I do not know how many extra men I will send," said Inspector Daly. "But there will be enough to prevent interruption or interference."

Gilchrist Firm.

Commissioner Gilchrist had been urged by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the forces opposed to Dr. Muck, to revoke the license for the concert unless Dr. Muck was replaced by some other director.

"The Bureau of Licenses is in no position to revoke the license," said Commissioner Gilchrist this morning. "Nor does it see any reason to do so. The standing of Dr. Muck in relation to the war has been investigated by the Department of Justice, and so far as I know no action has been taken against Dr. Muck."

The License Commission had been appealed to by Mrs. Jay after the management of Carnegie Hall had declined to act and had pointed out that under its contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra it was powerless to prevent the appearance of Dr. Muck.

Mrs. Jay Keeps Up Fight.

Mrs. Jay renewed her fight to-day. She appealed to the Federal authorities in the hope of an eleventh hour ban on Dr. Muck.

Finally, she addressed an open letter to Dr. Muck which, she hoped would prove Dr. Muck's standing as an enemy alien. In this letter she asked him the following questions:

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you answer these questions through the press of New York city, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

Higginson to Attend Recital.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will attend the concert to-night. He was not moved from his loyalty to Dr. Muck by Mrs. Jay's latest attack.

"I have conferred with the Department of Justice as to Dr. Muck's standing," he said. "There is no reason why he should not appear, and he will appear. Those who do not want to hear him can remain away."

Mrs. Jay at noon to-day issued a statement in which she declared, in reply to Major Higginson, that no patriotic citizen would respond to any appeal in behalf of Dr. Muck. She said:

"Major Higginson's announcement that he would appeal to the audience in Carnegie Hall to-night to show American fair play to Dr. Muck is as ridiculous as his attitude has been since the beginning. Major Higginson might as well appeal to the Reichstag on the subject as to an audience in Carnegie Hall. No patriotic citizen who is aware of the attitude of the American patriotic societies will in any sense glorify Dr. Muck to-night."

N. R. Brennan, representing Dr. Muck, asserted at the St. Regis that the director was bound by this contract to appear and would do so.

"'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played," said Mr. Brennan. "Dr. Muck has never refused to play the national anthem."

Mr. Brennan added that neither he nor Dr. Muck had anything to say in answer to Mrs. Jay.

"Mrs. Jay represents a small group," said Mr. Brennan. "She cannot speak for the large number of persons who purchased their tickets for the symphony concert last summer."

In response to questions asked by reporters, Mr. Brennan declared Dr. Muck had never said anything disloyal to the United States, was not a German and had never served in the

From TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
Date MAR 13 1918

See there's a tremendous force of prohibition sentiment. We'll use some of it quickly to prohibit Karl Muck appearing here.

London, 1881 · New York, 18?

From EAGLE
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
Date MAR 15 19

TO BAN MUCK NEXT YEAR?

At a special meeting of the directors of the Brooklyn Institute held yesterday it was practically decided not to engage Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for another year. The directors took up the matter of the opposition to Dr. Muck and discussed it at length. It was learned today that the sentiment of the directors was unanimous, although it was said that no formal decision was reached.

Directors who were present at the meeting declined to discuss what happened. David A. Boody, when questitoned today, said that any announcement would have to come from A. Augustus Healy, president of the Board of Trustees. Mr. Healy, however, went to Atlantic City today.

Mr. Boody added that no announcement would probably be made until after the concert tonight.

TELEGRAM
New York City.
MAR 14 1918

KEEP UP FIGHT TO BAN DR. MUCK HERE TO-NIGHT

Department of Justice Agents Investigate All Phases of Life of the Kaiser's Music Master—Prepare Questionnaire for Him to Answer.

No legal means being yet found to prevent Dr. Karl Muck, the Royal Prussian Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from giving the concert in Carnegie Hall to-night, Mrs. William Jay and her patriotic friends who oppose allowing the 'Kaiser's Own' to be flaunted in the faces of New York's loyal citizens, have prepared a questionnaire which Dr. Muck will be requested to answer before staging his concert.

Major Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the Muck outfit, which contains twenty-three enemy aliens, contended in a letter to the Chronicle last October that Dr. Muck is a citizen of Switzerland. The questions that Mrs. Jay asks Dr. Muck to answer through the newspapers are:—

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

Investigate His Life.

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York, which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

Meantime operatives of the Department of Justice are investigating all phases of Dr. Muck's life both before and after his coming to this country. Mrs. Jay and her friends hope that they will find something that will give the Federal government some reason for interdicting the appearance of the Royal Prussian Music Master in this city.

Mrs. Jay called upon John Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, only to be told that the permit for the concert was not issued directly to Dr. Muck, but to the Carnegie Hall management, and it is only revocable if there is an improper performance staged there.

When shown a portfolio of letters protesting against the concert and asked if they were not sufficient to warrant a revocation of the license Mr. Gilchrist replied:—

Relies on Police.

"They might be if the orchestra received a permit direct from me."

That Carnegie Hall's doors will be wide open to receive the Prussian orchestra was evident when Mrs. Jay appealed to C. C. Smith, representing the management of the hall.

Declaring that in spite of all the protests the Muck concert would be handled just like concerts by any other orchestra, Mr. Smith said:—

"If it is not deemed advisable for the city officials to stop the appearance of Dr. Muck, we can do nothing. We have contracted with the orchestra for the use of the hall on certain dates. We have our private police, and the city police will be present in the event of any demonstration. If anything unforeseen or undesirable occurs, that is up to the police."

That a large percentage of the personnel of the Muck-Higginson orchestra is German has been verified from Boston.

Await Muck's Reply.

A canvass of the membership last Christmas showed that there were forty-one Germans on the orchestra's roster, nineteen of whom had been naturalized. In addition to the Germans there were nine Austrian members, three of whom were naturalized.

It is stated authoritatively, however, that since Christmas the number of enemy aliens has been cut down to twenty-three.

While Dr. Muck's reply to Mrs. Jay's questionnaire is awaited citizens of all descriptions are sending in their protests against what patriots term disgracing the city by allowing the Kaiser's music director to appear.

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City
MAR 13

There are 23 German enemy aliens in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives a concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night. Would the Hun Kaiser permit twenty-three American musicians to play in Berlin? He would NOT!

What is New York going to do about it?

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 1918

Imagine John Philip Sousa giving a concert in the opera house in Berlin to-night and playing "The Washington Post March" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever!" Can't imagine it, can you? But Doktor Muck and his 23 alien enemy musicians are billed to give a concert to-night at Carnegie Hall.

POST
New York City
MAR 15 1918

DR. KARL MUCK APPLAUDED.

No Opposition to Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader at Concert.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Carnegie Hall last night, which passed off without any unusual incident, in spite of the opposition to Dr. Muck voiced by Mrs. William Jay and others. As a precaution a large detail of patrolmen and plain-clothes men were stationed outside and inside the hall, but aside from keeping order among the crowd that came in an attempt to get seats at the last minute, the police had an idle night.

EVENING JOURNAL 34
Address: New York.
MAR 14 1918

FAIR PLAY ASKED FOR DR. MUCK

Boston Symphony Founder Is Ready to Take Stage Against Raising of Loyalty Issue.

Speculation was rife to-day whether Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose loyalty to America has again been brought under fire, will risk a scene by appearing in Carnegie Hall to-night.

The orchestra is giving two concerts here, one to-night and the other on Saturday afternoon. Dr. Muck's alleged refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Boston several months ago was recalled when it was announced he would direct the Carnegie Hall programme, and a number of subscribers protested.

Represented by Mrs. William Jay, a wealthy society woman living at No. 850 Park avenue, these subscribers appealed to the Department of Justice and Commissioner of Licenses Gilchrist. The latter did nothing, but there were signs of action by the department, the petitioners believed.

WOULD PROTEST FROM STAGE.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has notified Manager C. A. Ellis that he will be present in Carnegie Hall this evening, and that should there be a disturbance due to the appearance of Dr. Muck, he will take the stage himself and put the case up to the audience. Major Higginson said his appeal would be based on the American spirit of fair play.

Major Higginson sent to the newspapers a statement in which he answered what he declared to be mistaken assertions by Mrs. Jay, who is a director of the New York Philharmonic Society, conducted by Josef Stransky. In this rejoinder Major Higginson stood by Dr. Muck, who, he said, is a citizen of the Swiss Republic, and whose status has been duly examined by officers of the United States Government. Dr. Muck, he further declared, had never refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," nor had he ever made any remark discourteous to the American flag or people. Those who subscribed to the concerts here and in Brooklyn, all sold out by the year, he added, had been fully informed of the facts before they bought their tickets last Fall.

MRS. JAY'S OPEN LETTER.

Mrs. Jay returned to the attack by seiding to the newspapers an "open letter" to Dr. Muck, in which she asked him a series of questions, answered in part by Major Higginson's statement. Among other things she asked were:

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German army? If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?"

Mrs. Jay also invited Dr. Muck, in the event of his not answering the questions, to "retire permanently from public musical life."

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia. Pa.
MAR 12 1918

Women Fight Doctor Muck

New York, March 12.—Aroused by the continued appearance of Dr. Karl Muck at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several subscribers to the New York concerts are taking steps to protest against the concerts which are scheduled to be held in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night and Saturday afternoon. It was said today that the present plans for a protest if carried through will deny Doctor Muck an audience in this city hereafter.

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 14 1918

MUCK WILL NOT BE BARRED HERE

Because Commissioner Refuses to Interfere.

MRS. WM. JAY'S PLANS FAIL

Appeals to U. S. Authorities in Hope of Eleventh Hour Ban.

The effort which has been made to prevent the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck as the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Carnegie Hall recitals seemd to have failed this morning, when License Commissioner John Gilchrist positvely announced that he would not nterfere.

The commission was appealed to by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the forces opposed to Dr. Muck, after the management of Carnegie Hall had pointed out that under the terms of a contract it had entered into with the orchestra it was powerless to prevent the appearance of Dr. Muck or to dictate to the orchestra in any way.

"If Dr. Muck is to be prevented from directing the orchestra at its Carnegie Hall recitals it will have to be through the action of the authorities," an assistant to the manager explained. "The contract we have with the orchestra gives us no right to interfere. We cannot say to the orchestra that it is to have a director of our own choosing.

"We are obliged by our contract—which is similar to the contract obtained by the orchestra for twelve years—to have the hall in readiness, and even to furnish protection for the orchestra against illegal interruptions."

Mrs. Jay Keeps Up Fight.

License Commissioner Gilchrist was not willing to accept the onus of the situation when first approached by Mrs. Jay, but this did not dismay her, and she renewed her fight this morning. She also appealed to the Federal authorities in the hope of an eleventh hour ban on Dr. Muck.

Finally, she addressed an open letter to Dr. Muck which, she hoped would prove Dr. Muck's standing as an enemy alien. In this letter she asked him the following questions:

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you answer these questions through the press of New York city, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

Higginson to Attend Recital.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will attend the first recital of the orchestra to-night. He was not moved from his loyalty to Dr. Muck by Mrs. Jay's latest attack.

"I have conferred with the Department of Justice as to Dr. Muck's standing," he said. "There is no reason why he should not appear, and he will appear. Those who do not want to hear him can remain away."

EVENING WORLD
New York City.
MAR 13 1918

...RGES PRO-GERMANISM BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

...William Jay of No. 850 Park ..., who is conducting a campaign ...event Dr. Karl Muck from leading ...Boston Symphony Orchestra's con... ...t Carnegie Hall to-morrow, said ... she has been informed that ...

...rchestra management had dis... ...ed free tickets to soldiers and ... to give its recent concert audi... ...an appearance of being patri...

...Jay said she talked with Ad... ...Usher at the Navy Yard and ...Mann at Governor's Island, and ...assured her an order would be ...that no man wearing an Amer... ...uniform would be permitted to ac... ...free tickets for the Boston Sym... ...uring its coming visit.

...abominable use that is being ...our soldiers and sailors to sup... ...enemy alien in his arrogant ...could only have sprung from ...ern German mind," Mrs. Jay ...ed.

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 14 1918

Police to Attend Muck Concert

Squad Will Be Assigned to Prevent Any Disturbance—License Commissioner Declines to Interfere.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in New York city to-day to conduct the first of the two recitals of the orchestra in Carnegie Hall to-night. He registered at the St. Regis. Commissioner John Gilchrist of the Bureau of Licenses, the Police Department and the management of Carnegie Hall all announced that so far as they were concerned there would be no interference with the concert or the appearance of Dr. Muck.

Acting Chief Police Inspector Daly announced that not only would the department not interfere but would have extra policemen on hand to see that the concert was not interrupted.

It had been suggested that persons hostile to Dr. Muck might attempt to create a disturbance, and it is the intention of the Police Department effectually to guard against this.

"I do not know how many extra men I will send," said Inspector Daly. "But there will be enough to prevent interruption or interference."

Gilchrist Firm.

Commissioner Gilchrist had been urged by Mrs. William Jay, leader of the forces opposed to Dr. Muck, to revoke the license for the concert unless Dr. Muck was replaced by some other director.

"The Bureau of Licenses is in no position to revoke the license," said Commissioner Gilchrist this morning. "Nor does it see any reason to do so. The standing of Dr. Muck in relation to the war has been investigated by the Department of Justice, and so far as I know no action has been taken against Dr. Muck."

The License Commission had been appealed to by Mrs. Jay after the management of Carnegie Hall had declined to act and had pointed out that under its contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra it was powerless to prevent the appearance of Dr. Muck.

Mrs. Jay Keeps Up Fight.

Mrs. Jay renewed her fight to-day. She appealed to the Federal authorities in the hope of an eleventh hour ban on Dr. Muck.

Finally, she addressed an open letter to Dr. Muck which, she hoped would prove Dr. Muck's standing as an enemy alien. In this letter she asked him the following questions:

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you answer these questions through the press of New York city, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

Higginson to Attend Recital.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will attend the concert to-night. He was not moved from his loyalty to Dr. Muck by Mrs. Jay's latest attack.

"I have conferred with the Department of Justice as to Dr. Muck's standing," he said. "There is no reason why he should not appear, and he will appear. Those who do not want to hear him can remain away."

Mrs. Jay at noon to-day issued a statement in which she declared, in reply to Major Higginson, that no patriotic citizen would respond to any appeal in behalf of Dr. Muck. She said:

"Major Higginson's announcement that he would appeal to the audience in Carnegie Hall to-night to show American fair play to Dr. Muck is as ridiculous as his attitude has been since the beginning. Major Higginson might as well appeal to the Reichstag on the subject as to an audience in Carnegie Hall. No patriotic citizen who is aware of the attitude of the American patriotic societies will in any sense glorify Dr. Muck to-night."

N. R. Brennan, representing Dr. Muck, asserted at the St. Regis that the director was bound by this contract to appear and would do so.

"'The Star Spangled Banner' will be played," said Mr. Brennan. "Dr. Muck has never refused to play the national anthem."

Mr. Brennan added that neither he nor Dr. Muck had anything to say in answer to Mrs. Jay.

"Mrs. Jay represents a small group," said Mr. Brennan. "She cannot speak for the large number of persons who purchased their tickets for the symphony concert last summer."

In response to questions asked by reporters, Mr. Brennan declared Dr. Muck had never said anything disloyal to the United States, was not a German and had never served in the German ...

TELEGRAM
New York City.
MAR 14 1918

KEEP UP FIGHT TO BAN DR. MUCK HERE TO-NIGHT

Department of Justice Agents Investigate All Phases of Life of the Kaiser's Music Master—Prepare Questionnaire for Him to Answer.

No legal means being yet found to prevent Dr. Karl Muck, the Royal Prussian Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from giving the concert in Carnegie Hall to-night, Mrs. William Jay and her patriotic friends who oppose allowing the 'Kaiser's Own' to be flaunted in the faces of New York's loyal citizens, have prepared a questionnaire which Dr. Muck will be requested to answer before staging his concert.

Major Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the Muck outfit, which contains twenty-three enemy aliens, contended in a letter to the Chronicle last October that Dr. Muck is a citizen of Switzerland. The questions that Mrs. Jay asks Dr. Muck to answer through the newspapers are:—

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

Investigate His Life.

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York, which represents the citizens of New York, or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

Meantime operatives of the Department of Justice are investigating all phases of Dr. Muck's life both before and after his coming to this country. Mrs. Jay and her friends hope that they will find something that will give the Federal government some reason for interdicting the appearance of the Royal Prussian Music Master in this city.

Mrs. Jay called upon John Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, only to be told that the permit for the concert was not issued directly to Dr. Muck, but to the Carnegie Hall management, and it is only revocable if there is an improper performance staged there.

When shown a portfolio of letters protesting against the concert and asked if they were not sufficient to warrant a revocation of the license Mr. Gilchrist replied:—

Relies on Police.

"They might be if the orchestra received a permit direct from me."

That Carnegie Hall's doors will be wide open to receive the Prussian orchestra was evident when Mrs. Jay appealed to C. C. Smith, representing the management of the hall.

Declaring that in spite of all the protests the Muck concert would be handled just like concerts by any other orchestra, Mr. Smith said:—

"If it is not deemed advisable for the city officials to stop the appearance of Dr. Muck, we can do nothing. We have contracted with the orchestra for the use of the hall on certain dates. We have our private police, and the city police will be present in the event of any demonstration. If anything unforeseen or undesirable occurs, that is up to the police."

That a large percentage of the personnel of the Muck-Higginson orchestra is German has been verified from Boston.

Await Muck's Reply.

A canvass of the membership last Christmas showed that there were forty-one Germans on the orchestra's roster, nineteen of whom had been naturalized. In addition to the Germans there were nine Austrian members, three of whom were naturalized.

It is stated authoritatively, however, that since Christmas the number of enemy aliens has been cut down to twenty-three.

While Dr. Muck's reply to Mrs. Jay's questionnaire is awaited citizens of all descriptions are sending in their protests against what patriots term disgracing the city by allowing the Kaiser's music director to appear.

TELEGRAM
New York City.
MAR 13 1918

See there's a tremendous force of prohibition sentiment. We'll use some of it quickly to prohibit Karl Muck appearing here.

London, 1881 · New York, 189 · WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.

New York City

DR. KARL MUCK APPLAUDED.

No Opposition to Boston Symphony Orchestra Leader at Concert.

Dr. Karl Muck conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Carnegie Hall last night, which passed off without any unusual incident, in spite of the opposition to Dr. Muck voiced by Mrs. William Jay and others. As a precaution a large detail of patrolmen and plain-clothes men were stationed outside and inside the hall, but aside from keeping order among the crowd that came in an attempt to get seats at the last minute, the police had an idle night.

EAGLE
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 19

TO BAN MUCK NEXT YEAR?

At a special meeting of the directors of the Brooklyn Institute held yesterday it was practically decided not to engage Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for another year. The directors took up the matter of the opposition to Dr. Muck and discussed it at length. It was learned today that the sentiment of the directors was unanimous, although it was said that no formal decision was reached.

Directors who were present at the meeting declined to discuss what happened. David A. Boody, when questioned today, said that any announcement would have to come from A. Augustus Healy, president of the Board of Trustees. Mr. Healy, however, went to Atlantic City today.

Mr. Boody added that no announcement would probably be made until after the concert tonight.

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City

There are 23 German enemy aliens in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives a concert in Carnegie Hall Thursday night. Would the Hun Kaiser permit twenty-three American musicians to play in Berlin? He would NOT!

What is New York going to do about it?

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City

Imagine John Philip Sousa giving a concert in the opera house in Berlin tonight and playing "The Washington Post March" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever!" Can't imagine it, can you? But Doktor Muck and his 23 alien enemy musicians are billed to give a concert tonight at Carnegie Hall.

EVENING JOURNAL
New York.
MAR 14 1918

FAIR PLAY ASKED FOR DR. MUCK

Boston Symphony Founder Is Ready to Take Stage Against Raising of Loyalty Issue.

Speculation was rife to-day whether Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose loyalty to America has again been brought under fire, will risk a scene by appearing in Carnegie Hall to-night.

The orchestra is giving two concerts here, one to-night and the other on Saturday afternoon. Dr. Muck's alleged refusal to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Boston several months ago was recalled when it was announced he would direct the Carnegie Hall programme, and a number of subscribers protested.

Represented by Mrs. William Jay, a wealthy society woman living at No. 850 Park avenue, these subscribers appealed to the Department of Justice and Commissioner of Licenses Gilchrist. The latter did nothing, but there were signs of action by the department, the petitioners believed.

WOULD PROTEST FROM STAGE.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has notified Manager C. A. Ellis that he will be present in Carnegie Hall this evening, and that should there be a disturbance due to the appearance of Dr. Muck, he will take the stage himself and put the case up to the audience. Major Higginson said his appeal would be based on the American spirit of fair play.

Major Higginson sent to the newspapers a statement in which he answered what he declared to be mistaken assertions by Mrs. Jay, who is a director of the New York Philharmonic Society, conducted by Josef Stransky. In this rejoinder Major Higginson stood by Dr. Muck, who, he said, is a citizen of the Swiss Republic, and whose status has been duly examined by officers of the United States Government. Dr. Muck, he further declared, had never refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner," nor had he ever made any remark discourteous to the American flag or people. Those who subscribed to the concerts here and in Brooklyn, all sold out by the year, he added, had been fully informed of the facts before they bought their tickets last Fall.

MRS. JAY'S OPEN LETTER.

Mrs. Jay returned to the attack by seiding to the newspapers an "open letter" to Dr. Muck, in which she asked him a series of questions, answered in part by Major Higginson's statement. Among other things she asked were:

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government? Have you ever served in the German army? If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?"

Mrs. Jay also invited Dr. Muck, in the event of his not answering the questions, to "retire permanently from public musical life."

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 12 1918

Women Fight Doctor Muck

New York, March 12.—Aroused by the contemplated appearance of Dr. Karl Muck at the head of the Boston Symphony orchestra, several subscribers to the concerts are taking steps against the concerts which are to be held in Carnegie Hall Saturday night and Saturday. It was said today that unless for a protest if carried out will deny Doctor Muck an ... city hereafter.

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 13 1918

MUCK DEFENDED BY HIGGINSON

Mrs. Jay's Statements Mistaken, He Declares.

SAYS LEADER IS A SWISS

Asserts His Status Has Been Examined by Government.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, defends Dr. Karl Muck, the director of that orchestra, in a statement issued by him to-day at Boston. In this statement, which is a reply to the efforts of Mrs. William Jay and other persons to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in this city, Major Higginson calls attention to the fact that an investigation conducted by the proper authorities disclosed that the director is not a German but a Swiss.

Dr. Muck is to conduct the orchestra at its recitals at Carnegie Hall to-morrow and Friday, and Mrs. Jay and her friends had renewed the fight against his appearance on the ground that he had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" and that he was pro-German. The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, issued a statement supporting the agitation against Dr. Muck.

Major Higginson issued his statement at the request of the New York Evening Post. It follows:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week and are mistaken in various statements which they make let me give you the facts:

Attack Made in Providence.

"Following an attack of the Providence Journal in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years, went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here. He has not been 'looned' by anybody, and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but on the contrary did so the first time I asked him, which was in November. He gave me his resignation, which I have not refused nor accepted.

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities here and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later, Dec. 13, I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case had been stated clearly, and received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra.

Called Incorrect.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go to the newspapers, and, therefore, I turn to you on account of your kind request for this statement. You will see by reading the later articles in the Herald that various of Mrs. Jay's statements are incorrect. Among other things, she states that various cities have barred the orchestra out. The management of the orchestra gave up those cities, except Baltimore, because the local managers feared a loss of money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in the Herald of yesterday, and I repeat it:

"'I have your letter of March 7.

"'It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence.

"'As regards the act of "trading with the enemy," I sought in person instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care.

"'Those instructions were given to me on Dec. 7.

No Protests Made.

"'About March 15, 1917, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in New York the Faust Symphony, together with a chorus of 160 men taken from Boston, and that concert was received with great applause and was satisfactory to the audience. It is the same orchestra and the same conductor, and all the world knew that the United States would declare war in a few days, which it did. When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season we had declared war, and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people in buying those tickets knew what they were to hear and how the orchestra was composed. I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and in honesty can do nothing else.

"'How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?'"

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
MAR 17 1918

N the language of the burlesque creates a "riot" wherever he g

lished: London, 1881; New York 1884

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 13 1918

MUCK'S CONCERT HERE IN DOUBT

Officials Wait Action on German in Manhattan.

ALL TICKETS ARE SOLD

Officials Deny Given Seats to Men in Service.

Officials of the Brooklyn Institute are waiting to see whether or not Dr. Karl Muck will be permitted to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Manhattan to-morrow night before deciding whether or not he will be permitted to appear here the night after.

Tickets for the concert at the Academy have all been disposed of with the exception of a few box seats, it was said.

In Manhattan, where Dr. Muck is scheduled to lead the Boston Symphony to-morrow night, there is a strong movement on foot to insist on a substitute. Leaders in the movement to put the quietus on Dr. Muck are W. T. Hornaday, trustee of the American Defense Society; Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church; Richard M. Hurd of the American Defense Society, David Bispham, Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby and G. Glen Gould.

Complaint that soldiers and sailors in uniform had been given free tickets to concerts directed by Dr. Muck at the Academy to give a touch of patriotism to these affairs were denied at the offices of the Brooklyn Institute to-day.

"Not a single ticket has been given away to any soldier or sailor to a Dr. Muck concert in the past or the one scheduled for Friday evening," an official at the Institute offices said to-day. "The demand for tickets for these affairs has been so great it has been difficult to find enough to supply regular patrons. It may be that soldiers and sailors were seen at the first concert given by the Boston Symphony, but they paid for their seats.

The report that free tickets for Dr. Muck concerts were being distributed among soldiers and sailors is told to have grown out of the fact that officials in charge of opera performances in the same musical series have distributed tickets to soldiers and sailors. Thomas L. Leeming, who has had charge of the distribution, said the opera seats were not in as great demand as those for the Symphony concerts, and he had given about fifty tickets on each occasion to commanders of the smaller army and navy units about the city who gave them to bandsmen or others fond of music.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert of the season here on Monday evening in the Academy of Music. For this last appearance Doctor Muck has arranged a program devoted to Brahams's F major, No. 2, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's fascinating symphonic suite, "Scheherazade."

Doctor Muck in the years he has been in America has won special praise for his interpretations of the symphonies of Brahms, especially for his interpretations of the last two symphonies. He has done much to popularize these works, which up to ten years ago rarely appeared on concert programs. Brahms, symphonically speaking, having been limited almost entirely to his symphonies in C minor and D major. In many respects the third symphony of Brahms is the most beautiful he wrote, and certainly it contains a wealth of melodies.

The brilliant, colorful oriental suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff is an attractive number, but its presentation directly on the heels of the Philadelphia Orchestra's performance of the same work yesterday and today is rather regrettable. The less track-doubling of this sort by symphonic organizations, the better for the stimulation and development of musical art. Doubtless Doctor Muck's listing of the number was uninspired by any spirit of competition, for, other reasons aside, the procedure is unwise from a practical business standpoint. Some kind of a musical clearing house should be devised, preferably through correspondence, enabling conductors to agree not to till the same artistic soil at least during the same week.

EVENING TELEGRAM
Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK, AU REVOIR

The Boston Symphony will give its final concert of the season at the Academy of Music Monday evening. There will be no soloist, the entire program being devoted to orchestral works only. There are but two compositions announced, these being Brahms' third symphony in F major and Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade." These two numbers represent an emphatic antithesis in harmonics, the stolid and unimaginative measures of Brahms constituting a strong contrast to the Oriental and very colorful tonal pictures of Rimsky-Korsakoff. Dr. Muck has won wide recognition for his interpretation of Brahms' symphonies, which the art of this great conductor popularized to a rare degree. It is a fitting final program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which, despite the vicissitudes that befell it this season, easily retained its prestige as the foremost orchestral organization in the United States. Until next season, then, let us say au revoir to Dr. Muck and the artistic musicians who play under him.

Josef Hofmann will give his only recital at the Academy of Music Wednesday afternoon, March 20. This master of the piano is at the very zenith of his powers, which are so well known and so widely lauded that the mere announcement of his name would seem sufficient to insure a crowded house. His program will include several Chopin numbers, in the interpretation of which Hofmann probably holds first place among contemporary pianists.

TELEGRAM
New York City.
MAR 12 1918

WE DON'T WANT MUCK.

It is hard to even guess just what actuates Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, in bringing here his Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, Royal Prussian General Musical Director, of course unnaturalized, "loaned" by the Kaiser and, with his dislike for playing "The Star Spangled Banner," viewed as an undesirable, far better out of the country than in it.

While Dr. Muck has been barred from Providence, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit, Springfield, Baltimore and Philadelphia, Major Higginson insists that under a ruling of the Department of Justice he can give the concerts and "I intend to do so" in New York.

Major Higginson can, if he likes, have a German chauffeur, a German butler and a German band in his Boston home, if the Department of Justice is satisfied with the arrangement. The general public cannot control that. But it is not with for Major Higginson, because he has the means and the desire, to parade his fore friends before a people with whom the country is at war.

Further, patriotic men and women many symphony subscribers, have banded together and say, despite Major Higginson this city shall not again be insulted by Karl Muck.

From POST
Address New York City
D MAR 14 1918

MAJOR HIGGINSON STANDS BY DR. MUCK

President of Orchestra Answers Mrs. Jay

MUSICIAN IS SWISS CITIZEN

President of Boston Symphony Orchestra Says Conductor Never Refused to Play "The Star Spangled Banner"—People Bought Tickets Last Spring Knowing All the Facts.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sent a statement to-day from Boston in reference to the efforts of Mrs. William Jay and other protestants to prevent the orchestra from giving the two remaining concerts of its season in New York. The concerts are fixed for to-morrow evening and Friday afternoon, in Carnegie Hall. Mrs. Jay's objection is based on the ground that the orchestra's leader, Dr. Karl Muck, is a German and that his appearance before the public is a subtle form of German propaganda.

Major Higginson's statement, which was made at the request of the Evening Post, points out that Dr. Muck's status has been reviewed by the legal authorities of the United States and that the orchestra has permission to play in any part of the United States with the exception of the District of Columbia, from which aliens are barred. In discussing the obligations of the orchestra to its subscribers, Major Higginson says: "How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concert? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?"

MAJOR HIGGINSON'S STATEMENT.

The statement of Major Higginson follows:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week, and are mistaken in various statements which they make, let me give you the facts:

"Following an attack of the Providence Journal in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years, went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here. He has not been 'loaned' by anybody, and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but on the contrary did so the first time I asked him, which was in November. He gave me his resignation, which I have not refused nor accepted.

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities here, and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the Orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later, December 13th, I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case had been stated clearly, and received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra.

ACTION IN OTHER CITIES.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go to the newspapers, and, therefore, I turn to you on account of your kind request for this statement. You will see by reading the later articles in the Herald that various of Mrs. Jay's statements are incorrect. Among other things, she states that various cities have barred the orchestra out. The management of the orchestra gave up those cities, except Baltimore, because the local managers feared a loss of money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in the Herald of yesterday, and I repeat it:

"I have your letter of March 7.

"It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence.

"As regards the act of 'Trading with the Enemy,' I sought in person instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care.

"Those instructions were given to me on December 7.

"About March 15, 1917, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in New York the Faust Symphony, together with a chorus of 160 men taken from Boston, and that concert was received with great applause, and was satisfactory to the audience. It is the same orchestra and the same conductor, and all the world knew that the United States would declare war in a few days, which it did. When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season, we had declared war, and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people in buying those tickets, knew what they were to hear and how the orchestra was composed. I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and, in honesty, can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?"

Mrs. Jay said last night that the commander at Governors Island and the commandant at the Brooklyn Navy Yard had assured her they would not permit soldiers and sailors to accept tickets for the Boston Symphony concerts. As a matter of fact, few, if any, soldiers would have attended the concerts, for the reason that most of the tickets are in the hands of subscribers, some of whom, of course might pass tickets along to men in the ranks. Mrs. Jay also made public a letter she had received from the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church and an army chaplain, endorsing her attitude toward Dr. Muck.

From N. Y. COMMERCIAL
Address: New York City
Date

Major Henry L. Higginson, head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, declared that Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the orchestra is a Swiss and not a German.

Established: London, 1881; New York,

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 14 1918

Anti-Muck Demonstration May Cancel Concert

Brooklyn Awaits Attitude of Carnegie Hall Audience Toward Symphony Orchestra Leader.

Whether or not the Boston Symphony Concert will go off smoothly as scheduled in the Academy of Music, to-morrow night, will depend somewhat on the outcome of the demonstration against Dr. Karl Muck at his concert in Carnegie Hall tonight.

Both sides are ready for the fray. Major Henry Lee Higginson, the founder of the orchestra and for the seven years its guarantor against deficit came to New York today to be on the spot.

Major Higginson said that, if any attempt should bemade at disturbing tonight's concert he proposed to take the stage himself, as he has done elsewhere, and put the entire case before the public in an appeal to the American spirit of fair play.

ALL-RUSSIAN CONGRESS AT MOSCOW POSTPONED

Moscow, Monday, March 11 (by A. P.).—The All-Russian Congress of Soviets, which was called to ratify the peace treaty with Germany, has postponed its opening meeting until Thursday, March 14.

CALL
New York City

Up to date we have refrained from interfering too much in the controversy over the Boston Symphony orchestra but conditions have reached a stage where it seems that we must intervene —so many things would go to the devil were it not for ourself and other commentators.

One thing is patent. If Dr. Karl Muck leads the Boston Symphony orchestra, Germany will win the war. What we need in this country is our own simpphony, and we cannot put forth the excuse that there are no recruits. However, we let the organization of such a group to more able hands, as the question of conductorship in place of Dr. Muck must first be settled.

Our choice for leader is Irving Berlin.

EVENING SUN
New York City
MAR 13 1918

MUCK DEFENDED BY HIGGINSON

Mrs. Jay's Statements Mistaken, He Declares.

SAYS LEADER IS A SWISS

Asserts His Status Has Been Examined by Government.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, defends Dr. Karl Muck, the director of that orchestra, in a statement issued by him to-day at Boston. In this statement, which is a reply to the efforts of Mrs. William Jay and other persons to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in this city, Major Higginson calls attention to the fact that an investigation conducted by the proper authorities disclosed that the director is not a German but a Swiss.

Dr. Muck is to conduct the orchestra at its recitals at Carnegie Hall to-morrow and Friday, and Mrs. Jay and her friends had renewed the fight against his appearance on the ground that he had refused to play "The Star Spangled Banner" and that he was pro-German. The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, issued a statement supporting the agitation against Dr. Muck.

Major Higginson issued his statement at the request of the New York Evening Post. It follows:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week and are mistaken in various statements which they make let me give you the facts:

Attack Made in Providence.

"Following an attack of the Providence Journal in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years, went back to complete his engagements in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here. He has not been 'looned' by anybody, and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner,' but on the contrary did so the first time I asked him, which was in November. He gave me his resignation, which I have not refused nor accepted.

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities here and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later, Dec. 13, I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case had been stated clearly, and received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens, there being some aliens in the orchestra.

Called Incorrect.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go to the newspapers, and, therefore, I turn to you on account of your kind request for this statement. You will see by reading the later articles in the Herald that various of Mrs. Jay's statements are incorrect. Among other things, she states that various cities have barred the orchestra out. The management of the orchestra gave up those cities, except Baltimore, because the local managers feared a loss of money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in the Herald of yesterday, and I repeat it:

"'I have your letter of March 7.

"'It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence.

"'As regards the act of "trading with the enemy," I sought in person instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care.

"Those instructions were given to me on Dec. 7.

No Protests Made.

"About March 15, 1917, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in New York the Faust Symphony, together with a chorus of 160 men taken from Boston, and that concert was received with great applause and was satisfactory to the audience. It is the same orchestra and the same conductor, and all the world knew that the United States would declare war in a few days, which it did. When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season we had declared war, and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people in buying those tickets knew what they were to hear and how the orchestra was composed. I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and in honesty can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?"

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
MAR 17 1918

"N the language of the burlesque creates a "riot" wherever he g

lished: London, 1881; New York 1884

From EVENING TELEGRAM
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

DR. MUCK, AU REVOIR

The Boston Symphony will give its final concert of the season at the Academy of Music Monday evening. There will be no soloist, the entire program being devoted to orchestral works only. There are but two compositions announced, these being Brahms' third symphony in F major and Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade." These two numbers represent an emphatic antithesis in harmonics, the stolid and unimaginative measures of Brahms constituting a strong contrast to the Oriental and very colorful tonal pictures of Rimsky-Korsakoff. Dr. Muck has won wide recognition for his interpretation of Brahms' symphonies, which the art of this great conductor popularized to a rare degree. It is a fitting final program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which, despite the vicissitudes that befell it this season, easily retained its prestige as the foremost orchestral organization in the United States. Until next season, then, let us say au revoir to Dr. Muck and the artistic musicians who play under him.

Josef Hofmann will give his only recital at the Academy of Music Wednesday afternoon, March 20. This master of the piano is at the very zenith of his powers, which are so well known and so widely lauded that the mere announcement of his name would seem sufficient to insure a crowded house. His program will include several Chopin numbers, in the interpretation of which Hofmann probably holds first place among contemporary pianists.

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 13 1918

MUCK'S CONCERT HERE IN DOUBT

Officials Wait Action on German in Manhattan.

TICKETS ARE SOLD

ials Deny Given Seats to Men in Service.

ials of the Brooklyn Institute ting to see whether or not Dr. uck will be permitted to lead oston Symphony Orchestra in ttan to-morrow night before de whether or not he will be per to appear here the night after. ts for the concert at the Acad re all been disposed of with the n of a few box seats, it was nhattan, where Dr. Muck is d to lead the Boston Sym o-morrow night there is a ovement on foot to insist titute. Leaders in the move put the quietus on Dr. Muck T. Hornaday, trustee of the Defense Society; Dr. Wil Manning, rector of Trinity Richard M. Hurd of the Defense Society, David Bis- a harp, Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby and Glenn Gould.

Complaints that soldiers and sailors in uniform had been given free tickets to concerts directed by Dr. Muck at the Academy to give a touch of patriotism to these affairs were denied at the offices of the Brooklyn Institute to-day.

"Not a single ticket has been given away to any soldier or sailor to a Dr. Muck concert in the past or the one scheduled for Friday evening," an official at the Institute offices said today. "The demand for tickets for these affairs has been so great it has been difficult to find enough to supply regular patrons. It may be that soldiers and sailors were seen at the last concert given by the Boston Symphony, but they paid for their seats.

The report that free tickets for Dr. Muck concerts were being distributed among soldiers and sailors is tosd to have grown out of the fact that officials in charge of opera performances in the same musical series have distributed tickets to soldiers and sailors. Thomas L. Leeming, who has had charge of the distribution, said the opera seats were not in as great demand as those for the Symphony concerts, and he had given about fifty tickets on each occasion to commanders of the smaller army and navy units about the city who gave them to bandsmen or others fond of music.

TELEGRAM
ess: New York City.
MAR 12 1918

WE DON'T WANT MUCK.

It is hard to even guess just what actuates Major Henry L. Higginson, of Boston, in bringing here his Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, Royal Prussian General Musical Director, of course unnaturalized, "loaned" by the Kaiser and, with his dislike for playing "The Star Spangled Banner," viewed as an undesirable, far better out of the country than in it.

While Dr. Muck has been barred from Providence, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit, Springfield, Baltimore and Philadelphia, Major Higginson insists that under a ruling of the Department of Justice he can give the concerts and "I intend to do so" in New York.

Major Higginson can, if he likes, have a German chauffeur, a German butler and a German band in his Boston home, if the Department of Justice is satisfied with the arrangement. The general public cannot control that. But it is not wise for Major Higginson, because he has the means and the desire, to parade his foreign friends before a people with whom their country is at war.

Further, patriotic men and women, many symphony subscribers, have banded together and say, despite Major Higginson, this city shall not again be insulted by Karl Muck.

PUBLIC LEDGER
ess Philadelphia, Pa.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert of the season here on Monday evening in the Academy of Music. For this last appearance Doctor Muck has arranged a program devoted to Brahams's F major, No. 2, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's fascinating symphonic suite, "Scheherazade."

Doctor Muck in the years he has been in America has won special praise for his interpretations of the symphonies of Brahms, especially for his interpretations of the last two symphonies. He has done much to popularize these works, which up to ten years ago rarely appeared on concert programs. Brahms, symphonically speaking, having been limited almost entirely to his symphonies in C minor and D major. In many respects the third symphony of Brahms is the most beautiful he wrote, and certainly it contains a wealth of melodies.

The brilliant, colorful oriental suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff is an attractive number, but its presentation directly on the heels of the Philadelphia Orchestra's performance of the same work yesterday and today is rather regrettable. The less track-doubling of this sort by symphonic organizations, the better for the stimulation and development of musical art. Doubtless Doctor Muck's listing of the number was uninspired by any spirit of competition, for, other reasons aside, the procedure is unwise from a practical business standpoint. Some kind of a musical clearing house should be devised, preferably through correspondence, enabling conductors to agree not to till the same artistic soil at least during the same week.

From POST
Address New York City

MAJOR HIGGINSON STANDS BY DR. MUCK

President of Orchestra Answers Mrs. Jay

MUSICIAN IS SWISS CITIZEN

President of Boston Symphony Orchestra Says Conductor Never Refused to Play "The Star Spangled Banner"—People Bought Tickets Last Spring Knowing All the Facts.

Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sent a statement to-day from Boston in reference to the efforts of Mrs. William Jay and other protestants to prevent the orchestra from giving the two remaining concerts of its season in New York. The concerts are fixed for to-morrow evening and Friday afternoon, in Carnegie Hall. Mrs. Jay's objection is based on the ground that the orchestra's leader, Dr. Karl Muck, is a German and that his appearance before the public is a subtle form of German propaganda.

Major Higginson's statement, which was made at the request of the Evening Post, points out that Dr. Muck's status has been reviewed by the legal authorities of the United States and that the orchestra has permission to play in any part of the United States with the exception of the District of Columbia, from which aliens are barred. In discussing the obligations of the orchestra to its subscribers, Major Higginson says: "How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concert? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?"

MAJOR HIGGINSON'S STATEMENT.

The statement of Major Higginson follows:

"As Mrs. Jay and other ladies are vigorously opposing the two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which are due this week, and are mistaken in various statements which they make, let me give you the facts:

"Following an attack of the Providence Journal in November, based on a false statement that Dr. Muck had refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' various people have conceived that Dr. Muck is dangerous to the United States.

"Dr. Muck was born at Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood, and bears Swiss citizenship papers and passport to-day. He has exercised his profession in various places, and last in Berlin. He came here some years ago, stayed two years, went back to complete his engagement in Berlin, which he did in 1912, and then returned here. He has not been 'loaned' by anybody, and is under no engagement to anybody. He has never refused to play 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but on the contrary did so the first time I asked him, which was in November. He gave me his resignation, which I have not refused nor accepted.

"I put the whole case before the United States legal authorities here, and received their statement that there was nothing against any member of the Orchestra, including Dr. Muck. Later, December 13th, I went to the Department of Justice in Washington, where the whole case had been stated clearly, and received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia, being barred from that place by a recent law with regard to aliens there being some aliens in the orchestra.

ACTION IN OTHER CITIES.

"Mrs. Jay has seen fit to go to the newspapers, and, therefore, I turn to you on account of your kind request for this statement. You will see by reading the later articles in the Herald that various of Mrs. Jay's statements are incorrect. Among other things, she states that various cities have barred the orchestra out. The management of the orchestra gave up those cities, except Baltimore, because the local managers feared a loss of money and possible trouble.

"My last letter to Mrs. Jay is in the Herald of yesterday, and I repeat it:

"I have your letter of March 7.

"It seems to me idle to carry on this correspondence.

"As regards the act of 'Trading with the Enemy,' I sought in person instructions from the Department of Justice in Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care.

"Those instructions were given to me on December 7.

"About March 15, 1917, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played in New York the Faust Symphony, together with a chorus of 160 men taken from Boston, and that concert was received with great applause, and was satisfactory to the audience. It is the same orchestra and the same conductor, and all the world knew that the United States would declare war in a few days, which it did. When the tickets were sold last May and June for the concerts of the present season, we had declared war, and the conditions were as they are now. At that time no protests were made, and people, in buying those tickets, knew what they were to hear and how the orchestra was composed. I contracted to deliver certain concerts by a certain orchestra and a certain conductor, and, in honesty, can do nothing else.

"How about the people who bought their tickets and wish to hear the concerts? Are they to be deprived by Mrs. Jay and other protestants?"

Mrs. Jay said last night that the commander at Governors Island and the commandant at the Brooklyn Navy Yard had assured her they would not permit soldiers and sailors to accept tickets for the Boston Symphony concerts. As a matter of fact, few, if any, soldiers would have attended the concerts, for the reason that most of the tickets are in the hands of subscribers, some of whom, of course might pass tickets along to men in the ranks. Mrs. Jay also made public a letter she had received from the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church and an army chaplain, endorsing her attitude toward Dr. Muck.

N. Y. COMMERCIAL
ess: New York City

or Henry L. Higginson, head of the Symphony Orchestra, declared that arl Muck, leader of the orchestra wiss and not a German.

ished: London, 1881; New York,

TIMES
Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 14 1918

Anti-Muck Demonstration May Cancel Concert

Brooklyn Awaits Attitude of Carnegie Hall Audience Toward Symphony Orchestra Leader.

Whether or not the Boston Symphony Concert will go off smoothly as scheduled in the Academy of Music, to-morrow night, will depend somewhat on the outcome of the demonstration against Dr. Karl Muck at his concert in Carnegie Hall tonight.

Both sides are ready for the fray. Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the orchestra and for the seven years its guarantor against loss, came to New York today to be on hand.

Major Higginson said that, if an attempt should bemade at disturbing tonight's concert he proposed to take the stage himself, as he has done elsewhere, and put the entire case before the public in an appeal to the American spirit of fair play.

ALL-RUSSIAN CONGRESS AT MOSCOW POSTPONED

Moscow, Monday, March 11 (by A. P.).—The All-Russian Congress of Soviets, which was called to ratify the peace treaty with Germany, has postponed its opening meeting until Thursday, March 14.

CALL
s: New York City

Up to date we have refrained from interfering too much in the controversy over the Boston Symphony orchestra but conditions have reached a stage where it seems that we must intervene —so many things would go to the devil were it not for ourself and other commentators.

One thing is patent. If Dr. Karl Muck leads the Boston Symphony orchestra, Germany will win the war. What we need in this country is our own simpphony, and we cannot put forth the excuse that there are no recruits. However, we let the organization of such a group to more able hands, as the question of conductorship in place of Dr. Muck must first be settled.

Our choice for leader is Irving Berlin.

From NEW YORK HERALD
Address New York City

CITY IS CONFIDENT BAN WILL BE PUT ON DOKTOR MUCK

Loyal Foes of Prussian Direktor Expect Action To-Day.

TRICK GETS SOLDIERS TO BROOKLYN CONCERT

General Mann and Admiral Usher Forbid Attendance of Men on Free Tickets.

Enemy alien symphonies or loyalty to the flag?

The fight to prevent the reappearance of Doktor Karl Muck, music director extraordinary to the Kaiser, at Carnegie Hall to-morrow evening narrowed down to that question yesterday as patriotic organizations, preachers, artists and patrons of music formed in one solid phalanx to oppose the Prussian orchestra leader and his enemy alien musicians.

The question was put in so many words by W. T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological Park and trustee of the American Defence Society. It was expressed in many other forms by the scores of other organizations and individuals who made known their attitude toward Muck and his backers.

Mr. Hurd Joins Opponents.

Others who voiced their opposition to the appearance of Dr. Muck or any other alien enemy in American theatres or opera houses included the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, now devoting all of his time to religious work at Camp Upton; Richard M. Hurd, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the American Defence Society; David Bispham, barytone; Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby and G. Glen Gould.

Although numerous schemes were considered last night for "persuading" Doktor Muck and Major N. L. Higginson, his Boston financial backer, that the Prussian's appearance at Carnegie Hall might well be dispensed with for the period of the war, none had been definitely decided upon. Mrs. William Jay, one of the subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's programme, was emphatic, however, in her assertions that one would be mapped out to-day.

"Plump Germans" Get Vacated Seats.

Chief among the complaints made was that of subscribers to the Carnegie Hall concerts, who declared that they had been informed that the seats they had paid for and vacated because of the persistent appearance of an enemy alien were being turned over to "plump Germans," who roundly applaud the appearance of their fellow enemy alien and give the appearance that a large American audience approves of him.

Another complaint was that soldiers and sailors in uniform were being given free tickets to the Brooklyn Muck performances, thus giving a semblance of patriotism to a performance that has aroused protests from patriotic citizens throughout the country.

Acting on this information immediately, Mrs. Jay communicated with Admiral Usher, at the New York Navy Yard, and General Mann, at Governor's Island. Both of these officials assured her that an order would be issued which would prevent any man wearing a United States uniform from accepting free tickets for the Boston Symphony concert during the coming two concerts.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 4, COLUMN 3, PART 2.)

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1, PART 2.)

Mrs. Jay Calls Order Abominable.

Concerning this order Mrs. Jay said last night:—

"The abominable use that is being made of our soldiers and sailors to support an enemy alien in his arrogant conduct could only have sprung from the modern German mind. To use these fine men to support German propaganda through the medium of love of music should be condemned by every loyal American and lover of fair play; but I don't think, after the assurances that Admiral Usher and General Mann have made to me, that there will be any of the uniformed listeners at Boston Symphony concerts—that is, if they take place in New York.

"Among the letters I received this morning was one from a Swiss school teacher, who made a very good suggestion. She suggested that a public appeal be issued to the principals of the leading girls' private schools in and around the city—that is, schools like Miss Spence's, Miss Ely's and Miss Scoville's, should leave their seats unoccupied if these concerts are held and that they can attest to their patriotism by foregoing this enjoyment. It would mean a great many seats, although one must always bear in mind that the Boston Symphony management permits standees to occupy seats that are left vacant after a reasonable length of time."

Dr. Hornaday expressed his opinion of the Muck appearance in these words:—

"Which will it be, alien enemy symphonies, or plain loyalty to the flag?

"How much real patriotism, how much American sand, is there in the music lovers of New York, per capita? Is their devotion to the flag, to the boys in the trenches and to the Red Cross so skin-deep only that they will stand for an alien enemy musical conductor who represents the wolves and mad dogs of the meanest nation that ever disgraced this earth?

Muck Supporters "Lapel Patriots."

"Are they such 'lapel patriots' that they will hire Dr. Muck, of Germany, a loyal subject of the Leper of Potsdam, to stand up before them in a dress suit and serve out music to them?

"This city is now on trial. Will the people of New York, whose soldiers now are coming back to them poisoned by German gas and maimed by German bombs and bullets, tolerate the public appearance in her largest amusement place of a German enemy who hates our flag and plays the "Star Spangled Banner' only by compulsion? It was Dr. Muck's fellow subjects of the Kaiser who cut a lot of American throats the other day.

"If New York's patriotism is only a joke, then Dr. Muck will appear here in public. If we do not care a bang what our boys in the trenches think of us, then bring on Dr. Muck, and let his appearance brand New York as a city of disloyalists.

"Personally, I think that any opera house that will tolerate the presence on its stage of any German enemy deserves to be at once taken over by the government and converted into a storage warehouse for munitions of war. If Muck appears, that should be the government's answer."

The American Defence Society lined up with the other opponents of the Prussian musical director and made known its stand with this statement from R. M. Hurd, chairman of its Board of Trustees:—

"The American Defence Socity heartily concurs in the campaign to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra at two concerts to be given in this city. Although some argue that music has no nationality, disloyalty is a matter of nationality, and Dr. Muck, by his refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner," has shown himself to be anti-American and pro-German. If the American people are firmly determined to crush the power of Germany war must be waged upon disloyal pro-Germans in this country as well as against German soldiers abroad.

"Dr. Muck has been ordered out of Washington by the Department of Justice and has been prevented from appearing in Pittsburg, Baltimore, Detroit and Springfield, Mass. It is inconceivable that loyal Americans should applaud music rendered under the direction of the royal Prussian general music director. All enemy aliens who have expressed antagonistic views toward the United States should promptly be interned, and Dr. Muck among them."

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, now devoting his entire time to welfare and religious work among the members of the 302d United States Engineers at Camp Upton, declared that it was the duty of the people to do everything in their power to strengthen the spirit of the people, rather than give countenance and support to avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser.

Dr. Manning Denounces Muck.

In a letter to the HERALD Dr. Manning said:—

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and other against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"Our boys fighting at the front in our defence are being assailed by liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts or in any other places to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

In a letter to the editor of the HERALD, Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby wrote:—

Mrs. Crosby Joins Opponents.

"In these days of our nation's storm and stress one must unflinchingly uphold the principles which gave our country its existence, self-sacrifice and patriotism.

"Although by accident of birth Dr. Muck came into this world on Swiss soil, Dr. Muck is avowedly a Prussian of the Prussians; the world long since has learned the value and the influence which this privilege grants him. Were it not for the accumulated years of Mr. Higginson, his solicitude for the welfare of the hundred members of the Symphony Orchestra would be puerile. Compare these musicians, able bodied, with their eyes, legs and arms, to the millions of innocent men, who through Prussian frightfulness can never earn a livelihood again.

"Although a profound lover of music I feel with those of my family, who have given up their Symphony seats and renounced their membership, that the men and women who love their music more than their country should be classed with aliens."

Would Drive Him from Country.

David Bispham, the barytone, was among the numerous New York artists who aligned themselves with the opposition to Doktor Muck during the day.

"This talk of keeping men like Doktor Muck here because of his artistic attainments is extremely foolish," said Mr. Bispham. "Art is all right, but in times of war enemy aliens should be treated as such and not coddled. I am emphatically among that class of musicians who are convinced that men of the Muck stamp should not be tolerated in this country."

Among the scores of letters received by Mrs. Jay was this one from Miss Appleton, No. 56 West Tenth street:—

"I have been trying to make many of my friends see the situation as you do, but it takes some courage to take the public stand you have done, and I honor you for it."

G. Glen Gould, No. 131 West Seventy-ninth street, New York, wrote:—

"I call it the 'Boston Alien Enemy Orchestra.' That Baltimore should be so much more patriotic than New York that it can have a mass meeting and arrange a tar and feather party for the purpose of discouraging pro-German propaganda by Major Higginson, while New York is perfectly indifferent to the insult to us and to our flag by a citizen of the most unspeakable nation of the world, is a matter of shame and a cause for humiliation upon the part of those whose ancestors have fought for this country for three hundred years and whose antecedents were a decent people. I trust you win your fight against old Major Higginson and his Boston Alien Enemy Orchestra."

From NORTH AMERICAN
Address Philadelphia, Pa.
Date MAR 1 1918

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert of the season in Philadelphia tomorrow evening in the Academy of Music. For this appearance Doctor Muck has arranged a widely contrasting program. But two numbers appear upon it. The first is Brahm's symphony in F major, No. 3; the second, Rimsky-Korsakoff's fascinating symphonic suite, "Scheherazade."

Doctor Muck in the years he has been in America has won special praise for his interpretations of the symphonies of Brahms, especially for his interpretations of the last two symphonies. He has done much to popularize these works which once rarely appeared on concert programs. Brahms, symphonically speaking, was limited almost entirely to his symphonies in C minor and D major. In many respects the third symphony of Brahms is the most beautiful he wrote and certainly it contains a wealth of melody.

The brilliant, colorful, oriental suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff is well adapted to exhibit the qualities of any orchestra.

TELEGRAM
ress: New York City.
MAR 12 1918

We are slow to anger, but the opinion has grown that Karl Muck's treatment of "The Star Spangled Banner" is not artistic.

—, New York, 1884

MORNING TELEGRAPH
New York City
MAR

THERE are those who insi zenship is like Swiss ch hed: London, 1881; New York 1884

MORNING TELEGRAPH
s: New York City

Patriotism of the Reason and Disloyalty of Selfish Emotions.

The elimination of undesirable alien influences, as by the silencing of Dr. Muck and his band of German musicians, should be begun and completed by the authorized officials of the Government and not by individuals or factions who lack both the responsibility and the power of public arbiters in questions of public privile. There may be an annoying tendency on the part of s. e patriotic citizens to tell the Government how to run the war, but an excess o zeal in that direction is now far more desirable than any passionate appeal reform in those social and individual rights which have nothing to do with the war.

Actuaries of the Federal Government were not slow, for instance, to darken Broadway, and chiefly for the reason, as they themselves admitted, that such darkness in the gayest street in the world would exert a powerful "moral effect" in the cause of patriotic fuel-saving. The plan itself did not save any considerable amount of coal, but the public gladly acquiesced with the Garfield order in the vague hope that somehow it would promote a victorious war.

Nor have the Washington authorities been slow to watch with jealous care the scattered and recurrent utterances of disloyal words, arguments and sophistries of the press, and quickly to put the quietus upon all such manifestations of editorial disloyalty and unfaith. The silencing of Muck, an alien enemy who appeals only to the truculent racial vanity of other alien enemies, and to the selfish artistic emotions of a more or less pampered musical class, would have a far greater "moral effect" than the temporary darkening of a great thoroughfare which, with all its frivolity and its thoughtless pranks, has given and is giving to the world and to the nation the best that is in it of patriotic service and unselfish zeal in the cause of liberty.

Protests against interference with the personal rights of the musical public will not come gracefully from Americans who are aware of the powerful raid upon personal rights now being made by the bigots of reform at Albany and elsewhere, not in the cause of the war or of world liberty, but for the enforcement of a kind of class autocracy in morals, which is as undemocratic as it is impertinent, and as arrogant as it is unfair. To deny a few thousand artistic epicures and thinly disguised Teutonic enemies the wholly emotional and utterly selfish enjoyment of German music gloatingly and truculently played by the Kaiser's bemedalled Musik Doktor and a band of un-American musicians would not be regarded as any great trespass upon the personal or public privileges of real Americans and, on the contrary, it would loom as a practical and positive proof of the American right and privilege to exert every faculty of emotion, sentiment and reason in the all-important business of winning this war.

Muck should be silenced for the moral effect that such action would have in discouraging the complacent enemies within our gates and in turning the self-coddled, epicurean gluttons of music out of their luxuriant lethargy and into the stern, daylight realities of war. Muck is giving emotional aid and encouragement to alien enemies. Inflaming unorganized public resentment against him not the right way to eliminate him. There are ample reasons why he should It is for the properly emp

CALL
ess: New York City
MAR 18

MOVE TO SNUB KARL MUCK HERE MEETS PROT

FIGHTING GERMAN MUSI AND MUSICIANS WIL NOT WIN THE WAR, SAY H. K. MODERWELL.

A report that New York women ar up in arms today over the propos appearance here of Dr. Karl Muck and his Boston Symphony orchestra has aroused many broad-minded musicians and musical critics.

Dr. Muck will play at Carnegie hall on Thursday evening. Despite the fact that loyal New Yorkers are determined to give Muck a chilly reception the Carnegie hall management said yesterday that all seats were sold ou for the night.

Hiram K. Moderwell, musical editor of Vogue and contributor to the New Republic, Modern School and other liberal periodicals, decried the attitude of those who had protested.

"American ingenuity has invented no more futile device for winning the war than that of depriving the American public of good music, as instanced in this protest against the appearance of Dr. Muck with the Boston Symphony orchestra in New York," he said. "Dr. Muck is beyond any question the greatest orchestral conductor in America today, and one of the three or four greatest in the world. If we deprive ourselves of the music which he can give us, we hurt ourselves grievously, but how we help to win the war I fail to see.

"We can hurt the kaiser more by throwing snowballs at the statue of Frederick the Great. Dr. Muck is here as a musician pure and simple. In hitting him we don't even throw a snowball at the military power of Germany. What sort of military strategy is it that dictates that instead of hitting our enemy, we shall hit some body else? Have we the chance of a snowball in a furnace to win the war if we continue to divide our energy and attack where attack cannot possibly do any good?

"For the love of Heaven and democracy, if we are out to win this war, let us go straight to the point and not divide our energies in this way. If America is efficient, as she pretends to be, she will hit where the enemy is, not where he isn't.

"The enemy is not in our musical life. That can go on without the slightest reference to the war. It will help to keep us sane and hence efficient. This hitting indiscriminately at everything that is German is a species of national insanity, which is fatal when there is serious work to be done. We shall show our sanity by cultivating, among other things, the best there is in music. And the best there is in the music of America, beyond any shadow of question, is the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Muck's direction."

Herman Epstein, musical director at the Rand school, felt very strongly that there was no ground for any protest at all against the appearance of Karl Muck and the Boston Symphony orchestra.

"There is much better work to do than to deprive the American people of good music. America needs good music very greatly. Colonel Higginson, who is the president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is, I believe, loyal enough to vouch for the loyalty of Karl Muck. Americans know that Colonel Higginson would not support any movement that was disloyal," he said.

Theodore Spiering, violinist, conductor, and one of the officials of the People's Society for Music and Drama, bases his rebuke of those who are seeking to prevent the appearance of Karl Muck on the "internationalism of art."

"I am a firm believer in the internationalism of art," says Spiering, "and it is from this viewpoint, if from no other, that I deplore the renewed agitation against Dr. Muck of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

"We have been lenient toward alien elements in general, and it is, therefore, to be regretted that this tendency of aroused feelings is not carried out in our attitude toward the man who is completely bound up with the artistic pre-eminence of the greatest musical institution of our country."

EVENING TELEGRAM
s: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN FINAL CONCERT

Magnificent Program Enthusiastically Applauded by Large and Fashionable Audience.

By HOWARD SHELLEY

Appreciative enthusiasm reigned at the Academy of Music, last evening, at the final concert, this season, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There was a most cordial reception for Dr. Muck and abundant applause for him as well as for the musicians when the last chord of the Oriental "Scheherazade" sounded in the historic auditorium. It was a generous tribute to the magnificent organization, which although boasting Boston as its home is, nevertheless, held in high, artistic esteem in this city. The audience was extremely large, even the upper proscenium boxes being filled.

The program was purely orchestral and consisted of Brahm's third symphony in F major and Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite, founded on several of the stories from the so-called "Arabian Nights" and known as "Scheherazade." The Brahms work is regarded by many musical authorities as the greatest composition of this master. Without venturing a statement as to whether this is or is not true, for all criticism is relative, it may be stated that it is an opus of distinction. It bears all the characteristics of Brahms, but is less stolid than several of his other works. It is substantial to a wholesome degree and is very melodious. It never approaches the lighter element of musical form either in theme or orchestration. The four movements were given with a magnificent unanimity of harmonic sequence and interpretation. Dr. Muck is noted as a protagonist of Brahms and has done much to popularize the master in this country. The orchestra was in perfect condition and the various characteristics for which it is noted were again heard in admirable exposition.

The "Scheherazade" was a decided contrast to the Brahms work. The former is Eastern to the extreme degree. The repetitional theme which recurs throughout the four movements was initially sounded most delightfully in the first in which, it perhaps occurs, more than in any other. The rich piccicati of the second movement were richly and impressively rendered while the Bagdad festival of the last was vitally reminiscent of the Oriental fetes which were famous in the city by the Tigris with its "shrines of fretted gold." The same work was given Friday last by the Philadelphia Orchestra and although civic pride would naturally suggest that the result of a comparison would be in favor of the local organization, truth favors the Bostonians. The latter have seldom played better than they did last evening, and Mr. Witek, the concertmaster, was the recipient of much applause for his achievements. It was a magnificent concert.

EVENING Bulletin
Providence, R. I.
MAR 6 - 1918

MRS. WILLIAM JAY LEADS IN PROTEST AGAINST DR. MUCK

Four Subscribers to Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts in New York Demand That Major Higginson Find Another Conductor for Players.

New York, March 6.—Opposition to the retaining of Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the ground that he is pro-German, have reached a point where the Chronicle, a local publication devoted to society and the arts, prints in its March issue letters of protest addressed by Mrs. William Jay and other prominent subscribers to the New York concerts to Maj. Henry L. Higginson of Boston, who controls the destinies of the famous orchestra.

Under heading "Doktor Muck Must Go," editorial introduction to the article says in part: "Mrs. Jay is performing a great public service in directing attention to the incumbency of Doktor Karl Muck as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Jay's protest to Maj. Higginson is admirably aided by the fearless support of Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, all of whom have been subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York for many years. Maj. Higginson is obdurate before the appeals of the signatories of the ensuing correspondence."

"There is one remaining concert in New York this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On this occasion it will be decided whether New York ranks beside Pittsburgh, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington, or whether she will reject the ardent protest against 'giving aid and comfort to the enemy.'"

The original letter of protest was sent to Maj. Higginson Jan. 22, signed personally by Mrs. Jay, Mrs. William P. Douglas, Mrs. Carolyn Kane Wright and Judge George L. Ingraham, and it closed as follows:

"None can impugn the appreciation of music—German music—of the undersigned. Although subscribers for many years to the Boston Symphony, we have been compelled, by the presence of Dr. Muck—an admitted ally of the Kaiser—to leave our seats unoccupied: thus signalizing our disapproval of the course you are pursuing."

In his reply, Maj. Higginson said, among other things:

"Dr. Muck is probably German in feeling, but he has done nothing wrong. He has been eminently satisfactory to me as a conductor and as a man. His industry, knowledge and power are great, and his place cannot be supplied in this country. * * *

"If your request were carried out, the orchestra would disband, and it would be owing to a small number of people who take your view. Do you care for this responsibility?"

"Five representative cities—Pittsburgh, Detroit, Baltimore, Springfield, Mass., and Washington—already have refused to permit Doktor Muck's presence, thereby reflecting the wishes of their citizens," wrote Mrs. Jay and her associate protestors. "You, over your signature, admit the Doktor Muck is pro-German in his sympathies and there is no doubt that he still bears proudly the Teutonic title Koeniglich Preussicher General Musik director.

"* * * With due recognition of all that you have done in the past for orchestral music and for your rights as supreme head of the Boston Symphony we beg to tell you that this particular element of German propaganda will be fought continuously by us."

P. S.—Can you prove that Doktor Muck has "done nothing?"

From EVENING STAR
Address: Washington, D. C.
MAR 12 1918

NEW YORK OPPOSES MUCK.

Kaiser's Own Musical Director May Change Program.

NEW YORK, March 12.—The Herald: Opposition to the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck, the kaiser's own music director, as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on Thursday evening yesterday took such definite form as to indicate that the man who attempted to escape playing "The Star Spangled Banner" might decide to change his arrangement for that day.

Music lovers and patriotic Americans stood together in announcing that some action should be taken to prevent New York from patronizing the Prussian musician who has been excluded from at least six cities of the United States.

From RECORD
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 16 1918

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IN FINAL CONCERT

Metropolitan Company to Offer Maria Barrientos and Lazaro in "Rigoletto."

FREMSTAD TO SING HERE

Recitals by Alma Gluck and Jascha Heifetz Lend Interest to Week.

—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert of the season in Philadelphia tomorrow evening in the Academy of Music. Dr. Muck has arranged a widely contrasting program. Brahms' symphony in F major, No. 3, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's fascinating symphonic suite, "Scheherazade," will be played. Dr. Muck in the years he has been in America has won special praise for his interpretations of the symphonies of Brahms. The brilliant, colorful, Oriental suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff is well adapted to exhibit the qualities which peculiarly distinguish the Boston Symphony Orchestra; the completeness of its technical perfection and beauty of its individual choirs and the remarkable virtuosity of its players of various solo instruments. The length of the concert will be something over one hour and a half.

From TIMES
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.

BOSTON SYMPHONY FRIDAY.

Farewell Concert of Season at Academy of Music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is to make its last appearance of the season in the Academy of Music next Friday evening.

For his last program Dr. Mucy has selected three pieces of great value. The symphony will be Mozart's in E flat, the third of the wonderful trio of symphonies, composed in one summer. The first number of the second part of the program will be the exquisitely melodious serenade for strings in C major, by Tschaikowsky. This serenade srows Tschaikowsky in one of his lighter moods and demonstrates how he was a master of melody in the finest and best sense of the word. The serenade has been played by the orchestra with much success at several of its concerts the present season.

The final number will be the glowing, brilliant, colorful overture of Goldmark, "Sakuntala."

From PUBLIC LEDGER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert of the season in Philadelphia tomorrow evening in the Academy of Music. For this last appearance Doctor Muck has arranged a very interesting and widely contrasting program. Only two numbers appear upon it. The first is Brahms's in F major, No. 3; the second, Rimsky-Korsakoff's fascinating Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade." Doctor Muck in the years he has been in America has won special praise for his interpretations of the symphonies of Brahms, especially for his interpretations of the last two symphonies. He has done much to popularize these works, which up to ten years ago rarely appeared on concert programs, Brahms, symphonically speaking, having been limited almost entirely to his symphonies in C minor and D major. In many respects the third symphony of Brahms is the most beautiful he wrote, and certainly it contains a wealth of wonderful melodies.

The brilliant, colorful Oriental suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff is well adapted to exhibit the qualities which peculiarly distinguish the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the completeness of its technical perfection and beauty of its individual choirs and the remarkable virtuosity of its players of various solo instruments.

The length of the concert will be something over one hour and a half.

From ENQUIRER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 16 1918

Boston Symphony's Last Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert of the season in Philadelphia tomorrow evening in the Academy of Music. For this last appearance Dr. Muck has arranged a very interesting and widely contrasting programme. But two numbers appear upon it. The first is Brahms' in F Major, No. 3; the second, Rimsky-Korsakoff's fascinating symphonic suite, "Scheherazade."

Dr. Muck in the years he has been in America has won special praise for his interpretations of the symphonies of Brahms, especially for his interpretations of the last two symphonies. He has done much to popularize these works, which up to ten years ago rarely appeared on concert programmes, Brahms, symphonically speaking, having been limited almost entirely to his symphonies in C minor and D major. In many respects the third symphony of Brahms is the most beautiful he wrote and certainly it contains a wealth of wonderful melodies.

The brilliant, colorful Oriental suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff is well adapted to exhibit the qualities which peculiarly distinguish the Boston Symphony Orchestra, namely, the completeness of its technical perfection and beauty of its individual choirs and the remarkable virtuosity of its players of various solo instruments.

The length of the concert will be something over one hour and a half.

From SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
Date

NEW YORK RAPS MUCK

Subscribers To Boston Symphony Orchestra Would Bar Appearance Of German Director.

New York, March 11.—Is Doktor Karl Muck, Royal Prussian General Music Director, to be permitted to direct the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall next Thursday night and Saturday afternoon?

How long would an American orchestra director be permitted to conduct concerts in Berlin?

Is New York to align herself with the patriotic cities of Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, Mass., and put up the bars against the Kaiser's personal musical director?

Many of the most prominent and oldest subscribers to the Boston Symphony concerts in New York, who have protested against the continuance of Doktor Muck, as they call him, as director, are asking these questions. Their silent protests of leaving unoccupied their paid for seats have had no effect on the Kaiser's chief musician, nor upon Major Henry L. Higginson, the financial backer of the orchestra, and they have written a protest to him.

"This particular element of German propaganda will be continuously fought by us," said Mrs. William Jay, one of the best known of the Boston Symphony subscribers, in a letter to Major Higginson. And yesterday, when Mrs. Jay received a "rather curt and quite rude" letter from Major Higginson informing her that their correspondence in reference to Doktor Muck must cease, she said:

"My correspondence with Major Higginson is ended, it is true; but my fight against Doktor Muck as the paid enemy agent of the Kaiser is not at an end. I intend to leave nothing undone that will prevent Doktor Muck's appearance again at the head of an orchestra in this, my native city."

Associated with Mrs. Jay in the protest to Major Higginson were Justice George L. Ingraham, Mrs. Canolyn Kane Wright and Mrs. William P. Douglas. Mrs. Wright said last night:

"Doktor Muck's pro-German proclivities are such that I do not believe he should be allowed to lead any American orchestra during the war."

Doktor Muck's troubles date from the time last autumn, when Providence refused to permit him to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra there unless he play the national anthem, and in an interview with Boston reporters he was quoted as saying:

"To hell with your flag and your national anthem. It is not fit to be played in any artistic program."

From PUBLIC LEDGER
Address: Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 18 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN FINAL CONCERT

Its Last Program of the Season Includes but Two Compositions, Admirably Performed

PROGRAM

Brahms.....Third Symphony in F
Rimsky-Korsakoff .....
Symphonic Suite, "Scheherazade"

The Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy last evening said farewell for the current season—its thirty-third in Philadelphia—to the usual large audience, an audience which the concert found in an extremely cordial temper. The national anthem as the prelude to the program was played in a heartless and perfunctory way, and the proper length of some of the notes was disregarded. The remainder of the concert, consisting of the Third Symphony of Brahms and the "Scheherazade" suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff, was played in an admirable and an inspiring fashion. The present personnel of the orchestra contains four names (if one includes the organist and the librarian) which are distinctively English or American. Must one have an all-American orchestra in order to have an all-American anthem played in an all-American way? The name of American citizen is sometimes mere camouflage for the acquisitive instinct which takes the dollar and laughs at the one who pays it.

Dr. Karl Muck has a genius for leading an orchestra, if not for following a sometimes insufficiently assertive public opinion. The Brahms symphony was read with noble dignity, an appealing pensiveness in the andante, a refined accentuation of light and shade everywhere, a subtle and mercurial sense of the values of accents, nuances and delicate breathings. The players were called upon to rise at the close. Since the day when Brahms was a byword and a hissing the public has seen a great light.

The gorgeous music of "Scheherazade" had not been given time to cool off since our own orchestra played it on Friday and Saturday last. Why should it be played again so soon? Anton Witek's solo violin had its say with eloquence tender and true to the top of the fingerboard on the E string. There could be no manner of doubt as to the shipwreck upon the magnetic rock. The instruments seemed alive and on fire in one magnificent climax after another. The little relieving dancing-ditty was exquisitely handled. The flute did wonderful work, and honorable mention should go to the harp and to others.

F. L. W.

From RECORD
Philadelphia, Pa.

BOSTON SEASON ENDS

Dr. Muck's Baton Wielded Over Fine Orchestral Body.

After a rather disturbed season, beginning with the contretemps which arose regarding the playing of the national anthem and further augmented by the law forbidding the transportation of aliens which necessitated the omission of the December concert, the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought its Philadelphia series of concerts to a close in the Academy of Music last night. As usual, there was a "capacity" audience, and one which through its appreciative applause, left no doubt of the regard entertained for Dr. Muck and the musicians of his superb organization. A rather unusual combination, the brilliant, colorful "Scheherazade" of Rimsky-Korsakoff and the Brahms' F major Symphony, proved enjoyable when heard on the same program, the Orientalism of the Korsakoff work being a splendid contrast for the highly conceived and more classic character of the symphony. Probably, too, Dr. Muck, in playing the "Scheherzade," had a desire to end the season with a display of the various choirs of his orchestra. The exhibition of style and musicianship given last night must certainly have satisfied even his exacting mind since it was a revelation of the individual capacity of the musicians, which did not fail to arouse the keenest appreciation in the audience.

Despite the rhythmic and melodic beauty of the Oriental Suite, it would have been more enjoyable if it came less associated with its interpretation by the Philadelphia Orchestra last week. There should be some system practiced by leaders of orchestras to prevent the repetition of symphonies and other elaborate works at such short intervals.

The Brahms F major Symphony, one of the most popular of symphonic works, was beautifully played, and left no doubt of Dr. Muck's supremacy as an interpreter.

From POST
Address New York City
MAR 12 1918

MRS. JAY DEFENDS ATTACK ON MUCK

Others Uphold Symphony Orchestra Conductor

NO CHARGES OF WRONG DOING

Manager of Carnegie Hall Will Take No Action—Last Concerts of the Season.

Opposition to the appearance here of Dr. Karl Muck, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Carnegie Hall, on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, continued to develop to-day, according to Mrs. William Jay, of 850 Park Avenue, who is leading a campaign among subscribers to the symphony concerts, with a view of preventing the presence of Dr. Muck as leader of the orchestra. Mrs. Jay said she believed the steps she had under consideration would be effective in keeping Dr. Muck from appearing with the orchestra, but she would not make known her plans until late this afternoon or to-morrow.

On the other hand, it was pointed out by other persons in this city interested in music that the concerts in question were the last of the season; that Dr. Muck had played in the others here this winter without objection; that there were no charges against him of objectionable conduct in this country, and that to discriminate against him would be to stigmatize an artist of recognized standing simply on the ground of nationality.

At Carnegie Hall C. C. Smith, manager of the building, said that he knew nothing of the proposed plan to block the appearance of Dr. Muck further than what he had read in the newspapers. As representative of the lessors of the auditorium he said nothing would be done by him to prevent Dr. Muck from conducting the orchestra, and so far as he knew the concerts would be held as announced.

QUESTION OF PERMIT.

Whether an official bar will be raised against the appearance of Dr. Muck is not known. Under the law John F. Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses, has the right to refuse a permit for any performance that is against the public welfare, and it is conceivable that he could act on this ground. Whether he will do so, however, is a question Mr. Gilchrist would not answer this morning.

Mrs. Jay at her home said she had received numerous telephone messages from all parts of the city and a great many letters giving her encouragement in her opposition to Dr. Muck.

"I am a subscriber to the Boston Symphony concerts," said Mrs. Jay, "but I have not attended a single concert this season because of the presence in the orchestra of Dr. Muck. My silent protest has continued up to the present, but now I believe it is necessary to come out in open opposition, and many of the other subscribers are joining me in my campaign. The people are being aroused against this man by the newspapers, and I believe that mere force of public opinion will prevent Major Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra, from permitting Dr. Muck to appear here.

"I am told that the performances of the orchestra here this winter have been largely attended by pro-Germans, and I sometimes wonder whether this is an American city. Certainly Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Springfield, and Detroit have shown their Americanism by refusing to have Dr. Muck appear with the orchestra in those cities.

TICKETS FOR SOLDIERS.

"Only a few minutes ago a man in Brooklyn called me on the telephone and said he understood that the management of the orchestra was distributing tickets amnk soldiers and sailors. This I think the Secret Service should stop. It is not right that our soldiers should be permitted to attend such a performance."

The concerts this week against which Mrs. Jay has protested are the last of the season's series. Tickets, it is said, are not on general sale because the seats were practically all sold last fall by subscription, excepting those in sections of the house which could not very well be disposed of by this method. At Carnegie Hall it was said that the audiences this season have been no different, so far as could be judged, from those of other seasons.

None of the representatives of the orchestra could be seen this morning because they had not returned from Philadelphia, where a concert was given last night. The only word from those directing the organization was a letter by Major Higginson to Mrs. Jay, dater March 7, which Mrs. Jay made public last night. This letter was in reply to a protest made by Mrs. Jay against the appearance of Dr. Muck, and it read as follows:

"I have your letter of March 7. It seems idle to me to carry on this correspondence. As regards the act of 'Trading with the Enemy,' I sought in person instructions from the Department of Justice, at Washington, and have obeyed those instructions with care."

REDUCTION RATIO

13x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A4

A5

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

TRIBUNE
ess: New York City
MAR 13 1918

Dr. W. T. Manning Favors Ban on Muck Orchestra

Trinity Rector Writes From Camp Upton Concert Should Be Prohibited

Protests Are Growing

No Men in Uniform to Accept Tickets for Brooklyn Recital

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Old Trinity, now serving as temporary chaplain at Camp Upton, has added his voice to the demand which Mrs. William Jay and others are making that Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, be prohibited from appearing at the concert his organization plans to give in Brooklyn Friday evening.

In a letter to The Tribune from the National Army cantonment Dr. Manning says:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

All Our Principles at Stake

"We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them, and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defence, are being assailed by liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other places, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Meanwhile, Mrs. Jay and other aroused subscribers are still threatening to play their two "trump cards" against Dr. Muck if he insists on appearing in Brooklyn.

Uniforms To Be Missed

Mrs. Jay announced yesterday that hereafter no men in uniform would be present at the concerts. At former entertainments, she alleged, soldiers and sailors were admitted free, so that the entertainments could be given under the guise of patriotism.

She said yesterday that she had communicated with Rear Admiral Usher, at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and Major General Mann, at Governor's Island, and that both officers had acceded to her request that henceforth men in uniform should not be allowed to accept free tickets for the concerts.

"There can be no halfway measures in the Muck case," Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby, of 29 Washington Square, said yesterday. "We are ignoring the most alarming menace, an attitude which is ignoble for a nation to possess."

G. Glen Gould, of 131 West Seventy-ninth Street, termed the prospective appearance of Dr. Muck "a matter of shame and humiliation."

"The people of New York should hide their faces," Dr. H. D. Fairbairn, of 249 McDonough Street, Brooklyn, a subscriber to the concerts, said yesterday. "Like Esau who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, we have sold our freedom to Dr. Muck and his orchestra of twenty-three aliens."

HERALD
ess: New York City
MAR 17 1918

BROOKLYN BARS DOKTOR MUCK AND HIS ENEMY ALIENS

Twelve Blind Children in Silent Protest at New York Concert—Direktor to Resign.

Brooklyn yesterday struck the final blow at the hopes of Doktor Karl Muck, enemy alien and critic of "The Star Spangled Banner," by serving notice to him that its halls had been barred to him and the Boston Symphony Orchestra as long as he is associated with it.

By this action Brooklyn added one more important city to the list of those from which Doktor Muck is officially barred and probably brought to a sudden conclusion his American career. It was admitted by a close associate of the Prussian direktor last night that he had at last succumbed to the growing storm of criticism of his actions and would resign as leader of the Boston orchestra at once.

The resignation, however, is looked upon as only a detail in the belated victory of the patriotic men and women who have, by causing him to be barred from city after city, so limited his movements that he soon would have been compelled to give his concerts in Boston alone.

Six Cities Raise "Keep Out" Sign.

Incidentally, Brooklyn's action in driving out the Prussian musician is accepted as a half vindication of New York for its failure to close its municipal doors to him sooner. By forcing Muck's retirement from the orchestra further moves against him here are not expected to be necessary.

Should Muck reconsider his decision to drop out of the Boston Orchestra by the resignation route his movements in the future would be cramped by the appearance of "Keep out" signs over the city gates of

Washington,	Baltimore,
Detroit,	Pittsburg,
Brooklyn,	Springfield, Mass.

Moreover, the wholesale criticisms attending the appearance of the enemy alien, who is in complete sympathy with the war leaders of Germany, as the honored guest of this country has been so bitter in other cities that they have voluntarily been dropped from the itinerary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Officially, these cities have been listed by officers of the orchestra as "unprofitable." Privately, however, they admit that the force of public opinion has driven Muck and his twenty-three enemy aliens out.

Doktor Muck Silent on Action.

Direktor Muck was waving his baton at what probably was his last appearance in New York yesterday afternoon when he heard the news of the action taken by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. He made no comment, however, and officers of the orchestra refused to say what would be done by them in recognition of this fresh demand for the retirement of Muck.

Although the action of the institute's trustees was taken last Wednesday afternoon at a secret meeting, it was not made public until yesterday in order that it might not interfere with the already scheduled Muck concert Friday night.

The attitude of the trustees was made known in the form of these resolutions, unanimously adopted:—

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

Suggests New Leader.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the institute, immediately sent a letter to Major N. L. Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra, informing him of the action and calling upon him to find an American leader, or at least one who would not be objectionable to the public as an enemy of the country.

Blind Children in Silent Protest.

The audience that attended the orchestra's final appearance here at Carnegie Hall was confronted with a silent protest against Muck's appearance that attracted more attention than did the much criticised Prussian himself.

A few minutes before the time set for the appearance of Muck upon the platform an automobile drove up and set down upon the sidewalk twelve blind children, across whose breasts were pinned large American flags. The children had been brought from the Lighthouse, a home for the sightless, for the double purpose of attracting attention to the protests and to permit them to enjoy the music.

When Doktor Muck strode upon the platform for the last concert he will conduct here his eyes were greeted by the flags upon the breasts of the twelve children.

"It simply was a method of calling attention to the fact that there were many persons who did not approve of the continued appearance of this man Muck," said Mrs. Jay. "We have been opposed to anything in the way of a demonstration that might be construed as a violation of the law or of good taste.

"I am greatly pleased with the conclusion of the opposition against Doktor Muck. He is through now and he, as well as all other enemy aliens, have learned that they cannot flaunt their pro-German sentiments in this country, as Muck did."

The successful campaign against the musical Prussian was the subject of numerous letters, telegrams and telephone messages to the HERALD and to Mrs. Jay. The view of foreign born American citizens was set forth by James V. Donnaruma, editor and publisher of the Gazette del Massachusetts, an Italian newspaper published in Boston, in which he said:—

Boston Editor's Comment.

"I wish to congratulate the New York people for having awakened at last to the imposition of Colonel Higginson and Manager Charles E. Ellis, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in continuing to have Dr. Karl Muck as director of said orchestra. Such methods as these two gentlemen are using would certainly not be tolerated in any other nation in the world and ought not to be allowed to continue here in America. At times I can hardly believe present conditions in reference to the Symphony Orchestra are true. I am picturing an American at this time, protected by two Germans, leading an orchestra in Germany. I am picturing a mob burning alive the American director and his backers."

Immediately after yesterday's concert Doktor Muck, Major Higginson and other officers of the orchestra returned to Boston. In reply to reports that the orchestra was about to go through a reorganization that would eliminate not only Muck but the other enemy aliens upon it representatives of the orchestra refused to make any comment.

There is one more concert on the orchestra's programme, to be played in Boston. This appearance by Doktor Muck is expected to be his last in this country and the conclusion of his American career.

m EVENING SUN
ress: New York City
MAR 12 1918

The Star Spangled Banner.

The war practice of giving "The Star Spangled Banner" at every performance in our playhouses presents an interesting opportunity to the musical and unmusical alike to observe the differences of meaning and inspiration that may be imparted to a melody by its setting and its playing. The great song is played in as many different ways, we believe, as there are orchestras and conductors. It is always fine; in spite of foolish talk the air is noble and appealing; but it varies in beauty and thrill according to the interpretation, and in an extraordinary degree.

It would be tiresome to dwell on the rendering given by the average theatre band. It is usually wholesome and sincere without any very distinguished artistry or temperamental fire. The same may be said of some of the great musical organizations. The Philharmonic, for instance, has a workmanlike arrangement which it goes through earnestly as a duty too solemn to be mixed with anything like enthusiasm. Dr. KARL MUCK and his splendid group of players also do their duty to the flag with decorous restraint and conscientious accuracy, but without any notable display of emotion. The Chicago Opera Company orchestra made rather a business of it, like grace before meat.

Two versions, however, with which the public have now become very familiar, take the playing of the National Anthem out of the range of the perfunctory and lift its vibrations from the mere atmosphere up into the realms of the ether. The Metropolitan Opera House is happy in a score which must have been written by one who truly felt the inspiration of the flag and who loved it and all that it represents. The instrumentation, which is delicate without being in the least weak, seems to picture in harmoniously blended tone colors the blessings for which the Star Spangled Banner stands as the symbol to mankind. The climax is reached in a screaming trumpet note of piercing sweetness, which corresponds with the word "Free"—"the Land of the Free"—in the verbal text. It can hardly be called an eagle cry, for it is too mellow and golden in its quality; but it has in it challenge and defiance, as well as exultation: it expresses pride, contentment, thanksgiving and at the same time an unbounded courage and resolution.

But perhaps the best rendering of all, particularly in time of war, is that of Mr. WALTER DAMROSCH and his Symphony Orchestra. It is full chested and full voiced, manly, soldierly, fiery, aggressive, attacking the ear with shrilling reeds and loud proclaiming brass, while the roll and beat of the drums throng the veins of the auditors with quickening pulsations. The excitement of the music and the hearers grow together to the climax, when the tension of the audience relieves itself always in a burst of applause which has nothing of mere convention about it.

This arrangement would be perfect if Mr. DAMROSCH could add to it the fine trumpet scream of the Metropolitan. What is more, the way he conducts it is worth witnessing. Mr. DAMROSCH stands facing the audience and as he wields his baton he has the air of a high priest officiating at a great religious function—and so he is, for the moment. More people sing the anthem along with his orchestra than anywhere else in New York and the number who do grows every week.

PUBLIC LEDGER
Philadelphia, Pa.
MAR 12 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY ENDS ITS SEASON

Doctor Muck Leads His Men in Splendid Performance of Colorful Program

Two compositions comprised the program of the last concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which closed its season at the Academy of Music last night. Brahms's "Symphony No. 3 in F major" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic suite, "Scheherazade"—the latter heard at last week's Philadelphia Orchestra concerts—was the abbreviated program which brought an abbreviated season to an end. Out of the turbulent beginnings of a musical year, which robbed Philadelphia of one of the five concerts which the management deigns to bestow upon us each season, was evolved one of the most joyful repertoires in the annals of this city, and the two offerings last night were among the happiest.

Last night's program is familiar to Philadelphians in all (or both) its details. The heroic vigor of the first and last movements of the symphony, and the never-staling melodies of the "andante" and third movement combine to give this masterpiece a universal appeal, while the musicianly attributes of the score place it among the greatest products of Brahms's genius. Color and emotional stimulation characterize the "Scheherazade" suite, as indeed all of Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Doctor Muck read the score with an almost uncanny ability to discover hidden melodic phrases and bizarre effects which somehow have escaped unnoticed hitherto. The mystic ellipsing and circling of his magical right arm brought forth results such as even the heroes of the "Arabian Nights" might well have wondered at.

The orchestra played splendidly. After a rather uninteresting performance of the first movement of the symphony the personality of the conductor gradually permeated into the individual musicians until the result changed the concert into one of the best the orchestra has given here. The wood-winds, always superb, were particularly fine last night. The storm scene in the last movement of "Scheherazade," as played last night, was one of the most effective in musical literature. Doctor Muck's reading showed it to be the equal, at least, of the storm scene in the "Flying Dutchman" and the even better-known "William Tell."

As a final commentary on the artistic excellence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is interesting to note that, although the scores of the program called for only one harp, the organization's two harps played in the "Star Spangled Banner." Although it must be admitted that the playing of the national anthem—with the exception of the last two bars up to the concluding measures—was weak, still the system which will demand a musician to travel with the orchestra just for the sake of the effect a few arpeggios or notes will produce is greatly to be admired. It is even related that the orchestra, some years ago, carried an auxiliary player on a 1000-mile trip just to crash the cymbals once.

V. H. L.

ENQUIRER
ress: Philadelphia, Pa.

BRAHMS THIRD SYMPHONY

Feature of Boston Orchestra's Concert at the Academy Last Night

There were only two numbers on the programme presented before an audience of the usual generous dimensions at the Academy of Music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening, and one of these by another of those curious coincidences which are so frequent, so regrettable and so mysterious, was the "Scheherazade" suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff which, it will be remembered, was played by our own Philadelphia Orchestra last week.

The symphony was the one by Brahms in F major, No. 3, which, while the least familiar and the least popular in the series to which it belongs, is still a work of great interest and beauty, in whose conception and construction the genius of its composer is worthily and impressively displayed. Under Dr. Muck's sympathetic and illuminative direction it was most admirably and eloquently interpreted. It is music of which Dr. Muck is an admittedly authoritative exponent and his reading of it was one that clearly elucidated its complexities and communicated a full measure of its value and significance.

The orchestra, which was in fine form, played it con amore with its accustomed brilliancy of execution and with that lovely quality of tone for which it deservedly enjoys so high a reputation. It was no less praiseworthy and effective in its performance of the "Scheherazade" in which due advantage was taken of the opportunities for obligato instruments which Rimsky-Korsakoff's highly colored and fascinating score affords and the audience showed its appreciation by the heartiness of its repeated applause.

STANDARD UNION
s: Brooklyn, N. Y. 38
MAR 13 1918

RENEW FIGHT TO BAR DR. MUCK'S CONCERT

Seventy Brooklynites Sign Petition Addressed to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

EVENT FIXED FOR FRIDAY.

Crowell Hadden, of Philharmonic Society, Heads Move.

The renewed fight to bar Karl Muck from concert platforms has reached Brooklyn, it was learned today. He is scheduled to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fifth and last programme of the season's series Friday night at the Academy of Music. In the meantime Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank and of the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn, has been circulating petitions to have the license for the event revoked in case Dr. Muck insists on conducting.

"So far everybody approached has signed," said Mr. Hadden to-day. "Some of them wish they could put Muck in jail."

Mr. Hadden said he was asked to take charge of the petition in Brooklyn by Mrs. William Jay, of Manhattan, who inaugurated the campaign against Muck in that borough. The protest, to which the signatures of seventy prominent Brooklynites are attached, is addressed to J. F. Gilchrist, Commissioner of Licenses of the City of New York, and reads:

"We, the undersigned, protest against Dr Carl Muck coming to this town as we regard him a dangerous alien, having been a close friend of Von Bernstorff and is a known representative of the Kaiser, as he acknowledges in 'Who Is Who of 1916 and 1917.'"

Mr. Hadden in obtaining the signatures to the petition, did not confine his efforts to subscribers to the concert, it was stated.

"Muck is a dangerous alien," said Mr. Hadden, "and it is not fair to our fighting men to encourage within the borders of our domain that very thing which they are dying to overcome. We know what von Bernstorff is—well, there is Muck's indictment. We are not protesting merely because he is a German. We consider him a dangerous enemy alien.

"We have enough of them in hiding whom we are trying to locate and punish, and when we get a chance to fix a friend, a close friend of Von Bernstorff, we should take advantage of it."

Mr. Hadden expects to secure many more names before the petition is presented to the Commissioner.

REDUCTION RATIO

12x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

AMERICAN

ss: New York City. 39

MAR 14 1918

DR. MUCK DARED TO SHOW COLORS

Mrs. Jay Says Leader Must Answer or Cannot Direct Orchestra To-night.

Unless Dr. Karl Muck is willing to prove to-day that he is a Swiss, not a German citizen, a strong effort will be made to keep him from directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall.

The question of the famous musician's feeling toward America was first raised when it was charged he refused, several months ago, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Boston. Since then he has given eight concerts in New York, at all of which he played the national anthem. The orchestra is scheduled for two concerts in Carnegie Hall—one to-night and one Saturday afternoon.

The Department of Justice and the Commissioner of Licenses were appealed to yesterday to halt Dr. Muck's performance to-night. This appeal was made by subscribers to the Boston orchestra's concerts here, who had as their spokesman Mrs. William Jay, wealthy society woman, of No. 850 Park avenue.

Commissioner of Licenses Gilchrist took no action on Mrs. Jay's request, but greater hope was extended at the office of the Department of Justice. Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, who accompanied Mrs. Jay to the office, said:

"I do not think Dr. Muck will appear here to-morrow night. I have good reason to believe that the wishes of New York citizens, who believe Dr. Muck is pro-German, will be properly interpreted by the authorities to-day."

Mrs. Jay, in an open letter to the orchestra leader, yesterday asked these questions:

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you answer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

From Boston yesterday came a statement from Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Major Higginson said:

"Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood and bears Swiss citizenship and passport papers to-day.

"I put the case before the Department of Justice in Washington, and received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia."

EVENING WORLD

ess: New York City.

MAR 14 1918

FEDERAL AGENTS TO HEAR ENEMY ALIEN CONCERT

Police Also Prepared for Any Situation That May Arise Over Dr. Muck To-Night.

Agents of the United States Government will attend the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, the German conductor who has again come into the limelight through renewed protests against enemy aliens appearing on the American stage.

Many complaints have been made, and many persons have urged that the concert be prevented. But it was made finally clear to-day that there would be no interference.

Acting Chief Inspector of Police Daly said an extra force of police would be present at Carnegie Hall to handle any situation that might arise.

An Evening World reporter, seeking a reply to Mrs. Jay's letter, was referred to Charles A. Ellis as "Dr. Muck's representative."

"We are not answering any questions of Mrs. Jay," said Ellis. "But Dr. Muck is not a Prussian; he never was an official of the German Government; he is a citizen of Germany. He was born

s: New York City.

MAR 13 1918

Dr. Manning Joins in New Effort to Silence Muck

Mrs. William Jay Leads Crusade Against Boston Symphony Conductor.

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, yesterday joined the crusade against the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall to-morrow night.

A report that tickets for the concert were being distributed among soldiers and sailors was taken by Mrs. William Jay to the attention of Admiral Usher at the Navy Yard and General Mann at Governors Island. She declared that both told her they would issue an order prohibiting uniformed men from accepting free tickets.

Dr. Manning, who is serving as a chaplain at Camp Upton, expressed strong approval of the efforts being made by Mrs. Jay, ex-Judge George L. Ingraham and others to convince Dr. Muck that, as an enemy alien, he should refrain from appearing before the public. He said:

"We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defense, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Others who expressed opposition to Dr. Muck's appearance were Richard M. Hurd, chairman of the trustees of the American Defense Society David Bispham, the baritone, and Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby. Mrs Crosby wrote:

"There can be no half measures about the Muck case. It is either loyalty or treason. Is there no possibility of awakening in the minds of those in power the vital need of having justice done by public handling of spies until they are dealt with as other nations treat them?"

Mrs. Jay, who is leading the agitation, expressed amazement that any sensitive musician should persist in thrusting himself before the public under the circumstances.

"Unless," she added, "he were actuated by some deeper motive than merely earning his living."

EVENING MAIL

ress: New York City

TRINITY RECTOR OPPOSES DR. MUCK

Rev. Dr. Manning, Now Army Chaplain, Joins in Protest.

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is serving as chaplain with the 302d United States Engineers at Camp Upton, does not want Dr. Karl Muck to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its concert scheduled for to-morrow night at Carnegie Hall.

Any tolerance of Dr. Muck, the director of the orchestra, who, it is claimed, is an avowed friend of the German cause, is condemned by Dr. Manning in a letter which he writes to Mrs. William Jay. Dr. Manning says in his letter:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defense, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the kaiser."

Mrs. Jay's opposition to Dr. Muck, commencing at the time when he refused to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is based, she says, on the fact that he is a subject of the Kaiser and formerly a favorite musical director in Berlin.

SUN

ess: New York City.

MAR 13 191

DR. MANNING JOINS MUCK'S OPPONENTS

Trinity's Rector Enters Fight to Prevent Carnegie Hall Appearance.

TOLERANCE CONDEMNED

Says Presence of Prussian at Concert "Is Not Fitting Nor Decent."

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is serving as chaplain with the 302d United States Engineers at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., yesterday entered the fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from conducting at the last Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for to-morrow night at Carnegie Hall. In supporting the effort to have the Kaiser's court musician ousted Dr. Manning said:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defence, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Mrs. William Jay, who has led the attack on Dr. Muck, gave out letters yesterday from persons who have joined in the effort to prevent the German conductor's appearance Thursday night, and gossip in musical circles had it that steps will be taken to exclude him from the programme on that evening.

Rumor was rampant that soldiers and sailors have been given, or will be given, free tickets to the performance in an effort to make the audience seem patriotic. This, according to a subscriber to the symphony here in New York, has been done to further the propaganda in Germany and other countries that Dr. Muck's efforts are sanctioned in many quarters in the United States.

"It is beyond me," said Mrs. Jay, "that any sensitive musician can persist, in the face of the righteous indignation of Americans, to thrust himself before their presence unless he were actuated by some deeper motive than merely earning his living."

A letter from Mrs. Henry Aston Crosby of 29 Washington Square to Mrs. Jay was among those given out for her yesterday. It read:

"There can be no half measures about the Muck case. It is either loyalty or treason. I am particularly interested in the attitude you have assumed, as there is but a handful of women in Boston, my daughter, Mrs. Allan Forbes, being one, who love their country more than their music and who have been willing to give up the Symphony seats. Is there no possibility of awakening in the minds of those who are in power the all important and vital need and duty of having justice done by public handling of spies until they are dealt with as other nations treat them? W the ignoring the most alarming menace and it is an attitude which as a natio is ignoble."

TELEGRAM

New York City.

MAR 13 1918

Loyal Citizens Rally to Support of Mrs. Jay in Fight to Bar Dr. Muck

Patriotic Societies in New York Also Aroused and Action Is Expected to Prevent Kaiser's Music Master Conducting Concert in Carnegie Hall.

Loyal American citizens and patriotic societies in New York city are rallying to the support of Mrs. William Jay in her fight against allowing Dr. Karl Muck, the general music director of the Kaiser, to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert to-morrow night in Carnegie Hall.

Residents of New York from every walk of life—musicians, ministers of the gospel, physicians, lawyers, business men and artists—have united behind Mrs. Jay in loud protests against the flaunting of a representative of "Hun Kultur" here.

Mrs. Jay announced that to-day definite steps will be taken to have Dr. Muck barred from the auditoriums of the city. Already she has obtained from Admiral Usher, at the New York Navy Yard, and from General Mann, at Governor's Island, the promise that an order will be issued forbidding soldiers and sailors from attending the concert if it takes place, she declares.

Mrs. Jay sought this order when she learned that one of the parts of the Muck German propaganda was to fill vacant seats with men in the uniform of the United States by giving them free tickets to the concert, so it might seem that his appearance was approved by the fighters for freedom.

May Ask Schools' Aid.

Mrs. Jay also is considering asking schools like Miss Spence's, Miss Ely's and Miss Scoville's to allow their seats at the concert to remain empty as a form of protest.

W. T. Hornaday, trustee of the American Defence Society, has come forward in support of Mrs. Jay's fight, as have the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is now devoting all of his time to religious work at Camp Upton; Richard M. Hurd, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the American Defence Society; David Bispham, barytone; Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby and G. Glen Gould.

Referring to Dr. Muck as a "loyal subject of the Leper of Potsdam," Mr. Hornaday declares that if Dr. Muck leads his orchestra here New York will be "branded as a city of disloyalists." He advocates that the government answer his appearance here by taking over any hall in which it occurs and turning it into a munition warehouse.

Mr. Hurd, in declaring that the American Defence Society supports Mrs. Jay, expresses the opinion that Dr. Muck and all enemy aliens who have spoken against the United States should be interned.

Should Not Be Tolerated.

"While our boys are fighting at the front," says Dr. Manning, "in our defence and are being assailed by poison gas, liquid fire and other inventions of German Kultur, it is not fitting or decent at concerts or in any other places to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Speaking of Major N. L. Higginson, the financial backer and supporter of Dr. Muck, who boasts that the concert will be given with the royal Prussian music master as leader, Mrs. Crosby remarks:—

"Were it not for the accumulated years of Mr. Higginson his solicitude for the welfare of the 100 members of the Symphony Orchestra would be puerile."

"I am emphatically among that class of musicians," says Mr. Bispham, "who are convinced that men of the Muck stamp should not be tolerated in this country."

Mr. Gould, in expressing the hope that Mrs. Jay will win her fight, refers to the orchestra in which there are twenty-two enemy aliens aside from Dr. Muck as the "Boston Alien Enemy Orchestra."

STANDARD UNION

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Feeling Against Dr. Karl Muck.

There is a strong current of feeling against Dr. Karl Muck and in opposition to his public appearances as conductor of an orchestra of musicians.

The feeling is based upon the principle that love of country is paramount over a love for sweet sounds to the ear, and that the luxurious enjoyment of music is deeply wrong if it conflicts with patriotism.

Dr. Muck has been at pains to show by his manner a lack of sympathy with this country.

His heart is not with us. He may be the most marvelous musician in the world, but that fact, if true, only makes himself conspicuous and his conduct worth attention.

Major Higginson, the backer of the orchestra conducted by Dr. Muck, argues in favor of his conductor as if the point were whether the man has a legal right to make public appearances. The point is really that a large number of people have an uncomfortable feeling that hearing the orchestra, under Dr. Muck, involves some sort of disloyalty to the United States.

The situation is likely to lead to the retirement of Dr. Muck. There are other men who can lead orchestras well enough, and it would be better to have them than to keep pressing the conflict between the sentiment of patriotism and the liking for esthetic enjoyment. In the end, patriotism would be sure to win.

TRIBUNE

ress: New York City

MAR 14 1918

William Bayard Hale Vouches for Dr. Muck

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: In view of the agitation against Dr. Muck, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, promoted by a few patriotic ladies, I think it is perhaps due to you to be made acquainted with the following fact:

It so happens that in June, 1916, crossing the Atlantic on the steamship Frederik VIII, at Kirkwall, during the examination there, I exchanged a word or two with a lady who stood next to me, bearing a Swiss pass, which I saw and for a moment had in my hands. I did not know her. A day or two later, on deck, I learned that the lady was Mrs. Dr. Muck. She said to me: "Oh, yes! Certainly; although I am myself practically an American, I was born in Vienna, but I take the citizenship of my husband, who is and always has been a citizen of Switzerland."

I never met Dr. Muck until a couple of weeks ago, when after the last Symphony concert I had an opportunity of speaking to him. I mentioned the circumstance above narrated. Dr. Muck said (as accurately as I can remember) that although some question had been raised about his citizenship, he had not thought it necessary to make any public statement, because any one interested could easily learn on inquiry that he was and always had been a Swiss citizen. WM. BAYARD HALE.

New York, March 12, 1918.

[Karl Muck is considered an enemy alien by the Department of Justice. He was born in Bavaria before the latter territory became a part of the German Empire. He moved with his father to Switzerland when he was four years of age. He claims citizenship in Switzerland on the ground of residence there. However, by the terms of the enemy alien act, birth in territory now held by the Central Powers and failure to take out naturalization papers in the United States throw Muck into the enemy alien classification.—ED.]

From EVENING TELEGRAM

Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

Date MAR 13 1918

In attempting to plant the seed for this season's crop of American dollars, Dr. Muck is again finding the soil rather rough and stony.

Established: London, 1861; New York, 1884

AMERICAN

ss: New York City. 30

1918

DR. MUCK DARED TO SHOW COLORS

Mrs. Jay Says Leader Must Answer or Cannot Direct Orchestra To-night.

Unless Dr. Karl Muck is willing to prove to-day that he is a Swiss, not a German citizen, a strong effort will be made to keep him from directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night in Carnegie Hall.

The question of the famous musician's feeling toward America was first raised when it was charged he refused, several months ago, to play "The Star Spangled Banner" in Boston. Since then he has given eight concerts in New York, at all of which he played the national anthem. The orchestra is scheduled for two concerts in Carnegie Hall—one to-night and one Saturday afternoon.

The Department of Justice and the Commissioner of Licenses were appealed to yesterday to halt Dr. Muck's performance to-night. This appeal was made by subscribers to the Boston orchestra's concerts here, who had as their spokesman Mrs. William Jay, wealthy society woman, of No. 850 Park avenue.

Commissioner of Licenses Gilchrist took no action on Mrs. Jay's request, but greater hope was extended at the office of the Department of Justice. Richard Fletcher, editor of the Chronicle, who accompanied Mrs. Jay to the office, said:

"I do not think Dr. Muck will appear here to-morrow night. I have good reason to believe that the wishes of New York citizens, who believe Dr. Muck is pro-German, will be properly interpreted by the authorities to-day."

Mrs. Jay, in an open letter to the orchestra leader, yesterday asked these questions:

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship, will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you answer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from public musical life?"

From Boston yesterday came a statement from Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Major Higginson said:

"Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, was made a Swiss citizen in his childhood and bears Swiss citizenship and passport papers to-day.

"I put the case before the Department of Justice in Washington, and received leave to play anywhere in the United States except in the District of Columbia."

EVENING WORLD

ess: New York City.

MAR 14 1918

FEDERAL AGENTS TO HEAR ENEMY ALIEN CONCERT

Police Also Prepared for Any Situation That May Arise Over Dr. Muck To-Night.

Agents of the United States Government will attend the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to-night under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, the German conductor who has again come into the limelight through renewed protests against enemy aliens appearing on the American stage.

Many complaints have been made, and many persons have urged that the concert be prevented. But it was made finally clear to-day that there would be no interference.

Acting Chief Inspector of Police Daly said an extra force of police would be present at Carnegie Hall to handle any situation that might arise.

An Evening World reporter, seeking a reply to Mrs. Jay's letter, was referred to Charles A. Ellis as "Dr. Muck's representative."

"We are not answering any questions of Mrs. Jay," said Ellis. "But Dr. Muck is not a Prussian; he never was an official of the German Government; he is a citizen of Germany. He was born

s: New York City.

MAR 13 1918

Dr. Manning Joins in New Effort to Silence Muck

Mrs. William Jay Leads Crusade Against Boston Symphony Conductor.

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, yesterday joined the crusade against the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall to-morrow night.

A report that tickets for the concert were being distributed among soldiers and sailors was taken by Mrs. William Jay to the attention of Admiral Usher at the Navy Yard and General Mann at Governors Island. She declared that both told her they would issue an order prohibiting uniformed men from accepting free tickets.

Dr. Manning, who is serving as a chaplain at Camp Upton, expressed strong approval of the efforts being made by Mrs. Jay, ex-Judge George L. Ingraham and others to convince Dr. Muck that, as an enemy alien, he should refrain from appearing before the public. He said:

"We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defense, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Others who expressed opposition to Dr. Muck's appearance were Richard M. Hurd, chairman of the trustees of the American Defense Society David Bispham, the baritone, and Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby. Mrs Crosby wrote:

"There can be no half measures about the Muck case. It is either loyalty or treason. Is there no possibility of awakening in the minds of those in power the vital need of having justice done by public handling of spies until they are dealt with as other nations treat them?"

Mrs. Jay, who is leading the agitation, expressed amazement that any sensitive musician should persist in thrusting himself before the public under the circumstances.

"Unless," she added, "he were actuated by some deeper motive than merely earning his living."

n EVENING MAIL

ress: New York City

TRINITY RECTOR OPPOSES DR. MUCK

Rev. Dr. Manning, Now Army Chaplain, Joins in Protest.

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is serving as chaplain with the 302d United States Engineers at Camp Upton, does not want Dr. Karl Muck to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its concert scheduled for to-morrow night at Carnegie Hall.

Any tolerance of Dr. Muck, the director of the orchestra, who, it is claimed, is an avowed friend of the German cause, is condemned by Dr. Manning in a letter which he writes to Mrs. William Jay. Dr. Manning says in his letter:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defense, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the kaiser."

Mrs. Jay's opposition to Dr. Muck, commencing at the time when he refused to play the "Star-Spangled Banner" at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is based, she says, on the fact that he is a subject of the Kaiser and formerly a favorite musical director in Berlin.

SUN

ess: New York City.

MAR 13 1918

DR. MANNING JOINS MUCK'S OPPONENTS

Trinity's Rector Enters Fight to Prevent Carnegie Hall Appearance.

TOLERANCE CONDEMNED

Says Presence of Prussian at Concert "Is Not Fitting Nor Decent."

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is serving as chaplain with the 302d United States Engineers at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., yesterday entered the fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from conducting at the last Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for to-morrow night at Carnegie Hall. In supporting the effort to have the Kaiser's court musician ousted Dr. Manning said:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history, in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defence, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Mrs. William Jay, who has led the attack on Dr. Muck, gave out letters yesterday from persons who have joined in the effort to prevent the German conductor's appearance Thursday night, and gossip in musical circles had it that steps will be taken to exclude him from the programme on that evening.

Rumor was rampant that soldiers and sailors have been given, or will be given, free tickets to the performance in an effort to make the audience seem patrotic. This, according to a subscriber to the symphony here in New York, has been done to further the propaganda in Germany and other countries that Dr. Muck's efforts are sanctioned in many quarters in the United States.

"It is beyond me," said Mrs. Jay, "that any sensitive musician can persist, in the face of the righteous indignation of Americans, to thrust himself before their presence unless he were actuated by some deeper motive than merely earning his living."

A letter from Mrs. Henry Aston Crosby of 29 Washington Square to Mrs. Jay was among those given out for her yesterday. It read:

"There can be no half measures about the Muck case. It is either loyalty or treason. I am particularly interested in the attitude you have assumed, as there is but a handful of women in Boston, my daughter, Mrs. Allan Forbes, being one, who love their country more than their music and who have been willing to give up the Symphony seats. Is there no possibility of awakening in the minds of those who are in power the all important and vital need and duty of having justice done by public handling of spies until they are dealt with as other nations treat them? W the ignoring the most alarming menace and it is an attitude which as a natio is ignoble."

TELEGRAM

New York City.

MAR 13 1918

Loyal Citizens Rally to Support of Mrs. Jay in Fight to Bar Dr. Muck

Patriotic Societies in New York Also Aroused and Action Is Expected to Prevent Kaiser's Music Master Conducting Concert in Carnegie Hall.

Loyal American citizens and patriotic societies in New York city are rallying to the support of Mrs. William Jay in her fight against allowing Dr. Karl Muck, the general music director of the Kaiser, to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert to-morrow night in Carnegie Hall.

Residents of New York from every walk of life—musicians, ministers of the gospel, physicians, lawyers, business men and artists—have united behind Mrs. Jay in loud protests against the flaunting of a representative of "Hun Kultur" here.

Mrs. Jay announced that to-day definite steps will be taken to have Dr. Muck barred from the auditoriums of the city. Already she has obtained from Admiral Usher, at the New York Navy Yard, and from General Mann, at Governor's Island, the promise that an order will be issued forbidding soldiers and sailors from attending the concert if it takes place, she declares.

Mrs. Jay sought this order when she learned that one of the parts of the Muck German propaganda was to fill vacant seats with men in the uniform of the United States by giving them free tickets to the concert, so it might seem that his appearance was approved by the fighters for freedom.

May Ask Schools' Aid.

Mrs. Jay also is considering asking schools like Miss Spence's, Miss Ely's and Miss Scoville's to allow their seats at the concert to remain empty as a form of protest.

W. T. Hornaday, trustee of the American Defence Society, has come forward in support of Mrs. Jay's fight, as have the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is now devoting all of his time to religious work at Camp Upton; Richard M. Hurd, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the American Defence Society; David Bispham, barytone; Mrs. Henry Ashton Crosby and G. Glen Gould.

Referring to Dr. Muck as a "loyal subject of the Leper of Potsdam," Mr. Hornaday declares that if Dr. Muck leads his orchestra here New York will be "branded as a city of disloyalists." He advocates that the government answer his appearance here by taking over any hall in which it occurs and turning it into a munition warehouse.

Mr. Hurd, in declaring that the American Defence Society supports Mrs. Jay, expresses the opinion that Dr. Muck and all enemy aliens who have spoken against the United States should be interned.

Should Not Be Tolerated.

"While our boys are fighting at the front," says Dr. Manning, "in our defence and are being assailed by poison gas, liquid fire and other inventions of German Kultur, it is not fitting or decent at concerts, or in any other places to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Speaking of Major N. L. Higginson, the financial backer and supporter of Dr. Muck, who boasts that the concert will be given with the royal Prussian music master as leader, Mrs. Crosby remarks:—

"Were it not for the accumulated years of Mr. Higginson his solicitude for the welfare of the 100 members of the Symphony Orchestra would be puerile."

"I am emphatically among that class of musicians," says Mrs. Bispham, "who are convinced that men of the Muck stamp should not be tolerated in this country."

Mr. Gould, in expressing the hope that Mrs. Jay will win her fight, refers to the orchestra in which there are twenty-two enemy aliens aside from Dr. Muck as the "Boston Alien Enemy Orchestra."

STANDARD UNION

ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.

Feeling Against Dr. Karl Muck.

There is a strong current of feeling against Dr. Karl Muck and in opposition to his public appearances as conductor of an orchestra of musicians.

The feeling is based upon the principle that love of country is paramount over a love for sweet sounds to the ear, and that the luxurious enjoyment of music is deeply wrong if it conflicts with patriotism.

Dr. Muck has been at pains to show by his manner a lack of sympathy with this country.

His heart is not with us. He may be the most marvelous musician in the world, but that fact, if true, only makes himself conspicuous and his conduct worth attention.

Major Higginson, the backer of the orchestra conducted by Dr. Muck, argues in favor of his conductor as if the point were whether the man has a legal right to make public appearances. The point is really that a large number of people have an uncomfortable feeling that hearing the orchestra, under Dr. Muck, involves some sort of disloyalty to the United States.

The situation is likely to lead to the retirement of Dr. Muck. There are other men who can lead orchestras well enough, and it would be better to have them than to keep pressing the conflict between the sentiment of patriotism and the liking for esthetic enjoyment. In the end, patriotism would be sure to win.

From EVENING TELEGRAM

Address: Philadelphia, Pa.

Date MAR 13 1918

In attempting to plant the seed for this season's crop of American dollars, Dr. Muck is again finding the soil rather rough and stony.

Established: London, 1881; New York, 1884

TRIBUNE

ress: New York City

MAR 14 1918

William Bayard Hale Vouches for Dr. Muck

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: In view of the agitation against Dr. Muck, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, promoted by a few patriotic ladies, I think it is perhaps due to you to be made acquainted with the following fact:

It so happens that in June, 1916, crossing the Atlantic on the steamship Frederik VIII, at Kirkwall, during the examination there, I exchanged a word or two with a lady who stood next to me, bearing a Swiss pass, which I saw and for a moment had in my hands. I did not know her. A day or two later, on deck, I learned that the lady was Mrs. Dr. Muck. She said to me: "Oh, yes! Certainly; although I am myself practically an American, I was born in Vienna, but I take the citizenship of my husband, who is and always has been a citizen of Switzerland."

I never met Dr. Muck until a couple of weeks ago, when after the last Symphony concert I had an opportunity of speaking to him. I mentioned the circumstance above narrated. Dr. Muck said (as accurately as I can remember) that although some question had been raised about his citizenship, he had not thought it necessary to make any public statement, because any one interested could easily learn on inquiry that he was and always had been a Swiss citizen. WM. BAYARD HALE.

New York, March 12, 1918.

[Karl Muck is considered an enemy alien by the Department of Justice. He was born in Bavaria before the latter territory became a part of the German Empire. He moved with his father to Switzerland when he was four years of age. He claims citizenship in Switzerland on the ground of residence there. However, by the terms of the enemy alien act, birth in territory now held by the Central Powers and failure to take out naturalization papers in the United States throw Muck into the enemy alien classification.—ED.]

From EVENING GLOBE
Address: New York City
Date

DR. MUCK ET AL.

The removal of Dr. Muck from the field of public entertainment would entail more complications and consequences than its energetic promoters seem to foresee. The first point that occurs to any sober person is, why remove Dr. Muck, indisputably a great artist, when a battalion of alien enemies, and non-alien enemies, some of whom are great artists, but some of whom emphatically are not, go scot free?

Art has been used as hostile camouflage in every Allied country, and above all in our own country, throughout the war. Art in a sense has nothing to do with politics or war, but in a sense it has, especially since the Germans have cunningly and relentlessly sought to mobilize its power and protection in their behalf. To win this war every loyal man is ready for every sacrifice. To the man going over the top the sacrifice of artistic enjoyment must seem about the pettiest of deprivations. To us behind the lines it ought to seem not a jot less petty.

So if Dr. Muck must be sacrificed we should make up our minds to face a Muckless future with fortitude and calm. It is by no means necessary that that magnificent institution the Boston Symphony Orchestra should suffer irreparably, let alone perish, because it loses an excellent conductor In Eugène Ysaye or in Arturo Toscanini, or perhaps in Sir Henry Wood, the Boston orchestra could find men devoted to the Allied cause who are worthy to maintain its high musical tradition.

But in the name of justice and common sense Dr. Muck ought not to be singled out as a scapegoat for the whole tribe of pro-German musicians. If a systematic internment of every alien enemy and a systematic imprisonment of every non-alien enemy is to be carried through, Dr. Muck must certainly go in company with his spiritual brethren. But what an arrant absurdity to see Dr. Muck removed as enemy and a man installed in his place no less pro-German in sympathy and without the excuse of a German allegiance for his anti-American bias!

Of course it is possible to exaggerate the importance of the moral and political ideas entertained by a group of musicians. But let us not forget that in this war there are musicians who, like I. J. Paderewski, have stood out as great patriots, great champions of humanity, and that innumerable others—Monteux, Muratore, Thibaud, Lortat spring to mind—have answered the call of their country and of the world as simply as a farm lad. The spiritual element of warfare in a just cause is the supreme element. The twaddle about the complete isolation of art is childish. Art and Life—we may not compromise or dishonor high issues—are Siamese twins. Sacrifice must be made as unquestioningly in artistic matters as in any other, and no sacrifice costs less. But in making it let us avoid unnecessary hypocrisy. Let us not depose and intern a Karl Muck and leave a horde of lesser sympathizers with our enemy vociferously and poisonously at large.

TRIBUNE
ss: New York City
MAR 14 1918

Dr. Muck

Major Henry L. Higginson deserves every consideration from the people not merely of New York, but of the whole country. His steadfast support of the Boston Symphony has given us one of the three or four premier orchestras of the world.

For this we stand deeply in his debt. We wish there were more rich men like him.

Nor could there be any doubt or question that Major Higginson is as loyal a supporter of the government as any one in the United States. But in his natural desire to maintain intact an organization which has cost him so much and so many years to develop we think he a little forgets.

We are at war. Some time, some day, when our dead come home, this fact will become to our people an overshadowing reality. To Major Higginson as well.

We are at war, and at war with the German nation and the German people. Dr. Muck is German born, German bred and of intensely German sympathies. And it is no secret that his contempt for Americans, and especially the people of New York, is something engaging and profound.

Had Dr. Muck a little more sensitiveness, a little less willingness to accept American dollars, he would not be here. He has no purpose here to remain, no desire to become one of the thousands of loyal German-Americans.

His home is in Germany; thither he will soon return, and there, until the German people have absolved themselves before the world, we beg leave to think he should remain.

---

n MORNING TELEGRAPH
ress: New York City
MAR 14 1918

MUCK TO CONDUC DESPITE PROTEST

Leader of Boston Symphony Orch tra Will "Do His Duty," His Manager States.

MRS. JAY WRITES LETTER

Despite the protests that have been lodged against Dr. Karl Muck on the grounds that he is an enemy alien and objectionable as such to American audiences, he will conduct the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall to-night.

Dr. Muck was in the city yesterday, but when spoken to over the telephone at his hotel he referred all questions to his manager, Mr. Ellis, refusing to discuss the matter at all.

Mr. Ellis, speaking on behalf of Dr. Muck, said:

"Inasmuch as the house has been subscribed for and is entirely sold out, Dr. Muck, will, of course, conduct the concert. It is his obvious duty to do so, and I can see no reason why he should not."

Denies Muck's Disdain of U. S.

Mr. Ellis last night denied the many stories that have been current as to Dr. Muck's disdain of the United States. He also denied that tickets had been given to the soldiers for Dr. Muck's concert in Brooklyn ,inasmuch as on the occasion of the Boston Orchestra leader's last appearance every ticket in the house was sold. He also stated that the sale of the seats was in the charge of the Brooklyn Institute, at which the concert was given.

Last night Mrs. Jay, who has been one of the leaders in the general movement against Dr. Muck, issued an open letter in which she asks him to either affirm or deny the accusations that have been made against him, and to state exactly just what country he owes allegiance to—Switzerland or Germany. Dr. Muck has never at any time attempted to make these points clear to the public nor tried to clear the charges that have been made against him.

Asks Doktor Questions.

The letter which is signed by Mrs. Jay follows:

"Sir—As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra.

"There has been brought to my attention an excerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of the Chronicle, dated October 23, 1917. There was this reference to you:

"'Bear in mind that Doktor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends there.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from public, musical life?"

From POST
Address New York City
Date MAR 14 1918

EXTRA POLICE FOR DR. MUCK'S CONCERT

Carnegie Hall Will Be Well Guarded To-night

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IN TOWN

License Commissioner Gilchrist Decides that He Cannot Interfere with the Performance.

Coincident with the arrival in New York to-day, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, John Daly, acting chief inspector of police, issued a statement saying that an extra detail of policemen would be assigned to Carnegie Hall, where the Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, is to give a concert to-night.

Inspector Daly made this announcement when asked whether any action, if any, would be taken by the Police Department in view of the objection raised against the appearance of Dr. Muck by Mrs. William Jay and others. The extra policemen will be on hand as a precautionary measure to cope with any situation that may arise.

Members of the orchestra arrived here this morning, and Messrs. Ellis and Vernon, of the managing force, went to the Hotel St. Regis. They could not be seen, but it is understood that the opposition to the appearance of Dr. Muck has not caused them to change their plans for the concerts to-night and to-morrow afternoon.

The managers of Carnegie Hall asserted that they could not prevent to-night's concert without exposing themselves to a suit, as they had made a contract for a stipulated number of concerts there. If the concert offended the dignity or peace of New York, action lay with John F. Gilchrist, the License Commissioner, they said. Commissioner Gilchrist, when Mrs. Jay visited him in reference to the concert said:

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra does not need a special license for its concert. The annual license issued to the hall by the city covers all public entertainments. This department at present sees no reason why it should prevent Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra. There is no evidence that the law is being violated or the public peace or decency endangered . If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or the nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt action will be taken. If Dr. Muck is an enemy alien that comes under Federal jurisdiction and is out of my hands entirely."

It is understood thaht Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the orchestra, will attend the concert to-night.

---

om AMERICAN
ddress: Baltimore, Md.
ate

A vigorous attack is being made on Dr. Muck, protesting against his appearance as director with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York, and his exclusion in Baltimore is being used as an argument by his opponents. It is said that American soldiers and sailors will not be allowed to accept free tickets offered them by the management of the orchestra while a subject of the Kaiser is allowed to conduct.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
MAR 14 1918
Date

THE DR. MUCK PERIL.

In these busy times there are so many things of importance to do besides stirring up an agitation against Dr. Karl Muck. For instance, knitting sweaters for sailors, making surgical dressings for the Red Cross, selling Thrift Stamps and collecting books for war-camp libraries. Any zealous person should be able to find an outlet for his patriotism without hunting far.

It hardly seems plausible that Congress had Dr. Muck exclusively in mind when it passed the Espionage and Trading With the Enemy Acts. So far as is known, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been maintained for the purpose of planting bombs on transports or setting fires in munition works. Neither the Halifax disaster nor the Port Newark fire has been traced to it. Of course the Government does not tell all that it knows. But by last accounts, Major Henry L. Higginson had not been interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., with the enemy aliens held there. The appalling state of affairs that alarms certain apprehensive persons appears to be largely a matter of personal feeling. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Muck's leadership, has given many concerts here without shifting the situation on the western front. Its programme calls for two more concerts this season. There is no occasion for anxious souls to hunt bomb-proof cellars or retire to their country estates in anticipation of danger from the orchestra's visit.

No man or woman who is a conscientious objector is required to sit through a concert at Carnegie Hall. Anybody who dislikes Dr. Muck personally more than he likes symphony music is free to spend a pleasant afternoon or evening by himself humming a hymn of hate.

From EVENING MAIL
Address: New York City
MAR 14 1918

POLICE TO GUARD MUCK ORCHESTRA

Department Prepares to Prevent Disturbance at Carnegie Hall.

Measures were taken to-day by the authorities to prevent any disturbance at Carnegie Hall to-night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, gives its concert.

Inspector John Daly said this afternoon that an extra detail of policemen would be present at the concert to cope with any situation that might arise.

"So far as it concerns me, no action in the matter was contemplated on behalf of the army," said Capt. Fuller Potter, of the Army Intelligence Bureau.

In spite of repeated requests Commissioner Gilchrist, of the Bureau of Licenses, refused to take any measures to prevent the concert. He said he had no evidence that the public peace or decency was endangered and only on those grounds could he prevent the performance. He continued:

"If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt measures will be taken."

MANAGEMENT BOUND.

"We are in a position where we cannot refuse to allow the concert to go on to-night," said the manager of Carnegie Hall. "We have a contract that we must fulfill, and, as the commissioner of licenses has refused to revoke the license for the concert, we are in no position to act.

"If we refused to permit the concert to be given, there might be a very good case for damages against us—not only damages for the loss of the money paid for tickets, but also damages to the reputation of Dr. Muck and the organization.

"Dr. Muck insists he is not an enemy alien, and it is not strange that he should refuse to go on trial on such a charge at this time and in this way.

"We are placed in a position where we are unable to do anything but carry out our contract with the Boston Symphony. However, under our license we are entitled to police protection, and we must give police protection, so we have asked the police commissioner to give it to us."

MRS. JAY EXPLAINS.

Mrs. William Jay, who took a leading part in an effort to stop the concert, said to-day:

"In spite of what Dr. Tuck says about his Swiss citizenship, in the eyes of the German law he is a subject of the kaiser, and he is a sympathizer with Germany in this war."

The whole trouble started when Dr. Muck failed to have his orchestra play "The Star-Spangled Banner" last October. Major Higginson, who is the backer of the orchestra, stands firmy by Dr. Muck and does not expect any trouble to-night.

From EVENING GLOBE
Address: New York City

Date

DR. MUCK ET AL.

The removal of Dr. Muck from the field of public entertainment would entail more complications and consequences than its energetic promoters seem to foresee. The first point that occurs to any sober person is, why remove Dr. Muck, indisputably a great artist, when a battalion of alien enemies, and non-alien enemies, some of whom are great artists, but some of whom emphatically are not, go scot free?

Art has been used as hostile camouflage in every Allied country, and above all in our own country, throughout the war. Art in a sense has nothing to do with politics or war, but in a sense it has, especially since the Germans have cunningly and relentlessly sought to mobilize its power and protection in their behalf. To win this war every loyal man is ready for every sacrifice. To the man going over the top the sacrifice of artistic enjoyment must seem about the pettiest of deprivations. To us behind the lines it ought to seem not a jot less petty.

So if Dr. Muck must be sacrificed we should make up our minds to face a Muckless future with fortitude and calm. It is by no means necessary that that magnificent institution the Boston Symphony Orchestra should suffer irreparably, let alone perish, because it loses an excellent conductor. In Eugène Ysaye or in Arturo Toscanini, or perhaps in Sir Henry Wood, the Boston orchestra could find men devoted to the Allied cause who are worthy to maintain its high musical tradition.

But in the name of justice and common sense Dr. Muck ought not to be singled out as a scapegoat for the whole tribe of pro-German musicians. If a systematic internment of every alien enemy and a systematic imprisonment of every non-alien enemy is to be carried through, Dr. Muck must certainly go in company with his spiritual brethren. But what an arrant absurdity to see Dr. Muck removed as enemy and a man installed in his place no less pro-German in sympathy and without the excuse of a German allegiance for his anti-American bias!

Of course it is possible to exaggerate the importance of the moral and political ideas entertained by a group of musicians. But let us not forget that in this war there are musicians who, like I. J. Paderewski, have stood out as great patriots, great champions of humanity, and that innumerable others—Monteux, Muratore, Thibaud, Lortat spring to mind—have answered the call of their country and of the world as simply as a farm lad. The spiritual element of warfare in a just cause is the supreme element. The twaddle about the complete isolation of art is childish. Art and Life—we may not compromise or dishonor high issues—are Siamese twins. Sacrifice must be made as unquestioningly in artistic matters as in any other, and no sacrifice costs less. But in making it let us avoid unnecessary hypocrisy. Let us not depose and intern a Karl Muck and leave a horde of lesser sympathizers with our enemy vociferously and poisonously at large.

TRIBUNE
ss: New York City
MAR 14 1918

Dr. Muck

Major Henry L. Higginson deserves every consideration from the people not merely of New York, but of the whole country. His steadfast support of the Boston Symphony has given us one of the three or four premier orchestras of the world.

For this we stand deeply in his debt. We wish there were more rich men like him.

Nor could there be any doubt or question that Major Higginson is as loyal a supporter of the government as any one in the United States. But in his natural desire to maintain intact an organization which has cost him so much and so many years to develop we think he a little forgets.

We are at war. Some time, some day, when our dead come home, this fact will become to our people an overshadowing reality. To Major Higginson as well.

We are at war, and at war with the German nation and the German people. Dr. Muck is German born, German bred and of intensely German sympathies. And it is no secret that his contempt for Americans, and especially the people of New York, is something engaging and profound.

Had Dr. Muck a little more sensitiveness, a little less willingness to accept American dollars, he would not be here. He has no purpose here to remain, no desire to become one of the thousands of loyal German-Americans.

His home is in Germany; thither he will soon return, and there, until the German people have absolved themselves before the world, we beg leave to think he should remain.

---

m MORNING TELEGRAPH
ress: New York City
MAR 14 1918

MUCK TO CONDUCT DESPITE PROTESTS

Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Will "Do His Duty," His Manager States.

MRS. JAY WRITES LETTER

Despite the protests that have been lodged against Dr. Karl Muck on the grounds that he is an enemy alien and objectionable as such to American audiences, he will conduct the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall to-night.

Dr. Muck was in the city yesterday, but when spoken to over the telephone at his hotel he referred all questions to his manager, Mr. Ellis, refusing to discuss the matter at all.

Mr. Ellis, speaking on behalf of Dr. Muck, said:

"Inasmuch as the house has been subscribed for and is entirely sold out, Dr. Muck, will, of course, conduct the concert. It is his obvious duty to do so, and I can see no reason why he should not."

Denies Muck's Disdain of U. S.

Mr. Ellis last night denied the many stories that have been current as to Dr. Muck's disdain of the United States. He also denied that tickets had been given to the soldiers for Dr. Muck's concert in Brooklyn ,inasmuch as on the occasion of the Boston Orchestra leader's last appearance every ticket in the house was sold. He also stated that the sale of the seats was in the charge of the Brooklyn Institute, at which the concert was given.

Last night Mrs. Jay, who has been one of the leaders in the general movement against Dr. Muck, issued an open letter in which she asks him to either affirm or deny the accusations that have been made against him, and to state exactly just what country he owes allegiance to—Switzerland or Germany. Dr. Muck has never at any time attempted to make these points clear to the public nor tried to clear the charges that have been made against him.

Asks Doktor Questions.

The letter which is signed by Mrs. Jay follows:

"Sir—As conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you are to appear in New York City on Thursday night in spite of a protest, signed by a group of responsible American citizens, which has been denied by Major Henry L. Higginson, the supreme head of the orchestra.

"There has been brought to my attention an excerpt from a letter from Major Henry L. Higginson to the editor of the Chronicle, dated October 23, 1917. There was this reference to you:

"'Bear in mind that Doktor Muck is a Swiss citizen, born and brought up in Germany and of German parentage. He has lived in Germany all his years and has many friends there.'

"The New York public has every right to receive from you enlightment as to your nationality.

"Are you a Swiss citizen?

"If so, when were you naturalized?

"Have you a passport issued by the Swiss Government?

"Have you ever served in the German army?

"Have you ever referred to the American flag with contempt?

"If you have papers attesting to your Swiss citizenship will you show them to a representative of our group before you appear in Carnegie Hall?

"Will you agree to answer these questions through the press of New York City, which represents the citizens of New York—or else will you retire permanently from public, musical life?"

POST
ss New York City
MAR 14 1918

EXTRA POLICE FOR DR. MUCK'S CONCERT

Carnegie Hall Will Be Well Guarded To-night

BOSTON ORCHESTRA IN TOWN

License Commissioner Gilchrist Decides that He Cannot Interfere with the Performance.

Coincident with the arrival in New York to-day, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, John Daly, acting chief inspector of police, issued a statement saying that an extra detail of policemen would be assigned to Carnegie Hall, where the Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, is to give a concert to-night.

Inspector Daly made this announcement when asked whether any action, if any, would be taken by the Police Department in view of the objection raised against the appearance of Dr. Muck by Mrs. William Jay and others. The extra policemen will be on hand as a precautionary measure to cope with any situation that may arise.

Members of the orchestra arrived here this morning, and Messrs. Ellis and Vernon, of the managing force, went to the Hotel St. Regis. They could not be seen, but it is understood that the opposition to the appearance of Dr. Muck has not caused them to change their plans for the concerts to-night and to-morrow afternoon.

The managers of Carnegie Hall asserted that they could not prevent to-night's concert without exposing themselves to a suit, as they had made a contract for a stipulated number of concerts there. If the concert offended the dignity or peace of New York, action lay with John F. Gilchrist, the License Commissioner, they said. Commissioner Gilchrist, when Mrs. Jay visited him in reference to the concert said:

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra does not need a special license for its concert. The annual license issued to the hall by the city covers all public entertainments. This department at present sees no reason why it should prevent Dr. Muck's appearance with his orchestra. There is no evidence that the law is being violated or the public peace or decency endangered . If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or the nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt action will be taken. If Dr. Muck is an enemy alien that comes under Federal jurisdiction and is out of my hands entirely."

It is understood thaht Major Henry L. Higginson, president of the orchestra, will attend the concert to-night.

---

om AMERICAN
ddress: Baltimore, Md.

ate

A vigorous attack is being made on Dr. Muck, protesting against his appearance as director with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York, and his exclusion in Baltimore is being used as an argument by his opponents. It is said that American soldiers and sailors will not be allowed to accept free tickets offered them by the management of the orchestra while a subject of the Kaiser is allowed to conduct.

From WORLD
Address: New York City
MAR 14 1918
Date

THE DR. MUCK PERIL.

In these busy times there are so many things of importance to do besides stirring up an agitation against Dr. Karl Muck. For instance, knitting sweaters for sailors, making surgical dressings for the Red Cross, selling Thrift Stamps and collecting books for war-camp libraries. Any zealous person should be able to find an outlet for his patriotism without hunting far.

It hardly seems plausible that Congress had Dr. Muck exclusively in mind when it passed the Espionage and Trading With the Enemy Acts. So far as is known, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been maintained for the purpose of planting bombs on transports or setting fires in munition works. Neither the Halifax disaster nor the Port Newark fire has been traced to it. Of course the Government does not tell all that it knows. But by last accounts, Major Henry L. Higginson had not been interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., with the enemy aliens held there. The appalling state of affairs that alarms certain apprehensive persons appears to be largely a matter of personal feeling. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Muck's leadership, has given many concerts here without shifting the situation on the western front. Its programme calls for two more concerts this season. There is no occasion for anxious souls to hunt bomb-proof cellars or retire to their country estates in anticipation of danger from the orchestra's visit.

No man or woman who is a conscientious objector is required to sit through a concert at Carnegie Hall. Anybody who dislikes Dr. Muck personally more than he likes symphony music is free to spend a pleasant afternoon or evening by himself humming a hymn of hate.

From EVENING MAIL
Address: New York City
MAR 14 1918

POLICE TO GUARD MUCK ORCHESTRA

Department Prepares to Prevent Disturbance at Carnegie Hall.

Measures were taken to-day by the authorities to prevent any disturbance at Carnegie Hall to-night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck, gives its concert.

Inspector John Daly said this afternoon that an extra detail of policemen would be present at the concert to cope with any situation that might arise.

"So far as it concerns me, no action in the matter was contemplated on behalf of the army," said Capt. Fuller Potter, of the Army Intelligence Bureau.

In spite of repeated requests Commissioner Gilchrist, of the Bureau of Licenses, refused to take any measures to prevent the concert. He said he had no evidence that the public peace or decency was endangered and only on those grounds could he prevent the performance. He continued:

"If there is the least sign that the dignity of the city or nation is being offended by any improper act, prompt measures will be taken."

MANAGEMENT BOUND.

"We are in a position where we cannot refuse to allow the concert to go on to-night," said the manager of Carnegie Hall. "We have a contract that we must fulfill, and, as the commissioner of licenses has refused to revoke the license for the concert, we are in no position to act.

"If we refused to permit the concert to be given, there might be a very good case for damages against us—not only damages for the loss of the money paid for tickets, but also damages to the reputation of Dr. Muck and the organization.

"Dr. Muck insists he is not an enemy alien, and it is not strange that he should refuse to go on trial on such a charge at this time and in this way.

"We are placed in a position where we are unable to do anything but carry out our contract with the Boston Symphony. However, under our license we are entitled to police protection, and we must give police protection, so we have asked the police commissioner to give it to us."

MRS. JAY EXPLAINS.

Mrs. William Jay, who took a leading part in an effort to stop the concert, said to-day:

"In spite of what Dr. Tuck says about his Swiss citizenship, in the eyes of the German law he is a subject of the kaiser, and he is a sympathizer with Germany in this war."

The whole trouble started when Dr. Muck failed to have his orchestra play "The Star-Spangled Banner" last October. Major Higginson, who is the backer of the orchestra, stands firmly by Dr. Muck and does not expect any trouble to-night.

EVENING SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.
MAR 1

New York And Dr. Muck; Pittsburgh And Wagner

From the New York Herald.

Expressing regret that he is not in Germany to fight for the Kaiser, Charle Schroeder hurls a characteristic Prussian "poof" at America and Americans, and goes to jail.

In what does the attitude of Herr Schroeder differ from that of Herr Doktor Muck and his 23—count 'em—fellow-aliens of the Boston Symphony Orchestra save that the honest Schroeder comes out in the open with his poofs.

But, says his apologists, Herr Doktor Muck does not refuse to lead his alien crew in playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

It is profanation to permit Herr Doktor Muck and his crew to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

From the New York World.

No man or woman who is a conscientious objector is required to sit through a concert at Carnegie Hal. Anybody who dislikes Dr. Muck personally more than he likes symphony music is free to spend a pleasant afternon or evening by himself humming a hymn of hate.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Philadelphia Orchestra was not allowed to play the prelude of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" in Pittsburgh, and even the "Unfinished" Symphony of Schubert appears to have come under the police interdict, since it, too, was removed from the program of the afternoon concert. Is not this cutting off the nose to spite the face in matters musical? Because the Germans are filling air, earth and sea with their noisome infamies, are we to deprive ourselves of beautiful things brought into the world for its inspiration and enjoyment by the Germans of old, who are as different from modern militaristic Junkerdom and Hohenzollernism as Hans Sachs is different from Hindenburg or Martin Luther is from a sycophant court preacher at Potsdam?

From the Philadelphia Press.

A large massmeeting was held recently in the Forrest Theatre under the auspices of the Drama League to impress upon the public the idea that music and drama, in upholding the morale of the people, are essential to the winning of the war. While they were holding this meeting Dr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra were being prevented in Pittsburgh from including in a concert an excerpt from Wagner's "Tristan" and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony.

Nowadays some of our good citizens have an obsession. In certain of our communities the witch-burners of old have revived in spirit, assumed the title of "patriots' 'and, in the field which the Drama League meeting brings to mind, started a hue and cry against anything German or Austrian in music, without distinction.

NEWS
Address: Baltimore, Md.
MAR

NEW YORK HOT AFTER MUCK

Prominent Persons Seek To Prevent Him Leading Boston Orchestra.

(From the New York Sun.)

Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is serving as chaplain with the Three Hundred and Second United States Engineers at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., has entered the fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from conducting at the last Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for tomorrow night at Carnegie Hall. In supporting the effort to have the Kaiser's court musician ousted Dr. Manning said:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra? We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defense, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Mrs. William Jay, who has led the attack on Dr. Muck, gave out letters yesterday from persons who have joined in the effort to prevent the German conductor's appearance Thursday night, and gossip in musical circles had it that steps will be taken to exclude him from the program on that evening.

Rumor was rampant that soldiers and sailors have been given, or will be given, free tickets to the performance in an effort to make the audience seem patriotic. This, according to a subscriber to the symphony here in New York, has been done to further the propaganda in Germany and other countries that Dr. Muck's efforts are sanctioned in many quarters in the United States.

"It is beyond me," said Mrs. Jay, "that any sensitive musician can persist, in the face of the righteous indignation of Americans, to thrust himself before their presence unless he were actuated by some deeper motive than merely earning his living."

EAGLE
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 14 1918

ANTI-MUCK PETITIONS GROW; NO BAN HERE

Effort to Stop Academy Concert, Despite Opinion of License Commissioner.

FINANCE MEN SIGN PROTEST

Crowell Hadden Says Signers Urge Internment of Symphony Conductor.

A determined effort is being made to "spike" the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which Dr. Karl Muck is scheduled to lead at the Academy of Music tomorrow night. The effort takes the form of a protest to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

Petitions of protest were circulated in Brooklyn by Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, and by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn, and both obtained many signatures of prominent Brooklyn residents. Mr. Hadden secured seventy signatures yesterday just from people he met in going about his business affairs, among them, he said today, Edwin Packard, who was the first president of the Franklin Trust Company; Charles A. Boody, president of the People's Trust Company; C. D. Burdick of the Title Guaranty and Trust Company; James H. Post and E. F. Maynard, president of the Brooklyn Trust Company.

The movement to stop Dr. Muck from leading a concert here was started by Mrs. William Jay of Manhattan, who is moving heaven and earth to prevent Muck from leading the concert in Carnegie Hall tonight, as well as that scheduled for Brooklyn. Mrs. Jay said today that she had received at least 150 letters approving of her course and that her telephone had been busy from 8 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night with calls from people encouraging her and offering to help.

License Commissioner John F. Gilchrist had an audience with Mrs. Jay yesterday and told her that the matter was one outside of his jurisdiction. Mr. Gilchrist explained that he merely licensed the place where a concert is to be held and not individuals giving an entertainment and showed her that the charter gave him power to interfere only in case of an entertainment of an indecent character or one against the public welfare. Mrs. Jay held that a concert conducted by Dr. Muck would be against the public welfare, but Commissioner Gilchrist held out no hope that he would be able to act.

Mrs. Jay said today that she thought it was strange that the Federal Government did not interfere and back her up in her efforts.

Wants Government Aid.

"If the Government would come to my rescue it would be a comparatively easy matter," said she, "to stop Dr. Muck from giving any concerts here. There is something mysterious about the Government's failure to act.

"To an American it is unendurable to think that this man Muck, after tonight, may be able to snap his fingers in all our faces and with a sardonic smile say, 'Well, I put it over on them all.'"

The basis of the protest is that Mr. Muck declined to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence on the score that it was unmusical and that he was a close friend of the dismissed German Ambassador to the United States Johann von Bernstorff.

The petition addressed to Commissioner Gilchrist read:

"We, the undersigned, protest against Dr. Karl Muck coming to this town as we regard him as a dangerous alien, having been a close friend of Von Bernstorff and is a known representative of the Kaiser, as he acknowledged in 'Who's Who of 1916 and 1917.'"

Some of the men who were asked to sign were outspoken in their condemnation of Muck and several declared that in their opinion he should be interned, according to Mr. Hadden.

Mr. Hadden did not confine his efforts, in obtaining signatures, to subscriptions to the concert, but asked everybody he met to sign the protest and none demurred.

EAGLE
Address: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN CARNEGIE HALL

Doctor Muck Conducts Brahms Symphony Before Enthusiastic Audience.

In spite of the agitation carried on during the past few days the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the last of its Thursday subscription concerts in Carnegie Hall last evening, and Dr. Muck conducted. When the conductor entered the entire audience, which filled the house even unto the available standing room, gave him a rousing reception until choked off by his leading the orchestra in the national anthem. He was recalled a dozen times at the end of the performance.

Probably fearing trouble the management had a number of policemen in the lobby, but the performance moved without interruption. The program opened with a reading of the Brahms Third Symphony, which was distinguished by clarity, beautiful tone and excellent sense of design. Indeed, it was the Boston Orchestra and Dr. Muck at their best and by far the most able interpretation of the work we have had in years.

Two compositions by Sibelius followed—"Pohjola's Daughter," a symphonic fantasia, and the symphonic poem, "Night Ride and Sunrise"—both for the first time in this city. They are both brilliant works, rich in color and harmonic novelty, and both received brilliant interpretations.

The concert closed with the Prelude to "Tristan und Isolde." The orchestra will play at the Academy this evening.

EVENING SUN
Address: New York City
MAR 15 1918

Feeling Against Germans.

The outbreaks against KARL MUCK and FRITZ KREISLER form but the extreme of a reaction against Teutonism in which the country is now embarked. To think of the resentment against these two amiable friends of the public as a thing by itself is to miss the greater matter of which it is part.

HENKES is sent to prison for twenty-five years; respectable clergymen listen to a demand for the death of anti-Americans; BUENZ, the Hamburg-American Line official, goes to jail at last despite his physical condition and the relatively light nature of his offences, committed long before this country went to war. LA FOLLETTE and his anti-patriotic faction are publicly rebuked by a Wisconsin grown fervently loyal. The German language is objected to in the schemes of public instruction. The Government approaches the wise step of selling out enemy alien properties. The hunt after German influence and money grows keener everywhere, in politics, in crime, in business, in the very schools.

These are the symptoms of awakening. Mere anger at Germany was but a first stir. We have passed to the stage of rejecting and uprooting with loathing every German thing in this country. In this we react naturally to the indignation that has slowly and steadily mounted during several years of outrages and trickery. Of late the idea has gained held that Germanism in this country has been used in its whole gamut as a Circe spell, much to the national detriment. People have grown sick of propagandizing professors, Kaiser-serving steamship and wireless companies, youth-warping language teachers, iron-cross-deserving Senators, German-thinking citizens and the like. In the face of such an upsurging the lines of precise justice are only too likely to be stepped over at certain points. Some excess is to be apprehended.

Those who have ties with Germany but are American at heart must accept the situation in its broad lines. Those who have made a livelihood here by retailing the formerly acceptable fruits of German culture are to be commiserated, but suffer after all from a natural risk of their trade.

TELEGRAM
Address: New York City.
MAR 17

The city and federal authorities who refused to interfere to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in New York are to be congratulated on their firmness in maintaining the rights of the overwhelming number who wished to enjoy his art.—Staats-Zeitung.

The city and federal authorities are entirely welcome to the good opinion of Dr. Muck and Mr. Bernard H. Ridder.

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 19 1918

Herald Readers Discuss Topics of Live Interest

Mr. Joseph L. Hodgins Says Intern the Muck Aliens and the Muck Claque.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

The HERALD's correspondents Hannah Cushman Howes and Henri de Lafitole are as true to America and her allies as the Muck claquers are false. While the Kaiser's Muck orchestra played the claquers applauded the Kaiser.

New York ought to treat Dr. Muck as Berlin would treat Victor Herbert.

Intern the German band and its claquers. The ensuing silence would be sweeter than Muck's sweetest symphony.

General Pershing is fighting the Kaiser. Why should America permit renegades to encourage the enemy?

JOSEPH L. HODGINS.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 17, 1918.

TIMES
Washington, D. C.
MAR 15 1918

80 DETECTIVES ATTEND CONCERT BY DR. MUCK

NEW YORK, March 15.—In spite of threats and warnings, the concert here last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given without interruption, and Dr. Karl Muck appeared as director. Eighty detectives were on guard, and the hall was crowded. When the audience greeted Dr. Muck with courteous applause, the orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner." Disorder was feared because there are some who considered Dr. Muck anti-American in his attitude.

REPUBLICAN
Address: Springfield, Mass.

In verifying the naturalization of Dr Muck as a Swiss citizen the chancellor of Zug canton added, "with the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection." New York complied handsomely with a guard of 45 policemen when the Boston symphony orchestra played Thursday evening.

TIMES
Address: New York City

Would Give Up German Music.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Do you not think that when we know of the fiendish horrors our boys are facing now from the culture Dr. Muck represents the most ardent lovers of music could, with Herculean effort, deprive themselves of German culture, at least for the duration of the war, and put up with the great hardship of listening to Italian, French, English, and American music?

PHOEBE SMITHSON.

New York, March 15, 1918.

EVENING SUN
Address: Baltimore, Md.

New York Objecting To Muck's Concert

Metropolis Finds Out Conductor Has Enemy Aliens In His Orchestra.

New York is working itself up today to the state which was reached by Baltimore last November, when patriotic citizens prevented the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck in this city as the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the concerts of the orchestra were halted.

Dr. Muck and his orchestra are echeduled to give a concert at Carnegie Hall this evening. Certain citizens, subscribers to the concerts, led by Mrs. William Jay, have tried to find some means of stopping the concert. In addition to resenting Dr. Muck's effort to avoid playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his performances, all of which was discovered by Baltimore and other cities five months ago, the New Yorkers are alleging that there are numbers of enemy aliens in the orchestra. New York papers are backing these people.

The management of Carnegie Hall has answered their criticisms by saying that arrangements for renting the hall to the orchestra have been made and that they cannot do anything about it.

Following the publicity given to Dr. Muck's reluctance to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" last fall, a great massmeeting to protest against his appearance here was organized by former

WORLD
New York City
MAR 17 1918

BROOKLYN WILL NOT HAVE DR. MUCK AGAIN

Major Higginson Told He Must Be Displaced if Symphony Returns.

Announcement was made by the trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Music yesterday that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been invited to give a series of concerts in Brooklyn again next season, but without the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck. A letter to this effect has been sent by A. Augustus Healy, President of the board, to Major Higginson.

The decision of the trustees was reached at a special meeting Thursday afternoon, but Mr. Healy and his associates refused to make the fact public until after the final concert of the season Friday night.

A resolution was passed declaring that the board should confine the appearance at the Academy of artists and speakers to persons in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war, and continues:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the President be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

The final Boston Symphony concert of the season took place yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall without disturbance. Eight policemen were stationed at the front and rear entrances of the building, as on Thursday night, but had nothing to do except observe the eagerness of a big crowd to get inside. One box in the first tier and a few seats were unoccupied, but there was no visible evidence that subscribers, to any number, had responded to an appeal of Mrs. William Jay in a morning newspaper requesting that subscribers who intended to leave their seats vacant, "to signify their disapproval of Dr. Muck's conducting, would help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of the organization" by sending the tickets to her.

Dr. Muck was warmly greeted and, after the Mozart symphony, which opened the programme, the orchestra stood. Dr. Muck further responded to additional calls for his appearance.

The Mozart symphony, the E-flat major, was done in the right spirit and the Rimsky-Korsakoff suite, "Scheherazade," while formming an odd running mate for the symphony, allowed the organization to display that wealth of delicacy and individual virtuosity that one looks for from the Boston men.

The local status of the orchestra for next year is not yet known.

rom EVENING SUN
ddress: Baltimore, Md.
ate MAR 1

New York And Dr. Muck; Pittsburgh And Wagner

From the New York Herald.

Expressing regret that he is not in Germany to fight for the Kaiser, Charle Schroeder hurls a characteristic Prussian "poof" at America and Americans, and goes to jail.

In what does the attitude of Herr Schroeder differ from that of Herr Doktor Muck and his 23—count 'em—fellow-aliens of the Boston Symphony Orchestra save that the honest Schroeder comes out in the open with his poofs.

But, says his apologists, Herr Doktor Muck does not refuse to lead his alien crew in playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

It is profanation to permit Herr Doktor Muck and his crew to play "The Star-Spangled Banner."

From the New York World.

No man or woman who is a conscientious objector is required to sit through a concert at Carnegie Hal. Anybody who dislikes Dr. Muck personally more than he likes symphony music is free to spend a pleasant afternon or evening by himself humming a hymn of hate.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Philadelphia Orchestra was not allowed to play the prelude of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" in Pittsburgh, and even the "Unfinished" Symphony of Schubert appears to have come under the police interdict, since it, too, was removed from the program of the afternoon concert. Is not this cutting off the nose to spite the face in matters musical? Because the Germans are filling air, earth and sea with their noisome infamies, are we to deprive ourselves of beautiful things brought into the world for its inspiration and enjoyment by the Germans of old, who are as different from modern militaristic Junkerdom and Hohenzollernism as Hans Sachs is different from Hindenburg or Martin Luther is from a sycophant court preacher at Potsdam?

From the Philadelphia Press.

A large massmeeting was held recently in the Forrest Theatre under the auspices of the Drama League to impress upon the public the idea that music and drama, in upholding the morale of the people, are essential to the winning of the war. While they were holding this meeting Dr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra were being prevented in Pittsburgh from including in a concert an excerpt from Wagner's "Tristan" and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony.

Nowadays some of our good citizens have an obsession. In certain of our communities the witch-burners of old have revived in spirit, assumed the title of "patriots' 'and, in the field which the Drama League meeting brings to mind, started a hue and cry against anything German or Austrian in music, without distinction.

om TELEGRAM
dress: New York City.
MAR 17
te

The city and federal authorities who refused to interfere to prevent Dr. Muck from appearing in New York are to be congratulated on their firmness in maintaining the rights of the overwhelming number who wished to enjoy his art.—Staats-Zeitung.

The city and federal authorities are entirely welcome to the good opinion of Dr. Muck and Mr. Bernard H. Ridder.

NEW YORK HERALD
New York City
MAR 19 1918

Herald Readers Discuss Topics of Live Interest

Mr. Joseph L. Hodgins Says Intern the Muck Aliens and the Muck Claque.

To the Editor of the Herald:—

The Herald's correspondents Hannah Cushman Howes and Henri de Lafitole are as true to America and her allies as the Muck claquers are false. While the Kaiser's Muck orchestra played the claquers applauded the Kaiser.

New York ought to treat Dr. Muck as Berlin would treat Victor Herbert.

Intern the German band and its claquers. The ensuing silence would be sweeter than Muck's sweetest symphony.

General Pershing is fighting the Kaiser. Why should America permit renegades to encourage the enemy?

JOSEPH L. HODGINS.

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 17, 1918.

rom NEWS
ddress: Baltimore, Md.
ate

NEW YORK HOT AFTER MUCK

Prominent Persons Seek To Prevent Him Leading Boston Orchestra.

(From the New York Sun.)

Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, who is serving as chaplain with the Three Hundred and Second United States Engineers at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., has entered the fight to prevent Dr. Karl Muck from conducting at the last Boston Symphony Orchestra concert scheduled for tomorrow night at Carnegie Hall. In supporting the effort to have the Kaiser's court musician ousted Dr. Manning said:

"May I express my unqualified approval and support of the stand taken by Mrs. William Jay, Judge George L. Ingraham and others against the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck with the Boston Symphony Orchestra? We are in the midst of the greatest conflict in all history in which every ideal and principle which we hold is at stake. It is our duty to do everything in our power to stir and strengthen the spirit of our people for the struggle before them and not to dull and weaken that spirit by our attitude of tolerance toward those with whom we are at war.

"While our boys, fighting at the front in our defense, are being assailed with liquid fire, poison gas and other like inventions of German kultur, it is not fitting nor decent for us at concerts, or in any other place, to give our countenance and support to the avowed friends and upholders of the Kaiser."

Mrs. William Jay, who has led the attack on Dr. Muck, gave out letters yesterday from persons who have joined in the effort to prevent the German conductor's appearance Thursday night, and gossip in musical circles had it that steps will be taken to exclude him from the program on that evening.

Rumor was rampant that soldiers and sailors have been given, or will be given, free tickets to the performance in an effort to make the audience seem patriotic. This, according to a subscriber to the symphony here in New York, has been done to further the propaganda in Germany and other countries that Dr. Muck's efforts are sanctioned in many quarters in the United States.

"It is beyond me," said Mrs. Jay, "that any sensitive musician can persist, in the face of the righteous indignation of Americans, to thrust himself before their presence unless he were actuated by some deeper motive than merely earning his living."

TIMES
Washington, D. C.
MAR 15 1918

80 DETECTIVES ATTEND CONCERT BY DR. MUCK

NEW YORK, March 15.—In spite of threats and warnings, the concert here last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given without interruption, and Dr. Karl Muck appeared as director. Eighty detectives were on guard, and the hall was crowded. When the audience greeted Dr. Muck with courteous applause, the orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner.' Disorder was feared because there are some who considered Dr. Muck anti-American in his attitude.

REPUBLICAN
ess Springfield, Mass.

In verifying the naturalization of Dr Muck as a Swiss citizen the chancellor of Zug canton added, "with the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection." New York complied handsomely with a guard of 45 policemen when the Boston symphony orchestra played Thursday evening.

om TIMES
dress New York City
te

Would Give Up German Music.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Do you not think that when we know of the fiendish horrors our boys are facing now from the culture Dr. Muck represents the most ardent lovers of music could, with Herculean effort, deprive themselves of German culture, at least for the duration of the war, and put up with the great hardship of listening to Italian, French, English, and American music?

PHOEBE SMITHSON.

New York, March 15, 1918.

EAGLE
ess: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 14 1918

ANTI-MUCK PETITIONS GROW; NO BAN HERE

Effort to Stop Academy Concert, Despite Opinion of License Commissioner.

FINANCE MEN SIGN PROTEST

Crowell Hadden Says Signers Urge Internment of Symphony Conductor.

A determined effort is being made to "spike" the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which Dr. Karl Muck is scheduled to lead at the Academy of Music tomorrow night. The effort takes the form of a protest to License Commissioner Gilchrist.

Petitions of protest were circulated in Brooklyn by Crowell Hadden, president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, and by Dr. H. A. Fairbairn, and both obtained many signatures of prominent Brooklyn residents. Mr. Hadden secured seventy signatures yesterday. Just from people he met in going about his business affairs, among them, he said today, Edwin Packard, who was the first president of the Franklin Trust Company; Charles A. Boody, president of the People's Trust Company; C. D. Burdick of the Title Guaranty and Trust Company; James H. Post and E. F. Maynard, president of the Brooklyn Trust Company.

The movement to stop Dr. Muck from leading a concert here was started by Mrs. William Jay of Manhattan, who is moving heaven and earth to prevent Muck from leading the concert in Carnegie Hall tonight, as well as that scheduled for Brooklyn. Mrs. Jay said today that she had received at least 150 letters approving of her course and that her telephone had been busy from 8 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night with calls from people encouraging her and offering to help.

License Commissioner John F. Gilchrist had an audience with Mrs. Jay yesterday and told her that the matter was one outside of his jurisdiction. Mr. Gilchrist explained that he merely licensed the place where a concert is to be held and not individuals giving an entertainment and showed her that the charter gave him power to interfere only in case of an entertainment of an indecent character or one against the public welfare. Mrs. Jay held that a concert conducted by Dr. Muck would be against the public welfare, but Commissioner Gilchrist held out no hope that he would be able to act.

Mrs. Jay said today that she thought it was strange that the Federal Government did not interfere and back her up in her efforts.

Wants Government Aid.

"If the Government would come to my rescue it would be a comparatively easy matter," said she, "to stop Dr. Muck from giving any concerts here. There is something mysterious about the Government's failure to act.

"To an American it is unendurable to think that this man Muck, after tonight, may be able to snap his fingers in all our faces and with a sardonic smile say, 'Well, I put it over on them all.'"

The basis of the protest is that Mr. Muck declined to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" in Providence on the score that it was unmusical and that he was a close friend of the dismissed German Ambassador to the United States Johann von Bernstorff.

The petition addressed to Commissioner Gilchrist read:

"We, the undersigned, protest against Dr. Karl Muck coming to this town as we regard him as a dangerous alien, having been a close friend of Von Bernstorff and is a known representative of the Kaiser, as he acknowledged in 'Who's Who of 1916 and 1917.'"

Some of the men who were asked to sign were outspoken in their condemnation of Muck and several declared that in their opinion he should be interned, according to Mr. Hadden.

Mr. Hadden did not confine his efforts, in obtaining signatures, to subscriptions to the concert, but asked everybody he met to sign the protest and none demurred.

om EVENING SUN
ldress: Baltimore, Md.
te

New York Objecting To Muck's Concert

Metropolis Finds Out Conductor Has Enemy Aliens In His Orchestra.

New York is working itself up today to the state which was reached by Baltimore last November, when patriotic citizens prevented the appearance of Dr. Karl Muck in this city as the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the concerts of the orchestra were halted.

Dr. Muck and his orchestra are echeduled to give a concert at Carnegie Hall this evening. Certain citizens, subscribers to the concerts, led by Mrs. William Jay, have tried to find some means of stopping the concert. In addition to resenting Dr. Muck's effort to avoid playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his performances, all of which was discovered by Baltimore and other cities five months ago, the New Yorkers are alleging that there are numbers of enemy aliens in the orchestra. New York papers are backing these people.

The management of Carnegie Hall has answered their criticisms by saying that arrangements for renting the hall to the orchestra have been made and that they cannot do anything about it.

Following the publicity given to Dr. Muck's reluctance to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" last fall, a great massmeeting to protest against his appearance here was organized by former

EAGLE
s: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 15 1918

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN CARNEGIE HALL

Doctor Muck Conducts Brahms Symphony Before Enthusiastic Audience.

In spite of the agitation carried on during the past few days the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the last of its Thursday subscription concerts in Carnegie Hall last evening, and Dr. Muck conducted. When the conductor entered the entire audience, which filled the house even unto the available standing room, gave him a rousing reception until choked off by his leading the orchestra in the national anthem. He was recalled a dozen times at the end of the performance.

Probably fearing trouble the management had a number of policemen in the lobby, but the performance moved without interruption. The program opened with a reading of the Brahms Third Symphony, which was distinguished by clarity, beautiful tone and excellent sense of design. Indeed, it was the Boston Orchestra and Dr. Muck at their best and by far the most able interpretation of the work we have had in years.

Two compositions by Sibelius followed —"Pohjola's Daughter," a symphonic fantasia, and the symphonic poem, "Night Ride and Sunrise"—both for the first time in this city. They are both brilliant works, rich in color and harmonic novelty, and both received brilliant interpretations.

The concert closed with the Prelude to "Tristan und Isolde." The orchestra will play at the Academy this evening.

D
-York City
MAR 1 1918

BROOKLYN WILL NOT HAVE DR. MUCK AGAIN

Major Higginson Told He Must Be Displaced if Symphony Returns.

Announcement was made by the trustees of the Brooklyn Academy of Music yesterday that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had been invited to give a series of concerts in Brooklyn again next season, but without the leadership of Dr. Karl Muck. A letter to this effect has been sent by A. Augustus Healy, President of the board, to Major Higginson.

The decision of the trustees was reached at a special meeting Thursday afternoon, but Mr. Healy and his associates refused to make the fact public until after the final concert of the season Friday night.

A resolution was passed declaring that the board should confine the appearance at the Academy of artists and speakers to persons in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war, and continues:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the President be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

The final Boston Symphony concert of the season took place yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall without disturbance. Eight policemen were stationed at the front and rear entrances of the building, as on Thursday night, but had nothing to do except observe the eagerness of a big crowd to get inside. One box in the first tier and a few seats were unoccupied, but there was no visible evidence that subscribers, to any number, had responded to an appeal of Mrs. William Jay in a morning newspaper requesting that subscribers who intended to leave their seats vacant, "to signify their disapproval of Dr. Muck's conducting, would help the crusade against the pro-Germanism of the organization" by sending the tickets to her.

Dr. Muck was warmly greeted and, after the Mozart symphony, which opened the programme, the orchestra stood. Dr. Muck further responded to additional calls for his appearance.

The Mozart symphony, the E-flat major, was done in the right spirit and the Rimsky-Korsakoff suite, "Scheherazade," while formming an odd running mate for the symphony, allowed the organization to display that wealth of delicacy and individual virtuosity that one looks for from the Boston men.

The local status of the orchestra for next year is not yet known.

EVENING SUN
ss: New York City
MAR 1 5 1918

Feeling Against Germans.

The outbreaks against KARL MUCK and FRITZ KREISLER form but the extreme of a reaction against Teutonism in which the country is now embarked. To think of the resentment against these two amiable friends of the public as a thing by itself is to miss the greater matter of which it is part.

HENKES is sent to prison for twenty-five years; respectable clergymen listen to a demand for the death of anti-Americans: BUENZ, the Hamburg-American Line official, goes to jail at last despite his physical condition and the relatively light nature of his offences, committed long before this country went to war. LA FOLLETTE and his anti-patriotic faction are publicly rebuked by a Wisconsin grown fervently loyal. The German language is objected to in the schemes of public instruction. The Government approaches the wise step of selling out enemy alien properties. The hunt after German influence and money grows keener everywhere, in politics, in crime, in business, in the very schools.

These are the symptoms of awakening. Mere anger at Germany was but a first stir. We have passed to the stage of rejecting and uprooting with loathing every German thing in this country. In this we react naturally to the indignation that has slowly and steadily mounted during several years of outrages and trickery. Of late the idea has gained hold that Germanism in this country has been used in its whole gamut as a Circe spell, much to the national detriment. People have grown sick of propagandizing professors, Kaiser-serving steamship and wireless companies, youth-warping language teachers, iron-cross-deserving Senators, German-thinking citizens and the like. In the face of such an upsurging the lines of precise justice are only too likely to be stepped over at certain points. Some excess is to be apprehended.

Those who have ties with Germany but are American at heart must accept the situation in its broad lines. Those who have made a livelihood here by retailing the formerly acceptable fruits of German culture are to be commiserated, but suffer after all from a natural risk of their trade.

EVENING SUN

ess: New York City

MAR 15 1918

The Bostons' Concert.

When news intrudes upon mus is usually with ill and disturb effects. It must go down into print of a musical record, howe that the last of the Thursday night concerts of the season which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has given in Carnegie Hall was received with such an ovation as left no doubt concerning the real New York's opinion of the running controversy. Dr. Muck, at his first entrance to conduct the national anthem, was given an ovation which ran from clapping to loud cheers; and when, at the end of the concert, Major Higginson chanced to cross the stage, the audience was quick to catch sight of the orchestra's sponsor and to greet him with a similar enthusiasm.

So much for the results of this vaporous campaign which had been loosed against the famous Swiss conductor (as if in accord with the theory that, since we must rout aliens from their employment it should be those who have been preeminently useful and beneficial to us). Three boxes were empty and some few subscription seats, but the body of the house, upper floors and lower, was filled with the usual large audience which attends upon the Bostons' visits; the law was present, uniformed and otherwise, but never needed—and, for the rest, the evening was given up to excellent music and its particularly eager enjoyment.

The programme began with the third Brahms symphony; then came Sibelius's symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter," and his symphonic poem, "Night Ride and Sunrise," with the prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" for the end. The Brahms was given in such wise as might have been expected from the orchestra: there was a vigorous coping with its depth and hugeness of feeling, its great, swaying themes, and a consequent largess of beauty. The first movement, it was noticed, went in a faster tempo than usual; it lost none of its color thereby and certainly gained in vitality and spirit. The whole was held together in smooth knit, glossed and furbished by the threading into it of such gleaming strands as spoke a hotly protestant praise of both the player and his conductor.

The strident colors that come to battle in the two Sibelius numbers will doubtless not appeal to those who prefer to take their sunsets pale and over city housetops. And, tones aside, it is not easy to stand stanch and hold out a friendly imagination to the sector wide onrush of noise and forced climaxes which the Kalevala legend conjures. The night ride, too, is shod with heavy hoofs, and the sun comes up like that familiar one beside the road to Mandalay. All that was strong and striking in both the pieces, however Dr. Muck succeeded admirably in bringing out. The Wagner prelude, would be an axiom to add, was rendered exquisitely—and with no attribute of an axiom excepting truth and truth's beauty. THE LISTENER.

New York City

MAR

Ain't You Ashamed of Dr. Muck?

DR. MUCK pulled off his concert the other night in Carnegie hall with twenty-three—count 'em—twenty-three—"associates," under the protection of "fifty uniformed policemen and a horde of government secret service men," according to the New York Herald, and, says that truthful journal, "New York bowed its head in shame."

It may be so. We hadn't noticed it the next day. New York appeared to be about as prideful as ever to all outside appearances but, then, appearances may be deceitful. Perhaps New York, however, bowed its head in shame for a few moments and then stiffened up and determined to brazen it out.

We didn't go, and don't intend to go. But we are not bragging upon that account. We kept away, not because we dislike Dr. Muck, but because we are not of a musical nature. But if we liked that kind of music, we'd wade through a lot of Muck to hear it.

And those that don't like Muck don't have to go and hear him make music. It is not a matter of compulsion. But from the way this musician has been excoriated one would think he had all the people of New York thrown down and hog-tied, and that they had to listen to his fiddling whether they liked it or not. If that was the case, there would be some reason for the objection to the man. But it is not the case.

The unfortunate musician is but fulfilling a contract, and a contract is a sacred thing. Besides, the contract cites the party of the other part in the form of an old Boston resident whose patriotism is simply unquestioned. Major Higginson evidently has been proceeding on the theory that "music hath charms to soothe the savage," but it seems there are some of those simple children of nature who are proof against it. It doesn't charm them; it only makes them "bow their heads in shame."

Perhaps it is a sign of grace that New York is ashamed about something. There's the B. R. T., and the subway, and the recent coal famine, the hideous life conditions of millions, graft, gambling, prostitution, Tammany and all the communal sins that reformers have been harping on for generations. Maybe sometime in the future we will begin to be ashamed of them. But in the meantime Dr. Muck is an excellent thing to begin practice on.

Just now perhaps its only good manners to be ashamed of Dr. Muck, so may we not look upon him as sent here by a beneficent Providence to teach the grownup children good manners? Possibly this is the reason that "Granny" Herald tells us that good behavior dictates that we should "bow our heads in shame" when that rude old Dr. Muck saws his fiddle.

So it's all right, presumably. There are many more things to be ashamed of besides Dr. Muck, and we may get around to them by and by. But Dr. Muck, anyhow, is perhaps good enough to begin on until we "get the habit."

TRIBUNE

New York City

MAR 17 1918

Brooklyn Art Institute to Bar Muck in Future

It Will Welcome Boston Orchestra With Any Other Conductor

Brooklyn has placed its ban on Dr. Karl Muck—the sixth place to bar the conductor because of his alleged pro-German sympathies. After permitting him to conduct his Boston Symphony Orchestra in the last concert of the season in the Academy of Music Friday evening the directors of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announced yesterday that Dr. Muck will not be seen again in their city with the Boston orchestra.

The institute held its regular monthly meeting last Thursday, and the board of trustees adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this board of trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the institute, has sent a letter with the resolution of the board of trustees to Major Higginson, organizer of the orchestra.

A "silent protest" was staged by Mrs. William Jay at yesterday's concert in Carnegie Hall. Several blind girls from the Lighthouse, an institution founded by Joseph Choate, were conveyed to the hall by motor. Each wore an American flag. Between the andante and minuetto movements of the Mozart symphony the children were led to their seats. There was no other demonstration.

Mrs. Jay, who has been conducting a campaign to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance in New York, declared that she will continue her fight until he is removed from his position.

After the concert the musicians left for Boston.

om WORLD

ddress: New York City

MAR 17 1918

ate

Now that the hysteria over Dr. Muck's nativity is generally past, there appears to be an intelligent realization that no question concerning an orchestra conductor's personal sympathies can turn the classics of world music into pro-German propaganda.

TELEGRAM

New York City.

MAR 17 1918

Brooklyn Bars Dr. Muck and 22 Enemy Musicians; Sixth City Taking Action

Prussian Director Will Not Appear at Head of Boston Symphony in Institute of Arts and Sciences, According to Decision Reached at Secret Meeting.

Six American cities have now banned Dr. Karl Muck, Major N. L. Higginson's Royal Prussian Music Director. He will never again lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Teutonic airs—or any others, for that matter—in Brooklyn, Washington, Detroit, Baltimore, Pittsburg or Springfield, Mass.

This became known when word was sent to Dr. Muck while he was conducting his musicians, twenty-two of whom are enemy aliens, in another concert in Carnegie Hall, that the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences had passed a resolution not to make any more contracts with the Boston symphony as long as Dr. Muck or any enemy alien conducted it.

The resolution was really passed Wednesday at a secret meeting, but was not made public then so as not to interfere with the concert which was scheduled for the Brooklyn Academy of Music Friday night.

It was stated by a close associate of Dr. Muck that he had at last succumbed to the growing storm of criticism of his actions and would resign as leader of the Boston orchestra at once.

The resignation, however, is looked upon as only a detail in the belated victory of the patriotic men and women who have, by causing him to be barred from city after city, so limited his movements that he soon would have been compelled to give his concerts in Boston alone.

The resolution adopted by the Brooklyn Institute read:—

Want Patriotic Artists.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the institute, has sent a letter with the resolution of the board of trustees to Major Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra, informing him of the action and calling upon him to find an American leader, or at least one who would not be objectionable to the public as an enemy of the country.

The audience that attended the orchestra's final appearance here at Carnegie Hall was confronted with a silent protest against Dr. Muck's appearance that attracted more attention than did the much criticised Director himself.

Blind Children Protest.

A few minutes before the time set for the appearance of Dr. Muck upon the platform an automobile drove up and set down upon the sidewalk twelve blind children, across whose breasts were pinned large American flags. The children had been brought from the Lighthouse, a home for the sightless, for the double purpose of attracting attention to the protests and to permit them to enjoy the music.

When Dr. Muck strode upon the platform for the last concert he will conduct here his eyes were greeted by the flags upon the breasts of the twelve children.

"It simply was a method of calling attention to the fact that there were many persons who did not approve of the continued appearance of this man Muck," said Mrs. William Jay. "We have been opposed to anything in the way of a demonstration that might be construed as a violation of the law or of good taste.

"I am greatly pleased with the conclusion of the opposition against Doktor Muck. He is through now and he, as well as all other enemy aliens, have learned that they cannot flaunt their pro-German sentiments in this country, as Muck did."

n TRIBUNE

ress: New York City

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra Heard in Final Concert of Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its final New York concert of the season yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. There was no excitement other than that arising from the superb performances of the two works which composed the programme, and except for a few boxes and thirty or forty seats, the audience was as large as is usual when Major Higginson's band comes to town.

The two works which Dr. Muck had chosen to present were the Mozart E flat major symphony and the Rimsky-Korsakoff "Scheherazade" suite. Despite the contrasting spirits of these two compositions, Dr. Muck finds both of them congenial, and gives to them a labor of infinite pains, with resultant pleasure.

The Mozart symphony the great orchestra gave with exquisite polish and beautiful attention to detail, while Rimsky's suite received a reading which for color and rhythmic vigor was simply superb. Happy is New York to be able to hear such performances, even if they come to us only ten times a year! The applause throughout was in the best Boston tradition—warm but measured.

Until she was well along in her pro-

WORLD

New York City

MAR 17 1918

Grand Opera Night was celebrated last Tuesday evening at the University Forum of America, Dr. Alexander Cumming, President and founder. The evening opened with an address in French by Charles Moravia, Consul General, on Edmond Rostand's "Chantecler." Miss Viola Archer, contralto, sang; Rudolph Bauerkeller of the New York Symphony Orchestra played the violin; Mme. Almeda Fieux, soprano, sang, with Miss Elsie Wiswell at the piano; Mme. Antoinette Franken played the piano; Clifton Wood of the Boston Symphony Orchestra sang, and Franz Listemann of the New York Symphony Orchestra played the cello.

AMERICAN

New York City.

Ovation Lasting 10 Minutes Given Conductor Muck

Closing Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall a Triumph for Leader.

A capacity audience of music lovers in Carnegie Hall rose en masse late yesterday afternoon and for more than ten minutes engaged in a personal ovation of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck returned four times to bow his farewell to the tumultuous audience. But, upon two occasions, he insisted in sharing the tribute. After the third call he placed an arm about Orchestra Leader Vietek, the concert master, and dragged him forward to face the anudience. Upon the final return he waved the entire orchestra to its feet, and the applause increased.

Women and men pressed down to the stage imploring Dr. Muck to shake their hands. He smiled and bowed, but hurried away without granting the favor.

There had been tension before the opening of this farewell concert in New York this season. Ten uniformed patrolmen stood at the entrance. An even score of plain clothes men were scattered through the auditorium. Five of their number acted as a personal guard over the private resting room of Conductor Muck.

Two taxicabs were in waiting rush Dr. Muck, his individual friend, and Major Henry Lee Higginson, organizer of the orchestra, to the Boston train immediately after the performance. But not one disturbing element appeared, and the police "had nothing to do."

The subscription seats held by Mrs. William Jay, who opposed the appearance of Dr. Muck in New York, were empty. Manager Charles A. Ellis of the orchestra, said he had been unuable to determine positively whether Mrs. Jay was in the hall during the performance. He failed to find anyone who saw her there.

The trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences made public yesterday a resolution adopted March 14, by which its trustees had resolved not to renew the Boston Symphany Orchestra contract while Dr. Muck remains as conductor.

EVENING SUN
ess: New York City
MAR 15 1919

an the ideal husband's generosity.

The Bostons' Concert.

When news intrudes upon music it is usually with ill and disturbing effects. It must go down into the print of a musical record, however, that the last of the Thursday night concerts of the season which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has given in Carnegie Hall was received with such an ovation as left no doubt concerning the real New York's opinion of the running controversy. Dr. Muck, at his first entrance to conduct the national anthem, was given an ovation which ran from clapping to loud cheers; and when, at the end of the concert, Major Higginson chanced to cross the stage, the audience was quick to catch sight of the orchestra's sponsor and to greet him with a similar enthusiasm.

So much for the results of this vaporous campaign which had been loosed against the famous Swiss conductor (as if in accord with the theory that, since we must rout aliens from their employment it should be those who have been preeminently useful and beneficial to us). Three boxes were empty and some few subscription seats, but the body of the house, upper floors and lower, was filled with the usual large audience which attends upon the Bostons' visits; the law was present, uniformed and otherwise, but never needed—and, for the rest, the evening was given up to excellent music and its particularly eager enjoyment.

The programme began with the third Brahms symphony; then came Sibelius's symphonic fantasia, "Pohjola's Daughter," and his symphonic poem, "Night Ride and Sunrise," with the prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" for the end. The Brahms was given in such wise as might have been expected from the orchestra: there was a vigorous coping with its depth and hugeness of feeling, its great, swaying themes, and a consequent largess of beauty. The first movement, it was noticed, went in a faster tempo than usual; it lost none of its color thereby and certainly gained in vitality and spirit. The whole was held together in smooth knit, glossed and furbished by the unreading into it of such gleaming strands as spoke a hotly protestant praise of both the player and his conductor.

The strident colors that come to battle in the two Sibelius numbers will doubtless not appeal to those who prefer to take their sunsets pale and over city housetops. And, tones aside, it is not easy to stand stanch and hold out a friendly imagination to the sector wide onrush of noise and forced climaxes which the Kalevala legend conjures. The night ride, too, is shod with heavy hoofs, and the sun comes up like that familiar one beside the road to Mandalay. All that was strong and striking in both the pieces, however, Dr. Muck succeeded admirably in bringing out. The Wagner prelude, would be an axiom to add, was rendered exquisitely—and with no attribute of an axiom excepting truth and truth's beauty. THE LISTENER.

om WORLD
ddress: New York City
MAR 17 1918

ate

Now that the hysteria over Dr. Muck's nativity is generally past, there appears to be an intelligent realization that no question concerning an orchestra conductor's personal sympathies can turn the classics of world music into pro-German propaganda.

ork City

Ain't You Ashamed of Dr. Muck?

DR. MUCK pulled off his concert the other night in Carnegie hall with twenty-three—count 'em—twenty-three—"alien associates," under the protection of "fifty uniformed policemen and a horde of government secret service men," according to the New York Herald, and, says that truthful journal, "New York bowed its head in shame."

It may be so. We hadn't noticed it the next day. New York appeared to be about as prideful as ever to all outside appearances, but, then, appearances may be deceitful. Perhaps New York, however, bowed its head in shame for a few moments and then stiffened up and determined to brazen it out.

We didn't go, and don't intend to go. But we are not bragging upon that account. We kept away, not because we dislike Dr. Muck, but because we are not of a musical nature. But if we liked that kind of music, we'd wade through a lot of Muck to hear it.

And those that don't like Muck don't have to go and hear him make music. It is not a matter of compulsion. But from the way this musician has been excoriated one would think he had all the people of New York thrown down and hog-tied, and that they had to listen to his fiddling whether they liked it or not. If that was the case, there would be some reason for the objection to the man. But it is not the case.

The unfortunate musician is but fulfilling a contract, and a contract is a sacred thing. Besides, the contract cites the party of the other part in the form of an old Boston resident whose patriotism is simply unquestioned. Major Higginson evidently has been proceeding on the theory that "music hath charms to soothe the savage," but it seems there are some of those simple children of nature who are proof against it. It doesn't charm them; it only makes them "bow their heads in shame."

Perhaps it is a sign of grace that New York is ashamed about something. There's the B. R. T., and the subway, and the recent coal famine, the hideous life conditions of millions, graft, gambling, prostitution, Tammany and all the communal sins that reformers have been harping on for generations. Maybe sometime in the future we will begin to be ashamed of them. But in the meantime Dr. Muck is an excellent thing to begin practice on.

Just now perhaps its only good manners to be ashamed of Dr. Muck, so may we not look upon him as sent here by a beneficent Providence to teach the grownup children good manners? Possibly this is the reason that "Granny" Herald tells us that good behavior dictates that we should "bow our heads in shame" when that rude old Dr. Muck tunes his fiddle.

So it's all right, presumably. There are many more things to be ashamed of besides Dr. Muck, and we may get around to them by and by. But Dr. Muck, anyhow, is perhaps good enough to begin on until we "get the habit."

ork City
MAR 17 1918

rooklyn Art Institute to Bar Muck in Future

It Will Welcome Boston Orchestra With Any Other Conductor

Brooklyn has placed its ban on Dr. Karl Muck—the sixth place to bar the conductor because of his alleged pro-German sympathies. After permitting him to conduct his Boston Symphony Orchestra in the last concert of the season in the Academy of Music Friday evening the directors of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announced yesterday that Dr. Muck will not be seen again in their city with the Boston orchestra.

The institute held its regular monthly meeting last Thursday, and the board of trustees adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this board of trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the institute, has sent a letter with the resolution of the board of trustees to Major Higginson, organizer of the orchestra.

A "silent protest" was staged by Mrs. William Jay at yesterday's concert in Carnegie Hall. Several blind girls from the Lighthouse, an institution founded by Joseph Choate, were conveyed to the hall by motor. Each wore an American flag. Between the andante and minuetto movements of the Mozart symphony the children were led to their seats. There was no other demonstration.

Mrs. Jay, who has been conducting a campaign to prevent Dr. Muck's appearance in New York, declared that she will continue her fight until he is removed from his position.

After the concert the musicians left for Boston.

TELEGRAM
New York City.
MAR 17 1918

Brooklyn Bars Dr. Muck and 22 Enemy Musicians; Sixth City Taking Action

Prussian Director Will Not Appear at Head of Boston Symphony in Institute of Arts and Sciences, According to Decision Reached at Secret Meeting.

Six American cities have now banned Dr. Karl Muck, Major N. L. Higginson's Royal Prussian Music Director. He will never again lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Teutonic airs—or any others, for that matter—in Brooklyn, Washington, Detroit, Baltimore, Pittsburg or Springfield, Mass.

This became known when word was sent to Dr. Muck while he was conducting his musicians, twenty-two of whom are enemy aliens, in another concert in Carnegie Hall, that the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences had passed a resolution not to make any more contracts with the Boston symphony as long as Dr. Muck or any enemy alien conducted it.

The resolution was really passed Wednesday at a secret meeting, but was not made public then so as not to interfere with the concert which was scheduled for the Brooklyn Academy of Music Friday night.

It was stated by a close associate of Dr. Muck that he had at last succumbed to the growing storm of criticism of his actions and would resign as leader of the Boston orchestra at once.

The resignation, however, is looked upon as only a detail in the belated victory of the patriotic men and women who have, by causing him to be barred from city after city, so limited his movements that he soon would have been compelled to give his concerts in Boston alone.

The resolution adopted by the Brooklyn Institute read:—

Want Patriotic Artists.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, That the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

A. Augustus Healy, president of the institute, has sent a letter to Major Higginson, financial backer of the orchestra, informing him of the action and calling upon him to find an American leader, or at least one who would not be objectionable to the public as an enemy of the country.

The audience that attended the orchestra's final appearance here at Carnegie Hall was confronted with a silent protest against Dr. Muck's appearance that attracted more attention than did the much criticised Director himself.

Blind Children Protest.

A few minutes before the time set for the appearance of Dr. Muck upon the platform an automobile drove up and set down upon the sidewalk twelve blind children, across whose breasts were pinned large American flags. The children had been brought from the Lighthouse, a home for the sightless, for the double purpose of attracting attention to the protests and to permit them to enjoy the music.

When Dr. Muck strode upon the platform for the last concert he will conduct here his eyes were greeted by the flags upon the breasts of the twelve children.

"It simply was a method of calling attention to the fact that there were many persons who did not approve of the continued appearance of this man Muck," said Mrs. William Jay. "We have been opposed to anything in the way of a demonstration that might be construed as a violation of the law or of good taste.

"I am greatly pleased with the conclusion of the opposition against Doktor Muck. He is through now and he, as well as all other enemy aliens, have learned that they cannot flaunt their pro-German sentiments in this country, as Muck did."

n TRIBUNE
ress: New York City

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra Heard in Final Concert of Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its final New York concert of the season yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. There was no excitement other than that arising from the superb performances of the two works which composed the programme, and except for a few boxes and thirty or forty seats, the audience was as large as is usual when Major Higginson's band comes to town.

The two works which Dr. Muck had chosen to present were the Mozart E flat major symphony and the Rimsky-Korsakoff "Scheherazade" suite. Despite the contrasting spirits of these two compositions, Dr. Muck finds both of them congenial, and gives to them a labor of infinite pains, with resultant pleasure.

The Mozart symphony the great orchestra gave with exquisite polish and beautiful attention to detail, while Rimsky's suite received a reading which for color and rhythmic vigor was simply superb. Happy is New York to be able to hear such performances, even if they come to us only ten times a year! The applause throughout was in the best Boston tradition—warm but measured.

Until she was well along in her pro-

WORLD
: New York City
MAR 17 1918

Grand Opera Night was celebrated last Tuesday evening at the University Forum of America, Dr. Alexander Cumming, President and founder. The evening opened with an address in French by Charles Moravia, Consul General, on Edmond Rostand's "Chantecler." Miss Viola Archer, contralto, sang; Rudolph Bauerkeller of the New York Symphony Orchestra played the violin; Mme. Almeda Fieux, soprano, sang, with Miss Elsie Wiswell at the piano; Mme. Antoinette Franken played the piano; Clifton Wood of the Boston Symphony Orchestra sang, and Franz Listemann of the New York Symphony Orchestra played the cello.

AMERICAN
: New York City.

Ovation Lasting 10 Minutes Given Conductor Muck

Closing Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall a Triumph for Leader.

A capacity audience of music lovers in Carnegie Hall rose en masse late yesterday afternoon and for more than ten minutes engaged in a personal ovation of Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Muck returned four times to bow his farewell to the tumultuous audience. But, upon two occasions, he insisted in sharing the tribute. After the third call he placed an arm about Orchestra Leader Vietek, the concert master, and dragged him forward to face the anudience. Upon the final return he waved the entire orchestra to its feet, and the applause increased.

Women and men pressed down to the stage imploring Dr. Muck to shake their hands. He smiled and bowed, but hurried away without granting the favor.

There had been tension before the opening of this farewell concert in New York this season. Ten uniformed patrolmen stood at the entrance. An even score of plain clothes men were scattered through the auditorium. Five of their number acted as a personal guard over the private resting room of Conductor Muck.

Two taxicabs were in waiting rush Dr. Muck, his individual friend, and Major Henry Lee Higginson, organizer of the orchestra, to the Boston train immediately after the performance. But not one disturbing element appeared, and the police "had nothing to do."

The subscription seats held by Mrs. William Jay, who opposed the appearance of Dr. Muck in New York, were empty. Manager Charles A. Ellis of the orchestra, said he had been unuable to determine positively whether Mrs. Jay was in the hall during the performance. He failed to find anyone who saw her there.

The trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences made public yesterday a resolution adopted March 14, by which its trustees had resolved not to renew the Boston Symphany Orchestra contract while Dr. Muck remains as conductor.

REDUCTION RATIO 14x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

From TIMES

Address New York City

Date MAR 17 19

BROOKLYN WANTS NO MORE OF MUCK

Contract with Boston Symphony Will Not Be Renewed if Leader Is Retained.

TRIBUTE TO HIGGINSON

But Institute of Arts and Sciences Wants Only Artists in Sympathy with America in War.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will not play in Brooklyn next season under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences if Dr. Karl Muck remains its conductor. Announcement was made yesterday by the Board of Trustees of the institute that the contract with Major Henry Lee Higginson's musical organization would not be renewed unless some other leader was substituted for Dr. Muck. A resolution to this effect was adopted by the trustees at a meeting on Thursday, but why it was not made public before the concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday night was not explained. The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

That it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

That the President be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this Board of Trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come.

In pursuance of the resolution, A. Augustus Healy, the President of the institute, has sent a letter to Major Higginson.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its last New York concert yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall here in Manhattan Borough. Dr. Muck conducted a program of two numbers at his farewell to his local public, a symphony—that in E flat, numbered 543 in the Koechel edition—by Mozart, and after intermission the superb "Scheherazade" of Rimsky-Korsakoff, which the men of Boston had often played here before the music was appropriated to make a holiday for the Russian ballet.

"The Star-Spangled Banner" was given at the start of the afternoon, and not only the patriotic number, but also the conductor and all his men in their later music received frequent and hearty applause. Police in less formidable force than at Thursday's evening concert were again on guard to prevent any untoward incident.

There was no renewal of attacks. Neither were there any further signs of protesting subscribers, beyond one group of blind children said to have been sent to occupy the objectors' seats. Some twenty of these had been received, according to the woman director of a local orchestra who led the campaign against the Bostonians.

Major Higginson accompanied his hundred players home on the 5 o'clock train over the New Haven road. He declined to say if action had been taken looking to next season's plans, and Manager C. A. Ellis explained that no steps were likely until the close of the Boston season, which with the usual term of Summer "pops," will run into next July.

From TELEGRAM

Address: New York City. MAR 17 1918

Date

To The Mayor in Regard to Dr. Muck.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING TELEGRAM:—

I send this as an open letter to Mayor Hylan:—

DR. MUCK should not be allowed to conduct any more concerts in New York. At the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall, November 10, he deliberately and grossly offered insult to the people of this city, whose guest he then was.

The performance opened with "The Star Spangled Banner," and the audience gave generous applause though it could see only Dr. Muck's back. Everybody knew that the national anthem had—for whatever reason—not been played by Dr. Muck's orchestra not long before in Boston, and everybody felt pleased that it was showing a decent regard for the patriotism of the public now.

So the large audience filling Carnegie Hall applauded warmly, and continued insistently to applaud—always at Dr. Muck's back—expecting naturally the conductor's customary bow. But Dr. Muck's immovable black back remained stiffly turned. He contemptously ignored his audience and presently went on with the regular programme in his well known mechanically precise, but cold and uninspiring style.

Now, whatever may be said about the technical merits of national airs considered merely as musical compositions, they are—one and all—ennobled by the patriotic feelings and ideals they arouse and symbolize. They stand for love of country; they express the people's heart and deserve the highest respect on that account.

Therefore, Dr. Muck has undoubtedly been guilty of a very boorish insult to the people of this city, and to the land to which, for some time, he has owed a livelihood. The lifelong profession of music—in his way—has not made him a gentleman, for he behaved as no gentleman would; but, of course there is no word for that product of modern civilization—a gentleman—in the language of the Hun.

The above is a fair statement, and the spirit shown by Dr. Muck will explain why his orchestra has been barred from many American cities, and should be from New York, so long as he leads it.

AN AMERICAN LOVER OF MUSIC.

New York, March 13, 1918.

From TRIBUNE

Address: New York City

MAR 17 1918

Trinity's Rector Is Deep in War Work

DR. WILLIAM T. MANNING, rector of Trinity parish in New York, said to be the largest and wealthiest parish in the world, who has recently aligned himself with the forces opposed to the appearance in New York of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been an active figure in patriotic movements since the beginning of the war. He was one of the strongest supporters of the allied cause, it is said, between the outbreak of the war and America's entry into it, and was particularly prominent in the movement of protest against the Belgian deportations in the winter of 1916. He was an advocate of conscription long before that measure was adopted. Since last December he has been serving as voluntary chaplain at Camp Upton. His term expired the first week in March, but at the request of Upton officers he is to continue at his post in the cantonment.

Dr. Manning was born in England in 1866, but came to the United States when a boy of ten, and is an American citizen.

In 1903 he came to New York as vicar of St. Agnes' Chapel of Trinity Parish in West Ninety-second Street. The following year he was elected assistant rector, and upon the death of the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix in 1908 he succeeded to the rectorship of Trinity.

Rev. Dr. William T. Manning

SUN

Address: New York City MAR 17 1918

WELL FILLED HOUSE GREETS DR. MUCK

Conducts at Matinee Concert—Mrs. Jay Gives Seats to Blind.

SEVERAL TIMES RECALLED

Brooklyn Art Institute Resolves Against His Appearance There Next Season.

Dr. Karl Muck's last appearance in New York as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the New York 1917-18 season was well received at the matinee performance in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. The audience, while not so large as usual, comfortably filled the house, although there were spots in the orchestra and in some of the boxes where seats were not occupied.

Whether this was the result of the campaign against Dr. Muck which has been waged by Mrs. William Jay and the anti-Muck faction and which culminated yesterday in an appeal for tickets which Mrs. Jay distributed to blind persons, who occupied twelve seats, or whether it was due to illness on the part of subscribers could not be cleared up.

The management of the Boston Symphony held that there were no more vacancies than usual, but those who have attended the concerts regularly as well as those who are against Dr. Muck gave it as their opinion that there were.

Whatever the actual reason for the vacant seats the audience gave the leader, who has been barred from many of the leading cities in this country, a hearty reception and about the usual amount of applause at the end of each number. At first Dr. Muck refused to acknowledge the applause alone and signalled for the orchestra to rise and bow, but following the intermission he acknowledge the handclapping. After the Mozart Symphony in E flat major and at the end of the concert the audience called him back a number of times.

Dr. Muck left the hall at the close of the concert, entered a taxicab on the Fifty-sixth street side of the building and hurried to the Grand Central Terminal, where he boarded a train for Boston.

Higginson Silent as to 1918-19.

Major Higginson, who has made possible the presentation of Boston Symphony music to the American public and who has been Dr. Muck's stanch supporter in all of the campaigns against him, refused yesterday after the matinee to say anything to THE SUN regarding plans for the continuation of the concerts next year.

In sending seven blind children to the concert yesterday from the New York Association for the Blind's Lighthouse in East Fifty-ninth street arrangements were made so that each child wore pinned across the breast of his or her jacket or blouse a twelve by nine inch American flag. This was covered by an overcoat when the children were piloted into the big hall. The five elderly ladies from the same institution also wore the flags. This plan, according to Mrs. Jay, was symbolic of the blindness of America to German autocracy, and she said she chose blind persons as it expressed her belief and the belief of other patriotic Americans that only those who could properly listen to the beautiful music of the orchestra were those who could not see the face of the Kaiser's friend. The blind women and children did not enter Carnegie Hall until after Dr. Muck had conducted the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," as it was Mrs. Jay's specific wish that they should not hear it when it was directed by Dr. Muck.

Mrs. Jay Threatened.

Richard Fletcher, representing Mrs. Jay, said last night that the leader of the agitation against the man who at one time played for the Kaiser has received a large number of abusive and threatening letters. The latter, he said, have been turned over to the proper authorities.

As intimated in THE SUN yesterday, Dr. Muck will not conduct any concerts presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences next winter. The following resolutions to that end have been adopted by the institute:

"Resolved, that it is the sense of this board that in all lectures or concerts given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences every effort should be made to confine their presentation and conduct to such artists or speakers as are in avowed sympathy with the ideals and aims of the United States in the existing war.

"Resolved, that it is the sense of this board that the contract for the continuance of the Boston Symphony concerts while conducted by Dr. Karl Muck shall not be renewed by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

"Resolved, that the president be and he is hereby authorized to express to Major Higginson the deep appreciation of this board of trustees for his great services to the cause of classic music in the United States through the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the past, and the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Muck the orchestra may continue for many years to come."

The president of the institute, A. Augustus Healy, has sent a letter to Major Higginson expressing the stand of the institute.

An Audience of Music Lovers.

The programme of the afternoon's entertainment was peaceable and impartial. Two compositions were listed, one by an Austrian and the other by that Russian who has lately contributed pictorial and terpsichorean delights to the not infrequently dull stage of the Metropolitan Opera House. Mozart's familiar E flat symphony was the former of these two and the latter was Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" suite, which was made known to many music haters by the ministrations of the Russian ballet. Yesterday afternoon, however, there was no necessity of appealing to people's souls by means of Mr. Nijinsky's moving pictures.

An audience of music lovers, not at all in sympathy with the weary policeman who said, "They ought to pay people to listen to such stuff," sat closely attentive to the playing of the great orchestra and seemed to be in no wise perturbed by Dr. Muck's possession of the baton. Nor did the now sensationally advertised director seem in the least nervous. His back was as straight as ever and his left knee bent at precisely the same angle as usual.

His beat was infinitesimal as it always is except when sudden bursts of tone were demanded and then the summons was made as with the brandishing of a sword. Most solemn was the countenance which the Doctor turned upon the audience when he acknowledged applause.

As for the orchestra, it played apparently without a tremor. Of course it contained some aliens of the enemy race, but no one has taken any notice of them except the District of Columbia, which has invited them to stay away. But in company with the French and Russians in the orchestra they gave a very delightful concert.

REDUCTION RATIO 12x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date MAR 17 1918

Boston Orchestra Closes Here.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, has conducted a vigorous correspondence with certain New Yorkers on matters arising since the war.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which closed its thirty-second season of visits to this city yesterday, will shortly end in Boston its thirty-seventh year. In seconding Major Higginson's remarks as to his famous band Charles A. Ellis, the orchestra's manager during most of its history, on leaving yesterday, gave a further account of some facts important at this time.

Mr. Ellis, for the information of all interested in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning its conductor, Dr. Carl Muck, widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, submitted the following statements, which he said could be verified by any one who cared to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian. He is not, and never has been, an official of the German Government. He is not a citizen of Germany. While he was born in Darmstadt, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"Dr. Muck has practiced his profession in Switzerland, Austria, Denmark, Russia, France, England, Spain, and for twenty years he was under contract as conductor of the Royal Opera at Berlin, where he received the title Hoch Generalmusikdirektor, the highest honor that can come to a musician in Germany."

Conductor's American Record.

Mr. Ellis's statement went on to give some facts as to Dr. Muck's many years as conductor in the United States:

"This contract was still in force in 1906 when he first came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was therefore then necessary to secure the consent of the German Emperor before he could accept Major Higginson's engagement on leave of absence for two seasons.

"At the end of this period he went back to Berlin to finish his contract, which expired in 1912, leaving him free to return to his duties in Boston, which he did without being 'loaned,' and without having to ask the consent of anybody.

"During the eight years he has lived in America, Dr. Muck has respected our laws and complied with them in letter and spirit. He has devoted his great abilities to the development of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has made it the best organization of its kind in the world. For the three years and more of the war he has worked with our orchestra in almost daily rehearsals and concerts.

"No political discussion has been allowed, no trouble of any sort has arisen among our cosmopolitan membership, comprising fifty-one American citizens, (seventeen native born,) twenty-two Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians, and two Bohemians.

"After thoroughly investigating many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country.'"

Dr. Muck Leads Ninety Concerts.

Though the Boston Symphony planned a season of 110 concerts, the late agitation against Dr. Muck, as well as against the orchestra's personnel, led to the voluntary canceling of twenty such engagements. In Baltimore, where alone the band was officially barred—aside from Washington, covered by a special law—the loss on five concerts was estimated at $15,000. The founder and patron took his loss without complaint.

The New York series of fifteen concerts included five in Brooklyn. Of the ten given in Manhattan at Carnegie Hall, the programs have contained four tone poems of the Finnish composer, Sibelius; three symphonies of Beethoven, three works of Brahms, two each of Berlioz, Mozart, Rachmaninoff, Tschaikowsky, and Wagner. There have been single performances of music by Cherubini, Debussy, Enesco, Goldmark, Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Ravel, Strauss, Liszt, MacDowell, Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Strauss.

Twenty composers in ten concerts have rarely been more widely distributed as to nationality—ten Teutons, three French, three Russian, one American, Italian, Rumanian, Finn. The Boston season, when ended, will show far more variety than these. In New York the orchestra has been its own star, without soloist, except on the one occasion in January last when a Concerto Grosso of Handel was performed with the part for harpsichord played on a piano by Dr. Muck.

Martinelli to Sing in Boston Next Sunday

Word was received from New York yesterday that Mr. Gatti-Casazza had given his consent to the appearance in Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 4, of Giovanni Martinelli, the very distinguished Italian tenor of the Met-

Post 10/28

Post Dec 31, 1917

SYMPHONY PLAYERS GIVE CONCERT IN CAMP

CAMP DEVENS, Dec. 30.—Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra visited this national army camp this afternoon and gave a concert in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium. The musicians were directed by Clement Lenom, who leads at the "Pops," and none of the alien-enemy members who are a part of the organization were present.

More than 4000 officers and men packed every available space in the auditorium and applauded liberally. The entire assembly stood at attention as the musicians stood and played the national anthem. The trumpet solo of Gustav Heim, a naturalized American citizen, brought forth prolonged applause and he responded with "The Lost Chord."

The musicians returned to Boston immediately after the concert.

---

44 Bost Globe Dec 31, 1917

Boston Symphony Concert

Then it was time for headquarters to climb into overcoats and helmets and race over to the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium to hear the greatest treat a military camp in New England ever had, a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The big building was jammed, nearly 4000 men and officers sitting on benches without backs and standing for two hours. A late train from Boston delayed the program.

But members of the orchestra said they had never played before a better audience. This afternoon's audience was as quiet as if Billy Sunday was perched before them glowering at the least disturbance. Music did it. Four thousand men in the army hungry for fine music. Their appreciation showed without applause; but there was applause too.

And it wasn't the "Star Spangled Banner" they went wild about. That number, first on the program, received respectful, soldierly attention. The orchestra and audience stood through it. They gave a little more applause to the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

But when conductor Clement Lenom started on a program of just about the sort which is given pop concert audiences in Symphony Hall the men let themselves out after every number. They sat really rapt through "Peer Gynt," and when the first trumpeter, Gustav Heim, played "The Rosary" they wouldn't let him go back to his place until he had encored with "The Lost Chord."

This Symphony player has been a naturalized American for some 10 years. The conductor is a Belgian; none of the 48 players who came for this concert were enemy aliens.

Officer Cheered for Order

When wrist watches began slipping past 4 o'clock rookies became nervous. They were supposed to be back at retreat at 4:45. Brig Gen William S. McNair of the Artillery Brigade was the ranking officer present, and at his request Col Arthur S. Conklin of the 303d Artillery called for attention, between two numbers, and announced that by order of the commanding general men who wished to stay need not report for retreat.

They had not been soldiers long enough to know they shouldn't cheer orders, no matter how pleasant. They yelled their thanks.

The final number was one to please a military audience, Rossini's overture, "William Tell," a German story in Italian music.

Sec Robie of the Y. M. C. A. announced that another concert would be given in the auditorium next Sunday afternoon.

The weather is still cool.

---

m EAGLE
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 19 1918

"FAIR PLAY" ANSWERED

Dr. Fairbairn Assails Defense of Dr. Muck.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

The "Fair Play" cry for Dr. Muck cannot go unanswered, notwithstanding it appears over a nom de plume, especially as it accuses a respected woman of this city of misstatements. The habit of giving tickets to Army and Navy men was very manifest, so remarked by public press. The source was unknown. Dr. Muck gave an authorized account of his life in "Who's Who" in 1916-17, as reproduced in The Eagle. There is no mention of his Swiss citizenship—important detail of life for a man to omit and keep quiet about for thirty years! Was it a matter of shame or regret? It was placed in a very minor position in the mental makeup of the author as compared with German detail.

He recounts his German birth—German education, finished in 1880. He was in Austria in 1882; in charge of Berlin Imperial Opera House, 1892-1912; here on leave of absence—mind you, by permission of "me and Gott"!—an employed agent, musical or otherwise, of the Kaiser; made general music director by the Kaiser in 1908. How kind the Kaiser usually is to those who desert his kingdom!

If Dr. Muck was a Swiss citizen from 1882 he was about as patriotic as some of those peculiar Prussian individuals who have taken out citizenship papers here and work overtime for "me and Gott." We are supposed to restrain them or attempt to. We know what they do, what they say and what they are from sad experience.

The Harvard professor, again from the region of Boston, and, if I am not mistaken, Kueneman enjoyed the hospitality of this country, and came to the Brooklyn Institute and aired Prussianism in the face of protest. After the lectures or before, during the dining and wine—excuse me, beer bibbing—protected by the cry of "fair play," they formed a bureau and organized strikes and directed the damnable Prussian spy system in this country.

Dernburg, in the face of protest, under the protection again of "fair play," aired Kaiserism before the University Club. Dumba followed their example and was under the protection of "fair play." In the meantime fires—explosions again called spontaneous combustion by "fair play"—murder of women and children by submarines without much protest from "fair play" goes along.

Protests—facts are called calumnies. Six cities who have driven out these Prussians and their aids, in fact if not in name, are called chauvinists—fanatics. When the dead bodies of our boys are brought home, victims of the system which those Prussians at heart do not oppose in our midst, "Fair Play" had better not suggest that Dr. Muck and his orchestra furnish the music, though he may have the temerity now, even under a nom de plume, to protect them with the plea of "fair play." Bernstorff's exit was accompanied by a halo of "fair-play" cry. The exit of Dr Muck's beloved friend would be a fairy scene compared with result. Let's hear some words about fair play for our boys—our boys with the greatest love for us that man can exhibit—and drop the wandering minstrel of historic, though questionable, fame.

H. A. FAIRBAIRN.

Brooklyn, March 19, 1918.

---

om EVENING GLOBE
ddress New York City
ate

Playing the Anthem "in Vain."

Editor Globe:—Mrs. (Captain) B. L. Smith's criticism regarding the lack of respect shown the national anthem, especially when played at the commencement of theatrical performances, is certainly justified. I think, however, that it is important to search for the reason of this disrespect.

The reason is that the national anthem, owing to misdirected patriotism of well meaning people, is played entirely too often, and on most uncalled-for occasions. Instead of being considered sacred music, and consequently played only on proper occasions, when it will thrill the hearts of the audiences, it is made so common that it loses its meaning and people simply stand up in a mechanical, thoughtless way, without any particular feeling or thought.

The national anthem should be treated in the spirit of the Third Commandment:

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

The theatre is no place where the sacred strains of the national anthem should be played "in vain," unless on the same occasion a patriotic piece or a great war picture is brought before the public.

C. A. P.

New York, March 19.

Those Umlaut Musicians.

Editor Globe:—The letter of Joseph de Valdor in Saturday's issue concerning Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony exhibits a hypersensitive type of patriotism, which cannot be classed as of the lightest service to the country in its hour of stress. There are many Germans in this country who came here with no thought that war would ever exist between our land and theirs and who have conducted themselves with perfect propriety under the unforeseen and trying conditions that have arisen. Why on earth should we visit on them the penalty due to the misleaders and misrulers of the German nation?

Our present business is to whip the Kaiser and to smash Prussian autocracy, and we gain no efficiency in the performance of this task by persecuting innocent individuals or by trying to suppress the German language. Does Mr. De Valdor think that the Germans in this country should all commit suicide or bury themselves in caves during the war? If they are not to speak their own language must they remain dumb until peace is achieved? How does the sound of the German language hurt any American? It is a language in which many noble things have been said and written to the advantage of the whole world. Even at the present day there are thousands of Germans who are using it to condemn the infamies of kaiserism.

Suppose the Prussian autocrats, of whom I entertain precisely as strong a feeling of detestation as does Mr. De Valdor, would not allow American musicians to play in Berlin. Are we to take them as our models, or to shame them by showing a nobler spirit? We are fighting for democracy, and its first principle is that every man should be judged according to his own merits, regardless of ancestry or race. Only the irrational mob spirit would persecute the decent German in this country for the crimes of indecent Germans in Europe.

Dr. Muck is no spy or plotter, and receives no pay which he does not fairly earn by distinguished service to one of the noblest of the arts. To seek to deprive him of a livelihood because of an accident of birth, or even because of sentiment which he cannot help, and which have been controlled by him to the avoidance of any form of misconduct or even bad taste, is monstrous and brutal intolerance. The Prussians might be guilty of it toward an American in his situation, but no American should dishonor himself by stooping to such baseness.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

New York, March 16.

EVENING SUN
ess: New York City
MAR 15 1918
MAR 15 1918

MUCK PROTEST SEEMS ALLAYED

No Outburst Expected at Brooklyn Concert.

CARNEGIE HALL CROWD QUIET

Orchestra Leader Produces Proof of Swiss Citizenship.

The appearance of Dr. Karl Muck in Brooklyn to-night is expected to pass off with no more disturbance than attended the recital of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall, in Manhattan. As in the case at Carnegie Hall, extra policemen will be on hand to check any hostile demonstration, but none is expected. Tomorrow afternoon Dr. Muck and his orchestra will appear again in Carnegie Hall.

Twenty ploicemen in citizens' clothes, in charge of Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Captain of Detectives Gildea, and Acting Captain Carey, were on guard last night in Carnegie Hall. Inspector Henry and Captain Byron Sackett, in charge of twenty-five policemen, kept watch on the outside.

The concert passed off without interruption. The numbers were similar to those at previous recitals and received much in the same manner as on those occasions.

Before ascending to the platform Dr. Muck offered proof of his Swiss citizenship. He made public a certificate he had received from the town of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland, on March 4, 1881. He was then 21 years old. Dr. Muck's father was a Bavarian and settled in Switzerland when the future director of the Boston Symphony was 6 years old. The latter was naturalized upon coming of age.

Proof of his Swiss citizenship was offered in a document which bore the signature of the President of the Town Council of the community where Dr. Muck was naturalized. It follows:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1859, be (is) our citizen, and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virtue of which we give the definite assurance that the above-mentioned citizen shall at any time and under all circumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim this 4th day of March 1881.

The President.
(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER,
in the name of the Town Council.
(Signed) C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signatures is acknowledged.

Chancellery of the Canton of Zug.
by the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

TRIBUNE
ess: Providence, R. I.
R 17 1918

DR. MUCK NOT INVITED

Brooklyn Arts and Sciences Institute Demand Loyalty.

New York, March 16.—Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced to-day, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season, provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

EVENING STAR
ss: Washington, D. C.
MAR 17 1918

PUTS BAN ON DR. MUCK.

Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences Cuts Boston Orchestra.

NEW YORK, March 16.—Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been notified of the action taken by the Brooklyn institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Mucks the orchestra might continue its visits to Brooklyn.

From TIMES
Address New York City
Date

Boston Orchestra Closes Here.

Major Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, has conducted a vigorous correspondence with certain New Yorkers on matters arising since the war.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which closed its thirty-second season of visits to this city yesterday, will shortly end in Boston its thirty-seventh year. In seconding Major Higginson's remarks as to his famous band Charles A. Ellis, the orchestra's manager during most of its history, on leaving yesterday, gave a further account of some facts important at this time.

Mr. Ellis, for the information of all interested in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning its conductor, Dr. Carl Muck, widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, submitted the following statements, which he said could be verified by any one who cared to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr. Muck is not a Prussian. He is not, and never has been, an official of the German Government. He is not a citizen of Germany. While he was born in Darmstadt, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"Dr. Muck has practiced his profession in Switzerland, Austria, Denmark, Russia, France, England, Spain, and for twenty years he was under contract as conductor of the Royal Opera at Berlin, where he received the title Hoch Generalmusikdirektor, the highest honor that can come to a musician in Germany."

***

Conductor's American Record.

Mr. Ellis's statement went on to give some facts as to Dr. Muck's many years as conductor in the United States:

"This contract was still in force in 1906 when he first came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was therefore then necessary to secure the consent of the German Emperor before he could accept Major Higginson's engagement on leave of absence for two seasons.

"At the end of this period he went back to Berlin to finish his contract, which expired in 1912, leaving him free to return to his duties in Boston, which he did without being 'loaned,' and without having to ask the consent of anybody.

"During the eight years he has lived in America, Dr. Muck has respected our laws and complied with them in letter and spirit. He has devoted his great abilities to the development of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and has made it the best organization of its kind in the world. For the three years and more of the war he has worked with our orchestra in almost daily rehearsals and concerts.

"No political discussion has been allowed, no trouble of any sort has arisen among our cosmopolitan membership, comprising fifty-one American citizens, (seventeen native born,) twenty-two Germans, eight Austrians, two Italians, two British, six Dutch, two Russians, three French, two Belgians, and two Bohemians.

"After thoroughly investigating many fantastic and pernicious rumors about Dr. Muck that have been brought to their attention, the Federal authorities have found nothing to incriminate him as a German agent or as having performed any act which is prejudicial to the interests of our country."

***

Dr. Muck Leads Ninety Concerts.

Though the Boston Symphony planned a season of 110 concerts, the late agitation against Dr. Muck, as well as against the orchestra's personnel, led to the voluntary canceling of twenty such engagements. In Baltimore, where alone the band was officially barred—aside from Washington, covered by a special law—the loss on five concerts was estimated at $15,000. The founder and patron took his loss without complaint.

The New York series of fifteen concerts included five in Brooklyn. Of the ten given in Manhattan at Carnegie Hall, the programs have contained four tone poems of the Finnish composer, Sibelius; three symphonies of Beethoven, three works of Brahms, two each of Berlioz, Mozart, Rachmaninoff, Tschaikowsky, and Wagner. There have been single performances of music by Cherubini, Debussy, Enesco, Goldmark, Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Ravel, Strauss, Liszt, MacDowell, Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Strauss.

Twenty composers in ten concerts have rarely been more widely distributed as to nationality—ten Teutons, three French, three Russian, one American, Italian, Rumanian, Finn. The Boston season, when ended, will show far more variety than these. In New York the orchestra has been its own star, without soloist, except on the one occasion in January last when a Concerto Grosso of Handel was performed with the part for harpsichord played on a piano by Dr. Muck.

Post Dec 31, 1917

Martinelli to Sing in Boston Next Sunday

Word was received from New York yesterday that Mr. Gatti-Casazza had given his consent to the appearance in Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 4, of Giovanni Martinelli, the very distinguished Italian tenor of the Met-

Post

SYMPHONY PLAYERS GIVE CONCERT IN CAMP

CAMP DEVENS, Dec. 30.—Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra visited this national army camp this afternoon and gave a concert in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium. The musicians were directed by Clement Lenom, who leads at the "Pops," and none of the alien-enemy members who are a part of the organization were present.

More than 4000 officers and men packed every available space in the auditorium and applauded liberally. The entire assembly stood at attention as the musicians stood and played the national anthem. The trumpet solo of Gustav Heim, a naturalized American citizen, brought forth prolonged applause and he responded with "The Lost Chord."

The musicians returned to Boston immediately after the concert.

44

Boston Globe Dec 31, 1917

Boston Symphony Concert

Then it was time for headquarters to climb into overcoats and helmets and race over to the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium to hear the greatest treat a military camp in New England ever had, a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The big building was jammed, nearly 4000 men and officers sitting on benches without backs and standing for two hours. A late train from Boston delayed the program.

But members of the orchestra said they had never played before a better audience. This afternoon's audience was as quiet as if Billy Sunday was perched before them glowering at the least disturbance. Music did it. Four thousand men in the army hungry for fine music. Their appreciation showed without applause; but there was applause too.

And it wasn't the "Star Spangled Banner" they went wild about. That number, first on the program, received respectful, soldierly attention. The orchestra and audience stood through it. They gave a little more applause to the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

But when conductor Clement Lenom started on a program of just about the sort which is given pop concert audiences in Symphony Hall the men let themselves out after every number. They sat really rapt through "Peer Gynt," and when the first trumpeter, Gustav Heim, played "The Rosary," they wouldn't let him go back to his place until he had encored with "The Lost Chord."

This Symphony player has been a naturalized American for some 10 years. The conductor is a Belgian; none of the 48 players who came for this concert were enemy aliens.

Officer Cheered for Order

When wrist watches began slipping past 4 o'clock rookies became nervous. They were supposed to be back at retreat at 4:45. Brig Gen William S. McNair of the Artillery Brigade was the ranking officer present, and at his request Col Arthur S. Conklin of the 303d Artillery called for attention, between two numbers, and announced that by order of the commanding general men who wished to stay need not report for retreat.

They had not been soldiers long enough to know they shouldn't cheer orders, no matter how pleasant. They yelled their thanks.

The final number was one to please a military audience, Rossini's overture, "William Tell," a German story in Italian music.

Sec Robie of the Y. M. C. A. announced that another concert would be given in the auditorium next Sunday afternoon.

The weather is still [illegible]

m EAGLE
ress: Brooklyn, N. Y.
MAR 19 1918

"FAIR PLAY" ANSWERED

Dr. Fairbairn Assails Defense of Dr. Muck.

Editor Brooklyn Daily Eagle:

The "Fair Play" cry for Dr. Muck cannot go unanswered, notwithstanding it appears over a nom de plume, especially as it accuses a respected woman of this city of misstatements. The habit of giving tickets to Army and Navy men was very manifest, so remarked by public press. The source was unknown. Dr. Muck gave an authorized account of his life in "Who's Who" in 1916-17, as reproduced in The Eagle. There is no mention of his Swiss citizenship—important detail of life for a man to omit and keep quiet about for thirty years! Was it a matter of shame or regret? It was placed in a very minor position in the mental makeup of the author as compared with German detail.

He recounts his German birth—German education, finished in 1880. He was in Austria in 1882; in charge of Berlin Imperial Opera House, 1892-1912; here on leave of absence mind you, by permission of "me and Gott"!—an employed agent, musical or otherwise, of the Kaiser; made general music director by the Kaiser in 1908. How kind the Kaiser usually is to those who desert his kingdom!

If Dr. Muck was a Swiss citizen from 1882 he was about as patriotic as some of those peculiar Prussian individuals who have taken out citizenship papers here and work overtime for "me and Gott." We are supposed to restrain them or attempt to. We know what they do, what they say and what they are from sad experience.

The Harvard professor, again from the region of Boston, and, if I am not mistaken, Kueneman enjoyed the hospitality of this country, and came to the Brooklyn Institute and aired Prussianism in the face of protest. After the lectures or before, during the dining and wine—excuse me, beer bibbing—protected by the cry of "fair play," they formed a bureau and organized strikes and directed the damnable Prussian spy system in this country.

Dernburg, in the face of protest, under the protection again of "fair play," aired Kaiserism before the University Club. Dumba followed their example and was under the protection of "fair play." In the meantime fires—explosions again called spontaneous combustion by "fair play"—murder of women and children by submarines without much protest from "fair play" goes along.

Protests—facts are called calumnies. Six cities who have driven out these Prussians and their aids, in fact if not in name, are called chauvinists—fanatics. When the dead bodies of our boys are brought home, victims of the system which those Prussians at heart do not oppose in our midst, "Fair Play" had better not suggest that Dr. Muck and his orchestra furnish the music, though he may have the temerity now, even under a nom de plume, to protect them with the plea of "fair play." Bernstorff's exit was accompanied by a halo of "fair-play" cry. The exit of Dr Muck's beloved friend would be a fairy scene compared with result. Let's hear some words about fair play for our boys—our boys with the greatest love for us that man can exhibit—and drop the wandering minstrel of historic, though questionable, fame.

H. A. FAIRBAIRN.

Brooklyn, March 19, 1918.

TRIBUNE
ess: Providence, R. I.

DR. MUCK NOT INVITED

Brooklyn Arts and Sciences Institute Demand Loyalty.

New York, March 16.—Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced to-day, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season, provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

EVENING STAR
ss: Washington, D. C.
MAR 17 1918

PUTS BAN ON DR. MUCK.

Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences Cuts Boston Orchestra.

NEW YORK, March 16.—Voting to present only such artists as are in sympathy with United States ideals, the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, it was announced today, decided not to invite the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season provided Dr. Karl Muck is conductor.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, backer of the orchestra, has been notified of the action taken by the Brooklyn institute. Resolutions expressed the hope that with the substitution of some other conductor than Dr. Mucks the orchestra might continue its visits to Brooklyn.

om EVENING GLOBE
ddress New York City
ate

Playing the Anthem "in Vain.

Editor Globe:—Mrs. (Captain) B. L. Smith's criticism regarding the lack of respect shown the national anthem, especially when played at the commencement of theatrical performances, is certainly justified. I think, however, that it is important to search for the reason of this disrespect.

The reason is that the national anthem, owing to misdirected patriotism of well meaning people, is played entirely too often, and on most uncalled-for occasions. Instead of being considered sacred music, and consequently played only on proper occasions, when it will thrill the hearts of the audiences, it is made so common that it loses its meaning and people simply stand up in a mechanical, thoughtless way, without any particular feeling or thought.

The national anthem should be treated in the spirit of the Third Commandment:

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

The theatre is no place where the sacred strains of the national anthem should be played "in vain," unless on the same occasion a patriotic piece or a great war picture is brought before the public.

C. A. P.

New York, March 19.

Those Umlaut Musicians.

Editor Globe:—The letter of Joseph de Valdor in Saturday's issue concerning Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony exhibits a hypersensitive type of patriotism, which cannot be classed as of the lightest service to the country in its hour of stress. There are many Germans in this country who came here with no thought that war would ever exist between our land and theirs and who have conducted themselves with perfect propriety under the unforeseen and trying conditions that have arisen. Why on earth should we visit on them the penalty due to the misleaders and misrulers of the German nation?

Our present business is to whip the Kaiser and to smash Prussian autocracy, and we gain no efficiency in the performance of this task by persecuting innocent individuals or by trying to suppress the German language. Does Mr. De Valdor think that the Germans in this country should all commit suicide or bury themselves in caves during the war? If they are not to speak their own language must they remain dumb until peace is achieved? How does the sound of the German language hurt any American? It is a language in which many noble things have been said and written to the advantage of the whole world. Even at the present day there are thousands of Germans who are using it to condemn the infamies of kaiserism.

Suppose the Prussian autocrats, of whom I entertain precisely as strong a feeling of detestation as does Mr. De Valdor, would not allow American musicians to play in Berlin. Are we to take them as our models, or to shame them by showing a nobler spirit? We are fighting for democracy, and its first principle is that every man should be judged according to his own merits, regardless of ancestry or race. Only the irrational mob spirit would persecute the decent German in this country for the crimes of indecent Germans in Europe.

Dr. Muck is no spy or plotter, and receives no pay which he does not fairly earn by distinguished service to one of the noblest of the arts. To seek to deprive him of a livelihood because of an accident of birth, or even because of sentiment which he cannot help, and which have been controlled by him to the avoidance of any form of misconduct or even bad taste, is monstrous and brutal intolerance. The Prussians might be guilty of it toward an American in his situation, but no American should dishonor himself by stooping to such baseness.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

New York, March 16.

EVENING SUN
ess: New York City
MAR 15 1918

MUCK PROTEST SEEMS ALLAYED

No Outburst Expected at Brooklyn Concert.

CARNEGIE HALL CROWD QUIET

Orchestra Leader Produces Proof of Swiss Citizenship.

The appearance of Dr. Karl Muck in Brooklyn to-night is expected to pass off with no more disturbance than attended the recital of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall, in Manhattan. As in the case at Carnegie Hall, extra policemen will be on hand to check any hostile demonstration, but none is expected. Tomorrow afternoon Dr. Muck and his orchestra will appear again in Carnegie Hall.

Twenty ploicemen in citizens' clothes, in charge of Borough Police Inspector O'Brien, Captain of Detectives Gildea, and Acting Captain Carey, were on guard last night in Carnegie Hall. Inspector Henry and Captain Byron Sackett, in charge of twenty-five policemen, kept watch on the outside.

The concert passed off without interruption. The numbers were similar to those at previous recitals and received much in the same manner as on those occasions.

Before ascending to the platform Dr. Muck offered proof of his Swiss citizenship. He made public a certificate he had received from the town of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, Switzerland, on March 4, 1881. He was then 21 years old. Dr. Muck's father was a Bavarian and settled in Switzerland when the future director of the Boston Symphony was 6 years old. The latter was naturalized upon coming of age.

Proof of his Swiss citizenship was offered in a document which bore the signature of the President of the Town Council of the community where Dr. Muck was naturalized. It follows:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1859, be (is) our citizen, and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virtue of which we give the definite assurance that the above-mentioned citizen shall at any time and under all circumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim this 4th day of March 1881.

The President.
(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER.
in the name of the Town Council.
(Signed) C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation to all authorities and their respective protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signatures is acknowledged.

Chancellery of the Canton of Zug.
by the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

Transcript March 17, 1918

NEWS OF MUSIC

The Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Hackett at Cambridge—A New Suite from Mr. Sowerby and New Piano-Pieces from Mr. Engel—Films at the Metropolitan—Items and Opinions

THE subscribers to the Symphony Concerts at Cambridge enjoyed yesterday one of the choicest evenings of the season. A good soloist in Mr. Arthur Hackett, with two matchless arias from eighteenth-century music; the enjoyable and "taking" fare of Chaikovsky's symphony in F minor, numbers from Beethoven and Wagner at their best—a Cambridge concert-goer, not irreconcilably wrapped up in the "very latest" music, could scarcely look for a finer programme. And the audience showed itself highly pleased throughout, not least by Mr. Hackett's euphonious, resonant, and well-mellowed tones. Händel's style suited his particular qualities and capabilities much more successfully than Mozart's. Don Ottavio, lamenting and outraged, in his air from the second act of "Don Giovanni" takes a more subtly polished voice than Mr. Hackett's, while the mood of the music requires a smoother flexibility, a greater sensitiveness to shaded expression than he now possesses. But the air from Händel's last oratorio, "Jepthah," he delivered in a manner, properly more stout and sturdy, proportioning the contour, fully understanding and imparting the emotion.

Evidently Dr. Muck prefers Chaikovsky's Fourth Symphony to the others. At any rate, he gives it a suitably assertive and brilliant reading. One wonders how popular the Finale has been upon the phonograph, where music is oftener designed to soothe than to be but startling, piercing and lurid. As for the whole symphony, does familiarity with the trumpet theme, the ironies and complaints, the Andantino and the once novel Scherzo bring contempt from our audiences? No, people are not indifferent. The "catchy" themes, the advantageous orchestration and coloring, the well-planned practicability of the whole still persist. But how cheap the music sounds beside the thrice familiar Overture to "Leonore" No. 3! That also has its reiterations and its orthodoxies, but the hundred details of transition and development to give it the sense of permanence of music sufficient unto itself and peculiar to its subject and its moods, a music that seemingly can never age. You can always see just how Chaikovsky does it—you can never quite see how Beethoven does it; not even when the triumphant relief of the concealed trumpets breaks the tension of anxiety or the music rises to the pure exhilaration and joy of the close. Again there is the indefinable mood in Wagner's "Good Friday" picturing, and now when his operas are banished from the stage and his music is seldom heard in the concert-hall, not a few hearers return to it with sudden realization of strengthened affection.

Globe 3/17

A Mrs. Jay, the wife of an admirable man who died some years ago, made considerable agitation over Dr. Muck's appearing as conductor of the Boston Symphony concerts last Wednesday night in New York. Therefore 24 police officers stood guard while Dr. Muck conducted, and none but subscribers were allowed to buy tickets at the door. Plain clothes men were in the corridors and among the audience. The concert went off without incident. The management of the orchestra made public the official papers which declared Dr. Muck a Swiss citizen—papers recently authenticated by Mr. Ritter, Swiss minister to the United States. The form of the document may be of interest:

We, the President and Council of the community (or town) of Neuheim, in the Canton of Zug, do hereby certify that the bearer of this document, Karl Muck, single, born Nov. 22, 1858, be (is) our citizen, and we recognize him as such at all times.

By virtue of which we give the definite assurance that the above-mentioned citizen shall at any time and under all circumstances be received by our community.

Given at Neuheim this 4th day of March, 1881.

The President.

(Signed) KLEMENS ZUERCHER,
in the name of the Town Council.
(Signed) C. JOS. STAUB.

With the best recommendation of all authorities and their representative protection, the genuineness of the foregoing signature is acknowledged.

Chancellor of the Canton of Zug,
by the Chancellor, A. WEBER.
Zug, March 15, 1881.

The certificate bore the seal of Neuheim and various validations showing inspections from time to time.

Major Higginson, who was present, stated again in the press that he had neither accepted nor refused Dr. Muck's resignation offered him months ago. There has been much division of opinion on this matter. Technically, at least, there is no reason for Dr. Muck's retirement. He is not only a bona fide Swiss citizen, but so far as public utterances are concerned has sedulously kept his mouth shut as to his opinions of the present war. Everyone knows that those opinions are strongly and not unnaturally pro-German. Dr. Muck's father, a Bavarian, settled in Switzerland in the Canton of Zug when his son was 6 years old. Karl Muck was given citizenship papers when he came of age. The matter of Dr. Muck's retention at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season is a matter not of legality but of sentiment. There are no facts known which condemn his retention in the sense of law. The sentiment of the community on this subject will be one which the management of the orchestra will heed.

Boston Herald Jan 5, 1918

SYMPHONY GIVES 11TH CONCERT

Overture to 'Genoveva' and Concerto for Violoncello Feature Program.

NO PERFORMANCE IN BOSTON NEXT WEEK

By PHILIP HALE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck, conductor, gave its 11th concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Schumann overture to "Genoveva"; Dohnanyi, concert piece in D major for orchestra and violoncello (Mr. Warnke, violoncellist); Hendel, Concerto Grosso in D minor op. 6, No. 10; Ropartz, Symphony No. 4 in C major; Ravel, Second Suite from the ballet "Daphnis and Chloe."

The introduction of Schumann's overture is still impressive, music hinting at a tragedy, music that puts the hearer in a sombre, yet expectant, mood. The Allegro that follows is below it in invention and in workmanship. There is a striving after passionate expression, but the pashion is fitfully feverish, not deep-rooted. The music is not dramatic, in the sense that other opera-overtures suggest the stage, as the overture to "Don Giovanni," the great overtures of Beethoven, the overture to "Der Freischuetz," to name only classic examples. Schumann's genius was lyrical, not dramatic, and in this Allegro there is not the rushing, spontaneous flow of high-strung feeling. That his instrumentation is thin, ill considered, in the nature of patchwork, is an old story.

Concertos for the violoncello are as a rule abomination in the sight of the Lord and in the ear of the hearer. There are a few exceptions, as the first one of Saint-Saens. We should like to hear Mr. Loeffler's again. Dohnanyi is to be thanked for writing his concerto in the form of an orchestral piece with violoncello obligato and without the arbitrary divisions. The stopping-places for violoncellists to wipe their manly brows and bow gracefully in recognition of the awaited applause. Dohnanyi is also to be thanked for treating the solo instrument as a purveyor of melodic passages, not as a showman of florid measures. Walt Whitman, hearing the violoncello, then heard the "voice of the young man's complaint." The violoncellist too often does not remind one of Werther or Chateaubriand's hero suffering from romantic melancholy and premature disillusionment; he delights in the bravura display that Hanslick of Vienna compared to the chasing of flies up and down the instrument. Now Dohnanyi has written music that does not obtrude preposterously the violoncello. Its entrance is here welcome; its visits are of discreet length. It has something to say; its speech is agreeable, at times poetic. These are fine things in this concert piece. There is also at the end "linked sweetness (too) long drawn-out." Mr. Warnke played in a warm and eminently agreeable manner.

Handel's Concerto, as Max Seiffert arranged it, was played here last season. Again Dr. Muck, as a pianist (the piano taking the place of the cembalo), played and conducted. It was a pleasure to hear this sturdy music, with allegros essentially English, music of roast beef and strong ale, music that is stirring, great in its simplicty and rhythmic force. And in the Air is revealed Handel. The melodist, the born melodist, to be ranked thus as a favored child of nature with Mozart, Rossini, Schubert—one is tempted to add Oppenbach.

The symphony of Ropartz made a deeper impression than it did three years ago, when the influence of Cesar Franck was perhaps unduly considered as its chief characteristic. There are many pages of individual feeling. There are others that seem labored, perfunctory, not essential. It is a question whether a work in this from does not suffer from the length of continuity. "To be played without pause" may reassure some that are secretly timid at concerts; but ears need rest for a moment, especially after a serious composition is the fourth on a program.

Ravel's charming, dazzling, exciting Suite was played for the second time this season at the request of many.

The concert will be repeated tonight. There will be no concerts next week.

Bost Globe March 17, 1918

Symphony Program for Friday and Saturday

But two numbers appear on the 18th Symphony program this week, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. These are George W. Chadwick's Symphonic Sketches, in four parts, entitled, respectively, "Jubilee," "Noel," "Hobgoblin" and "A Vagrom Ballad," to be followed by Saint-Saens' Symphony in C-Minor, the "Organ" Symphony and the noblest work of its kind that came from the pen of this gifted composer. The latter has not been played at a Symphony concert in several years and its return to the repertory will be welcome. Mr Marshall will be the organist.

Bost Herald Feb 17, 1918

A Large Subscription List

A few of those who will attend the opera, which opens at the Opera House tomorrow evening for a short session, are Mr. and Mrs. Ten Eyck Wendell, Mrs. Lyon Weyburn, Mr. S. A. Whittemore, Mrs. Theodore C. Woodbury, Miss I. H. Worthington, Mrs. J. D. C. Bradley, Mr. Francis Shaw, Miss M. C. Burnham, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Brown, Mrs. H. S. Hunnewell, Mrs. Walcott H. Johnson, Mrs. H. P. King, Mrs. Eben D. Jordan, Mr. and Mrs W. Y. Peters, Mrs. H. P. Quincy, Mrs. C. G. Weld, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Hobbs, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Watters, Mr. C. E. Sampson, Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Bartlett, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Gaston, Mrs. James Lawrence, Mrs. Boylston Beal, Mrs. Oliver Ames, Mrs. N. S. Bartlett, Jr., Mr. Allan Forbes, Mrs. J. E. Thayer, Mr. R. W. Emmons, Mrs. Louis K. Liggett, Mrs. Richard Russell, Mrs. George Willett, Mrs. J. M. Longyear, Mr. Alvan T. Fuller, Mr. William M. McKee, Mrs. Henry Burnham, Mr. A. S. West, Mr. Charles H. Bond, Mr. Arthur M. Milliken, Mrs. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. J. H. Morison, Mrs. Grant Walker, Mrs. H. K. Appleton, Miss Sarah C. Walker, Mrs. Oliver Crocker Stevens, Mr. William Ellery, Mrs. E. Sohier Welch, Mrs. L. F. Barnes, Mr. Franklin H. Leebe, Mr. I. Tucker Burr, Jr., Mrs. E. M. Binney, Mrs. Elmer J. Bliss, Mrs. Butler Bradley, Miss Mildred Bradley, Mrs. R. M. Bradley, Mrs. Cyrus Bingham, Mrs. A. F. Brown, Mrs. John Nicholas Brown of Newport, Miss Ellen L. Brown, Mr. Godfrey L. Cabot, Mrs. Robert S. Chase, Mr. Stephen Chase, Mr. F. E. Chick, Mrs. E. Howard Child, Mr. Amos A. Lawrence, Mr. William H. Dunham, Mrs. E. G. Dexter, Mrs. Herbert Browne, Miss Julia Bird, Mrs. F. Gordon Dexter, Mrs. Ed. L. Adams, Mr. Emil Ahlborn, Mr. Homer Albers, Miss R. C. Amory, Mrs. N. L. Amster, Mrs. John C. Phillips, Mrs. Robert Anderson, Mrs. G. H. Babbitt, Miss G. Q. Clapp, Mrs. George P. Crafts, Mrs. D. Henry Cram, Mrs. Joshua Crane, Mrs. O. Z. Crane, Mrs. Frank Crawford, Mrs. B. L. Crocker, Miss Elizabeth Crocker, Mrs. H. P. Cross, Mrs. Lewis A. Crossett, Mr. H. E. Cummings, Miss Margaret Cummings, Mr. Richard Henry Dana, Mrs. Frank A. Day, Mrs. F. W. Day, Mrs. Charles H. L. Delano, Mrs. C. B. Devereaux, Mrs. Joseph S. Fay, Mrs. W. B. Field, Mr. A. Lincoln Filene, Mrs. Frank Philbrick, Mrs. J. Harry Poole, Mr. George G. Quincy, Mrs. J. E. Rothwell, Mr. Hollis H. Shaw, Mrs. Casey Sherwood, Mr. Sabin F. Sanger, Mrs. E. E. Sawyer, Mr. Henry F. Sears, Mrs. Frank W. Remick, Mrs. H. R. Rice, Mrs. A. L. Richards, Miss S. F. Richardson, Mr. W. K. Richardson, Miss Phyllis Robbins, Miss Katherine Sigourney, Mrs. George S. Silsbee, Mrs. L. L. Silsbee, Mrs. F. A. Snow, Mr. Emor H. Harding, Mr. Arthur W. Hardy, Mrs. W. R. Hayden, Mrs. Charles W. Spencer, Dr. J. L. Sprague, Mr. George E. Spring, Mrs. Daniel Staniford, Mrs. Francis E. Stamley, Mrs. Frank H. Stewart, Mrs. F. D. Strauss, Mr. George H. Swift, Mrs. J. S. Tarbell, Mrs. J. K. Taylor, Mrs. T. C. Thacher, Miss Jane A. Thomas, Mrs. F. L. Thompson, Miss Alice Thurber, Mr. George W. Thurston, Mrs. A. H. Tillinghast, Mrs. W. S. H. Lothrop, Mr. Phillips Mason, Mr. Lawrence Minot, Mr. Arthur M. Moors, Mrs. Charles A. Morss, Mr. G. Richmond Parsons, Mr. Walter L. Hobbs, Mr. Charles F. Holman, Mr. Philip C. Horton, Mr. W. D. Howe, Miss M. L. Howland, Mr. Eliot Hubbard, Mrs. Richard C. Humphreys, Mrs. W. F. Humphrey, Dr. D. L. Hunt, Mr. Burt La Roy Knowles, Mrs. G. L. Lawrence, Mrs. George C. Lee, Mrs. Henry Lefevour, Mr. Homer Loring, Mr. L. F. Loring, Mr. W. D. Orcutt, the Misses Lane.

Bost Globe March 17, 1918

Bach's "Passion" Music

The first full rehearsal of the choruses in Bach's "Passion Music," which is to be given in Symphony Hall Tuesday, March 26, was held in Symphony Hall last Wednesday evening. The chorus which Mr Townsend has trained for this concert numbers an even 400, and in addition to these there will be a choir of 80 boys drawn from Trinity Church, Emmanuel Church and the Church of the Advent.

The performance will be given in two sessions. The first will begin at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and run about an hour and three-quarters. The second will begin at 8 o'clock in the evening and run about an hour and a half. The same ticket will admit to both sessions.

Mr Townsend has another rehearsal in Symphony Hall next Monday evening, and next Wednesday evening Dr Muck takes charge of the full forces for full rehearsal of choruses and orchestra. The several soloists, Mmes Hinkle and Alcock and Messrs Lambert Murphy, Reinald Werenrath and Herbert Witherspoon, will spend the greater part of Sunday working here with Dr Muck. The final rehearsal will be held Monday evening, March 25.

Bost Herald March 18, 1918

THE PITH OF OPINION

The Dr. Muck Peril

(From the New York World.)

In these busy times there are so many things of importance to do besides stirring up an agitation against Dr. Karl Muck. For instance, knitting sweaters for sailors, making surgical dressings for the Red Cross, selling Thrift Stamps and collecting books for war-camp libraries. Any zealous person should be able to find an outlet for his patriotism without hunting far.

It hardly seems plausible that Congress had Dr. Muck exclusively in mind when it passed the espionage and trading with the enemy acts. So far as is known, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been maintained for the purpose of planting bombs on transports or setting fires in munition works. Neither the Halifax disaster nor the Port Newark fire has been traced to it. Of course the government does not tell all that it knows. But by last accounts, Maj. Henry L. Higginson had not been interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., with the enemy aliens held there. The appalling state of affairs that alarms certain apprehensive persons appears to be largely a matter of personal feeling. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Muck's leadership, has given many concerts here without shifting the situation on the western front. Its program calls for two more concerts this season. There is no occasion for anxious souls to hunt bomb-proof cellars or retire to their country estates in anticipation of danger from the orchestra's visit.

Herald March 17, 1918

18TH SYMPHONY

Only two numbers appear on the 18th Symphony program, which will be played at Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon, March 22, and Saturday evening, March 23. These are George W. Chadwick's Symphonic Sketches and Saint-Saens's Symphony in C-Minor, No. 3. In many respects the Symphonic Sketches are the most successful of Mr. Chadwick's comparatively recent compositions. They are four: "Jubilee," "Noel," "Hobgoblin" and "A Vagrom Ballad." Saint-Saens's Symphony in C-minor is the "Organ" Symphony, the noblest work of its kind that came from the pen of this gifted composer. It has not been played at a Symphony concert in several years. Mr. Marshall will be the organist.

Bost Traveller March 21, 1918

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, tonight; Dr. Muck, conductor. The program will include Tschaikowsky's 4th Symphony, Wagner's Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" and Beethoven's overture to Leonore No. 3. Arthur Hackett, tenor, will sing arias from "Don Giovanni" and "Jepthah."

The program of the Symphony concerts in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening will include Chadwick's Symphonic Sketches and Saint-Saens's Symphony No. 3 (with organ). Traveler 3/21

Advertiser March 21, 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT AT HARVARD TONIGHT

The sixth of the series of concerts being given at Harvard by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place this evening in Sanders Theatre at 8 o'clock.

Arthur Hackett, the Chicago tenor, will be the soloist. Karl Muck will direct the concert as usual.

Bost Herald March 17, 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT IN CAMBRIDGE

The sixth Symphony concert of the season in Cambridge will be given in Sanders Theatre next Thursday evening, March 21, at 8 o'clock. The soloist will be the tenor, Arthur Hackett, who will then appear for the first time as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra. He will sing twice, his first number being "Il Mio Tesoro," from "Don Giovanni"; his second, the Recitative, "Deeper and Deper Still," and the air, "Waft Her, Angels," from "Jeptha." The orchestral numbers will be the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky in F-minor, the Good Friday Magic from Wagner's "Parsifal," and the third "Leonora" overture of Beethoven.

Bost American March 20, 1918

MUCK PROTEST SENT WILSON BY MOTHER

By International News Service.

New York, March 21.—In view of the fact that she has two sons who are captains with the American expeditionary forces, Mrs. Frank Smithson, whose stage name is Phoebe Coyne, thinks she has a right to her views on international questions. She has written the following letter to President Wilson asking him to stop German music being played in America:

Mr. President—I am voicing the sentiment of thousands of American women when I tell you we are amazed at the refinement of cruelty that will sanction the Dr. Muck insult.

Do you not think, Mr. President, when we know of the fiendish horrors our boys are facing now from the kultur Muck represents, that the most ardent lovers of music could with herculean effort deprive themselves of German kultur, at least for the duration of war and put up with the great hardship of listening to Italian, French, English and American? The German music can only bring to the anguished hearts of every true American the tortured cries of our wounded "over there."

Is it necessary to pander to the taste of people who desire German music at a time when the whole civilized world is soul-stirred to its very depth by the monstrous inhumanity of this German kultur? Can't we dispense with it, Mr. President? It is wounding unnecessarily the hearts of thousands of women who, like myself, have given their sons to fight for the cause of humanity.

PHOEBE SMITHSON,
Schuyler Arms Hotel, 305 to 311 W. Ninety-eighth street, New York city.

American March 17, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC.

The first full chorus rehearsal of Bach's Passion Music, which is to be given in Symphony Hall, Tuesday, March 26, was held in Symphony Hall last Wednesday evening. The chorus, which Mr. Townsend has trained for this concert, numbers an even 400, and in addition to these there will be a choir of eighty boys. The performance will be given in two sessions, the first will begin at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and the second at 8 o'clock. The same ticket will admit to both sessions. Next Wednesday evening Mr. Muck takes charge of the rehearsal of choruses and orchestra. The several soloists, Mesdames Hinkle and Alcock and Messrs. Lambert Murphy and Reineld Werrenrath, will spend the greater part of Sunday working here with Dr. Muck.

Transcript March 21, 1918

A private letter from New York rejoices in the bearing of audiences there toward Dr. Muck when the attacks upon him, last week, were at hysterical height. "Both on Thursday and Saturday," it says, "they had only one impulse, to pay tribute to an artist, who was doing his job to the best of his ability, and to prove their resentment of the campaign against him. They seized every opportunity to applaud conductor and orchestra, while their talk, no less than their conduct, showed that they knew very well that the concerts had no sort of connection with the war or with patriotism."

Globe March 18, 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT AT HARVARD COMES MARCH 21

The sixth of the series of concerts given at Harvard University by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place at Sanders Theatre on the evening of March 21. Arthur Hackett, tenor, will be the soloist for the concert.

Don't trifle with a cold; it is dangerous. Adamson's Balsam will cure it.—Advt.

Boston Traveller March 26, 1918

MUCK ARREST MOST IMPORTANT OF WAR

Department of Justice O. K.'s Action.

OBJECTS TO IRON CAGE

Department of Justice officials who have been investigating enemy aliens said today they regarded the detention of Dr. Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, by federal officers one of the most important since America entered the war.

From other sources it was learned that this view may have a significance that cannot be gone into until official action is taken.

The information developed in the Dr. Muck case will be turned over to authorities in Washington and it may be some time before it becomes public.

Officials here infer there is no doubt

(Continued on Page Four, Column 3.)

MUCK ARREST IS DECLARED MOST IMPORTANT

(Continued from Page One.)

that Dr. Muck will at least be interned for the duration of the war.

Concert Today

Mrs. John L. Gardner visited the United States marshal's office this morning to see Charles Ellis about the concert which Dr. Muck was to have led today. Mrs. Gardner did not speak to Dr. Muck, but waved her greeting to him.

She said that the concert would be held on schedule, but that Gustave Schmidt, the assistant conductor, would lead it.

Objects to Iron Cage

Dr. Muck was placed in the iron cage when he arrived at the Federal building to be questioned by government officials. He objected to this and was taken out and allowed to wait in one of the rooms of the United States marshal's office.

Dr. Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to the federal building between two plain clothes men. The musician was not handcuffed,

Ellis Provides Breakfast

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck. Because of activity by the orchestra manager, Dr. Muck got as good a breakfast in his cell as any hotel provides. The food was brought in by a waiter, Mr. Ellis having arranged for it. The menu included eggs, toast, fruit and coffee.

On the walk to the federal building Dr. Muck asked for cigarettes and Mr. Ellis purchased a package. Dr. Muck consumer one after another. A number of newspaper photographers and reporters were waiting for Dr. Muck at the federal building. The plain clothes men walked in the vicinity of the building for some minutes hoping to get in without offering the camera men a chance to "shoot" at the musician.

Dr. Muck has made no public statements since he was detained last night. He was questioned today by U. S. Atty. Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants, Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson and other backers of Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is being detained by federal officers as an enemy alien, were up early today investigating the circumstances of the musician's detention.

They were trying to find out what new information had been obtained regarding Dr. Muck before making statements or working for his release.

Effect On Orchestra

The arrest caused much comment among musical people and they were debating what effect the detention of Dr. Muck might have on 40 Germans, of whom but 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States, who are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are also nine Austrians among the orchestra musicians and but three are citizens.

That Mr. Ellis had anticipated Dr. Muck might be questioned by federal authorities is indicated by the statement Mrs. Muck made when her husband was taken to jail. She said:

"I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Did Not Register

There has been comment because Dr. Muck did not register as an enemy alien. He has always claimed that as his father moved from Germany to Switzerland when he was young and became a citizen of Switzerland he is not an enemy alien. The United States government has ruled that anyone living in the United States who was born in Germany and has not become a citizen of this country is an enemy alien and must register. The fact that the man's father moved from Germany and became a citizen of another country does not affect the status of the son.

Under Surveillance

Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for some time, probably since the incident of some months ago, when it was charged he refused to direct his orchestra in playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. It is considered significant that Dr. Muck's arrest occurs at a time when that incident, with its accompanying popular indignation, its defense of Dr. Muck on the part of Maj. Higginson and others, and other circumstances had begun to pass from the public mind.

"We don't arrest all enemy aliens," he said.

The arrest was decided upon late last evening. Policemen and department of justice agents kept vigil on the Fenway residence from about 8:30 until 11:30. Dr. Muck, they learned, was either at a play or at some social affair. Immediately upon the arrival of his limousine at his home a policeman stepped to his side, identified him, and told him he was under arrest.

Surrenders Without Protest

He immediately expressed his willingness to give himself up and walked with the officers from his home to the station.

At the station house he was put into a cell. Since no bail is obtainable in such cases, there he was forced to remain throughout the night, undergoing, no doubt, the same sensations as would any other man for the first time lodged in a cell.

The cell in which he was imprisoned in former days has held many a famous confidence man, robber and murderer. But never before has one of the greatest musicians in the world gone through the experience of spending a night in it.

The police officials in charge of the station granted him no more favors than they did any of the other prisoners. His bed was just as hard as that of the men in the adjoining cells on either side, and his tin drinking cup was of the same model as theirs.

Lt. Mulligan declined to make any statement concerning the arrest of the noted musician, other than to say that Dr. Muck was being held for the department of justice, and that he had been ordered to make no comment whatever on the case.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent, and appeared very much disturbed by the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charge against her husband.

Dr. Muck was to conduct tonight's Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," a production which has been in preparation all winter. An orchestra, a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of 80 have been taking part in the rehearsals.

"Loaned" by the Kaiser

Dr. Karl Muck, "loaned" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1906, and again in 1912, has been the storm centre for months of a tempestuous controversy between a faction of the general public of the United States, which wanted him treated as a German spy and another faction which rallied vigorously to his support.

UNCLE SAM DETAINS DR. MUCK

In the photo Dr. Muck (on the left) has just arrived at the federal building in a cab, accompanied by representatives of the United States district attorney's office, one of whom is shown in the photo. The famous orchestra leader does not look to be very deeply concerned at his detention. He was taken before the United States district attorney to be questioned.

Traveller March 26, 1918

Regard Muck as Prussian

WASHINGTON, March 26 — The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time. It is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was 6 or 8 years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription.

Traveller March 26, 1918

'Preposterous,' Says Mrs. Muck

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," said Mrs. Karl Muck. "I have no knowledge of what the charge can be and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis (manager of the Symphony orchestra) told me so."

Mrs. Muck refused to believe that any charge could be brought against her husband.

Traveller March 26, 1918

DR. MUCK

Some monthe ago there was an interesting controversy, conducted with bitterness, concerning the status of Dr. Muck, conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, in and toward the United States. It was a warm one while it lasted, but the orchestra promptly began to play the national hymn on the occasions of its public performances, and that acted much like a poultice on an irritated public sentiment.

But the most bitter opponents of Dr. Muck were not to be placated in that manner. Recently they renewed their attacks on him, and as a result of the renewal the flames of controversy broke out once more. Some of the New York newspapers poked fun at the movement against the distinguished leader, but others took it seriously, chief among the latter being the New York Herald.

And now Uncle Sam steps in and arrests Dr. Muck and classifies him by legal process as an enemy alien. Perhaps the public will be permitted to know in due season on what the government bases the serious action which it has taken against one whose attitude in the great war has been vouched for by one of Boston's most distinguished and most patriotic citizens.

Boston Traveler March 26, 1918

Traveler March 26, 1918

MUCK ARREST MOST IMPORTANT OF WAR

Department of Justice O. K.'s Action

OBJECTS TO IRON CAGE

Department of Justice officials who have been investigating enemy aliens said today they regarded the detention of Dr. Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, by federal officers one of the most important since America entered the war.

From other sources it was learned that this view may have a significance that cannot be gone into until official action is taken.

The information developed in the Dr. Muck case will be turned over to authorities in Washington and it may be some time before it becomes public.

Officials here infer there is no doubt

(Continued on Page Four, Column 3.)

MUCK ARREST IS DECLARED MOST IMPORTANT

(Continued from Page One.)

that Dr. Muck will at least be interned for the duration of the war.

Concert Today

Mrs. John L. Gardner visited the United States marshal's office this morning to see Charles Ellis about the concert which Dr. Muck was to have led today. Mrs. Gardner did not speak to Dr. Muck, but waved her greeting to him.

She said that the concert would be held on schedule, but that Gustave Schmidt, the assistant conductor, would lead it.

Objects to Iron Cage

Dr. Muck was placed in the iron cage when he arrived at the Federal building to be questioned by government officials. He objected to this and was taken out and allowed to wait in one of the rooms of the United States marshal's office.

Dr. Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to the federal building between two, plain clothes men. The musician was not handcuffed,

Ellis Provides Breakfast

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck. Because of activity by the orchestra manager, Dr. Muck got as good a breakfast in his cell as any hotel provides. The food was brought in by a waiter, Mr. Ellis having arranged for it. The menu included eggs, toast, fruit and coffee.

On the walk to the federal building Dr. Muck asked for cigarettes and Mr. Ellis purchased a package. Dr. Muck consumer one after another. A number of newspaper photographers and reporters were waiting for Dr. Muck at the federal building. The plain clothes men walked in the vicinity of the building for some minutes hoping to get in without offering the camera men a chance to "shoot" at the musician.

Dr. Muck has made no public statements since he was detained last night. He was questioned today by U. S. Atty. Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants, Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson and other backers of Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is being detained by federal officers as an enemy alien, were up early today investigating the circumstances of the musician's detention.

They were trying to find out what new information had been obtained regarding Dr. Muck before making statements or working for his release.

Effect On Orchestra

The arrest caused much comment among musical people and they were debating what effect the detention of Dr. Muck might have on 40 Germans, of whom but 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States, who are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are also nine Austrians among the orchestra musicians and but three are citizens.

That Mr. Ellis had anticipated Dr. Muck might be questioned by federal authorities is indicated by the statement Mrs. Muck made when her husband was taken to jail. She said:

"I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Did Not Register

There has been comment because Dr. Muck did not register as an enemy alien. He has always claimed that as his father moved from Germany to Switzerland when he was young and became a citizen of Switzerland he is not an enemy alien. The United States government has ruled that anyone living in the United States who was born in Germany and has not become a citizen of this country is an enemy alien and must register. The fact that the man's father moved from Germany and became a citizen of another country does not affect the status of the son.

Under Surveillance

Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for some time, probably since the incident of some months ago, when it was charged he refused to direct his orchestra in playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. It is considered significant that Dr. Muck's arrest occurs at a time when that incident, with its accompanying popular indignation, its defense of Dr. Muck on the part of Maj. Higginson and others, and other circumstances had begun to pass from the public mind.

"We don't arrest all enemy aliens," he said.

The arrest was decided upon late last evening. Policemen and department of justice agents kept vigil on the Fenway residence from about 8:30 until 11:30. Dr. Muck, they learned, was either at a play or at some social affair. Immediately upon the arrival of his limousine at his home a policeman stepped to his side, identified him, and told him he was under arrest.

Surrenders Without Protest

He immediately expressed his willingness to give himself up and walked with the officers from his home to the station.

At the station house he was put into a cell. Since no bail is obtainable in such cases, there he was forced to remain throughout the night, undergoing, no doubt, the same sensations as would any other man for the first time lodged in a cell.

The cell in which he was imprisoned in former days has held many a famous confidence man, robber and murderer. But never before has one of the greatest musicians in the world gone through the experience of spending a night in it.

The police officials in charge of the station granted him no more favors than they did any of the other prisoners. His bed was just as hard as that of the men in the adjoining cells on either side, and his tin drinking cup was of the same model as theirs.

Lt. Mulligan declined to make any statement concerning the arrest of the noted musician, other than to say that Dr. Muck was being held for the department of justice, and that he had been ordered to make no comment whatever on the case.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent, and appeared very much disturbed by the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charge against her husband.

Dr. Muck was to conduct tonight's Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," a production which has been in preparation all winter. An orchestra, a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of 80 have been taking part in the rehearsals.

"Loaned" by the Kaiser

Dr. Karl Muck, "loaned" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1906, and again in 1912, has been the storm centre for months of a tempestuous controversy between a faction of the general public of the United States, which wanted him treated as a German spy and another faction which rallied vigorously to his support.

UNCLE SAM DETAINS DR. MUCK

In the photo Dr. Muck (on the left) has just arrived at the federal building in a cab, accompanied by representatives of the United States district attorney's office, one of whom is shown in the photo. The famous orchestra leader does not look to be very deeply concerned at his detention. He was taken before the United States district attorney to be questioned.

Regard Muck as Prussian

WASHINGTON, March 26 — The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time. It is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was 6 or 8 years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription.

Traveler March 26, 1918

'Preposterous, Says Mrs. Muck

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," said Mrs. Karl Muck, "I have no knowledge of what the charge can be and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis (manager of the Symphony orchestra) told me so."

Mrs. Muck refused to believe that any charge could be brought against her husband.

Traveler March 26, 1918

DR. MUCK

Some monthe ago there was an interesting controversy, conducted with bitterness, concerning the status of Dr. Muck, conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, in and toward the United States. It was a warm one while it lasted, but the orchestra promptly began to play the national hymn on the occasions of its public performances, and that acted much like a poultice on an irritated public sentiment.

But the most bitter opponents of Dr. Muck were not to be placated in that manner. Recently they renewed their attacks on him, and as a result of the renewal the flames of controversy broke out once more. Some of the New York newspapers poked fun at the movement against the distinguished leader, but others took it seriously, chief among the latter being the New York Herald.

And now Uncle Sam steps in and arrests Dr. Muck and classifies him by legal process as an enemy alien. Perhaps the public will be permitted to know in due season on what the government bases the serious action which it has taken against one whose attitude in the great war has been vouched for by one of Boston's most distinguished and most patriotic citizens.

Boston Traveler March 26, 1918

Traveler March 26, 1918

MUCK ARREST MOST IMPORTANT OF WAR

Department of Justice O. K.'s Action

OBJECTS TO IRON CAGE

Department of Justice officials who have been investigating enemy aliens said today they regarded the detention of Dr. Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, by federal officers one of the most important since America entered the war.

From other sources it was learned that this view may have a significance that cannot be gone into until official action is taken.

The information developed in the Dr. Muck case will be turned over to authorities in Washington and it may be some time before it becomes public.

Officials here infer there is no doubt

(Continued on Page Four, Column 3.)

MUCK ARREST IS DECLARED MOST IMPORTANT

(Continued from Page One.)

that Dr. Muck will at least be interned for the duration of the war.

Concert Today

Mrs. John L. Gardner visited the United States marshal's office this morning to see Charles Ellis about the concert which Dr. Muck was to have led today. Mrs. Gardner did not speak to Dr. Muck, but waved her greeting to him.

She said that the concert would be held on schedule, but that Gustave Schmidt, the assistant conductor, would lead it.

Objects to Iron Cage

Dr. Muck was placed in the iron cage when he arrived at the Federal building to be questioned by government officials. He objected to this and was taken out and allowed to wait in one of the rooms of the United States marshal's office.

Dr. Muck was taken from the East Cambridge jail to the federal building between two plain clothes men. The musician was not handcuffed,

Ellis Provides Breakfast

Charles A. Ellis, manager of the orchestra, accompanied Dr. Muck. Because of activity by the orchestra manager, Dr. Muck got as good a breakfast in his cell as any hotel provides. The food was brought in by a waiter, Mr. Ellis having arranged for it. The menu included eggs, toast, fruit and coffee.

On the walk to the federal building Dr. Muck asked for cigarettes and Mr. Ellis purchased a package. Dr. Muck consumer one after another. A number of newspaper photographers and reporters were waiting for Dr. Muck at the federal building. The plain clothes men walked in the vicinity of the building for some minutes hoping to get in without offering the camera men a chance to "shoot" at the musician.

Dr. Muck has made no public statements since he was detained last night. He was questioned today by U. S. Atty. Thomas J. Boynton and his assistants, Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson and other backers of Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is being detained by federal officers as an enemy alien, were up early today investigating the circumstances of the musician's detention.

They were trying to find out what new information had been obtained regarding Dr. Muck before making statements or working for his release.

Effect On Orchestra

The arrest caused much comment among musical people and they were debating what effect the detention of Dr. Muck might have on 40 Germans, of whom but 19 are naturalized citizens of the United States, who are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There are also nine Austrians among the orchestra musicians and but three are citizens.

That Mr. Ellis had anticipated Dr. Muck might be questioned by federal authorities is indicated by the statement Mrs. Muck made when her husband was taken to jail. She said:

"I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Did Not Register

There has been comment because Dr. Muck did not register as an enemy alien. He has always claimed that as his father moved from Germany to Switzerland when he was young and became a citizen of Switzerland he is not an enemy alien. The United States government has ruled that anyone liv ing in the United States who was bor in Germany and has not become a cit zen of this country is an enemy alie and must register. The fact that th man's father moved from Germany an became a citizen of another countr does not affect the status of the son.

Under Surveillance

Dr. Muck has been under surveillanc for some time, probably since the in cident of some months ago, when i was charged he refused to direct hi orchestra in playing "The Star-Span gled Banner" at a concert in Provi dence. It is considered significant tha Dr. Muck's arrest occurs at a tim when that incident, with its accom panying popular indignation, its defense of Dr. Muck on the part of Maj. Higginson and others, and other circumstances had begun to pass from the public mind.

"We don't arrest all enemy aliens," he said.

The arrest was decided upon late last evening. Policemen and department of justice agents kept vigil on the Fenway residence from about 8:30 until 11:30. Dr. Muck, they learned, was either at a play or at some social affair. Immediately upon the arrival of his limousine at his home a policeman stepped to his side, identified him, and told him he was under arrest.

Surrenders Without Protest

He immediately expressed his willingness to give himself up and walked with the officers from his home to the station.

he station house he was put into an l. Since no bail is obtainable in be cases, there he was forced to re- throughout the night, undergoing, ubt, the same sensations as would other man for the first time lodged cell.

e cell in which he was imprisoned rmer days has held many a famous idence man, robber and murderer. never before has one of the greatest icians in the world gone through the rience of spending a night in it.

e police officials in charge of the on granted him no more favors than did any of the other prisoners. His was just as hard as that of the men he adjoining cells on either side, and tin drinking cup was of the same del as theirs.

t. Mulligan declined to make any statement concerning the arrest of the noted musician, other than to say that Dr. Muck was being held for the department of justice, and that he had been ordered to make no comment whatever on the case.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent, and appeared very much disturbed by the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charge against her husband.

Dr. Muck was to conduct tonight's Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," a production which has been in preparation all winter. An orches- a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of ave been taking part in the re- als.

"Loaned" by the Kaiser

rl Muck, "loaned" to the Boston y Orchestra by the Kaiser in again in 1912, has been the re for months of a tempes- versy between a faction of ublic of the United States, him treated as a German er faction which rallied his support.

2.95
4.25
7.50
7.50
5.85
18.95

UNCLE SAM DETAINS DR. MUCK

In the photo Dr. Muck (on the left) has just arrived at the federal building in a cab, accompanied by representatives of the United States district attorney's office, one of whom is shown in the photo. The famous orchestra leader does not look to be very deeply concerned at his detention. He was taken before the United States district attorney to be questioned.

Regard Muck as Prussian

WASHINGTON, March 26 — The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time. It is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was 6 or 8 years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription.

Traveler March 26, 1918

Traveler 3/26

'Preposterous, Says Mrs. Muck

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," said Mrs. Karl Muck. "I have no knowledge of what the charge can be and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis (manager of the Symphony orchestra) told me so."

Mrs. Muck refused to believe that any charge could be brought against her husband.

Traveler March 26, 1918

DR. MUCK

Traveler 3/26

Some monthe ago there was an interesting controversy, conducted with bitterness, concerning the status of Dr. Muck, conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, in and toward the United States. It was a warm one while it lasted, but the orchestra promptly began to play the national hymn on the occasions of its public performances, and that acted much like a poultice on an irritated public sentiment.

But the most bitter opponents of Dr. Muck were not to be placated in that manner. Recently they renewed their attacks on him, and as a result of the renewal the flames of controversy broke out once more. Some of the New York newspapers poked fun at the movement against the distinguished leader, but others took it seriously, chief among the latter being the New York Herald.

And now Uncle Sam steps in and arrests Dr. Muck and classifies him by legal process as an enemy alien. Perhaps the public will be permitted to know in due season on what the government bases the serious action which it has taken against one whose attitude in the great war has been vouched for by one of Boston's most distinguished and most patriotic citizens.

47 Boston Record March 26, 1918 Entire Page.

KARL MUCK HELD UNDER ENEMY ACT

Record 3/26

Musician Seized by U. S. Agents

Symphony Orchestra Leader Taken Into Custody at Fenway Home

Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody at his home on Fenway and locked up in Police Station 16 under the espionage act.

Dr. Muck had been scheduled to direct a concert here tonight.

Conductor Muck, born in Germany, formerly conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin, friend and intimate of Kaiser William, is the man who refused to allow the Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner," although requested to do so, at a concert in Infantry Hall, Providence, on the evening of Oct. 30.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the famous orchestra, defended Muck's action on the ground that the national anthem was not a part of the program for that evening, which included only "classical" music.

The arrest was effected by police officers of Station 16, assigned by Lieut. Mulligan, and agents of the Department of Justice.

Officers In Wait

Muck was not at home when the officers arrived, and they waited until he reached the house. Thereupon he was seized.

Following Muck's refusal to play the national anthem at Providence, a storm of protest against his action arose all over the country.

When it was announced in Baltimore, the home of Francis Scott Key, who wrote the stirring anthem, that Muck would lead the Symphony Orchestra in that city, a few days after the Providence event, the police of Baltimore refused to grant a license for the opening of the hall where the orchestra was scheduled to play, and the date was cancelled.

A few days later, Nov. 6, in Washington, at the National Theatre, Muck led the famous orchestra at afternoon and eevning performances, and played the "Star Spangled Banner" at each performance.

The latest performances of the Symphony Orchestra was on March 14 when at Carnegie Hall, New York Muck conducted the performance while hundreds of New York police guarded the stage, the aisles and doors leading into the building.

There were also plain clothes men from the Detective Bureau sitting among the audience, to guard against any sign of threatened violence.

Born in Germany

Muck came to Boston first in 1906 on the recommendation of C. A. Ellis business manager of the Symphony Orchestra. His coming was the occasion for public disapproval in Germany of his leaving the Royal Opera in Berlin, and Muck's leaving of Germany was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag.

Despite official displeasure, however, Muck was given a rousing reception

(Continued on Page Two, Column Eight)

Dr. Muck Spends Night in Cell After Arrest

DR. KARL MUCK
Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra who is held by Federal authorities under enemy alien act.

CHARGE MUCK SENT MONEY TO GERMANY

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested by Lieut. Mulligan of Station 16 and Department of Justice officials, was taken to the Federal Building today and remained there several hours, pending instructions from Washington as to his future disposition.

He will probably be kept at the East Cambridge jail tonight.

There will be no trial, and the stormy petrel of American musical circles, who for more than a year has been the target of a bitter controversy between his supporters and those who believed him an enemy alien and strong pro-German sympathizer, will not be released from custody until the war is over.

Called Dangerous Man

The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, develops that the symphony genius who was "loaned" to America by the German Kaiser, is not only an enemy alien but a dangerous German with keen, intense German leanings and fine contempt for the people who have been fighting for him, giving him his bread and butter, and even alienating themselves from their friends in their staunch advocacy of him.

As an index to the Teutonic character and "kultural" line of philosophy, the real story behind the arrest of Dr. Muck reflects the inner history of Von Bernstorff and others who, while enjoying the confidence and esteem of the American nation, plotted and worked against it.

Officials are extremely reticent regarding the reasons for the arrest, but several salient features of the Dr. Muck case stand out strongly, and which are absolutely authentic. The Boston Evening Record cannot, for obvious reasons, state where the information comes from, but it comes from unimpeachable sources.

First: During the very time that a great wave of sympathy for the Berlin director swept throughout the country, Dr. Muck was zealous and active in seditious talk.

Second: That he has been sending money to Germany with careful regularity, money that he received from American people, and money that went, not to noncombatants, but money that was used in the war of frightfulness against the Allies.

Third: That Dr. Muck has consistently expressed a fine contempt for the American "rabble," has privately criticised and belittled the American nation as a whole, the administration and America's conduct of the war.

Fourth: That his failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" was not, as he so vehemently declared, due to the fact that it was not good music and did not blend with the program of the Sym-

(Continued on Page Five, Column Five)

Charge Muck Sent Money to Germany

Record 3/26

(Continued From Page One)

phony Orchestra, but because he did not want to play.

These are the facts behind the arrest of Dr. Muck, and while officials and secret service men in Boston and New York have been conversant with the situation for some time, Dr. Muck's supporters have stood by him.

Particularly is this true of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the famous orchestra, and who has consistently and conscientiously defended Dr. Muck. Maj. Higginson, a 100 p.c. patriot, and veteran of the Civil War, demanded that Washington conduct a rigid investigation of Dr. Muck's alleged pro-German activities, declaring at the time that if Dr. Muck was an enemy alien, he, Maj. Higginson, did not wish to be allied with him.

No investigation was made by the Washington authorities, but the Boston agents of the Department of Justice, aided by local Intelligence officers and police, took the matter in hand.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, heavily veiled, visited the Marshal's office while the distinguished prisoner sat in the "cage." Mrs. Gardner remained but a few minutes and then left the building.

When the taciturnity and mystery surrounding the circumstances leading up to Dr. Muck's arrest are made public, if ever, they will create a sensation, said one official.

U. S. Warned

More than six months ago the Department of Justice received word that Dr. Muck was conducting anti-American propoganda through personal friends. Since that time he has been constantly under surveillance, and when the net of evidence was complete the blow fell.

ERNST SCHMIDT.
The assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who conducted the St. Matthew's Passion, this afternoon, owing to the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck. Mr. Schmidt has conducted Pops concerts and has conducted regular Symphony concerts when Dr. Muck has been ill.

Officials of the Department of Justice at Washington said today that Dr. Muck's arrest is simply a continuation of the policy to intern all dangerous enemy aliens regardless of social position, friends or influence.

Washington advices are positive to the effect that Dr. Muck will be interned for the duration of the war.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in my life," said Dr. Muck when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture, "and I am not inclined to pose for anything."

While apparently calm and nonchalant in his attitude, the musical genius betrayed a certain nervousness, for in less than three hours he had smoked nearly 100 cigarettes from a tin which was brought to him.

Early today Seth T. Gano, private secretary to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, called at the office of Judd Dewey, Assistant U. S. District Attorney, and had a long talk with him. Maj. Higginson could not be seen today and declined to give out any statement. He was reported to be ill at home.

That Dr. Muck had no inkling of his arrest is shown by the fact that his representative appeared at the Federal Building yesterday and applied for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck to go to Europe.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home, 50 Fenway. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Conductor Muck, born in Germany, formerly conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin, friend and intimate of Kaiser William, is the man who refused to allow the Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner," although requested to do so, at a concert in Infantry Hall, Providence, on the evening of Oct. 30.

Officers In Wait

Muck was not at home when the officers arrived, and they waited until he reached the house. Thereupon he was seized.

Following Muck's refusal to play the national anthem at Providence, a storm of protest against his action arose all over the country.

When it was announced in Baltimore, the home of Francis Scott Key, who wrote the stirring anthem, that Muck would lead the Symphony Orchestra in that city, a few days after the Providence event, the police of Baltimore refused to grant a license for the opening of the hall where the orchestra was scheduled to play, and the date was cancelled.

A few days later, Nov. 6, in Washington, at the National Theatre, Muck led the famous orchestra at afternoon and evening performances, and played the "Star Spangled Banner" at each performance.

The latest performance of the Symphony Orchestra was on March 14, when at Carnegie Hall, New York, Muck conducted the performance, while hundreds of New York police guarded the stage, the aisles and doors leading into the building.

There were also plain clothes men from the Detective Bureau sitting among the audience, to guard against any sign of threatened violence.

Born in Germany

Muck came to Boston first in 1906, on the recommendation of C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Symphony Orchestra. His coming was the occasion for public disapproval in Germany of his leaving the Royal Opera in Berlin, and Muck's leaving of Germany was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag.

Despite official displeasure, however, Muck was given a rousing reception upon his last appearance as conductor in Berlin.

Dr. Muck, while a citizen of the Swiss Republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that proclamation. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was last night apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Must Find Conductor For Tonight's Concert

The arrest of Dr. Muck came on the eve of what he considered to be his master production in America, the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. This was the third of three great choral, symphonic works which Dr. Muck had planned for this winter in Boston. The first was Beethoven's Choral Symphony, and the second was Mahler's Choral Symphony. Both of these demanded the service of many singers—a chorus of about 400 in each case—and first-class soloists. These works were given brilliantly after weeks of arduous preparations. The performance today of St. Matthew Passion was far more elaborate than the Mahler and Beethoven works. St. Matthew Passion, which is perhaps the finest example in all music of perfect adoration of the Christ, demands an orchestra of 100, a chorus of 400 adults, a boy choir of 80, and the service of five soloists. The soloists engaged were Florence Hinkle, Merle Alcock, Lambert Murphy, Herbert Witherspoon and Reinald Werrenrath.

Causes Upset

The long rehearsals, which were concluded last evening, showed that everything was in perfect shape for the performance today. And then came the arrest of Dr. Muck. The management of the Symphony Orchestra, when they found that Dr. Muck could not conduct, started to find some one who would take his place. They announced at noon that the performance would start at 4 although they had not even then picked Dr. Muck's temporary successor. The work starts at 4. runs for two hours, after which there is an intermission for dinner. The audience then returns and the work is completed in the evening.

The difficulties of a new conductor today are almost beyond comprehension excepting to a musician. St. Matthew Passion, as generally given in this country, is given only in fragments or at best with many cuts. Dr. Muck had planned to give the work almost in its entirety. A new conductor, even if familiar with St. Matthew Passion, will find much to puzzle him as he conducts this evening.

Say Dr. Muck's Father Bought Swiss Citizenship

WASHINGTON.—The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time. It is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was 6 or 8 years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship.

He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription.

cantons, and in some of these the regulations are very lenient, making it possible for anyone to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

47 Boston Record March 26, 1918 Entire Page.

KARL MUCK HELD UNDER ENEMY ACT

Record 3/26

Musician Seized by U. S. Agents

Symphony Orchestra Leader Taken Into Custody at Fenway Home

Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody at his home on Fenway and locked up in Police Station 16 under the espionage act.

Dr. Muck had been scheduled to direct a concert here tonight.

Conductor Muck, born in Germany, formerly conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin, friend and intimate of Kaiser William, is the man who refused to allow the Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner," although requested to do so, at a concert in Infantry Hall, Providence, on the evening of Oct. 30.

Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the famous orchestra, defended Muck's action on the ground that the national anthem was not a part of the program for that evening, which included only "classical" music.

The arrest was effected by police officers of Station 16, assigned by Lieut. Mulligan, and agents of the Department of Justice.

Officers In Wait

Muck was not at home when the officers arrived, and they waited until he reached the house. Thereupon he was seized.

Following Muck's refusal to play the national anthem at Providence, a storm of protest against his action arose all over the country.

When it was announced in Baltimore, the home of Francis Scott Key, who wrote the stirring anthem, that Muck would lead the Symphony Orchestra in that city, a few days after the Providence event, the police of Baltimore refused to grant a license for the opening of the hall where the orchestra was scheduled to play, and the date was cancelled.

A few days later, Nov. 6, in Washington, at the National Theatre, Muck led the famous orchestra at afternoon and eevning performances, and played the "Star Spangled Banner" at each performance.

The latest performances of the Symphony Orchestra was on March 14, when at Carnegie Hall, New York, Muck conducted the performance, while hundreds of New York police guarded the stage, the aisles and doors leading into the building.

There were also plain clothes men from the Detective Bureau sitting among the audience, to guard against any sign of threatened violence.

Born in Germany

Muck came to Boston first in 1906 on the recommendation of C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Symphony Orchestra. His coming was the occasion for public disapproval in Germany of his leaving the Royal Opera in Berlin, and Muck's leaving of Germany was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag.

Despite official displeasure, however, Muck was given a rousing reception

(Continued on Page Two, Column Eight)

Dr. Muck Spends Night in Cell After Arrest

DR. KARL MUCK

Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra who is held by Federal authorities under enemy alien act.

CHARGE MUCK SENT MONEY TO GERMANY

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrested by Lieut. Mulligan of Station 16 and Department of Justice officials, was taken to the Federal Building today and remained there several hours, pending instructions from Washington as to his future disposition.

He will probably be kept at the East Cambridge jail tonight.

There will be no trial, and the stormy petrel of American musical circles, who for more than a year has been the target of a bitter controversy between his supporters and those who believed him an enemy alien and strong pro-German sympathizer, will not be released from custody until the war is over.

Called Dangerous Man

The arrest of Dr. Karl Muck, develops that the symphony genius who was "loaned" to America by the German Kaiser, is not only an enemy alien but a dangerous German with keen, intense German leanings and fine contempt for the people who have been fighting for him, giving him his bread and butter, and even alienating themselves from their friends in their staunch advocacy of him.

As an index to the Teutonic character and "kultural" line of philosophy, the real story behind the arrest of Dr. Muck reflects the inner history of Von Bernstorff and others who, while enjoying the confidence and esteem of the American nation, plotted and worked against it.

Officials are extremely reticent regarding the reasons for the arrest, but several salient features of the Dr. Muck case stand out strongly, and which are absolutely authentic. The Boston Evening Record cannot, for obvious reasons, state where the information comes from, but it comes from unimpeachable sources.

First: During the very time that a great wave of sympathy for the Berlin director swept throughout the country, Dr. Muck was zealous and active in seditious talk.

Second: That he has been sending money to Germany with careful regularity, money that he received from American people, and money that went, not to noncombatants, but money that was used in the war of frightfulness against the Allies.

Third: That Dr. Muck has consistently expressed a fine contempt for the American "rabble," has privately criticised and belittled the American nation as a whole, the administration and America's conduct of the war.

Fourth: That his failure to play "The Star Spangled Banner" was not, as he so vehemently declared, due to the fact that it was not good music and did not blend with the program of the Sym-

(Continued on Page Five, Column Five)

Charge Muck Sent Money to Germany

Record 3/26

(Continued From Page One)

phony Orchestra, but because he did not want to play.

These are the facts behind the arrest of Dr. Muck, and while officials and secret service men in Boston and New York have been conversant with the situation for some time, Dr. Muck's supporters have stood by him.

Particularly is this true of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the famous orchestra, and who has consistently and conscientiously defended Dr. Muck. Maj. Higginson, a 100 p.c. patriot, and veteran of the Civil War, demanded that Washington conduct a rigid investigation of Dr. Muck's alleged pro-German activities, declaring at the time that if Dr. Muck was an enemy alien, he, Maj. Higginson, did not wish to be allied with him.

No investigation was made by the Washington authorities, but the Boston agents of the Department of Justice, aided by local Intelligence officers and police, took the matter in hand.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, heavily veiled, visited the Marshal's office while the distinguished prisoner sat in the "cage." Mrs. Gardner remained but a few minutes and then left the building.

When the taciturnity and mystery surrounding the circumstances leading up to Dr. Muck's arrest are made public, if ever, they will create a sensation, said one official.

U. S. Warned

More than six months ago the Department of Justice received word that Dr. Muck was conducting anti-American propoganda through personal friends. Since that time he has been constantly under surveillance, and when the net of evidence was complete the blow fell.

ERNST SCHMIDT.

The assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who conducted the St. Matthew's Passion, this afternoon, owing to the arrest of Dr. Karl Muck. Mr. Schmidt has conducted Pops concerts and has conducted regular Symphony concerts when Dr. Muck has been ill.

Officials of the Department of Justice at Washington said today that Dr. Muck's arrest is simply a continuation of the policy to intern all dangerous enemy aliens regardless of social position, friends or influence.

Washington advices are positive to the effect that Dr. Muck will be interned for the duration of the war.

"This is the biggest predicament I have ever been in my life," said Dr. Muck when asked by newspaper photographers to pose for a picture, "and I am not inclined to pose for anything."

While apparently calm and nonchalant in his attitude, the musical genius betrayed a certain nervousness, for in less than three hours he had smoked nearly 100 cigarettes from a tin which was brought to him.

Early today Seth T. Gano, private secretary to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, called at the office of Judd Dewey, Assistant U. S. District Attorney, and had a long talk with him. Maj. Higginson could not be seen today and declined to give out any statement. He was reported to be ill at home.

That Dr. Muck had no inkling of his arrest is shown by the fact that his representative appeared at the Federal Building yesterday and applied for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck to go to Europe.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home, 50 Fenway. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Conductor Muck, born in Germany, formerly conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin, friend and intimate of Kaiser William, is the man who refused to allow the Symphony Orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner," although requested to do so, at a concert in Infantry Hall, Providence, on the evening of Oct. 30.

Officers In Wait

Muck was not at home when the officers arrived, and they waited until he reached the house. Thereupon he was seized.

Following Muck's refusal to play the national anthem at Providence, a storm of protest against his action arose all over the country.

When it was announced in Baltimore, the home of Francis Scott Key, who wrote the stirring anthem, that Muck would lead the Symphony Orchestra in that city, a few days after the Providence event, the police of Baltimore refused to grant a license for the opening of the hall where the orchestra was scheduled to play, and the date was cancelled.

A few days later, Nov. 6, in Washington, at the National Theatre, Muck led the famous orchestra at afternoon and evening performances, and played the "Star Spangled Banner" at each performance.

The latest performance of the Symphony Orchestra was on March 14, when at Carnegie Hall, New York, Muck conducted the performance, while hundreds of New York police guarded the stage, the aisles and doors leading into the building.

There were also plain clothes men from the Detective Bureau sitting among the audience, to guard against any sign of threatened violence.

Born in Germany

Muck came to Boston first in 1906, on the recommendation of C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Symphony Orchestra. His coming was the occasion for public disapproval in Germany of his leaving the Royal Opera in Berlin, and Muck's leaving of Germany was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag.

Despite official displeasure, however, Muck was given a rousing reception upon his last appearance as conductor in Berlin.

Dr. Muck, while a citizen of the Swiss Republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that proclamation. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was last night apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Must Find Conductor For Tonight's Concert

The arrest of Dr. Muck came on the eve of what he considered to be his master production in America, the production of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. This was the third of three great choral, symphonic works which Dr. Muck had planned for this winter in Boston. The first was Beethoven's Choral Symphony, and the second was Mahler's Choral Symphony. Both of these demanded the service of many singers—a chorus of about 400 in each case—and first-class soloists. These works were given brilliantly after weeks of arduous preparations. The performance today of St. Matthew Passion was far more elaborate than the Mahler and Beethoven works. St. Matthew Passion, which is perhaps the finest example in all music of perfect adoration of the Christ, demands an orchestra of 100, a chorus of 400 adults, a boy choir of 80, and the service of five soloists. The soloists engaged were Florence Hinkle, Merle Alcock, Lambert Murphy, Herbert Witherspoon and Reinald Werrenrath.

Causes Upset

The long rehearsals, which were concluded last evening, showed that everything was in perfect shape for the performance today. And then came the arrest of Dr. Muck. The management of the Symphony Orchestra, when they found that Dr. Muck could not conduct, started to find some one who would take his place. They announced at noon that the performance would start at 4 although they had not even then picked Dr. Muck's temporary successor. The work starts at 4. runs for two hours, after which there is an intermission for dinner. The audience then returns and the work is completed in the evening.

The difficulties of a new conductor today are almost beyond comprehension excepting to a musician. St. Matthew Passion, as generally given in this country, is given only in fragments or at best with many cuts. Dr. Muck had planned to give the work almost in its entirety. A new conductor, even if familiar with St. Matthew Passion, will find much to puzzle him as he conducts this evening.

Say Dr. Muck's Father Bought Swiss Citizenship

WASHINGTON. — The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps here for some time. It is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was 6 or 8 years old, went to the canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship.

He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription.

ns, and in some of these the ions are very lenient, making for anyone to buy natural- pers without being com- xercise all the preliminary r citizens.

Boston Record March 26, 1918

Dr. Muck Was Anti-American

No misdirection of sympathy, no futile and ill-tuned sentiment of regard for our great Symphony Orchestra, can warp the judgment of the American people that the leader of that orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, now under arrest by the Federal authorities, was a menace to the patriotic purposes of this Republic.

It is a melancholy circumstance that so wonderful an orchestra, built up by many years of effort and at such sacrifice on the part of those who have made it possible, should stand on the verge of ruin. IT IS NOT MORE MELANCHOLY THAN THAT THE CATHEDRAL AT RHEIMS IS A MUTILATED VICTIM OF THE HUN. It is not more lamentable than that Louvain has been sacked by vandals. It is not more regrettable than that the leader of that orchestra himself has played the harmonies of the world's musical masters with one hand and stood ever at salute with the other before the bloodshod feet of Bruteracy.

We are at war with a nation which has raised hatred aloft on the barbed spears of lust and outrage, a new and dreadful banner swung in the fiery breeze of ravaging conquest. We cannot, beside this Thing, place the lesser things of life.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is greater than its German leader. Music is greater than any orchestra. And the world's liberty greater than music.

Transcript March 21, 1918

Items and Announcements

For the first time in thirty-four years, the first clarinetist of the Symphony Orchestra has been allotted a concerto at a pair of its concerts. In 1884, Mr. Pourteau played such a piece; in 1918, at the concerts of March 29 and 30, Mr. Sand, who amply deserves the distinction, will do likewise. His choice of piece is a concerto in A major by Mozart in which a small orchestra accompanies the solo clarinet. Schumann's symphony of the spring, Cherubini's overture to his opera, "The Abencerrages," and a suite of dances from operas by Rameau fill the rest of the programme.

The demand for tickets to the impending performance next Tuesday of Bach's "Passion Music According to Matthew," by the Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Townsend's chorus and various solo singers—all under Dr. Muck—already warrants a repetition of the concert. It will befall on Tuesday, April 2, in Symphony Hall, with forces and arrangements unchanged.

Herald March 21, 1918

CONCERT NOTES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, tonight; Dr. Muck, conductor. The program will include Tschaikowsky's 4th Symphony, Wagner's Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" and Beethoven's overture to Leonore No. 3. Arthur Hackett, tenor, will sing arias from "Don Giovanni" and "Jepthah."

The program of the Symphony concerts in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening will include Chadwick's Symphonic Sketches and Saint-Saens's Symphony No. 3 (with organ).

Post March 17, 1918

The Passion Music

The first full rehearsal of the choruses in Bach's Passion Music, which is to be given in Symphony Hall, Tuesday March 26, was held in Symphony Hall last Wednesday evening. The chorus which Mr. Townsend has trained for this concert numbers an even 400, and in addition to these there will be a choir of 80 boys drawn from Trinity Church, Emanuel Church and the Church of the Advent. As already announced, the performance will be given in two sessions, the first to begin at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and run about an hour and three-quarters. The second will begin at 8 o'clock in the evening and run about an hour and a half. The same ticket will, of course, admit to both sessions.

Mr. Townsend has another rehearsal in Symphony Hall next Monday evening, and next Wednesday evening Dr. Muck takes charge of the full forces for full rehearsal of choruses and orchestra. The several soloists, Mesdames Hinkle and Alcock and Messrs. Lambert Murphy and Reinald Werrenrath, will spend the greater part of Sunday working here with Dr. Muck. The final rehearsal will be held Monday evening, March 25.

Post. 3/17

Advertiser March 26, 1918

KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN

Symphony Orchestra Leader Taken in Custody at Fenway Home

MUSICIAN IS SEIZED BY FEDERAL AGENTS

Authorities Silent on Case; Prisoner Locked Up by Police

Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody last evening at his home, 50 Fenway, and locked up in Police Station 16, where he is charged with being an enemy alien.

Conductor Muck, born in Germany, formerly conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin, friend and intimate of Kaiser William, is the man who refused to allow the Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner," although requested to do so, at a concert in Infantry Hall, Providence, on the evening of October 30.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the famous orchestra, defended Muck's action on the ground that the national anthem was not a part of the program for that evening, which included only "classical" music.

The arrest last evening was effected by police officers of Station 16, assigned by Lieutenant Mulligan, and agents of the Department of Justice.

OFFICERS WAIT FOR HIM.

Muck was not at home when the officers arrived, and they waited until he reached the house. Thereupon he was seized.

Muck was not at home when the chestra in that city a few days af that occasion the former Governor tional anthem "does not ajr with any among the audience to guard against any sign of threatened violence

Following Muck's refusal to play the national anthem at Providence, a storm of protest against his action arose all over the country.

When it was announced in Baltimore, the home of Francis Scott Key, who wrote the stirring anthem, that Muck would lead the Symphony Orchestra, in that city a few days after the Providence event, the police of Baltimore refused to grant a license for the opening of the hall where the orchestra was scheduled to play, and the date was cancelled.

A few days later, November 6, in Washington, at the National Theatre, Muck led the famous orchestra at afternoon and evening performances, and played the "Star Spangled Banner" at each performance.

The latest performance of the Symphony Orchestra was on March 14, when at Carnegie Hall, New York, Muck conducted the performance, while hundreds of New York police guarded the stage, the aisles and doors leading into the building.

There were also plain clothes men from the Detective Bureau sitting among the audience, to guard against and sign of threatened violence.

BORN IN BAVARIA.

Muck came to Boston first in 1906, on the recommendation of C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Symphony Orchestra. His coming was the occasion for public disapproval in Germany of his leaving the Royal Opera in Berlin, and Muck's leaving of Germany was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag.

Despite official displeasure, however, Muck was given a rousing reception upon his last appearance as conductor in Berlin.

Dr. Muck, while a citizen of the Swiss republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that proclamation. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was last night apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, Federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest last night, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the Federal government.

American 3/26

TO INTERN MUCK IN SOUTH

Symphony Leader Held as Enemy Alien to Be Sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as an alien enemy. This was definitely announced from Washington today.

This statement disposes of the claim that Dr. Muck, through his attorneys and influential friends, would fight the charge against him on the ground that he is of Swiss citizenship. Officials of the government point out that Swiss citizenship would not prevent him from being interned as a dangerous enemy alien under the President's proclamation directed against all citizens born in Germany.

At the Federal Building today Dr. Muck was subjected to intensive questioning, following his arrest by police officers and agents of the Department of Justice at his home, 50 Fenway.

CHEERED BY MRS. GARDNER.

He was examined by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, and United States Assistant District Attorneys Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey.

No formal charge was made at the conclusion of the hearing. Dr. Muck was placed in the custody of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell. It was expected he would be remanded to the East Cambridge jail.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, Back Bay society leader and patroness of art, called at the Federal building during the examination of the musical director. She was unable to talk with Dr. Muck, and was able to show her sympathy by a wave of the hand only. Mrs. Gardner was also unsuccessful in an attempt to see Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony.

It was stated that the performance of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew" will be held this afternoon at Symphony Hall as scheduled, with Ernst Schmidt as director in place of Dr. Muck. This performance has been in preparation all Winter.

SMOKED CIGARETTES

Dr. Muck arrived at the Federal building in his own automobile, accompanied by Manager Ellis, and in charge of two agents of the Department of Justice. After circling the building four times in an effort to shake off photographers, the conductor alighted and was taken upstairs and placed in the pen. A short time later Deputy United States Marshal John Backus escorted him to a seat in the courtroom, where Dr. Muck remained smoking cigarettes until the examination began.

Dr. Muck was arrested by police officers and Department of Justice agents, as he stepped from his

Continued on Page 2, Column 5.

American 3/26

JAIL DR. MUCK AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Symphony Conductor Arrested by Federal Officers; Had Sought Passports

Continued from First Page.

limousine at the door of his home, No. 50 Fenway.

The arrest was made following a recent visit on the part of the conductor's secretary, to the office of the clerk of the United States District Court. The secretary asked Assistant District Attorney Judd Dewey for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck to go abroad.

Following the arrest, Attorney Dewey issued this statement:

"Dr. Muck was born in Germany and being a native of Germany he comes under the head of being an alien enemy, even though he later acquired citizenship in Switzerland. We had a parallel case only last week of a man who was born in Germany, who migrated to South Africa and became a British subject. He was sent away on precisely the same grounds as we are now holding Dr. Muck."

MAY FACE OTHER CHARGES.

This statement is held to be extremely significant in view of the fact that all enemy aliens are not placed under arrest.

Dr. Muck offered no objection to going to the Back Bay police station where he was locked up pending his examination today before the authorities in the Federal Building. While the charge against him is covered in the President's proclamation it is reported that other charges may be brought against him for alleged violation of two sections of the Federal code.

Washington officials declared today they had proofs on file to the effect that Dr. Muck holds anti-American sentiments. They stated that although it was understood that the former conductor of the German royal orchestra will make a fight on the ground that he is a Swiss subject, this will not avail. It is entirely possible to deport him as an undesirable alien if he proves his Swiss citizenship, which is unlikely, it was added.

His arrest is said to be simply a continuation of the policy of the government to intern all dangerous aliens regardless of their social position or the number of their friends. It is stated that there are too many evidences reaching Washington that the temper of the nation is approaching the breaking point in tolerating anti-American utterances, and this action is necessary if wholesale lynchings throughout the country are to be prevented.

LONG UNDER SURVEILLANCE.

Dr. Muck has been under surveillance by agents of the Department of Justice since the beginning of the war, long before the United States became a participant. It was learned that he was born in Bavaria, in 1859, and that when about eight years old his father emigrated to Switzerland. It was further learned that the musical director was engaged in German propaganda work, it is said, and a close watch was kept on him.

The attention of the public was first directed to Mr. Muck in October of last year, when reports were circulated to the effect that he had refused to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the rendition of the "Star Spangled Banner" at Providence. In justice to the conductor, it may be said that, according to Major Henry L. Higginson, Dr. Muck knew nothing of the request that the national anthem be played.

On November 2 at Symphony Hall in Boston, the orchestra, with Dr. Muck leading, precipitated a tremendous patriotic demonstration by playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

In the meantime the Symphony Orchestra was forbidden to play in Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Detroit and Springfield, and a strong protest was made in New York over Dr. Muck's appearance.

Globe March 23, 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Mr Chadwick's orchestral suite, "Symphonic Sketches," is optimistic music. There is red-blooded good cheer, a sentiment which, if obvious, is genuine; the pranks of madcap roguery, a sympathetic tribute to that instinctive, ribald vagabondage, which at some time or other finds the most urbane, smug, exemplary in conduct, at heart a gypsy or a brigand. It is music of no professed psychological intimacy; it has no abstruse soul problem; it is not morbidly introspective, nor does it ostensibly chastise, purge or sanctify the spirit. It is refreshngly, human, whether it be called "American" or what not.

A motto of a few lines of verse is taken to pitch the emotional keynote for each movement. Those for the "jubilee," which would be an antidote for pessimism whatever their literary value, are followed by the Christmas hymn, calling out in the English horn a melody and subsequent treatment in the orchestra with a suggestion of the South found in other of Mr Chadwick's writing. The Hobgoblin, a happy conceit for a scherzo, is a fine piece of orchestral humor. Here, as in the final Vagroom ballad, ideas terse and characteristic, are set off with a lively imagination and sense of instrumental colors. Dr Muck and the orchestra played the music with zest and occasional prolonged applause for all, the composer included.

Saint-Saens' "organ" symphony in C minor was given a noble performance, one which grew in proportion, into a majestic sense of its final bars, where in lesser hands the sonority of the organ, its martial proclamations of brass and tympani, might become bombast. Saint-Saens, who stands revealed as in living marble in the scholarly appreciation by the annotator of the program book, thought tones in architecture of remarkable symmetry of design, of purity and plasticity of line, in all revealing characteristically Gallic elegance. As heard yesterday, his finesse was not diluted into superficiality. Seldom has Saint-Saens' personifying use of rhythmic figuration, graphic and individual, been so vitally interpreted.

For Sale. To Let

Boston Herald March 26, 1918

Dr. Muck Was Anti-American

No misdirection of sympathy, no futile and ill-tuned sentiment of regard for our great Symphony Orchestra, can warp the judgment of the American people that the leader of that orchestra, Dr. Karl Muck, now under arrest by the Federal authorities, was a menace to the patriotic purposes of this Republic.

It is a melancholy circumstance that so wonderful an orchestra, built up by many years of effort and at such sacrifice on the part of those who have made it possible, should stand on the verge of ruin. IT IS NOT MORE MELANCHOLY THAN THAT THE CATHEDRAL AT RHEIMS IS A MUTILATED VICTIM OF THE HUN. It is not more lamentable than that Louvain has been sacked by vandals. It is not more regrettable than that the leader of that orchestra himself has played the harmonies of the world's musical masters with one hand and stood eye at salute with the other before the bloodshod feet of Brutocracy.

We are at war with a nation which has raised hatred aloft on the barbed spears of lust and outrage, a new and dreadful banner swung in the fiery breeze of ravaging conquest. We cannot, beside this Thing, place the lesser things of life.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is greater than its German leader. Music is greater than any orchestra. And the world's liberty is greater than music.

Transcript March 21, 1918

Items and Announcements

For the first time in thirty-four years, the first clarinetist of the Symphony Orchestra has been allotted a concerto at a pair of its concerts. In 1884, Mr. Pourteau played such a piece; in 1918, at the concerts of March 29 and 30, Mr. Sand, who amply deserves the distinction, will do likewise. His choice of piece is a concerto in A major by Mozart in which a small orchestra accompanies the solo clarinet. Schumann's symphony of the spring, Cherubini's overture to his opera, "The Abencerrages," and a suite of dances from operas by Rameau fill the rest of the programme.

The demand for tickets to the impending performance next Tuesday of Bach's "Passion Music According to Matthew," by the Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Townsend's chorus and various solo singers—all under Dr. Muck—already warrants a repetition of the concert. It will befall on Tuesday, April 2, in Symphony Hall, with forces and arrangements unchanged.

Herald March 21, 1918

CONCERT NOTES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, tonight; Dr. Muck, conductor. The program will include Tschaikowsky's 4th Symphony, Wagner's Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal" and Beethoven's overture to Leonore No. 3. Arthur Hackett, tenor, will sing arias from "Don Giovanni" and "Jepthah."

The program of the Symphony concerts in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening will include Chadwick's Symphonic Sketches and Saint-Saens's Symphony No. 3 (with organ).

Post March 17, 1918

The Passion Music

The first full rehearsal of the choruses in Bach's Passion Music, which is to be given in Symphony Hall, Tuesday March 26, was held in Symphony Hall last Wednesday evening. The chorus which Mr. Townsend has trained for this concert numbers an even 400, and in addition to these there will be a choir of 80 boys drawn from Trinity Church, Emanuel Church and the Church of the Advent. As already announced, the performance will be given in two sessions, the first to begin at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and run about an hour and three-quarters. The second will begin at 8 o'clock in the evening and run about an hour and a half. The same ticket will, of course, admit to both sessions.

Mr. Townsend has another rehearsal in Symphony Hall next Monday evening, and next Wednesday evening Dr. Muck takes charge of the full forces for full rehearsal of choruses and orchestra. The several soloists, Mesdames Hinkle and Alcock and Messrs. Lambert Murphy and Reinald Werrenrath, will spend the greater part of Sunday working here with Dr. Muck. The final rehearsal will be held Monday evening, March 25.

Post. 3/17

Advertiser March 26, 1918

Advertiser March 26

KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS ENEMY ALIEN

Symphony Orchestra Leader Taken in Custody at Fenway Home

MUSICIAN IS SEIZED BY FEDERAL AGENTS

Authorities Silent on Case; Prisoner Locked Up by Police

Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken into custody last evening at his home, 50 Fenway, and locked up in Police Station 16, where he is charged with being an enemy alien.

Conductor Muck, born in Germany, formerly conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin, friend and intimate of Kaiser William, is the man who refused to allow the Symphony Orchestra to play the "Star Spangled Banner," although requested to do so, at a concert in Infantry Hall, Providence, on the evening of October 30.

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the famous orchestra, defended Muck's action on the ground that the national anthem was not a part of the program for that evening, which included only "classical" music.

The arrest last evening was effected by police officers of Station 16, assigned by Lieutenant Mulligan, and agents of the Department of Justice.

OFFICERS WAIT FOR HIM.

Muck was not at home when the officers arrived, and they waited until he reached the house. Thereupon he was seized.

Muck was not at home when the orchestra in that city a few days after that occasion the former Governor's national anthem "does not ajr with any" among the audience to guard against any sign of threatened violence.

Following Muck's refusal to play the national anthem at Providence, a storm of protest against his action arose all over the country.

When it was announced in Baltimore, the home of Francis Scott Key, who wrote the stirring anthem, that Muck would lead the Symphony Orchestra, in that city a few days after the Providence event, the police of Baltimore refused to grant a license for the opening of the hall where the orchestra was scheduled to play, and the date was cancelled.

A few days later, November 6, in Washington, at the National Theatre, Muck led the famous orchestra at afternoon and evening performances, and played the "Star Spangled Banner" at each performance.

The latest performance of the Symphony Orchestra was on March 14, when at Carnegie Hall, New York, Muck conducted the performance, while hundreds of New York police guarded the stage, the aisles and doors leading into the building.

There were also plain clothes men from the Detective Bureau sitting among the audience, to guard against and sign of threatened violence.

BORN IN BAVARIA.

Muck came to Boston first in 1906, on the recommendation of C. A. Ellis, business manager of the Symphony Orchestra. His coming was the occasion for public disapproval in Germany of his leaving the Royal Opera in Berlin, and Muck's leaving of Germany was discussed in the Prussian Diet and the German Reichstag.

Despite official displeasure, however, Muck was given a rousing reception upon his last appearance as conductor in Berlin.

Dr. Muck, while a citizen of the Swiss republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that proclamation. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was last night apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, Federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest last night, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the Federal government.

Transcript 3/26

TO INTERN MUCK IN SOUTH

Symphony Leader Held as Enemy Alien to Be Sent to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, as an alien enemy. This was definitely announced from Washington today.

This statement disposes of the claim that Dr. Muck, through his attorneys and influential friends, would fight the charge against him on the ground that he is of Swiss citizenship. Officials of the government point out that Swiss citizenship would not prevent him from being interned as a dangerous enemy alien under the President's proclamation directed against all citizens born in Germany.

At the Federal Building today Dr. Muck was subjected to intensive questioning, following his arrest by police officers and agents of the Department of Justice at his home, 50 Fenway.

CHEERED BY MRS. GARDNER.

He was examined by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, and United States Assistant District Attorneys Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey.

No formal charge was made at the conclusion of the hearing. Dr. Muck was placed in the custody of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell. It was expected he would be remanded to the East Cambridge jail.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, Back Bay society leader and patroness of art, called at the Federal building during the examination of the musical director. She was unable to talk with Dr. Muck, and was able to show her sympathy by a wave of the hand only. Mrs. Gardner was also unsuccessful in an attempt to see Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony.

It was stated that the performance of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew" will be held this afternoon at Symphony Hall as scheduled, with Ernst Schmidt as director in place of Dr. Muck. This performance has been in preparation all Winter.

SMOKED CIGARETTES

Dr. Muck arrived at the Federal building in his own automobile, accompanied by Manager Ellis, and in charge of two agents of the Department of Justice. After circling the building four times in an effort to shake off photographers, the conductor alighted and was taken upstairs and placed in the pen. A short time later Deputy United States Marshal John Backus escorted him to a seat in the courtroom, where Dr. Muck remained smoking cigarettes until the examination began.

Dr. Muck was arrested by police officers and Department of Justice agents, as he stepped from his

Continued on Page 2, Column 5.

JAIL DR. MUCK AS AN ENEMY ALIEN

Symphony Conductor Arrested by Federal Officers; Had Sought Passports

Continued from First Page.

limousine at the door of his home, No. 50 Fenway.

The arrest was made following a recent visit on the part of the conductor's secretary, to the office of the clerk of the United States District Court. The secretary asked Assistant District Attorney Judd Dewey for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck to go abroad.

Following the arrest, Attorney Dewey issued this statement:

"Dr. Muck was born in Germany and being a native of Germany he comes under the head of being an alien enemy, even though he later acquired citizenship in Switzerland. We had a parallel case only last week of a man who was born in Germany, who migrated to South Africa and became a British subject. He was sent away on precisely the same grounds as we are now holding Dr. Muck."

MAY FACE OTHER CHARGES.

This statement is held to be extremely significant in view of the fact that all enemy aliens are not placed under arrest.

Dr. Muck offered no objection to going to the Back Bay police station where he was locked up pending his examination today before the authorities in the Federal Building. While the charge against him is covered in the President's proclamation it is reported that other charges may be brought against him for alleged violation of two sections of the Federal code.

Washington officials declared today they had proofs on file to the effect that Dr. Muck holds anti-American sentiments. They stated that although it was understood that the former conductor of the German royal orchestra will make a fight on the ground that he is a Swiss subject, this will not avail. It is entirely possible to deport him as an undesirable alien if he proves his Swiss citizenship, which is unlikely, it was added.

His arrest is said to be simply a continuation of the policy of the government to intern all dangerous aliens regardless of their social position or the number of their friends. It is stated that there are too many evidences reaching Washington that the temper of the nation is approaching the breaking point in tolerating anti-American utterances, and this action is necessary if wholesale lynchings throughout the country are to be prevented.

LONG UNDER SURVEILLANCE.

Dr. Muck has been under surveillance by agents of the Department of Justice since the beginning of the war, long before the United States became a participant. It was learned that he was born in Bavaria, in 1859, and that when about eight years old his father emigrated to Switzerland. It was further learned that the musical director was engaged in German propaganda work, it is said, and a close watch was kept on him.

The attention of the public was first directed to Mr. Muck in October of last year, when reports were circulated to the effect that he had refused to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the rendition of the "Star Spangled Banner" at Providence. In justice to the conductor, it may be said that, according to Major Henry L. Higginson, Dr. Muck knew nothing of the request that the national anthem be played.

On November 2 at Symphony Hall in Boston, the orchestra, with Dr. Muck leading, precipitated a tremendous patriotic demonstration by playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

In the meantime the Symphony Orchestra was forbidden to play in Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Detroit and Springfield, and a strong protest was made in New York over Dr. Muck's appearance.

Globe March 23, 1918

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Mr Chadwick's orchestral suite, "Symphonic Sketches," is optimistic music. There is red-blooded good cheer, a sentiment which, if obvious, is genuine; the pranks of madcap roguery, a sympathetic tribute to that instinctive, ribald vagabondage, which at some time or other finds the most urbane, smug, exemplary in conduct, at heart a gypsy or a brigand. It is music of no professed psychological intimacy; it has no abstruse soul problem; it is not morbidly introspective, nor does it ostensibly chastise, purge or sanctify the spirit. It is refreshngly human, whether it be called "American" or what not.

A motto of a few lines of verse is taken to pitch the emotional keynote for each movement. Those for the "jubilee," which would be an antidote for pessimism whatever their literary value, are followed by the Christmas hymn, calling out in the English horn a melody and subsequent treatment in the orchestra with a suggestion of the South found in other of Mr Chadwick's writing. The Hobgoblin, a happy conceit for a scherzo, is a fine piece of orchestral humor. Here, as in the final Vagroom ballad, ideas terse and characteristic, are set off with a lively imagination and sense of instrumental colors. Dr Muck and the orchestra played the music with zest and occasional prolonged applause for all, the composer included.

Saint-Saens' "organ" symphony in C minor was given a noble performance, one which grew in proportion, into a majestic sense of its final bars, where in lesser hands the sonority of the organ, its martial proclamations of brass and tympani, might become bombast. Saint-Saens, who stands revealed as in living marble in the scholarly appreciation by the annotator of the program book, thought tones in architecture of remarkable symmetry of design, of purity and plasticity of line, in all revealing characteristically Gallic elegance. As heard yesterday, his finesse was not diluted into superficiality. Seldom has Saint-Saens' personifying use of rhythmic figuration, graphic and individual, been so vitally interpreted.

For Sale. To Let

Advertiser March 23

BACH WORK TO BE PERFORMED TWICE

"Passion Music" to Be Given Extra Rendition On Tuesday, April 2

In many respects the most important event in the season of music will be the performance in Symphony Hall next Tuesday, March 26, of Bach's St. Matthew Passion. The management announces this early that owing to the very large demand for tickets the performance will be repeated under exactly the same conditions and with the same soloists the following week, on Tuesday, April 2. For the vast majority of persons interested in music in general and choral music in particular, these performances will be their first opportunities to hear the St. Matthew Passion in its entirety and it will be decidedly their first opportunity to hear it sung and played in practically the manner in which Bach intended.

Monitor March 23, 1918

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—In Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought forward two of the lighter works of its repertory and gave interpretations of them that won the hearty applause of the listeners. The selections were the symphonic sketches of Chadwick and the third symphony in C minor of Saint-Saëns.

Both pieces are more interesting as expressions of the temperaments of the composers than for their musical structure or their instrumental method. The symphonic sketches by the Boston writer, Mr. Chadwick, are delightful for their humor, a rare trait in American composition. The symphony of Saint-Saëns is pleasing for its elegant workmanship and its neatly contrived contrasts of mood. As a study in the incorporation of the organ and the piano into the orchestral scheme, it hardly seems a thrilling adventure today.

Herald March 25, 1918

VIOLINIST AND PIANIST HEARD

Herald 3/25

Jacques Thibaud and Miss Novaes Play

Jacques Thibaud, violinist, and Guiomar Novaes, pianist, gave a concert at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program was as follows: Beethoven, Sonata in F major, Op. 24; Mozart, Concerto in E flat; Chopin, Sonata in B minor, Op. 58; Vieuxtemps, Ballade et Polonaise; Liszt, Murmuring Woods, Dance of the Gnomes.

The first two numbers, Beethoven's Sonata, played with Miss Novaes, and Mozart's Concerto, in which Mr. Thibaud was assisted by his own excellent accompanist, Nicolai Schneer, revealed the distinguished French violinist's superlative skill as an interpreter of classical music. His beautiful tone, smooth and serene, yet eloquent with the flavor of Latin intensity, his facile execution and fully developed technic, his sensitiveness and delicacy as an interpreter were constantly in evidence. The performance of Beethoven's Sonata, in which the piano part was brilliantly played by Miss Novaes, the young Brazilian pianist, was a striking exhibition of well-nigh flawless ensemble.

On the other hand, Miss Novaes, whose technic is worthy to stand beside that of celebrated and masculine confreres, was cool and impersonal in her treatment of Chopin's Sonata. She has strength, unusual clarity, crispness and brilliance, but her playing is sophisticated rather than emotional, showy rather than interesting.

Next Sunday afternoon Jascha Heifetz will make his third and last appearance this season.

Post March 23, 1918

AMERICAN MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Chadwick's "Sketches" Enjoyed—Saint Saens' C Minor

BY OLIN DOWNES

George W. Chadwick's "Symphonic Sketches" and Saint-Saens' symphony in C minor for modern orchestra with organ made the programme of the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Saint-Saens' symphony is a commendably serious and well written work, carefully planned, entertaining and impressive in spots, and confessing perhaps more than Saint-Saens himself would wish to confess his indebtedness to composers younger as well as older than he is.

Even Cesar Franck, a musical personality not over sympathetic to Saint-Saens, has had, we believe, a good deal to do with the form of this symphony.

A MADE SYMPHONY

But on the other hand, it must be confessed that with all his charm and all his erudition Saint-Saens does not show in this work ideas worthy of the mould in which he has seen fit to cast them. A theme for a symphony has to have great material in it, architectural material in the strength and potency of its melodic line, rhythms which are life-blood to music, and emotional power. We do not find all of these things in the principal themes of the C-minor symphony. There is charm rather than strength, and sometimes the charm is superficial. There are reminiscences of other compositions, all the way from a figure which suggests the Schubert of the B-minor symphony to sequences which are commonplaces of the Liszt-Wagner period. A made symphony. Often well made. In outward form, but not in inner content, a symphonic composition. Dr. Muck made the most of this music. Mr. Marshall, the organist, and other musicians of the orchestra excelled in individual performance.

By contrast the music of Mr. Chadwick, which opened the programme, left the stronger impression with the hearer. This music sounded three times as youthful, vigorous, personal, as the music of Saint-Saens, who is better represented by works other than that heard yesterday.

Mr. Chadwick, in the Symphonic Sketches, is for us at his best. His native humor, sometimes broad and verging on the farcical, but always genuine, is felt in many pages. You can hear the man laugh and catch the twinkle in his eye. There is a fresh, lyrical vein in the Jubilee. The music of this piece, the first of the four "sketches," is exultant and optimistic. Without running to provincialism, one can fairly call this music, as also that of the reckless camaraderie and the strange melancholy of the last movement—the "Vagrom Ballade"—American.

The "Noel" is charming in its simplicity and sentiment, which does no harm by approaching at times to what is sentimental. What makes the music the more fascinating is the ease and the virtuosity with which it is written. Would that more Americans had Mr. Chadwick's substantial knowledge and mastery of his art. The performance was a triumph for composer and orchestra as well. Dr. Muck called the players to their feet to acknowledge the approval of the audience. After long applause Mr. Chadwick rose in the audience.

TOPS BARRED

SYMPHONY IN 18TH CONCERT

Boston Orchestra's Artistic Playing Is Heartily Enjoyed

LONG APPLAUSE FOR CHADWICK SKETCHES

By PHILIP HALE

The 18th concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Muck conductor, took place yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows: Chadwick's Symphonic Sketches; Saint-Saens's Symphony in C minor, No. 3.

Mr. Chadwick's Sketches, especially "Jubilee" and "A Vagrom Ballad," may justly be called American music. Not because the two are derived in any way from Congo, Indian, Creole or Cowboy themes; not because they strive to illustrate in tones an episode in American history or to portray some prominent American; but because this music has characteristics, rhythmic, melodic that we believe to be distinctively American; because it is vitalized by a peculiarly American spirit. The middle Sketches, "Noel" and "Hobgoblin," pleasing as they are, might have been composed by a musician of another nationality. It is impossible to think of anyone but an American inventing the material of the other two and evolving the expression, the musical speech for the thought.

There is an originality, a swing, an audacity, a recklessness, an irreverence—witness the introduction of a phrase from Bach's great organ fugue in G minor in "A Vagrom Ballad"; a joyous extravagance, a rollicking humor, a boastfulness tempered slightly by appreciation of the ridiculous; an utter absence of self-consciousness, an inability to take oneself or one's achievements too seriously—all phases of the American character that we find in Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass"; in the stories of "O. Henry"; even in certain pages of Thoreau and Emerson. "Jubilee" and "A Vagrom Ballad" might also be called "human documents."

In these days when young composers are gloomy, pessimistic in music, when they strive to translate a tragedy into tones, to express the Infinite in a symphonic poem, it is a good thing to be reminded that music may be gay, exhilarating, and thus beneficent, and at the same time show the hand of the skilled musician.

The Sketches were brilliantly played and heartily enjoyed by the large audience. Dr. Muck conducted them con amore. Mr. Chadwick was obliged to acknowledge the spontaneous and prolonged applause.

Saint-Saens's symphony again made a profound impression, and not only by reason of the excellent performance. It is a striking example of the economy in material and expression, the fine, fastidious taste, the logical arrangement and continuity of thought, the lucidity, that are peculiar to French masters in music. The transformations of the chief theme are admirably contrived, each transformation bringing fresh interest and new beauties. The technical skill is never allowed to be merely a display of pedantry. The composer is not detected in the act of padding conventionality, treading water until he is strong enough to strike out boldly. There is a certain nobility, an artistic repose even in agitated measures. Climaxes are powerful, not hysterical. Nowhere is there a deliberate appeal to the crowd.

Shall we not be allowed before the season closes to hear one or two of Saint-Saens's symphonic poems? "Le Rouet d'Omphale," a masterpiece of grace, beauty, and delicate irony, has not been played at these concerts for seven years; the "Danse Macabre" has not been heard here since 1911; "La Jeunesse d'Hercule" was last performed in 1905; while "Phaeton" would be a new composition to nine-tenths of the audience.

The concert will be repeated tonight. The program of next week will be as follows: Cherubini, Overture to "Les Abencerages"; Mozart, Concerto for Clarinet (Albert Sand, clarinetist); Rameau, Ballet Suite; Schumann, Symphony in B flat major, No. 1.

M'CALL ON THE

Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion is to be presented in Symphony Hall in a double session on Tuesday, March 26, by the Townsend chorus and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It will be repeated on Tuesday, April 2. The first part of the program begins at 4 o'clock in the afternoon; the second at 8 o'clock in the evening. The chorus numbers about 400 singers. This will be augmented by a choir of 80 boys' voices.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its nineteenth regular pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon of Friday, March 29, and Saturday, March 30. On the program are Cherubini's overture, "The Abencerages"; the Mozart clarinet concerto in A major, with Albert Sand as the soloist; the Rambeau ballet suite; and the Schumann symphony in B flat major, No. 1.

The orchestra gives its seventh concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on the evening of Thursday, April 4, with Alice Allen, pianist, assisting.

Transcript March 23, 1918

CONCERTS NEXT WEEK

A Concerto for Clarinet and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony on Dr. Muck's Programme—Bach's "Matthew-Passion" as Never Before in Boston—Mr. Casals Returns and Miss Novaes Appears

ONCE in thirty-four years, seemingly, a concerto for clarinet and small orchestra is in order at the Symphony Concerts. In 1884, Mr. Strasser, then the first clarinetist of the band, played such a piece; while next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Mr. Sand, who now holds the post, will play another. His choice is a concerto by Mozart in the usual three movements and his hearers are likely to be surprised at the range of tone and of tonal color of which the clarinet, played by a master, is capable. The other three items of the programme are Schumann's songful and glowing symphony of the spring; Cherubini's stately overture to his Moorish opera, "The Abencerrages" and the suite of dances from eighteenth-century operas by Rameau that Dr. Muck assembled last year and that two audiences heard with no small zest.

Bach Comes to His Own

In two "sessions"—one beginning at four in the afternoon and the other at eight in the evening, with an intermission of two hours between—on Tuesday next, March 26, and on the following Tuesday, April 2, in Symphony Hall, Bach's "Passion-Music according to Matthew," will be heard in entirety for the first time in Boston for many years, and, perhaps for the first time in America with an orchestral part collated by Dr. Muck himself and approximating that which the composer designed and used. The two orchestras for which Bach wrote will be constituted according to his prescriptions; the two choruses and the choir of boys will be similarly assembled and disposed, while the solo singers have been assiduously practised in their parts. They are Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock and Messrs. Murphy, Werrenrath and Witherspoon. The chorus is, of course, the remarkable body of singers that Mr. Townsend and Dr. Muck have brought this season to an eloquence hitherto unknown in kind to Bostonian ears; the boys have been recruited from various churches; while the two bands come from the Symphony Orchestra. Elsewhere on these pages, Professor Clapp writes of the "Matthew-Passion" as the acknowledged masterpiece of choral music. The subjoined note sets forth Dr. Muck's revisions and restorations:

In the original version Bach's orchestra comprised the string choir, with four flutes and four oboes, the latter interchangeable, first, with oboi d'amore; second, with oboi da caccia. He employed also the organ and harpsichord for the basso continuo or figured bass. For most of the arias and recitatives and for some of the choruses, Bach wrote no orchestral accompaniment unless it was a single instrument, obligato, allowing the organist or harpsichordist to weave his own accompaniment to the singers. This basso continuo became a lost art long before the end of the eighteenth century, and Mozart was the first to undertake an elaboration of Bach's orchestral score. In doing so he added clarinets, bassoons, trumpets, trombones, horns and tympani. A second and more familiar revision was made later by Franz, and it is this which is generally used at performances in this country and abroad.

In preparing the "Passion Music" for performance it has been Dr. Muck's aim to revert as nearly as possible to the original in form and manner. He will give it in entirety, for the excisions usually made destroy the significance of the whole. Holding that it is an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death, and holding likewise that Bach would have used bassoons, horns, trumpets, trombones and tympani in this music had he wished to do so, Dr. Muck rejects all of the Franz version except certain accompaniments for strings alone. His orchestra (divided into two parts, one for each of the two choirs) will consist of thirty-two violins, twelve violas, twelve 'cellos, ten basses, four flutes, four oboes, organ and piano. It is greatly to his regret that he is unable to secure in this country the oboi da caccia, but for these he will substitute the English horn, which in the modern orchestra corresponds to the obsolete oboe da caccia. He has oboi d'amore.

Dr. Muck himself has restored, so far as practical, the original orchestration of Bach. He has also scored for Bach's orchestra many of the arias and choruses which in the original version were accompanied merely by a solo instrument and the figured bass. He has further written out the parts for the organ and piano, the latter taking the place of the harpsichord. In other words, the performance of the "Passion Music" will approximate the original performance in Leipsic as closely as modern conditions permit.

Advertiser March 23, 1918

CHADWICK SKETCH, SYMPHONY FEATURE

America and France Represented in Good Program by Dr. Muck's Orchestra

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

PROGRAM

Symphonic Sketches.....Chadwick
Third Symphony.....Saint-Saens

Mr. Chadwick's "Symphonic Sketches" strike a distinctly American note. Although not an oboe composition the oboe is graphically portrayed in the first and last movements of this ultra-Bohemian work. Dr. Muck has evidently grown up to this American picture of scalawagdom. It was scarcely comprehensible to him a few years ago, but yesterday he conducted it with an abandon that meant much in the interpretation. That Mr. Chadwick can give such a spirited picture of this shipwreck on the seacoast of Bohemia indicates that he might have supplied the reckless element that we found lacking in Wallace's "Villon," for Villon was but a wild phase of American life translated into mediaeval French.

The opening "Jubilee" had a circus band frankness that was "sui generis," a swagger that might have delighted a cowboy, yet had its attraction for a Symphony Hall audience as well. There are contrasts in the work also. If the first and last movements are intentionally broad, the two interior movements are poetic enough. The wood-wind had some charming passages in the second movement, "Noel," and there was some excellent work on the brasses in "Hobgoblin," which is a sort of Robin Goodfellow translated into the vernacular. There was also some delicate horn playing in the first movemnt.

FINALE IS GEM OF WORK.

But the finale is the gem of the work. To Dr. Muck it must have seemed only a sort of "Lumpen Vagabundis," for to every few (fortunately) is it given to comprehend—

> A tale of tramps and railway ties,
> Of old clay pipes and rum,
> Of broken heads and blackened eyes,
> And the thirty days to come.

German music has its "Till Eulenspiegel." French vagabondage has been translated into "La Boheme," but the American tramp has his first idealization in this wild work of our resident composer, and it will live because it is so graphic. It was enthusasticaly recived yesterday afternoon; we wonder how it would impress an English or a French audience.

There were two great symphonies in C minor before Saint-Saens used this key, and it is no exaggeration to say that Saint-Saens third symphony does not altogether shrivel up in their company. It is undoubtedly this composer's most ambitious orchestral work. Dedicated to the memory of Liszt, as this work is, it is especially fitting that the pianoforte should play its part in its measures. The piano has often been combined with the orchestra, but very seldom used as a regular member of the band, and very few composers have elicited a new tone-color by employing it.

WORK WELL DEVELOPED.

Berlioz in his "Tempest" obtained a rippling wave color; Wolf-Ferrari in his "Vita Nuova," combining it with harps, achieved superb bell effects; and St. Saens in this symphony has some striking devices of piano scales that develop excellently out of piccolo passages and are a new touch.

The use of the organ (it is a heavily scored modern work) is also most effective. At the end of a rather freely-formed first movement we get an Adagio (joined to it) in which the organ is very effective. After some musicianly development of themes there comes a celestial ending here that is impressive.

In the second part (the third real movement), the violins and violas in unison give a very clear figure which the kettle-drums respond to with tonic and dominant notes. In spite of this opening simplicity there is great ingenuity displayed in developing this figure, and notwithstanding the various juggleries of rhythm that followed (6-8, 9-8, 2-2, 3-1, etc., mingling or alternating) Dr. Muck kept matters quite clear by his remarkable reading and decisive beat. The intricate phrases were punctuated with cymbal clashes, which served as guide-posts even if they added somewhat to a very decided tumult.

ORGAN ADDS TO EFFECT.

The grandiose effect of the finale cannot be exaggerated. Much of it is due to the excellent manner in which the organ is employed, and Mr. John P. Marshall deserves credit for adding greatly to the success of the work. The symphony was received with much enthusiasm, and it deserves recognition. St. Saens has always shown excellent routine in orchestral matters; he knows how to manage modern tone-coloring and his leading of voices is always easy and unforced. But here he goes above this rather dangerous facility and evolves lofty thoughts as well as masterly treatment.

Nevertheless we find the work unequal, and something more of quantity than quality in the finale, in spite of some glimpses of good counterpoint. Yet the two last movements (they are joined together) are better than the first part.

Dr. Muck's Last Rehearsal -- Never Before Has He Marshalled Such Forces

The Two Orchestras, the Two Choruses and the Solo-Singers as Arrayed for the Performances of Bach's Matthew-Passion Music on the Stage of Symphony Hall

From a Photograph Taken at the Rehearsal on Monday Evening

THE MATTHEW-PASSION

PERFORMANCE UNPRECEDENTED IN BOSTON

The Circumstance of an Unusual Occasion —How Far Restoration of Original Form May Wisely Go—The Penalty It Exacts in the Decorative Airs and the Ancient Accompaniments—The Abiding Power of the Narrative, the Chorales and the Chorus—The Glories of a Choir Such as Never Before Here Has Undertaken and Achieved the Music—The Outshining Murphy and Werrenrath Among the Solo Singers

WHAT Dr. Muck had prepared, those whom he had made ready accomplished yesterday at Symphony Hall with little deviation from the methods prescribed and the standards set. For nearly two hours in the afternoon, for two hours more in the evening, Bach's "Passion-Music according to Matthew" was sung and played without the omission of a single measure, with as near an approximation as possible, two hundred years afterward, to the instrumental voices that he arrayed in 1729 or in 1740 in the church of St. Thomas at Leipzig. The anticipated solo-singers were in their places, for the most part apt to their task; the divided chorus filled the extended stage with such numbers as it has hardly known before; within the horns of this crescent sat the orchestra, likewise divided, with only strings, flutes, oboes of various species and English horns in the two bands; while within these ranks were the piano, replacing the ancient harpsichord, and the organ, far more sonorous than that at which Bach himself may have sat. To the eye, there was no change, save that Mr. Schmidt, the assistant conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, replaced his chief. Fortunately, in his days at Darmstadt, before he came to Boston, he had led in many choral concerts well reputed in the city and the country roundabout. Still more fortunately, Dr. Muck's markings of the conductor's score, the instrumental and the choral parts, and the characteristic thoroughness of his preparation, ended late on the evening before, laid Mr. Schmidt a course relatively easy to follow. Once and again in the long progress of what were virtually two concerts, the hearer missed a stimulation that Dr. Muck's personal force might have given to his choirs; occasionally it was easy to believe that his quickness of ear and hand would have kept the tonal balance evener between the accompanying instruments and the solo voice. Otherwise—there is little

The assembled company was plainly disposed to encourage Mr. Schmidt by the hearty applause with which it greeted him both afternoon and evening; while it testified as loudly at the end of each part to its satisfaction with the whole outcome. Between, it heeded the request of the programme to forbear clapping, so that the narrative of the Passion of Jesus was not "punctuated with applause" as has become the mistaken Bostonian custom with the similar "rite"—if one chooses so to regard it—of "The Messiah" at Christmas time. As for the audience, finally, it filled every part of the hall except the standing-room and listened with every sign of sustained interest and pleasure to a taxing performance. In the afternoon not a few came late, apparently uncertain and uninformed whether the concerts were to take place; while at both "sessions," there were curiously numerous incomings and outgoings—the only circumstance of the occasion, except the withholding of applause to the end, that suggested a "religious service." It is possible so to sing and play The Matthew-Passion; indeed Bach so designed it; but at Symphony Hall yesterday, in accord with preponderant modern custom, it was treated as a concert-music, in which the "congregation" shared only as listeners. So much for the record.

In a sense, of course, the restoration of The Mathew Passion-Music to its original form and circumstance is as vain an endeavor as the restoration, say, of Shakspeare's "Hamlet" to the manner of the Elizabethan theatre. The circumstance must, indeed, altogether evade the restorer. "The ancients were the ancients and we are the people of today," as the blessed common sense of Molière affirms, and an audience sitting in Symphony Hall in Boston on the twenty-sixth day of March, 1918, scantily resembles the congregation that presumably filled St. Thomas's church in Leipzig on April 15, 1729, or on any Good Friday thereafter until death took Bach away. As far as the concert room of yesterday is from that nave and chancel, so far remote, almost, are the pre-dispositions of the hearers of 1918 from those of 1729. To us, Bach is one of the mighty and enduring composers of music; to them he was the cantor and organist of St. Thomas, doing his job under pay from the municipality and the approbation or the disapprobation of the townsfolk. To us, The Matthew-Passion is one of the exalted and abiding monuments of choral music; to them it was but the service of the day. Bach's forces at St. Thomas's were meagre and ill-trained; often, in his few surviving petitions to his employers, he complains of them; there is not a doubt that they scrabbled through The Matthew-Passion somehow, much as would a church choir and a church orchestra nowadays, did the organist and the choir-master set a task too exacting for them. In contrast, an arduously trained chorus, two, three, four hundred strong, an expert orchestra numerically proportion[illegible] to it and as diligently [illegible]

With the original form of the music the restorer may accomplish more. If he has sufficient confidence in the staying-power of his singers and his audience through "two sessions," he may omit, as Dr. Muck did, not a measure of the score. If he has sufficient instrumental resource he may, again like Dr. Muck, nearly reconstitute Bach's orchestra from which only the oboi di caccia and the viole da gamba were missing yesterday, though he must inevitably swell its numbers. Probably, moreover, the "scratch band" of St. Thomas's in the Leipzig of 1729 possessed instruments of no such quality as the violins, the violoncellos, the flutes or the oboes of the members of the Symphony Orchestra. Furthermore: if the restorer enjoy the scholarship, the ingenuity and the industry of Dr. Muck, he may discard the "additional instrumentation" that various hands have added to the original score and substitute for it accompaniments and obbligati, approximating the procedure of Bach himself. Similarly, he may figure anew in his own detailing the organ and the piano parts that the composer, after the manner of his time, left to the readiness of the players upon them, one of whom was usually his ready and comprehending self. So yesterday the audience heard accompaniments, newly fashioned in the ancient manner for many an air, chorus or paragraph of melodious recitative.

Yet, when the restorer has accomplished all these things, even with the scholarship, and the skill, the understanding and the intuition of Dr. Muck's handiwork, has he really heightened the impression of The Matthew-Passion upon his hearers of 1918? He may have gratified their curiosity to hear music and text without the omission of word or note; but beyond question, many of the so-called decorative airs yield no other interest. They are the items in the Passion Music, in which a single voice, rising from the choir, speaks the reactions of devout spirits to the inner and the outer content of the narrative unfolded, or the aspirations it may kindle in touched and longing hearts. Such design is comprehensible and sympathetic to a hearer of 1918 no less than to a listener of 1729; but the verse of these airs in the original German as well as in the translated English seldom rises above sentimental doggerel, while often the musical form of the air seeks every repetition and return prescribed by the formulas of the beginning of the seventeenth century.

In the twentieth century and with English text, the listener may only smile at the vapid pietistic verse, with the simple graphic, intensive prose of Matthew, the apostle, and of the King James version before and behind it; while he resigns himself to the tedious lengths of the aria da capo unrelaxingly orthodox. A few of these airs, like the alto's "O Pardon Me" or the soprano's "Of love my Saviour Dieth," whatever the exactions of form, are of an intrinsic beauty and emotion preserving and animating them to this day, caressing the listening ear, melting the responsive heart. In the contours of the pattern, in the details of the accompaniment a few more are interesting to the studious over their music. The rest, classic though they be, are mere professional routine; for Bach, like every other eighteenth-century composer with his living to earn, did a deal of musical journalism—even when he was writing of the Passion of Jesus. Moreover, some of these airs fared ill in the concerts of yesterday, since the voice of Mr. Witherspoon, to which those for bass fell, now lacks resonance, smoothness, pliability, while Mme. Alcock, whatever the virtue of her tones, was none too much at ease with the ancient pattern of the music. Only Miss Hinkle achieved the flowing outlines, the sensibility of phrase and ornament, the grave play of sentiment that these airs exact.

As with the melody and the arabesques of these airs, so in measure with the approximation to the original accompaniments. Again, the outcome was interesting to the learned and the studious; occasionally it did achieve the pale coloring, the piteous suggestion, the voice of mystery or of pleading, the tonal atmosphere that Bach by every sign imagined. Flutes, oboes, assisting strings may indeed be so poetized and Dr. Muck has been imaginative and apt with them. On the other hand, in many such accompaniments and obbligati, there is no questioning the ennui to twentieth-century ears of these repeated figures in what soon become the thin, piercing, naked tones of the reed choir.

No: the interest, the power of The Matthew-Passion with an audience of 1918 —the shamming mummeries of "reverence" for a classic aside—spring from the narrative, whether one voice or many bear it, from the amplifying and the intensifying choruses, from the chorales, in which, much more graphically and penetratingly than in the decorative airs, the emotions and the moods invoked attain to tonal being. To the power of that narrative, the apostle, the composer, and, as it happened yesterday, the singing Evangelist all contributed. The text is that of the twenty-sixth and the twenty-seventh chapters of the Gospel of Matthew, in the English of the King James Scripture, in which words seem to open the deed they record, to release the emotion they recount. The music of Bach, veritably, attains the goal of a melodious declamation as precise and pliant as that in the spoken word, yet heightened in delineative and emotional eloquence by the enhancing power that only tones may lend. Most of it, on Tuesday, was sung by Mr. Murphy, for the voice of the narrating Evangelist, by Mr. Werrenrath for the voice of Jesus. They eschewed the silly sentimentality that reduces grave, vivid, naked words to a sugary patois; they were always intelligible as became such masters of diction; they were heedful of the contours and the inflections of Bach's tonal speech; they mated skilfully music and words; they gave to both the illusion of an exaltation born of deep understanding and sincere response. Technically—and the music is endlessly exacting; tonally—and it demands an equal range of artistry and imagination—it never baffled them. Hearing them and hearing the orchestra with them, the listener caught the joined voices of Matthew and of Bach.

As for the chorales, better one of them in quality of the music, in quality of the imparted emotion, to the ears of today than ten of the decorative airs. Hymn-tunes, if the listener chooses so to name them, square-cut certainly; simple melodies, simply rhythmed, harmonized, developed, set in march, if that same listener chooses; contrast them with the more intr[illegible] music of this very Matthew-Passion, some of the Church Cantatas, of the [illegible] in B minor. Yet music that rather virtue, than in spite of, these qual[illegible] summons a beauty gaining the unive[illegible] ear, touching the common and univer[illegible] heart. Some of them, perhaps all of them were once the "traditional tunes" [illegible] scholastic label; but when they had passed through the alembic of Bach's mind a[illegible] heart—of music, of emotion, of a de[illegible] sincere religious faith and religious su[illegible] ceptibility all compact—they emerged [illegible] the beauty and the power in which we n[illegible] know them, irresistible. As it falls [illegible] the ear, this beauty seems so simple, [illegible] clear, the essence, as it were, of tonal [illegible] liness, distilled and concentrated. A[illegible] reaches the heart this power seems as si[illegible] ple—the essence of mood, emotion, sens[illegible] tion isolated, intensified and projected.

As these Chorales, as Bach himself, w[illegible] rooted in the folk, so does the comm[illegible] ear, the common impulse respond, qu[illegible] and warm, to them. They are, indeed, [illegible] response of all the people, as the pray[illegible] book has it, to this rite of the Passion [illegible] Jesus. Yet with what diversity of mo[illegible] voice, illusion does Bach invest th[illegible] Five times, for example, one ("O Sac[illegible] Head") returns in the course of [illegible] Matthew Passion and each time with [illegible] power to touch and sway. As they [illegible] written not merely on the surface but [illegible] within, so were they sung yesterda[illegible] the choir that has now justly taken [illegible] proud name of the Boston Symph[illegible] Chorus. Since these Chorales are relativ[illegible] ly so stripped, no music in the wh[illegible] course of the afternoon and the evenin[illegible] so clearly disclosed the brightness and [illegible] warmth of the soprano tone, the richn[illegible] of the alto, the resonant fullness of [illegible] tenor and the bass, the nearly unfail[illegible] technical virtue, the suppleness, the [illegible] cision, the intelligence, the sensibility [illegible] the whole choir, the like of which [illegible] Mr. Townsend's endless pains and [illegible] Muck's fostering care, Boston or, for t[illegible] matter any American city, except Tor[illegible] in older and better days has hardly kno[illegible] There were Chorales on Tuesday t[illegible] sounded with a beauty of tone as distil[illegible] and concentrated as the music itself [illegible] of which the song was as instinct [illegible] absorbed, united, projected emotion.

Transcript March 27, 1918 51

The choruses proper, so to say, like those which respectively begin and end The Matthew-Passion or that which calls down the lightnings, the thunders upon the slayers of Jesus, the choral interjections that are oftenest the cries of the Jewish mob as the narrative gives it voice, set tasks for the chorus as exacting in another way. In the chorus of the beginning, for example, Bach has written music that would scale the heavens as it summons the world to contemplate and to experience the Passion of its Lord. Higher and higher mounts the music, broader and broader becomes its span, thicker and more glowing its interwoven strands, larger and larger its speech, more and more ardent its march—music of a mass and a momentum that none before him had undertaken or, perhaps, imagined; music that few after him have matched in power. More naked and darting, as of direct tonal thrust, as though the arm of Omnipotence Itself was about to Wield Its weapons, is the invocation of the powers of heaven and hell. Some of the choral cries like the celebrated shout for Barabbas are winged with a kindred force and flash, while others are no more than the eloquent or the workmanlike progress of the narrative. The final chorus, in contrast, forsakes upswelling and interjectional power and dwells in the grave measures of mournful vigil and wistful expectancy, in a beauty as gently suffused over this music of the end as the music of the beginning was tense with woful summons. Yet in sum, as in contrast, these choruses are a music of might and motion, whereas the Chorales are music of beauty and meditation. Only in the Chorale that ends the first division of the Passion—the Choral Fantasia, as it is more truly named, "O Man Bewail thy Sin so Great"—does Bach underlay the outer simplicity and directness with an inward emotion comparable to that within the choruses of power.

As they had conquered the beauty of the Chorales, so the Boston Symphony Chorus and Mr. Townsend, the Boston Symphony Chorus-Master—to name each by what is present and probably permanent title—conquered the power of the choruses. The four hundred singers flung forth the cries of the crowd as though by sudden and sweeping impulse, traversing, permeating, firing a mob all on the instant, and yet with a firm precision to the rhythm and the modulations of the music. Where fewer voices, like those of Jesus's disciples, speak through the chorus, the singers, many as they were, gave the measures like human inflection, like vivid, and characterizing color to those which Mr. Murphy, by his single self, bestowed upon the Evangelist's declamation.

Again, while the chorus of the beginning mounted in a very magnificence of tonal power, clear and elastic was every strand that wove the heighth, breadth and depth of the music. There were march, might, magnitude, with skill and surety to direct and confirm them; there were also the flooding emotion, the intensifying glamor of such music. And once more with the Choral-Fantasia at the end of the first division. Studious dreamers over The Matthew-Passion have visioned to their ears this music sung with all the grave and lovely simplicity that glows off the surface of the tones, yet charged with the lament of the truly devout and enkindled spirit within that was Bach as he wrote these measures, penetrating, haunting two centuries beyond all else in this Passion of Jesus. So for feat of feats, by conductor, chorusmaster, orchestra and singers, they might have heard it on Tuesday afternoon. There above all else in the four hours progress of music and performance, the end crowned the work.

H. T. P.

Transcript

ERNEST SCHMIDT TO CONDUCT

Assistant Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra to Take Place of Dr. Muck in Performance of Bach's "Passion" This Afternoon and Tonight at Symphony Hall

It was announced early this afternoon by the Symphony Hall management that Bach's "Passion" would be sung this afternoon and evening as announced; that the conductor would be Ernest Schmidt, who has been assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for three or four years.

Mr. Schmidt has had experience in choral conducting, especially at Darmstadt, West Germany, where he lived for some time. He has helped in several emergencies during his career with the Symphony Orchestra, and has conducted in Dr. Muck's place possibly five times in the last few years.

Transcript March 27, 1918

Dr. Muck Still Smiles Under Arrest

Dr. Karl Muck, Second From the Left, Looking Toward Manager Ellis of the Symphony Orchestra, at the Extreme Right, as Party Arrived at the Federal Building From Police Station 16. On Either Side of the Musician Is a Plain Clothes Policeman. In Dr. Muck's Left Hand Is a Package of Cigarettes Which He Smoked Rapidly All the Forenoon

DR. MUCK NOT RELEASED

Transcript

Effort Made to Have Him Lead the Orchestra

Will Go to Cambridge Jail This Afternoon

Manager Ellis Calls at the Federal Building

Ernest Schmidt Conducts "Passion" Concert

Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was taken to the Federal Building at ten o'clock this morning, by plain clothes men of Station 16, and special agents of the Department of Justice.

Upon his arrival at the building he was placed in the cage in the office of the United States Marshal Mitchell, and the gate was locked. He was the only prisoner in the enclosure. Other prisoners, who had been taken into custody on various charges, sat outside the cage.

After a short time Deputy United States Marshal Backus unlocked the cage door and told Dr. Muck that he could sit outside, which he did, taking a seat in the enclosure, near other prisoners. He took a box of cigarettes from his pocket and asked Deputy Backus for a match, which was given him. He then started smoking. He asked for a newspaper, which he proceeded to read. He did not appear to be perturbed over the situation.

While seated in the marshal's room, several called with requests to be allowed to speak with Dr. Muck, and the request was granted in few instances. Manager C. A. Ellis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was among the first to arrive, and it is understood that he was especially anxious to have Dr. Muck released from the custody of deputy marshals for the purpose of leading the Symphony Orchestra at this afternoon's and evening's concert.

The request was not granted, and it was subsequently arranged that Ernest Schmidt, the assistant conductor of the Symphony band, would conduct in his place.

Mrs. Gardner Calls

Just after Mr. Ellis left, Mrs. John L.

DR. MUCK NOT RELEASED

Continued from Page One

Gardner arrived, holding in her hand a small parcel which appeared to be a glass wrapped in paper. She inquired for Mr. Ellis and was informed that he had gone. A special agent of the Department of Justice took her in charge and she left the parcel with him, apparently for Dr. Muck. She requested that she be allowed to go as far as the partition in the office and wave her hand at the prisoner. This she was allowed to do. In making this request she said that she desired to cheer him.

It is understood that the investigation by the Federal authorities of Dr. Muck's affairs is being carried along as rapidly as possible and Dr. Muck will be taken to the East Cambridge jail late today and left there until further proceedings are carried out.

When Dr. Muck arrived at the Federal Building this morning the automobile which carried him circled the Federal Building about four times before it was stopped at one of the entrances for him to be taken into the Milk street entrance. Several newspaper photographers followed the auto-

Lunches in Marshal's Office

The prisoner's luncheon was obtained from a hotel, as for others in custody. Dr. Muck appeared to enjoy the food. When the messenger arrived with the luncheon he was handed money by a young man who stood in the marshal's office and appeared to be looking after Dr. Muck's interests as much as he could.

There may be nothing further for some days that will cause Dr. Muck to be taken from the East Cambridge jail to the Federal Building.

Arrested at His Home

Dr. Muck was arrested at 11.30 last night at his home, 50 Fenway, Back Bay, by three agents of the United States Department of Justice and a patrolman from the Back Bay police station. The officers had watched the house all the evening, Dr. Muck being absent. When he arrived in front of his home in his motor he was informed that he was under arrest as an enemy alien. He was taken to the Back Bay police station and, after being booked in the usual course, was placed in a cell, where he was obliged to remain all night, bail not being permitted to prisoners under the enemy alien act.

Dr. Muck, who had been the principal conductor of the Royal Opera in Berlin, first came to Boston to lead the Symphony Orchestra in 1906 and remained here two years. He came back again in 1912 and has since been head of the Symphony Orchestra. Last November it was asserted that Dr. Muck refused to lead the orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner" at Providence. It was said at the time that he had not been asked to lead the orchestra in the national anthem, but public resentment was strong and since then Symphony Orchestra concerts have been cancelled in various places. Dr. Muck, soon after the Providence episode, began the custom at Symphony concerts in Boston of playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Swiss Citizen by Purchase

The citizenship of Dr. Karl Muck has been a subject of discussion in the diplomatic corps in Washington for some time. It is generally understood that while the holder of Swiss papers, he is a Prussian in fact.

As explained by one member of the corps today, Dr. Muck's father, when the son was six or eight years old, went to the Canton of Zug and obtained by purchase papers entitling him to Swiss citizenship. He did that, it is said, to obtain the protection of the Swiss Government in his business, which was largely in Switzerland, and also to keep his son from being taken into the Prussian army when he arrived at the age of conscription. The Swiss naturalization laws are administered in many cases by the cantons, and in some of these the regulations are lenient, making it possible for anyone to buy naturalization papers without being compelled to exercise all the preliminary duties of citizens.

MAJOR HIGGINSON ILL AT HOME

Founder of the Symphony Orchestra Makes No Statement Regarding the Arrest of Dr. Muck

Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Symphony Orchestra, was not at his office at Lee, Higginson's today and it was said there that he would have nothing to say regarding the arrest of Dr. Muck. At Major Higginson's residence, 191 Commonwealth avenue, inquiries brought the information that he was not quite well and was in his room. He will not be out for a day or two, although his illness is said to be only a slight indisposition.

Transcript Mar 27, 18

DR. MUCK SMOKES A PIPE

Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Abandons His Accustomed Cigarettes in Accordance with Rules of East Cambridge Jail—Accepts Changed Conditions with Apparent Philosophy

Dr. Karl Muck is learning to smoke a pipe. Cigarettes are forbidden at the East Cambridge jail, where he is locked up, and although this is his first attempt with slice tobacco, he is too zealous a smoker to give up the comfort which the smoke clouds bring, even though he must make them in a new way. Ardent pipe-smokers no doubt will agree that, after he is properly broken in, he may never return to cigarettes.

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra accepts his changed conditions philosophically—as he smokes his pipe. Since he is merely in jail, he wears his usual civilian clothing. He does not eat the palatable meals which Sheriff Fairbairn provides at "Charley Adams's," but has them sent in from a Cambridge street restaurant. Last night he enjoyed a supper of ham and eggs, baked beans, French fried potatoes, coffee and pie. For breakfast today he was more continental in taste, with oatmeal and cream, and a pot of coffee.

Dr. Muck has had no visitors so far, although his wife was expected at the jail some time today. No visitors, moreover, will be allowed without a special permit from the Federal authorities; and it goes without saying that the orchestra leader has no inatercourse with fellow prisoners.

Upon the arrival of Dr. Muck at the jail last night the sheriff had a talk with him, outlining what is expected of prisoners; and the musician accepted the advice with proper seriousness and expressed his willingness to abide by all rules.

Dr. Muck was taken from the Federal Building to the jail late yesterday afternoon in an automobile, with other prisoners, by two United States deputy marshals. Owing to the extent of the investigation into the affairs of Dr. Muck it is likely that he will not be taken from the jail to the Federal Building for several days. He was booked at the office of United States Marshal Mitchell as an enemy alien, and the authorities usually take definite action within ten days of the arrest. The Department of Justice made seizures of large amount of correspondence from the residence and office of the prisoner. As a large part of the writing is in German, some time will be required to get the matter into shape for action.

It is understood that Dr. Muck will not be given a chance to smoke cigarettes at the East Cambridge jail, for there is a rule against all smoking except a pipe. Dr. Muck stated that he had never smoked a pipe.

Dr. Muck, while at the Federal Building, was taken before Assistant United States District Attorney Judd Dewey, in charge of alien cases, and told something about the Government's case. The prisoner was left by himself nearly all the time that he was at the marshal's office and he seemed somewhat relieved when the silence of the authorities was broken. Upon returning from the private office of Mr. Dewey, the prisoner appeared to be deeply concerned over his situation. Mrs. Muck called upon her husband before he left for East Cambridge.

The only statement that Mr. Dewey was willing to make public was given after Dr. Muck left for the jail. It was as follows:

"Dr. Muck was born in Germany, and being a native of Germany he comes under the head of being an enemy alien, even though he later acquired citizenship in Switzerland. We had a parallel case only last week of a man who was born in Germany who migrated to South Africa and became a British subject.

"He was sent away on precisely the same grounds as we are now holding Dr. Muck."

52

ATIC AND MUSICAL REVIEW BY

ness of speech and simplicity of manner are the marks of your true grande dame. There is something comfortable about this typical figure. You feel safe with it and at home. So peculiarly and so gratifyingly English is it that you want to show it to your foreign friends—just to let them know what we can do."

The Coming Performance of Bach's Passion According to Matthew

Bach's Passion According to Matthew music will be performed next Tuesday by the forces under Dr. Muck in Symphony Hall. The whole of the work will be performed for the first time in Boston since 1882.

The "Matthaeus Passion" in its first form was first heard in the St. Thomas Church of Leipsic on Good Friday in 1729. It is said that the music was not fully appreciated. It cannot be said authoritatively that it was performed again under his direction. The original version was changed by him. The version that is now known was performed in 1740 or soon afterwards. There were performances after Bach died (1750), but the work was not known outside Leipsic until Mendelssohn brought about a performance in Berlin on March 12, 1829, exactly 100 years after the first performance.

The chorus in 1729 was very small. The average number for a four-part chorus was about 12 voices. Bach left Coethen in 1723, chiefly because he felt that the Prince of Anhalt-Coethen was losing interest in music on account of his marriage with a woman who did not care for it, although she may not have been afraid of it. In 1730 Bach wrote to the Leipsic town council about the number of musicians required for the adequate performance of church music. We learn from this memorial that he had at his disposal two violins, two trumpets, two oboes and a bassoon. "Thus," he wrote, "there are wanting the following instruments which are necessary, some for strengthening the tone and some for playing parts which cannot be left out, to wit, two first violins, two second violins, two that can play viola, two violoncellos, one double bass and two flutes." The scholars of St. Thomas were taught by him to supply the missing instruments, but he pointed out that this lessened the adequacy of his choral forces, for the boys taken for the instruments were also badly wanted to sing.

The announcement of the coming performance of the Matthew Passion in Symphony Hall included the surprisingly erroneous statement that it is "an anachronism to introduce into the score an instrument like the clarinet, which was invented years after Bach's death."

Bach died in 1750. It is not necessary to discuss the question whether Johann Christopher Denner "invented" the clarinet at Nuremberg about 1690. (Mahillon thinks that Denner's work was in the nature of modifying the chalumeau.) We know this, however: Rameau introduced clarinets in his "Acanthe et Cephise," produced at Versailles in 1751, the year after Bach's death. Clarinets were then rare in Paris, found only in La Poupliniere's orchestra, heard at his house and at the concert Spirituel. Two clarinetists, Gaspard Broksch and one Flieger, were imported from Germany about 1750-51.

Bach's first Passion was the one according to John, the first version of which was performed at Leipsic in Holy Week, 1724. It began with the great chorus "O Mensch bewein' dein' Suende gross!" which now ends the first part of the Matthew Passion.

These two works, the John and the Matthew, after Bach's death were preserved by his son Philip Emanuel. Bach wrote three other Passions, which are lost, some think through the carelessness or indifference of the brilliant but reckless eldest son, Wilhelm Friedemann. The "Passion according to Luke," although it is in Bach's handwriting, is not by him.

Portions of the Passion according to Matthew were performed by the Handel and Haydn Society at its second triennial festival May 13, 1871. Carl Zerrahn conducted. The solo singers were Mmes. Rudersdorff and Sterling, W. J. Winch, M. W. Whitney. Mr. Listemann played the solo violin. The chorus, according to Mr. Dwight, numbered 700. The local orchestra was enlarged by many of the best musicians of the Philharmonic and Thomas orchestras of New York, some from Philadelphia and other cities—about 100 in all. Franz's instrumentation was used. B. J. Lang was the organist.

A larger portion was performed on May 8, 1874, when the solo singers were Edith Wynne, Adelaide Phillipps, W. J. Winch, J. F. Rudolphsen, M. W. Whitney. Twice as much of the work was then heard as was heard three years before.

About three-fourths were performed on April 9, 1876. Henrietta Beebe, Mme. Rudersdorff, Laura Goodwin, William J. Winch, John F. Winch, J. F. Rudolphsen were the solo singers.

On April 11, 1879, the work complete was performed. Henrietta Beebe, Edith Abell, William Courtney, J. F. Winch, M. W. Whitney. Remenyi was the solo violinist. The first part was performed in the afternoon and occupied two hours; the second, almost two hours and a half. Music Hall was crowded at both concerts. Many stood. For the benefit of hundreds, public rehearsals of both parts were given on the two preceding afternoons. The receipts were $2984.9 the expenses $2800.17.

SOLOISTS OF THE WEEK

Left to Right. Pablo Casals, 'Cellist, in Recital at Jordan Hall, Monday Afternoon; Florence Hinkle, Soprano, in the Passion Music, at Symphony Hall, on Tuesday; Lambert Murphy, Tenor, in the Passion Music.

Portions were performed on April 15, 1881: Mrs. Humphrey-Allen (Mrs. George F. Babbitt), Edith Abell, Annie Louise Cary, William J. Winch, Georg Henschel, John F. Winch.

The entire work was performed on April 7, 1882, in two concerts, with a chorus of 350 in the afternoon and 450 in the evening. Mrs. E. A. Osgood, Mathilda Phillipps, Edith Abell, W. F. Winch, Georg Henschel, J. F. Winch. The receipts were $2700.

Portions were performed on these dates:

1884, April 11—Mrs. Osgood, Emily Winant, G. J. Parker, Georg Henschel, Franz Remmertz.

1888, March 4—Henrietta Beebe-Lawton, Mary H. How, W. J. Winch, M. W. Whitney, George Prehn.

1891, March 27—Harriet S. Whittier, Mary H. How, G. J. Parker, J. H. Ricketson, William Ludwig, Ivan Morowski.

1892, April 15—Mrs. Henschel, Mme. Joachim, Edward Lloyd, G. J. Parker, Georg Henschel, G. S. Lamson.

1893, March 31—Gertrude Franklin, Mrs. Carl Alves, William Dennison, Heinrich Meyn, Max Heinrich.

1894, March 23—Jennie Patrick Walker, Mrs. Alves, Ben Davies (his first appearance in this country), Plunket Greene, Max Heinrich.

1895, April 12—Mrs. Walker, Marguerite Hall, W. H. Rieger, Carl E. Duft, E. F. Bushnell.

1896, April 3—Mrs. Henschel, Mrs. Alves, W. H. Rieger, Ffrangcon Davies, Watkin Mills, B. J. Lang, conductor.

1902, March 28—Charlotte Maconda, Gertrude May Stein, W. H. Rieger, G. Miles, L. W. Flint, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor.

The Cecilia Society gave portions of the work on April 14, 1911. Marie Zimmerman, Alice Bates Rice, Janet Spencer, George Hamlin, David Bispham, Earl Cartwright, Max Fiedler conductor.

Sir Hubert Parry, speaking of the Matthew Passion, says: "It is probably the most beautiful expression of a beautiful phase of religion. It need not be supposed that a devotional attitude so supremely ideal could have ever had a general practical existence. Even in Bach's time the majority of the congregation would have been quite unworthy of the work as a scheme of religious art. It can at least be said of them that they put themselves in a position to afford Bach the opportunity of knocking at the door of their hearts and offering his view of the manner in which the story of the Passion might be profitably taken. . . . For truly the keynote of the whole is the divine manifested in man. . . . The Godhead of Christ is scarcely anywhere apparent. The tragedy is unfolded in its purely human aspects, as the sacrifice of a man who was ideally adorable as man rather than on account of his divine descent. . . . Bach's music is almost invariably intensely human in its expression, and notwithstanding the enormous amount of church music which he wrote, unecclesiastical. It is intensely spiritual, deeply devout, nobly and consistently serious, but with the largeness of temperamental nature that reaches out beyond the limitations of any four walls whatever into communion with the infinite. The story of the Passion as told by him would appeal not only to the Christian but also to a pagan who had but the slenderest knowledge of the traditions of Christianity. It was the outcome of Teutonic Christianity of the time, and yet it transcended it in the far-reaching power of the music and makes an appeal which can be answered by humanity at large."

Globe March 26, 1918.

Globe 3/26

U. S. AGENTS ARREST MUCK

Symphony Orchestra Leader Seized Under Alien Enemy Act---Placed In Cell For the Night

Report Sensational Charges Are to Be Made Against Him Under Federal Code---Native of Germany

Dr Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested last night at his home, 50 Fenway, by three agents of the Department of Justice, accompanied by a patrolman in uniform from Station 16.

The noted musician was informed by the officers that he was arrested under the President's proclamation as an alien enemy, and that he could not be released on bail.

Passes Night in Cell

The prisoner was taken to Station

Continued on the Second Page.
Continued from the [illegible]

16, where he was questioned by Lieut Mulligan, in charge of the desk, who after going through the usual formalities of booking and searching his clothing ordered him placed in a cell for the night.

It is understood that Dr Muck will be taken to the Federal Building about 9 o'clock this morning, where he will be questioned by United States Dist Atty Thomas J. Boynton and United States Asst Dist Attys Daniel A. Shea and Judd Dewey, the latter being in charge of alien enemy matters for the Government.

Hint of Sensational Charges

According to the present program, Dr Muck, after the informal hearing at the Federal Building, will be placed in the custody of United States Marshal John J. Mitchell and remanded to the East Cambridge Jail, where he is apt to pass considerable time before his case is disposed of finally.

LEADING EVENTS IN CAREER OF DR MUCK

1859—Born in Bavaria.

1880—Awarded degree of Ph. D. by University of Leipsic.

1880-1881—Chorus master in the Municipal Theatre at Zurich.

1881-1882—Conductor at Salzburg, Austria.

1882-1884—Conductor of opera at Brunn, Austria.

1884-1886—Conductor of opera at Graz, Austria.

1886-1892—Conductor of German opera and philharmonic concerts at Prague, Bohemia.

1889—Conductor of Angelo Neumann's Opera Company in Russia.

1891—Conductor of Neumann's Opera Company in Berlin.

1892-1906—Principal conductor of the Royal Opera at Berlin.

1906-1908 and 1912-1918—Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

1917—Protest against his alleged refusal to lead Boston Symphony Orchestra in rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner."

1917—Leads orchestra in "The Star Spangled Banner."

1918—Arrested under Alien Enemy act.

While the charge against Dr Muck is covered in the President's proclamation relative to the activities of alien enemies, it is reported that other sensational charges may be brought against him for alleged violation of two sections of the Federal code.

Ever since the beginning of the war, in fact long before the United States became a participant, Dr Muck has been under observation by the agents of the Department of Justice. He has been regarded as being a pronounced pro-

American March 27, 1918

BACH "PASSION" IS SKILFULLY PERFORMED

American 3/27

Ernst Schmidt Conducts Symphony—Lambert Murphy Adept as Narrator

By FRED J. McISAAC.

The whisking away of Doctor Muck on the eve of the performance of the great St. Matthew's Passion by J. S. Bach, which he had so carefully prepared for several months, did not prevent an excellent performance of the big work at Symphony Hall yesterday.

Ernst Schmidt, assistant conductor of the orchestra, who had not held the baton this season, was notified at noon that he would have to lead the concert without a rehearsal. Fortunately he had been present at most of the rehearsals and knew how the work had been developed.

In addition to the mixed chorus of 400 voices, there was a boy choir of eighty, and the Symphony orchestra of 100, a total of nearly 600 performers, to produce a work which the great Bach himself first presented with a choir of thirty and an orchestra of half that number.

The arrest of Dr. Muck undoubtedly caused an undercurrent of unrest, but there was no outward signs that the authorities had plucked the peerless leader. There was no announcement, and Herr Schmidt, who has grown a whisker since he was last seen, stepped upon the conductor's stand with his identity unknown to many in the audience.

The Passion of St. Matthew was performed as nearly as possible in the style in which it was given in Leipsic in 1729, except of course that such a multitude of performers would have caused Bach to expire with joy.

The work is one of the most beautiful, devotional and inspiring in the library of classic music. It was written to occupy three hours on Good Friday, and intended to put its audience into a proper mood to consider the passion of our Savior.

Thus it is in no sense an entertainment, nor was it intended for concert purposes. In order to suit the American temperament the performance was split in two parts, permitting an intermission of two hours for dinner. Otherwise I am afraid the character of the music, its endless repetitions and its extreme deliberateness would have worn out the patience of most of those present.

A very large part of the music is sung by the narrator, who was Lambert Murphy. Mr. Murphy is to be congratulated for an English diction as rare as it was delightful, a clear clarion tone and exquisite judgment. His was a wonderful performance.

Excellent solo work was done by Merle Alcock, contralto, and Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. The very important bass part was entrusted to Herbert Witherspoon, who was in execrable voice and who made the long drawn out bass airs almost undurable. Florence Hinkly in the soprano part sang only respectably.

The chorus singing, on the whole, was splendidly performed. The sudden change in the conductor was responsible, no doubt, for certain faults of attack and lack of precision. Mr. [illegible] under the circumstances de-

SYMPHONY LEADER ARRESTED UNDER ALIEN ENEMY ACT

DR KARL MUCK.

Asst U. S. Dist Atty Judd Dewey issued the following statement last night:

"Dr Muck was born in Germany and being a native of Germany he comes under the head of being an alien enemy, even though he later acquired citizenship in Switzerland. We had a parallel case only last week of a man who was born in Germany, who migrated to South Africa and became a British subject. He was sent away on precisely the same grounds as we are now holding Dr Muck."

Citizen of Switzerland

About six months ago the Department of Justice received information to the effect that Dr Muck was conducting propaganda through personal friends. He was closely watched at that time and an investigation was made relative to his claim of Swiss citizenship. It was discovered that Dr Muck had been perfectly truthful in regard to the country of his adoption.

Investigators of the Department of Justice learned that Dr Muck was born in Bavaria in 1859, and that in 1867 his father emigrated to Switzerland and became a naturalized citizen, the doctor then being about 8 years old.

Within the past few days the attention of the Department of Justice was again directed to the alleged activities of Dr Muck, when his secretary called at the office of the clerk of the United States District Court and asked Asst Dist Atty Dewey to give him blank applications for passports for Dr and Mrs Muck to go abroad.

This action resulted in a conference among Federal officials, at which a decision was reached to arrest the doctor under President Wilson's proclamation as an alien enemy, the department, it is alleged, having ample evidence on which to hold him and intern him during the period of the war.

Warrant May Be Issued

So far there has been no written complaint and no warrant has been issued, because they are not required in cases that come under the President's proclamation. There is a possibility that while Dr Muck is being detained in the East Cambridge Jail, a warrant may be issued on another charge or charges and that a complaint may be issued on information charging violation of the Federal law.

Dr Muck attended the rehearsal of the Symphony Orchestra yesterday morning.

Since Dr Muck opposed the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the orchestra some months ago, he has been the center of a patriotic barrage.

Dr Muck, arrested under the President's proclamation, is not entitled to a hearing before either the United States Commissioners or the United States Courts. Only in case he appeals to the Minister from Switzerland will Dr Muck be given the alternative of taking his punishment under the President's proclamation or having recourse to the courts, which would mean the swearing out of warrants to be followed by arraignment and possible indictments by the Federal Grand Jury.

The Globe representative was told by Federal officials last night that when Dr Muck is lodged in the East Cambridge jail today he will be treated no better or no worse than any of the many Federal prisoners there.

After Dr Muck's arrest he was taken to Station 16, where he was confined for the night. The party entered the station with the utmost secrecy and when the officers who had arrested Dr Muck left the station they professed ignorance of what had taken place. When questioned by newspapermen they refused to give any information, one professing total ignorance of the fact that the Symphony director had been arrested. Nor would Lieut Mulligan at Station 16 have anything to say beyond that it was a Government case and he knew nothing else about it. The plain clothes men left the station together but soon separated and apparently went home.

Takes Arrest Coolly

When the officers called at the home of Dr Muck last night they found that he was away, and therefore were compelled to wait for him until about 10:45. The doctor expressed surprise when informed by the officer in uniform that he was wanted, but after asking a few questions of the policeman and Department of Justice agents Gifford, Weiss and Leavitt, he took his arrest stoically and said little while on the way to station 16.

Dr Muck's arrest threw the household at 50 Fenway into an uproar, although the bell has been ringing periodically for many months, when representatives of Department of Justice have called to ask the doctor questions regarding German propoganda. Dr Muck has been regarded as one of the most pronounced pro-Germans in this section. His arrest is considered one of the most important that has been made by the Government since the promulgation of the President's proclamation.

The arrest will be a great blow to the Symphony Orchestra. Coming on the eve of the first performance of Bach's St Matthew Passion to be given at Symphony Hall this afternoon and tonight, the arrest of Dr Muck, who was to have conducted the great musical production, will cause disappointment to thousands of lovers of music.

Doubtless great influence will be brought to bear to obtain Dr Muck's temporary release in order that he may fill this engagement, not to speak of the second and last performance to be given a week from today. The feeling among Federal officials last night was that Dr Muck will not be released for this special engagement.

CAREER OF DR MUCK ONE OF NOTABLE SUCCESSES

Dr Karl Muck was born Oct 22, 1859, either at Darmstadt or Wurzburg, Bavaria. When he came to Boston in 1906 his birthplace was given as Darmstadt, but since the recent agitation over his alleged hostile attitude toward including "The Star Spangled Banner" in the Boston Symphony programs, it has been said he was born in Wurzburg.

His father was a Government clerk, who intended that he should become a merchant. At 11 Dr Muck first appeared in public as a pianist, and later he was a violinist with a symphony orchestra. At 21 he was awarded the degree of doctor of philosophy by the University of Leipsic, after also studying at Heidelburg.

In 1880 he was chorusmaster in the Municipal Theatre at Zurich, and from that point he had continued successes in 1881 and 1882 as conductor at Salzburg, Austria; in 1882-1884 as conductor of opera at Brunn, Austria; 1884-1886 as conductor of opera at Graz, Austria; 1886-1892, conductor of German opera and philharmonic concerts at Prague, Bohemia; 1889, conductor of Angelo Neumann's opera company in Russia, and in 1891 as conductor of Neumann's opera company.

Friend of the Kaiser

In the meantime he had attracted the attention of Kaiser Wilhelm and a strong personal friendship developed between them. In 1892 he became principal conductor of the royal opera at Berlin, which post he held until 1906, when he was persuaded by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to come to Boston.

It was not until the Kaiser's permission had been granted that Dr Muck signed the contract. June 2, 1906, he was granted leave of absence for one year, beginning Oct 1, by the Kaiser, but this was later extended, so that he was not recalled until the Spring of 1908. May 11, on their departure for Berlin, Dr Muck and Mrs Muck were given a big sendoff by music lovers at Trinity-pl Station. For several days previously, Dr Muck had been feted by numerous organizations.

Oct 3, 1912, on the same ship which originally brought them to this country, with Manager Ellis, just six years before—the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse—Dr and Mrs Muck returned to the United States, and Dr Muck has since acted continuously as Boston Symphony leader.

Claims Swiss Citizenship

Since the episode of "The Star Spangled Banner," Charles A. Ellis has made the following statement about Dr Muck:

"For the information of subscribers to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and to correct the impression made by assertions concerning Dr Karl Muck widely circulated by publication in newspapers and in other ways, I beg to submit the following statements, which can be verified by anyone who cares to make inquiries of the proper authorities:

"Dr Muck is not a Prussian.

"He is not an enemy alien of the United States.

"He is not an official of the German Government.

"He is not a citizen of Germany.

"While he was born in Bavaria, he is a citizen of Switzerland, as was his father.

"Dr Muck is a man of high attainments, and his unusual gifts as a musical director are well known. During the more than seven years he has been in America he has respected our laws and has complied with them in letter and spirit."

Since 1893, when he made an effort to secure him for Boston Symphony, Maj Henry L. Higginson has been an admirer of the great artist, and the stanch friendship that developed with their better acquaintance was shown when Maj Higginson defended Dr Muck against the attacks which started back in the early days of last November, at Providence.

Upheld by Maj Higginson

When Dr Muck offered his resignation, Maj Higginson deferred action. At the opening of the fourth rehearsal in Symphony Hall, Nov 2, Maj Higginson appeared before the audience, and said: "I have asked Dr Muck and the orchestra to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.' They have never refused to play it. Dr Muck has placed his resignation in my hands. To lose him would be disastrous. The matter rests with me. It will have my earnest consideration."

That the orchestra did not play the National anthtem in Providence, although asked to do so, never has been questioned, and Dr Muck was quoted as saying, in a published interview, that it would not be given at the New York concerts the following week. Maj Higginson defended the orchestra, and argued that "The Star Spangled Banner" has no place in an art program such as given by the Symphony.

Then came the closing of the doors on the Boston Symphony in Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburg, Detroit and Springfield, although in New York on March 18, after a violent campaign of opposition, led by Mrs William Jay, and supported by a leading newspaper, which repeatedly referred to Dr Muck as "the Prussian direktor," and "the Kaiser's Own," the orchestra was allowed to play in Carnegie Hall and received an ovation.

While always maintaining that there is no feeling of unfriendliness toward United States on his part, it is not understood that Dr Muck has made any effort to conceal his loyalty to his native land.

Called Belgians Cruel

Dr Muck returned Oct 7, 1914, on the Ryndham of the Holland American Line from Rotterdam, after having been detained for a month in Berlin to perform clerical work in the War Office, and in New York he gave out an interview in which he said that reports of German atrocities in Belgium were untrue and that they had been circulated by the Belgians to enlist American sympathy and to cover up their own barbaric cruelty to wounded German soldiers.

"I know it to be a fact," said Dr Muck, "that evidence is on hand in the German offices to substantiate reports of the acts of cruelty on the part of Belgium, and I personally saw three wounded German officers whose eyes were gouged out by the Belgians. These officers are now in Berlin and their sworn statements together with the living evidence of their condition will be forthcoming when the hostilities end.

"Soldiers have returned to Germany with their hands cut off, others with their ears missing and still others bearing marks of cruelty which only the savages of Darkest Africa would be heartless enough to commit, and these were not received in battle, but at the hands of Belgians."

Wife Stands by Dr Muck

Throughout the controversy, Mrs Muck has remained in the background, but stands valiantly with her gifted husband to whom she has been sweetheart ever since their romantic first meeting in 1886 in Prague.

In 1891, when he made his first appearance in Berlin as a guest conductor at the Lessing as conductor, she was his great inspiration, and so deep was the impression he made upon his audience that he was offered the post of conductor of the Royal Opera. His contract with Prague having yet a year to run he was unable to accept until the following year.

In the early '90s Dr Muck was invited to conduct "Parsifal" at Beyreuth, where his success was such that he was called the "successor of Levi," the great Wagnerian conductor who directed "Parsifal" in 1882.

In later years Dr Muck has conducted at the royal operas at Covent Garden, and as guest has led symphony orchestras in London, Paris, St Petersburg, Moscow, Brussels and Madrid. In 1905 he shared with Felix Motti the honor of conducting philharmonic concerts in Vienna.

He made his farewell appearance in Berlin prior to resuming his work as conductor of Boston Symphony June 14, 1912, in a performance of "Tristan und Isolde," and was showered with honors.

Herald March 26 1918

54

DR. KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS ALIEN ENEMY

Symphony Conductor Is Taken as He Leaves Motor Car at His Home

LOCKED UP IN BACK BAY POLICE STATION

Federal Authorities Silent Regarding Possible Recent Evidence

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested at his home, 50 Fenway, at 11:30 o'clock last night, by policemen and agents of the department of justice. He was taken to the Back Bay police station and lodged there for the night, under the charge of Lt. Mulligan. The arrest was made at the instance of U. S. Dist. Atty. Boynton, Asst. U. S. Atty. Judd Dewey being directly in charge of the arrest.

Dr. Muck will be charged with being an alien enemy. He will be taken to the federal building this morning, and afterward probably be transferred to the East Cambridge jail. It was intimated last night he will remain at the East Cambridge jail for some time. Bail will not be permitted him.

Under Surveillance

Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for some time, probably since the incident of some months ago, when it was charged he refused to direct his orchestra in playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. It is considered significant that Dr. Muck's arrest occurs at a time when that incident, with its accompanying popular indignation, its defense of Dr. Muck on the part of Maj. Higginson and others, and other circumstances had begun to pass from the public mind. A member of Dist. Atty. Boynton's staff when asked last night if evidence had recently been found against Dr. Muck, said that he was not at liberty to say.

(Continued on Page Seven, Column 4.)

(Continued from Page One.)

"We don't arrest all enemy aliens," he said.

The arrest was decided upon late last evening. Policemen and department of justice agents kept vigil on the Fenway residence from about 8:30 until 11:30. Dr. Muck, they learned, was either at a play or at some social affair. Immediately upon the arrival of his limousine at his home a policeman stepped to his side, identified him, and told him he was under arrest.

Surrenders Without Protest

He immediately expressed his willingness to give himself up and walked with the officers from his home to the station.

At the station house he was put into a cell. Since no bail is obtainable in such cases, there he was forced to remain throughout the night, undergoing, no doubt, the same sensations as would any other man for the first time lodged in a cell.

The cell in which he was imprisoned in former days has held many a famous confidence man, robber and murderer. But never before has one of the greatest musicians in the world gone through the experience of spending a night in it.

The police officials in charge of the station granted him no more favors than they did any of the other prisoners. His bed was just as hard as that of the men in the adjoining cells on either side, and his tin drinking cup was of the same model as theirs.

Lt. Mulligan declined to make any statement concerning the arrest of the noted musician, other than to say that Dr. Muck was being held for the department of justice, and that he had been ordered to make no comment whatever on the case.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent, and appeared very much disturbed by the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charge against her husband.

Dr. Muck was to conduct tonight's Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," a production which has been in preparation all winter. An orchestra, a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of 80 have been taking part in the rehearsals.

DR. KARL MUCK

Symphony Orchestra Leader Who Is Under Arrest.

When a reported phoned the home of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the Symphony Orchestra, early this morning, a member of the household who answered said that since Maj. Higginson is suffering with a slight illness, it did not seem best to disturb him for the purpose of asking him to make a statement concerning Dr. Muck's arrest.

"Loaned" by the Kaiser

Dr. Karl Muck, "loaned" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1906, and again in 1912, has been the storm centre for months of a tempestuous controversy between a faction of the general public of the United States, which wanted him treated as a German spy and another faction which rallied vigorously to his support.

Providence Controversy

The fury of the controversy burst into its fullest glow late in October of last year when it was reported he refused to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert of the orchestra in Providence after patriotic organizations of the city had requested it.

The next day Thomas Hewick, Providence special agent of the department of justice, filed a report on the matter to Washington. He recommended that the orchestra be forbidden from giving concerts anywhere unless the national anthem were played as part of each program.

The reported action of Dr. Muck aroused the entire country. The orchestra was billed to appear a few days later in Baltimore. "Kill Muck" demanded a woman from a box of the Lyric Theatre, Baltimore, during a mass meeting held there Nov. 6.

Certain newspapers published editorials of violent condemnation. The Providence Journal, on Nov. 8, declared that "Dr. Karl Muck, now posing as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been since the beginning of the European war a most virulent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict."

The Providence paper charged that Dr. Muck, by his own testimony in a California court, had, in 1915, convicted himself as a German propagandist. He appeared in prosecution of a man who he claimed had obtained from him by fraud a $300 contribution to the "notorious" German weekly, the Fatherland.

Plays Anthems Here

Dr. Muck explained that "The Star Spangled Banner" was not a suitable musical composition for an aggregation of such artists as his musicians were. He disclaimed any lack of respect to the flag or the nation.

He tendered his resignation to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief sponsor of the orchestra.

UUpon the declarations by Providence citizens that Dr. Muck had declined their request to play the "Star Spangled Banner," Maj. Higginson made the following statement:

"Dr. Muck nevre knew that a request for the 'Star Spangled Banner' had been made until after the concert was over and he had returned to Boston. None of the orchestra members knew of the request until they reached Boston."

Maj. Higginson explained that the request had been made to Mr. Ellis, the orchestra manager, and himself, and he had ordered Mr. Ellis "to do nothing to change the program, which had been made up and rehearsed."

On the afternoon of Nov. 2, when the storm of protest over the Providence incident was at its height, the orchestra, with Dr. Muck leading, precipitated a tremendous patriotic demonstration here in Boston by playing the national anthem for the first time. Announcement was made that the anthem would be on the program at every future concert of the orchestra.

Though this appeased somewhat the sentiment against the conductor, the clamor of protest against him has continued. A few days ago Brooklyn was added to the cities in which the orchestra is barred.

Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, Oct. 22, 1859. He was one of the conductors of the Royal Opera House, Berlin, when the invitation of the Bos-

Much stress was laid upon the difficulty with which the Kaiser's consent to the conductor's absence from the Royal Opera House was obtained. The Kaiser finally agreed to allow Mr. Muck to come to Boston for one year.

Notwithstanding his German birth and his constant connection with the Kaiser's official staff, it has been asserted that Dr. Muck is a citizen of Switzerland. It is pointed out that the place of his birth was in Bavaria, and that he was born at a time when Bavaria was not only not a part of the German empire, but was hostile to Prussia. It is said that his father emigrated to Switzerland when Karl was 4 years old and that the music leader, of his own choice, became a Swiss citizen. It has been further asserted that he traveled as a Swiss citizen.

He was educated at the universities of Heidelberg and Leipzig. After being connected with the orchestras in various German cities, he became one of the conductors of the Royal Opera House, Berlin, in 1892. He remained in this connection until 1912, the severance coming after he arrived to head the Boston orchestra for the second time.

He has served as guest conductor at all the leading capitals of Europe.

DR. MUCK IS ARRESTED SPENDS NIGHT IN CELL

Distinguished Conductor of Sym Taken Under the Alien Enemy at His Home and Taken to Back

Officials Hint Other Charges Will Be Preferred

ARREST ORDERED BY DISTRICT ATTORNEY

Dr. Muck Was to Have Directed Concert Here Tonight

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested just before midnight last night by agents of the Department of Justice and Boston policemen, under the President's alien enemy proclamation, and taken to Back Bay police station, where he spent the night.

Federal officers were early in the evening sent to Dr. Muck's residence at 50 Fenway, but he was not at home. He returned shortly after 11 o'clock and was greatly surprised when told that he was under arrest, but he submitted quietly and accompanied the officers to the station house and was locked in a cell.

SERIOUS CHARGES HINTED AT

The arrest of Dr. Muck was ordered by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, after a series of consultations with Judd Dewey, assistant district attorney in charge of alien enemy matters for Massachusetts, and although the well-known orchestra leader was taken into custody as an alien enemy, under the President's proclamation as an alien enemy, it is believed that charges will be brought against him for violation of the federal criminal code.

Continued From First Page

Dr. Muck had been preparing all winter and was to conduct tonight Bach's "Passion, according to St. Matthew," with orchestra, chorus of 400, boy choir of 80 and soloist, a most stupendous production for which he had restored the original score at the expense of much labor.

Born in Bavaria

Dr. Muck, while a citizen of the Swiss republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that proclamation. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was last night apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

DR. KARL MUCK.

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night by the federal authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest last night, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the federal government.

Asked for Passports

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey remained in his office at the federal building for hours last night waiting to get word that the orchestra leader had been taken. That he had no suspicion that he was wanted was evident. It became known last evening that only yesterday his representative called at the federal building to obtain passports for him and his wife to go to Europe.

Mrs. Muck was informed of her husband's arrest by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who told her that Mr. Muck had been detained on a light charge and that he would probably be released within an hour. She had gone to Symphony Hall to attend the rehearsal.

Thinks Charge Will Be a Farce

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared to a Post reporter at her home, 50 Fenway. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent and appeared very much disturbed over the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charges against her husband.

DR. MUCK'S CAREER

Foremost Conductor Both in Orchestral and Opera World—20 Years Head of Berlin Royal Opera and Regular Bayreuth Festival Master

For months numerous complaints have been made to federal officials against the distinguished conductor, Dr. Karl Muck, but they were of such an intangible nature that the government authorities could take no action.

Last fall, Dr. Muck with the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which he has been for years the guiding genius, gave a concert at Providence, R. I. Prominent citizens of Providence at the time declared that a request had been submitted to the management of the orchestra that "The Star Spangled Banner" be played and that Dr. Muck declined to play it.

Never Knew of Request

Major Henry L. Higginson said that he and Mr. Ellis had received the request from the Providence opera patrons that the national anthem be played at the concert and that he ordered Mr. Ellis to do "nothing to change the programme, which had been made up and rehearsed."

"Dr. Muck," said Major Higginson, "never knew that a request for 'The Star Spangled Banner' had been made until after the concert was over and he had returned to Boston. None of the orchestra members knew of the request until they reached Boston."

Dr. Muck then offered his resignation as conductor of the orchestra. The resignation was not accepted and the famed conductor and the members of his orchestra were absolved from ever having refused to play the national anthem by Major Higginson in a brief address at Symphony Hall.

Played When Asked

It was on this occasion that Dr. Muck and the orchestra, at the request of Major Higginson, played "The Star Spangled Banner" while 2500 men and women composing the audience sang the words of the anthem. It was a remarkable scene and the denouement seemed to bear out Major Higginson's statement that "Dr. Muck and the members of the orchestra never refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

In November last, Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were barred from performing in Baltimore, because of threats of violence if they sought to perform.

A tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Dr. Muck swept through the country. Opera-going people everywhere took sides in the controversy.

Barred From Washington

The Department of Justice at Washington that had for months been watching the developments in the activities of Dr. Muck gave full notice of its position in December when it declared that it held him to be a German citizen and as such would arrest him the moment he attempted to enter the District of Columbia.

Evidences of Dr. Muck's citizenship had been sent to the Department of Justice. According to "Who's Who in America," for 1916-17. Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, was graduated from the Wurzburg Gymnasium and studied at the universities of Heidelberg and Leipzig.

The sketch, in giving his orchestral connections, states: "Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra (with leave of absence from Berlin), 1906-08; again conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1912." It also states that he was given the "title of 'Koniglicher Preusischer Generalmisikdirektor,'" by the Emperor of Germany.

Dr. Muck is known throughout Europe and America as the foremost orchestral conductor. His musical talent when still a child attracted the attention of Hans von Bulowe and Rubenstein. After studying composition with Kichter and piano with Reinecke at the Leipzig conservatory, he made his debut as a pianist in that city.

Official Bayreuth Conductor

He conducted orchestras at Salzburg, Brurr and Grax, and later passed six years at the opera in Prague. Then he went to Berlin, where he acted as visiting conductor at the Lessing Theatre. During this engagement he conducted the Niebelungun Ring five times in Petrograd with the Russian imperial orchestra.

The conductor was signally honored in 1892, when he was engaged by the Royal Opera House in Berlin. He has been a regular conductor of the musical festivals at Bayreuth. During his 20 years' engagement at the Berlin Royal Opera House, he led 1701 performances, which included 103 different operas. He came to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1906.

Herald March 26 1918

54

DR. KARL MUCK ARRESTED AS ALIEN ENEMY

Symphony Conductor Is Taken as He Leaves Motor Car at His Home

LOCKED UP IN BACK BAY POLICE STATION

Federal Authorities Silent Regarding Possible Recent Evidence

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested at his home, 50 Fenway, at 11:30 o'clock last night, by policemen and agents of the department of justice. He was taken to the Back Bay police station and lodged there for the night, under the charge of Lt. Mulligan. The arrest was made at the instance of U. S. Dist. Atty. Boynton, Asst. U. S. Atty. Judd Dewey being directly in charge of the arrest.

Dr. Muck will be charged with being an alien enemy. He will be taken to the federal building this morning, and afterward probably be transferred to the East Cambridge jail. It was intimated last night he will remain at the East Cambridge jail for some time. Bail will not be permitted him.

Under Surveillance

Dr. Muck has been under surveillance for some time, probably since the incident of some months ago, when it was charged he refused to direct his orchestra in playing "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a concert in Providence. It is considered significant that Dr. Muck's arrest occurs at a time when that incident, with its accompanying popular indignation, its defense of Dr. Muck on the part of Maj. Higginson and others, and other circumstances had begun to pass from the public mind. A member of Dist. Atty. Boynton's staff when asked last night if evidence had recently been found against Dr. Muck, said that he was not at liberty to say.

(Continued on Page Seven, Column 4.)

(Continued from Page One.)

"We don't arrest all enemy aliens," he said.

The arrest was decided upon late last evening. Policemen and department of justice agents kept vigil on the Fenway residence from about 8:30 until 11:30. Dr. Muck, they learned, was either at a play or at some social affair. Immediately upon the arrival of his limousine at his home a policeman stepped to his side, identified him, and told him he was under arrest.

Surrenders Without Protest

He immediately expressed his willingness to give himself up and walked with the officers from his home to the station.

At the station house he was put into a cell. Since no bail is obtainable in such cases, there he was forced to remain throughout the night, undergoing, no doubt, the same sensations as would any other man for the first time lodged in a cell.

The cell in which he was imprisoned in former days has held many a famous confidence man, robber and murderer. But never before has one of the greatest musicians in the world gone through the experience of spending a night in it.

The police officials in charge of the station granted him no more favors than they did any of the other prisoners. His bed was just as hard as that of the men in the adjoining cells on either side, and his tin drinking cup was of the same model as theirs.

Lt. Mulligan declined to make any statement concerning the arrest of the noted musician, other than to say that Dr. Muck was being held for the department of justice, and that he had been ordered to make no comment whatever on the case.

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared at her home. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be, and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent, and appeared very much disturbed by the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charge against her husband.

Dr. Muck was to conduct tonight's Bach's "Passion, According to St. Matthew," a production which has been in preparation all winter. An orchestra, a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of 80 have been taking part in the rehearsals.

DR. KARL MUCK

Symphony Orchestra Leader Who Is Under Arrest.

When a reported phoned the home of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, financial backer of the Symphony Orchestra, early this morning, a member of the household who answered said that since Maj. Higginson is suffering with a slight illness, it did not seem best to disturb him for the purpose of asking him to make a statement concerning Dr. Muck's arrest.

"Loaned" by the Kaiser

Dr. Karl Muck, "loaned" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the Kaiser in 1906, and again in 1912, has been the storm centre for months of a tempestuous controversy between a faction of the general public of the United States, which wanted him treated as a German spy and another faction which rallied vigorously to his support.

Providence Controversy

The fury of the controversy burst into its fullest glow late in October of last year when it was reported he refused to play the "Star Spangled Banner" at a concert of the orchestra in Providence after patriotic organizations of the city had requested it.

The next day Thomas Hewick, Providence special agent of the department of justice, filed a report on the matter to Washington. He recommended that the orchestra be forbidden from giving concerts anywhere unless the national anthem were played as part of each program.

The reported action of Dr. Muck aroused the entire country. The orchestra was billed to appear a few days later in Baltimore. "Kill Muck" demanded a woman from a box of the Lyric Theatre, Baltimore, during a mass meeting held there Nov. 6.

Certain newspapers published editorials of violent condemnation. The Providence Journal, on Nov. 8, declared that "Dr. Karl Muck, now posing as a martyred artist who has never been active in pro-German propaganda, has been since the beginning of the European war a most virulent and rabid supporter of Germany's cause, his attitude in this respect being more marked since the United States entered the conflict."

The Providence paper charged that Dr. Muck, by his own testimony in a California court, had, in 1915, convicted himself as a German propagandist. He appeared in prosecution of a man who he claimed had obtained from him by fraud a $300 contribution to the "notorious" German weekly, the Fatherland.

Plays Anthems Here

Dr. Muck explained that "The Star Spangled Banner" was not a suitable musical composition for an aggregation of such artists as his musicians were. He disclaimed any lack of respect to the flag or the nation.

He tendered his resignation to Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and chief sponsor of the orchestra.

UUpon the declarations by Providence citizens that Dr. Muck had declined their request to play the "Star Spangled Banner," Maj. Higginson made the following statement:

"Dr. Muck nevre knew that a request for the 'Star Spangled Banner' had been made until after the concert was over and he had returned to Boston. None of the orchestra members knew of the request until they reached Boston."

Maj. Higginson explained that the request had been made to Mr. Ellis, the orchestra manager, and himself, and he had ordered Mr. Ellis "to do nothing to change the program, which had been made up and rehearsed."

On the afternoon of Nov. 2, when the storm of protest over the Providence incident was at its height, the orchestra, with Dr. Muck leading, precipitated a tremendous patriotic demonstration here in Boston by playing the national anthem for the first time. Announcement was made that the anthem would be on the program at every future concert of the orchestra.

Though this appeased somewhat the sentiment against the conductor, the clamor of protest against him has continued. A few days ago Brooklyn was added to the cities in which the orchestra is barred.

Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, Oct. 22, 1859. He was one of the conductors of the Royal Opera House, Berlin, when the invitation of the Bo-

Much stress was laid upon the difficulty with which the Kaiser's consent to the conductor's absence from the Royal Opera House was obtained. The Kaiser finally agreed to allow Mr. Muck to come to Boston for one year.

Notwithstanding his German birth and his constant connection with the Kaiser's official staff, it has been asserted that Dr. Muck is a citizen of Switzerland. It is pointed out that the place of his birth was in Bavaria, and that he was born at a time when Bavaria was not only not a part of the German empire, but was hostile to Prussia. It is said that his father emigrated to Switzerland when Karl was 4 years old and that the music leader, of his own choice, became a Swiss citizen. It has been further asserted that he traveled as a Swiss citizen.

He was educated at the universities of Heidelberg and Leipzig. After being connected with the orchestras in various German cities, he became one of the conductors of the Royal Opera House, Berlin, in 1892. He remained in this connection until 1912, the severance coming after he arrived to head the Boston orchestra for the second time.

He has served as guest conductor at all the leading capitals of Europe.

DR. MUCK IS ARRESTED SPENDS NIGHT IN CELL

Distinguished Conductor of Symphony Orchestra Taken Under the Alien Enemy Act—Arrested at His Home and Taken to Back Bay Station

Officials Hint Other Charges Will Be Preferred

ARREST ORDERED BY DISTRICT ATTORNEY

Dr. Muck Was to Have Directed Concert Here Tonight

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested just before midnight last night by agents of the Department of Justice and Boston policemen, under the President's alien enemy proclamation, and taken to Back Bay police station, where he spent the night.

Federal officers were early in the evening sent to Dr. Muck's residence at 50 Fenway, but he was not at home. He returned shortly after 11 o'clock and was greatly surprised when told that he was under arrest, but he submitted quietly and accompanied the officers to the station house and was locked in a cell.

SERIOUS CHARGES HINTED AT

The arrest of Dr. Muck was ordered by United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton, after a series of consultations with Judd Dewey, assistant district attorney in charge of alien enemy matters for Massachusetts, and although the well-known orchestra leader was taken into custody as an alien enemy, under the President's proclamation as an alien enemy, it is believed that charges will be brought against him for violation of the federal criminal code.

Continued From First Page

Dr. Muck had been preparing all winter and was to conduct tonight Bach's "Passion, according to St. Matthew," with orchestra, chorus of 400, boy choir of 80 and soloist, a most stupendous production for which he had restored the original score at the expense of much labor.

Born in Bavaria

Dr. Muck, while a citizen of the Swiss republic, was born in Bavaria in 1859, before the foundation of the German Empire. And under the interpretation of the President's proclamation, any man born in Germany before the empire was established is amenable to the regulations under that proclamation. Hence it is under this proclamation that Dr. Muck was last night apprehended and jailed by the United States authorities.

DR. KARL MUCK.

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken into custody last night by the federal authorities.

Dr. Muck's father, federal agents have ascertained, removed to Switzerland in 1867 and there became naturalized. No warrant was issued for his arrest last night, for none was needed. He is simply held by the Boston police for the federal government.

Asked for Passports

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey remained in his office at the federal building for hours last night waiting to get word that the orchestra leader had been taken. That he had no suspicion that he was wanted was evident. It became known last evening that only yesterday his representative called at the federal building to obtain passports for him and his wife to go to Europe.

Mrs. Muck was informed of her husband's arrest by Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who told her that Mr. Muck had been detained on a light charge and that he would probably be released within an hour. She had gone to Symphony Hall to attend the rehearsal.

Thinks Charge Will Be a Farce

"My husband's arrest is preposterous," Mrs. Muck declared to a Post reporter at her home, 50 Fenway. "I have no knowledge of what the charge could be and I am sure it will prove to be a farce. I know he will be released right away, for Mr. Ellis told me so."

Mrs. Muck spoke with a marked German accent and appeared very much disturbed over the action by the authorities. She refused to believe that they could bring any charges against her husband.

DR. MUCK'S CAREER

Foremost Conductor Both in Orchestral and Opera World—20 Years Head of Berlin Royal Opera and Regular Bayreuth Festival Master

For months numerous complaints have been made to federal officials against the distinguished conductor, Dr.

resignation was not accepted and the famed conductor and the members of his orchestra were absolved from ever having refused to play the national anthem by Major Higginson in a brief address at Symphony Hall.

Played When Asked

It was on this occasion that Dr. Muck and the orchestra, at the request of Major Higginson, played "The Star Spangled Banner" while 2500 men and women composing the audience sang the words of the anthem. It was a remarkable scene and the denouement seemed to bear out Major Higginson's statement that "Dr. Muck and the members of the orchestra never refused to play 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

In November last, Dr. Muck and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were barred from performing in Baltimore, because of threats of violence if they sought to perform.

A tremendous wave of popular sentiment against Dr. Muck swept through the country. Opera-going people everywhere took sides in the controversy.

Barred From Washington

The Department of Justice at Washington that had for months been watching the developments in the activities of Dr. Muck gave full notice of its position in December when it declared that it held him to be a German citizen and as such would arrest him the moment he attempted to enter the District of Columbia.

Evidences of Dr. Muck's citizenship had been sent to the Department of Justice. According to "Who's Who in America," for 1916-17. Dr. Muck was born in Darmstadt, Germany, was graduated from the Wurzburg Gymnasium and studied at the universities of Heidelberg and Leipzig.

The sketch, in giving his orchestral connections, states: "Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra (with leave of absence from Berlin), 1906-08; again conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1912." It also states that he was given the "title of 'Koniglicher Preusischer Generalmisikdirektor,'" by the Emperor of Germany.

Dr. Muck is known throughout Europe and America as the foremost orchestral conductor. His musical talent when still a child attracted the attention of Hans von Bulowe and Rubenstein. After studying composition with Kichter and piano with Reinecke at the Leipzig conservatory, he made his debut as a pianist in that city.

Official Bayreuth Conductor

He conducted orchestras at Salzburg, Brurr and Grax, and later passed six years at the opera in Prague. Then he went to Berlin, where he acted as visiting conductor at the Lessing Theatre. During this engagement he conducted the Niebelungun Ring five times in Petrograd with the Russian imperial orchestra.

The conductor was signally honored in 1892, when he was engaged by the Royal Opera House in Berlin. He has been a regular conductor of the musical festivals at Bayreuth. During his 20 years' engagement at the Berlin Royal Opera House, he led 1701 performances, which included 103 different operas. He came to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1906.

LONDON, March 25.—In Haig, David Lloyd George, the men necessary to replace those er already on their way. All g urther reinforcements of men he battle. The premier's mess ation's thanks for its splendid s filled with pride as it watche y its brave troops to overwhel "Knowing their steadfastn

Monitor March 26, 1918

DR. KARL MUCK IS UNDER ARREST

Monitor 3/26

Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Taken by Agents of Department of Justice in Boston and Lodged in Jail

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose citizenship and sympathies have been the subject of controversy in various cities, was arrested Monday as an enemy alien by agents of the Department of Justice, and lodged in jail. He was informed that bail would not be permitted him.

The decision to place him under arrest followed the receipt of a request through his secretary for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck to go abroad.

For months Dr. Muck has been under surveillance by the Department of Justice, which had received reports that he was conducting propaganda through private channels. It was known that he was a personal friend of the Kaiser; that in 1914 he was detained a month in Berlin for clerical work in the War Office; and that he did not conceal his sympathy for Germany. Returning to the United States in October, 1914, from a trip to Europe, he said that reports of German atrocities in Belgium were untrue, and that the Belgians were cruel.

It is claimed that he is not a German citizen; that he was born in Bavaria in 1859, taken to Switzerland when a boy, and that he became a Swiss citizen.

It has been said also in print that Dr. Muck, by his own statement to the San Francisco courts, has admitted contributing money to aid German propaganda, and that he gave $300 to the German weekly, the Fatherland.

Dr. Muck expressed surprise when told that he was wanted, but quietly accompanied the agents to Station 16. After his clothing had been searched, in accordance with custom, and he had been booked, he was placed in a cell for the night.

This morning, accompanied by a representative of the management of the orchestra, he was taken to the federal building, and given into the custody of the United States Marshal. He was placed in the barred-off portion of the office known as the "cage," but shortly was taken out and permitted to sit in the detention room. It was expected that later he would be questioned by the United States Attorney, then transferred to the East Cambridge jail.

This statement was made by Judd Dewey, the assistant United States Attorney in charge of such cases: "Dr. Muck was born in Germany and being a native of Germany he comes under the head of being an alien enemy, though he later acquired citizenship in Switzerland. We had a parallel case only last week of a man who was born in Germany, who migrated to South Africa, and became a British subject. He was sent away precisely the same grounds as we are now holding Dr. Muck."

The charge at present against Dr. Muck is covered by the President's proclamation relative to the activities of alien enemies; but there is a report that he may be charged with violation of two sections of the federal code.

The arrest came on the eve of the presentation of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," today, which Dr. Muck was to have conducted. It has been in preparation all winter, with a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of 80 and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The publicity which Dr. Muck attracted, in addition to his fame as a musician, came as a result of an incident at Providence, R. I., last October. It was reported that he had refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his concert there, after patriotic organizations had asked that it be done. What really happened was that the request was made to C. A. Ellis, the manager of the orchestra, who was unwilling to change the program at that late hour. Dr. Muck himself did not know of it at the time. The publicity which followed, however, attracted attention to Dr. Muck's pro-German sympathies, and certain cities, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Detroit and Springfield, declined to permit him to appear there.

He was barred also from Washington, under the proclamation covering alien enemies. During the controversy, Dr. Muck was defended by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the orchestra. It was argued at the time in Dr. Muck's behalf, that "The Star-Spangled Banner" had no place in an art program such as is given by the Symphony Orchestra. It has, however, been played at the performances since.

to the United States, and Dr. Muck has since acted continuously as Boston Symphony leader.

Dr. Muck was born Oct. 22, 1859, either at Darmstadt or Wurzburg, Bavaria. When he came to Boston in 1906, his birthplace was given as Darmstadt, but since the recent agitation it has been said he was born in Wurzburg.

His father was a government clerk, who intended that he should become a merchant. At 11, Dr. Muck first appeared in public as a pianist, and later he was a violinist with a symphony orchestra. At 21, he was awarded the degree of doctor of philosophy by the University of Leipsic, after also studying at Heidelberg.

In 1880 he was chorusmaster in the Municipal Theater at Zurich, and from that point he had continued successes in 1881 and 1882 as conductor at Salzburg, Austria; in 1882-1884 as conductor of opera at Brunn, Austria; 1884-1886 as conductor of opera at Graz, Austria; 1886-1892, conductor of German opera and philharmonic concerts at Prague, Bohemia; 1889, conductor of Angelo Neumann's opera company in Russia, and in 1891 as conductor of Neumann's opera company.

He has conducted at the royal operas at Covent Garden, and as guest has led symphony orchestras in London, Paris, Petrograd, Moscow, Brussels and Madrid. In 1905 he shared with Felix Motti the honor of conducting philharmonic concerts in Vienna.

He made his farewell appearance in Berlin prior to resuming his work as conductor of Boston Symphony June 14, 1912, in a performance of "Tristan und Isolde," and was showered with honors.

Symphony Orchestra

Membership Made Up of Many Men of German Birth

BOSTON, Mass.—Symphony Orchestra is made up of about 100 players, many of whom are of German birth, and, as conductor, Dr. Muck has under his direction the following named men who comprise the organization:

Violins—A. Witek, concert-master, S. Noack, F. Mahn, E. Tak, W. Habenicht, B. Fiedler, O. Roth, J. Hoffmann, A. Ribarsch, W. Traupe, S. Spoor, R. Ringwall, K. Rissland, E. Schmidt, H. Goldstein, A. Baraniecki, H. Berger, H. Sülzen, J. Theodorowicz, A. Bak, H. Sauvlet, M. Grünberg, S. Goldstein, A. Fieldler, A. Gerardi, R. Kurth, C. Pinfield, R. Gunderson, J. Gewirtz, S. Rosen.

Violas—E. Ferir, F. Wittmann, H. Werner, P. Schwerley, A. Gietzen, W. Berlin, H. v. Veen, W. Kautzenbach, C. van Wynbergen, W. Blumenau.

Violoncellos—H. Warnke, J. Malkin, J. Keller, R. Nagel, C. Barth, L. Nast, M. Belinski, E. Folgmann, B. Steinke, J. Warnke.

Basses—M. Kunze, G. Gerhardt, K. Agnesy, A. Jaeger, T. Seydel, E. Huber, O. Ludwig, R. Schurig.

Flutes—A. Maquarre, A. Brooke, C. de Mailly; oboes, G. Longy, C. Lenom, H. Stanislaus.

Clarinets—A. Sand, P. Mimart, A. Vannini; bassoons, J. Mosbach, E. Mueller, B. Piller.

Piccolo—A. Battles; English horn, F. Mueller; bass clarinet, K. Stumpf; contra-bassoon, M. Fuhrmann.

Horns—G. Wendler, H. Lorbeer, F Hain, A. Resch, B. Jaenicke E. Miersch, M. Hess, E. Hübner.

Trumpets—G. Heim, J. Mann, G. Nappi, L. Kloepfel. Trombones—M. Alloo, S. Belgiorno, A. Mausebach, L. Kenfield.

Tuba—P. Mattersteig. Harps—A. Holy, T. Cella. Tympani—S. Neumann, F. Kandler. Percussion—F. Zahn, C. Gardner, H. Burkhardt.

Organ—J. P. Marshall. Librarian—L. J. Rogers.

Mr. Schmidt to Direct

Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" to Be Given as Planned

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass. — Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" is to be given this afternoon and evening by the Townsend chorus and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor of the orchestra, directing the music in place of Karl Muck. It was said at Symphony Hall today that the second performance of the Bach work, scheduled for the afternoon and evening of Tuesday, April 2, probably also will be given, with Mr. Schmidt acting as leader.

It is understood that the regular Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue through the season.

Record March 27, 1918

EXPECT NEW ARRESTS IN TANGLE OF MUCK CASE

Record 3/27

Result of Seizure of Papers

Musician Will Be Interned at Fort Oglethorpe During War

Department of Justice officials today await word from Washington before proceeding in the case of Dr. Karl Muck, who is now held at the East Cambridge jail.

Evidence gathered from correspondence and papers seized at the home of the orchestra director have been forwarded to Washington and it will depend upon action taken there how far the net in which Dr. Muck is involved will spread over certain other Bostonians now under surveillance. Other arrests here are contemplated.

Mrs. Muck, wife of the musician, visited the office of the U. S. Marshal today and obtained a pass to see her husband at the jail. He was brought from the cell, where he spent the night, to one of the reception rooms, and the two chatted animatedly for some time.

Contrary to expectation, Dr. Muck spent a comfortable night in the jail cell and awoke today from a refreshing sleep. His breakfast and noonday meal were taken in to him again today. He was not morose today, but appeared to jail officers to be in good spirits, in spite of his confinement.

(Continued on Page Four, Column Eight)

(Continued From Page One)

Wife Worried

Mrs. Muck was much concerned, upon her application for a pass to the jail, as to whether her husband had spent a restful night. No one will be permitted to see the musician without a pass from the marshal's office. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has obtained such a pass, in addition to Mrs. Muck.

It is expected that Dr. Muck will be taken to Fort Oglethorpe in Georgia for internment during the war, although this point will not be established until Asst. Dist. Atty. Judd Dewey, who is in charge of the case, has received word from Washington.

Wants Cigarettes

Perhaps the biggest blow in the series of surprises that overtook Dr. Muck yesterday was the mandate that cigarette smoking is banned at the East Cambridge jail. Dr. Muck protested against this and begged to be allowed to smoke cigarettes, saying that he had never smoked a pipe or cigar in his life, but without avail.

He will be permitted to have his meals brought in from outside sources, but even these will be subject to rigid scrutiny.

It was indicated at Washington that the citizenship of Dr. Muck has been the subject of discussion for some time in diplomatic circles there. It is generally understood in the capital that the Symphony conductor is a Prussian, in fact, although he is said to be the possessor of Swiss citizenship.

Muck's Swiss citizenship claim was held to be true, according to a statement made by Hans Sulzer, the Swiss Minister to the United States. The Minister, who is on a visit to New York, added that no representations in regard to his arrest in Boston had been made to the Swiss legation by Dr. Muck. He said that as far as he knew none had been sent to the legation in Washington.

As far as could be learned, no claim for Swiss intervention had been made by the arrested musical conductor.

Carl Kauffman, representing the Swiss Legation in Boston today, stated that steps "can and will be taken" looking to the release of Dr. Karl Muck on the grounds that he is a citizen of Switzerland. However, Mr. Kauffman qualified that statement by saying that some formal request must first come from Mrs. Muck or some one acting for Dr. Muck.

"Washington has officially announced that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject," said Mr. Kauffman, "and we will stand by that announcement."

ST. MATTHEW PASSION GIVEN IN ENTIRETY

Record 3/27

Bach Work Performed Under Most Trying Circumstances

By J. V. Clark

The Passion according to St. Matthew, by Johann Sebastian Bach, was performed at Symphony Hall yesterday. The first half was given in the afternoon, the second half in the evening. The performance will be repeated April 2. Taking part in the performance were a choir of 400 adults, a boy choir of 80 and the following soloists, Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Herbert Witherspoon, bass; John P. Marshall, organist, and Alfred De Voto, pianist. Mr. Ernst Schmidt conducted at four hours' notice. He conducted under most trying circumstances with authority. The performance was tremendously impressive.

Every man, woman and child who reads the newspapers knows that Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested shortly before the performance of this work, on which he had devoted hours of time, thought and labor. The presentation of the work he considered one of his great undertakings in America. He intended giving the work as nearly as possible in its original form. Of course, the work of his pen in transcribing much of the music and the hours of labor at rehearsals were not lost. How much of the effectiveness of the performance was lost by Dr. Muck's absence it is hard to say.

This note, which stood on the program, explains much of Dr. Muck's ideas in presenting the work:—

Bach is said to have composed five Passions. Two have been lost and the authenticity of the St. Luke Passion has been questioned, thus leaving the St. John Passion, composed in 1724, and the greater St. Matthew Passion, composed in 1729. The latter had its first performance in St. Thomas' Church, Leipsic, Good Friday, April 15, 1729. Bach afterward altered and extended this original version.

It has been Dr. Muck's desire to perform the St. Matthew Passion in as nearly its original form as modern conditions will permit. He has restored the original orchestra with only two changes; substituting the English horn for the obsolete oboe da caccia and the piano for the harpsichord. This orchestra consists of violins, violas, violoncellos, contrebasses, flutes, oboes, oboi d' amore, English horns, organ, and piano. He has rejected all the Frenz version except certain accompaniments for strings alone, restoring as far as practical the original orchestration of Bach. He has himself scored for the Bach orchestra many of the unaccompanied arias and choruses and has written out the parts for the organ and piano which in the original version were merely indicated as "figured bass."

The work was given in a semi-religious atmosphere. There was no applause during the work. The beautiful music was heard reverentially, but, of course, there was the concert air that is bound to come when a work is performed in a modern concert hall under modern conditions. Given, as it was, as a concert work, it is a great question if it would not have been advisable to have made certain cuts. The arias are distressingly long and redundant. In most works of this kind it is the recitative that bores and the arias that charm. Very often in the St. Matthew Passion the reverse is true. These dull spots were well worth sitting through for the glory of much of the work. The choral passages were particularly effective. The chorus, here as in the Beethoven and Mahler symphonies, was the real great star. The choral work was beyond reproach, something which cannot be said of the orchestral work, which was not perfect. At times certain instruments in solo passages were poorly played. What would Dr. Muck have done had he heard some of yesterday's playing? On the other hand there were some wonderful solo passages for orchestral instruments. In the long oboe obbligatto, which precedes the "I would beside my Jesus be watching," Mr. Longy played like the great virtuoso he is. There was tone and phrasing which was almost beyond reproach. There is a long passage for flute between the "Beside, my Jesu nought hath done" and "From love unbounded my Saviour dieth," which Mr. Maquarre played exquisitely.

The choral sing was marked throughout by beauty of tone, not only in big passages, but in the pianissimo passages. The choral, "Here Will I Stay Beside Thee," was superb. The final double chorus, "Around Thy Tomb Here Sit We Weeping," was immensely impressive. The last pages of the work, among the most beautiful in ecclesiastical music, were sung with fervor and devotion.

It was noticeable that all of the soloists sang rather better after the intermission than before. Are they night soloists, rather than day soloists? Did they violate the usual rules of singers and snatch a bite to eat or drink at the even hour?

Mr. Murphy was a greatly improved singer after dinner. Before the intermission his voice often had a thin, colorless quality in the upper registers. It later gained in warmth and color. As the narrator he had the difficult role—to him falls the telling of some uninteresting passages. He sang with fine art. Mr. Werrenrath sang the Saviour's music gloriously. There are many finer baritone voices than his, if voices be measured by range, sensuousness of tone and volume. He will never be an Amato, a Ruffo, but his voice has such an heroic ring, such a manly quality that it is a perfect delight. Mme. Alcock is fast gaining a public here. She has an opulent voice. She sings beautifully. She did wonderfully well with the "Are My Weeping and My Wailing Unavailing?"

Neither Mme. Hinkle nor Mr. Witherspoon created an entirely favorable impression. Mme. Hinkle sings with much vocal art, but her voice is, or was yesterday, so white, that it was almost colorless. Bach unfortunately gives the lest interesting solo passages in this entire Passion to the soprano. On the other hand the composer gives some of the finest pages in the work to the bass. Mr. Witherspoon varied. At times he was the confident, straightforward singer we have often admired. At other times he was not in the voice.

The performance was well-worth the great pains expended on it. It was in every way a credit to musical Boston. It was one of the performances that make one proud of Boston, and, expecially, the choral singers of the city.

Boston Globe March 27, 1918

DIST ATTY BOYNTON TO REPORT ON DR MUCK

Whether He Should Be Held as Dangerous Enemy

WASHINGTON, March 27—Whether Dr Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States attorney at Boston, where Dr Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice today, and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

Post March 27, 1918

THE MUCK ARREST

The arrest and detention of Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the enemy alien law, will arouse interest the country over; yet to many it will not be surprising. Needless to say, perhaps, it has nothing to do with the recent storm over the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a Providence concert, with which refusal Dr. Muck himself had no connection.

It must reasonably be assumed that the government has some convincing evidence as to Dr. Muck's private activities as a hostile to the United States, or it would not have taken the step it has. The federal authorities are not interning civilian enemy aliens simply because they are in that category. We shall doubtless learn of the government's discoveries in due time, although in the enemy alien cases it is not obliged to make public any evidence unless it chooses.

It seems hardly necessary to say that Dr. Muck's apprehension is no reflection on the loyalty of the men who have been sponsors for him. Per contra, the fact that he has been vouched for by them is no guaranty whatever of his innocence. He would not be likely to inform them of any underhanded work for Germany in which he might be engaged.

Monitor March 26, 1918

DR. KARL MUCK IS UNDER ARREST

Monitor 3/26

Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Taken by Agents of Department of Justice in Boston and Lodged in Jail

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass.—Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose citizenship and sympathies have been the subject of controversy in various cities, was arrested Monday as an enemy alien by agents of the Department of Justice, and lodged in jail. He was informed that bail would not be permitted him.

The decision to place him under arrest followed the receipt of a request through his secretary for blank applications for passports for Dr. and Mrs. Muck to go abroad.

For months Dr. Muck has been under surveillance by the Department of Justice, which had received reports that he was conducting propaganda through private channels. It was known that he was a personal friend of the Kaiser; that in 1914 he was detained a month in Berlin for clerical work in the War Office; and that he did not conceal his sympathy for Germany. Returning to the United States in October, 1914, from a trip to Europe, he said that reports of German atrocities in Belgium were untrue, and that the Belgians were cruel.

It is claimed that he is not a German citizen; that he was born in Bavaria in 1859, taken to Switzerland when a boy, and that he became a Swiss citizen.

It has been said also in print that Dr. Muck, by his own statement to the San Francisco courts, has admitted contributing money to aid German propaganda, and that he gave $300 to the German weekly, the Fatherland.

Dr. Muck expressed surprise when told that he was wanted, but quietly accompanied the agents to Station 16. After his clothing had been searched, in accordance with custom, and he had been booked, he was placed in a cell for the night.

This morning, accompanied by a representative of the management of the orchestra, he was taken to the federal building, and given into the custody of the United States Marshal. He was placed in the barred-off portion of the office known as the "cage," but shortly was taken out and permitted to sit in the detention room. It was expected that later he would be questioned by the United States Attorney, then transferred to the East Cambridge jail.

This statement was made by Judd Dewey, the assistant United States Attorney in charge of such cases: "Dr. Muck was born in Germany and being a native of Germany he comes under the head of being an alien enemy, though he later acquired citizenship in Switzerland. We had a parallel case only last week of a man who was born in Germany, who migrated to South Africa, and became a British subject. He was sent away on precisely the same grounds as we are now holding Dr. Muck."

The charge at present against Dr. Muck is covered by the President's proclamation relative to the activities of alien enemies; but there is a report that he may be charged with violation of two sections of the federal code.

The arrest came on the eve of the presentation of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," today, which Dr. Muck was to have conducted. It has been in preparation all winter, with a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of 80 and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The publicity which Dr. Muck attracted, in addition to his fame as a musician, came as a result of an incident at Providence, R. I., last October. It was reported that he had refused to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at his concert there, after patriotic organizations had asked that it be done. What really happened was that the request was made to C. A. Ellis, the manager of the orchestra, who was unwilling to change the program at that late hour. Dr. Muck himself did not know of it at the time. The publicity which followed, however, attracted attention to Dr. Muck's pro-German sympathies, and certain cities, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Detroit and Springfield, declined to permit him to appear there.

He was barred also from Washington, under the proclamation covering alien enemies. During the controversy, Dr. Muck was defended by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder and supporter of the orchestra. It was argued at the time in Dr. Muck's behalf, that "The Star-Spangled Banner" had no place in an art program such as is given by the Symphony Orchestra. It has, however, been played at the performances since.

to the United States, and Dr. Muck has since acted continuously as Boston Symphony leader.

Dr. Muck was born Oct. 22, 1859, either at Darmstadt or Wurzburg, Bavaria. When he came to Boston in 1906, his birthplace was given as Darmstadt, but since the recent agitation it has been said he was born in Wurzburg.

His father was a government clerk, who intended that he should become a merchant. At 11, Dr. Muck first appeared in public as a pianist, and later he was a violinist with a symphony orchestra. At 21, he was awarded the degree of doctor of philosophy by the University of Leipsic, after also studying at Heidelberg.

In 1880 he was chorusmaster in the Municipal Theater at Zurich, and from that point he had continued successes in 1881 and 1882 as conductor at Salzburg, Austria; in 1882-1884 as conductor of opera at Brunn, Austria; 1884-1886 as conductor of opera at Graz, Austria; 1886-1892, conductor of German opera and philharmonic concerts at Prague, Bohemia; 1889, conductor of Angelo Neumann's opera company in Russia, and in 1891 as conductor of Neumann's opera company.

He has conducted at the royal operas at Covent Garden, and as guest has led symphony orchestras in London, Paris, Petrograd, Moscow, Brussels and Madrid. In 1905 he shared with Felix Motti the honor of conducting philharmonic concerts in Vienna.

He made his farewell appearance in Berlin prior to resuming his work as conductor of Boston Symphony June 14, 1912, in a performance of "Tristan und Isolde," and was showered with honors.

Symphony Orchestra

Membership Made Up of Many Men of German Birth

BOSTON, Mass.—Symphony Orchestra is made up of about 100 players, many of whom are of German birth, and, as conductor, Dr. Muck has under his direction the following named men who comprise the organization:

Violins—A. Witek, concert-master, S. Noack, F. Mahn, E. Tak, W. Habenicht, B. Fiedler, O. Roth, J. Hoffmann, A. Ribarsch, W. Traupe, S. Spoor, R. Ringwall, K. Rissland, E. Schmidt, H. Goldstein, A. Baraniecki, H. Berger, H. Sülzen, J. Theodorowicz, A. Bak, H. Sauvlet, M. Grünberg, S. Goldstein, A. Fieldler, A. Gerardi, R. Kurth, C. Pinfield, R. Gunderson, J. Gewirtz, S. Rosen.

Violas—E. Ferir, F. Wittmann, H. Werner, P. Schwerley, A. Gietzen, W. Berlin, H. v. Veen, W. Kautzenbach, C. van Wynbergen, W. Blumenau.

Violoncellos—H. Warnke, J. Malkin, J. Keller, R. Nagel, C. Barth, L. Nast, M. Belinski, E. Folgmann, B. Steinke, J. Warnke.

Basses—M. Kunze, G. Gerhardt, K. Agnesy, A. Jaeger, T. Seydel, E. Huber, O. Ludwig, R. Schurig.

Flutes—A. Maquarre, A. Brooke, C. de Mailly; oboes, G. Longy, C. Lenom, H. Stanislaus.

Clarinets—A. Sand, P. Mimart, A. Vannini; bassoons, J. Mosbach, E. Mueller, B. Piller.

Piccolo—A. Battles; English horn, F. Mueller; bass clarinet, K. Stumpf; contra-bassoon, M. Fuhrmann.

Horns—G. Wendler, H. Lorbeer, F Hain, A. Resch, B. Jaenicke E. Miersch, M. Hess, E. Hübner.

Trumpets—G. Heim, J. Mann, G. Nappi, L. Kloepfel. Trombones—M. Alloo, S. Belgiorno, A. Mausebach, L. Kenfield.

Tuba—P. Mattersteig. Harps—A. Holy, T. Cella. Tympani—S. Neumann, F. Kandler. Percussion—F. Zahn, C. Gardner, H. Burkhardt.

Organ—J. P. Marshall. Librarian—L. J. Rogers.

Mr. Schmidt to Direct

Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" to Be Given as Planned

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass. — Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" is to be given this afternoon and evening by the Townsend chorus and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor of the orchestra, directing the music in place of Karl Muck. It was said at Symphony Hall today that the second performance of the Bach work, scheduled for the afternoon and evening of Tuesday, April 2, probably also will be given, with Mr. Schmidt acting as leader.

It is understood that the regular Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue through the season.

Record March 27, 1918

EXPECT NEW ARRESTS IN TANGLE OF MUCK CASE

Record 3/27

Result of Seizure of Papers

Musician Will Be Interned at Fort Oglethorpe During War

Department of Justice officials today await word from Washington before proceeding in the case of Dr. Karl Muck, who is now held at the East Cambridge jail.

Evidence gathered from correspondence and papers seized at the home of the orchestra director have been forwarded to Washington and it will depend upon action taken there how far the net in which Dr. Muck is involved will spread over certain other Bostonians now under surveillance. Other arrests here are contemplated.

Mrs. Muck, wife of the musician, visited the office of the U. S. Marshal today and obtained a pass to see her husband at the jail. He was brought from the cell, where he spent the night, to one of the reception rooms, and the two chatted animatedly for some time.

Contrary to expectation, Dr. Muck spent a comfortable night in the jail cell and awoke today from a refreshing sleep. His breakfast and noonday meal were taken in to him again today. He was not morose today, but appeared to jail officers to be in good spirits, in spite of his confinement.

(Continued on Page Four, Column Eight)

(Continued From Page One)

Wife Worried

Mrs. Muck was much concerned, upon her application for a pass to the jail, as to whether her husband had spent a restful night. No one will be permitted to see the musician without a pass from the marshal's office. Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has obtained such a pass, in addition to Mrs. Muck.

It is expected that Dr. Muck will be taken to Fort Oglethorpe in Georgia for internment during the war, although this point will not be established until Asst. Dist. Atty. Judd Dewey, who is in charge of the case, has received word from Washington.

Wants Cigarettes

Perhaps the biggest blow in the series of surprises that overtook Dr. Muck yesterday was the mandate that cigarette smoking is banned at the East Cambridge jail. Dr. Muck protested against this and begged to be allowed to smoke cigarettes, saying that he had never smoked a pipe or cigar in his life, but without avail.

He will be permitted to have his meals brought in from outside sources, but even these will be subject to rigid scrutiny.

It was indicated at Washington that the citizenship of Dr. Muck has been the subject of discussion for some time in diplomatic circles there. It is generally understood in the capital that the Symphony conductor is a Prussian, in fact, although he is said to be the possessor of Swiss citizenship.

Muck's Swiss citizenship claim was held to be true, according to a statement made by Hans Sulzer, the Swiss Minister to the United States. The Minister, who is on a visit to New York, added that no representations in regard to his arrest in Boston had been made to the Swiss legation by Dr. Muck. He said that as far as he knew none had been sent to the legation in Washington.

As far as could be learned, no claim for Swiss intervention had been made by the arrested musical conductor.

Carl Kauffman, representing the Swiss Legation in Boston today, stated that steps "can and will be taken" looking to the release of Dr. Karl Muck on the grounds that he is a citizen of Switzerland. However, Mr. Kauffman qualified that statement by saying that some formal request must first come from Mrs. Muck or some one acting for Dr. Muck.

"Washington has officially announced that Dr. Muck is a Swiss subject," said Mr. Kauffman, "and we will stand by that announcement."

ST. MATTHEW PASSION GIVEN IN ENTIRETY

Record 3/27

Bach Work Performed Under Most Trying Circumstances

By J. V. Clark

The Passion according to St. Matthew, by Johann Sebastian Bach, was performed at Symphony Hall yesterday. The first half was given in the afternoon, the second half in the evening. The performance will be repeated April 2. Taking part in the performance were a choir of 400 adults, a boy choir of 80 and the following soloists, Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Herbert Witherspoon, bass; John P. Marshall, organist, and Alfred De Voto, pianist. Mr. Ernst Schmidt conducted at four hours' notice. He conducted under most trying circumstances with authority. The performance was tremendously impressive.

Every man, woman and child who reads the newspapers knows that Dr. Karl Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was arrested shortly before the performance of this work, on which he had devoted hours of time, thought and labor. The presentation of the work he considered one of his great undertakings in America. He intended giving the work as nearly as possible in its original form. Of course, the work of his pen in transcribing much of the music and the hours of labor at rehearsals were not lost. How much of the effectiveness of the performance was lost by Dr. Muck's absence it is hard to say.

This note, which stood on the program, explains much of Dr. Muck's ideas in presenting the work:—

Bach is said to have composed five Passions. Two have been lost and the authenticity of the St. Luke Passion has been questioned, thus leaving the St. John Passion, composed in 1724, and the greater St. Matthew Passion, composed in 1729. The latter had its first performance in St. Thomas' Church, Leipsic, Good Friday, April 15, 1729. Bach afterward altered and extended this original version.

It has been Dr. Muck's desire to perform the St. Matthew Passion in as nearly its original form as modern conditions will permit. He has restored the original orchestra with only two changes; substituting the English horn for the obsolete oboe da caccia and the piano for the harpsichord. This orchestra consists of violins, violas, violoncellos, contrebasses, flutes, oboes, oboi d' amore, English horns, organ, and piano. He has rejected all the Frenz version except certain accompaniments for strings alone, restoring as far as practical the original orchestration of Bach. He has himself scored for the Bach orchestra many of the unaccompanied arias and choruses and has written out the parts for the organ and piano which in the original version were merely indicated as "figured bass."

The work was given in a semi-religious atmosphere. There was no applause during the work. The beautiful music was heard reverentially, but, of course, there was the concert air that is bound to come when a work is performed in a modern concert hall under modern conditions. Given, as it was, as a concert work, it is a great question if it would not have been advisable to have made certain cuts. The arias are distressingly long and redundant. In most works of this kind it is the recitative that bores and the arias that charm. Very often in the St. Matthew Passion the reverse is true. These dull spots were well worth sitting through for the glory of much of the work. The choral passages were particularly effective. The chorus, here as in the Beethoven and Mahler symphonies, was the real great star. The choral work was beyond reproach, something which cannot be said of the orchestral work, which was not perfect. At times certain instruments in solo passages were poorly played. What would Dr. Muck have done had he heard some of yesterday's playing? On the other hand there were some wonderful solo passages for orchestral instruments. In the long oboe obbligatto, which precedes the "I would beside my Jesus be watching," Mr. Longy played like the great virtuoso he is. There was tone and phrasing which was almost beyond reproach. There is a long passage for flute between the "Beside, my Jesu nought hath done" and "From love unbounded my Saviour dieth," which Mr. Maquarre played exquisitely.

The choral sing was marked throughout by beauty of tone, not only in big passages, but in the pianissimo passages. The choral, "Here Will I Stay Beside Thee," was superb. The final double chorus, "Around Thy Tomb Here Sit We Weeping," was immensely impressive. The last pages of the work, among the most beautiful in ecclesiastical music, were sung with fervor and devotion.

It was noticeable that all of the soloists sang rather better after the intermission than before. Are they night soloists, rather than day soloists? Did they violate the usual rules of singers and snatch a bite to eat or drink at the even hour?

Mr. Murphy was a greatly improved singer after dinner. Before the intermission his voice often had a thin, colorless quality in the upper registers. It later gained in warmth and color. As the narrator he had the difficult role—to him falls the telling of some uninteresting passages. He sang with fine art. Mr. Werrenrath sang the Saviour's music gloriously. There are many finer baritone voices than his, if voices be measured by range, sensuousness of tone and volume. He will never be an Amato, a Ruffo, but his voice has such an heroic ring, such a manly quality that it is a perfect delight. Mme. Alcock is fast gaining a public here. She has an opulent voice. She sings beautifully. She did wonderfully well with the "Are My Weeping and My Wailing Unavailing?"

Neither Mme. Hinkle nor Mr. Witherspoon created an entirely favorable impression. Mme. Hinkle sings with much vocal art, but her voice is, or was yesterday, so white, that it was almost colorless. Bach unfortunately gives the lest interesting solo passages in this entire Passion to the soprano. On the other hand the composer gives some of the finest pages in the work to the bass. Mr. Witherspoon varied. At times he was the confident, straightforward singer we have often admired. At other times he was not in the voice.

The performance was well-worth the great pains expended on it. It was in every way a credit to musical Boston. It was one of the performances that make one proud of Boston, and, expecially, the choral singers of the city.

Boston Globe March 27, 1918

DIST ATTY BOYNTON TO REPORT ON DR MUCK

Whether He Should Be Held as Dangerous Enemy

WASHINGTON, March 27—Whether Dr Karl Muck shall be interned as a dangerous enemy alien will be decided by Department of Justice officials after a report is received from the United States attorney at Boston, where Dr Muck is now under arrest.

Only a preliminary report from Government investigators was received by the Department of Justice today, and all comment on the case was withheld pending the Federal attorney's statement.

Post March 27, 1918

THE MUCK ARREST

The arrest and detention of Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the enemy alien law, will arouse interest the country over; yet to many it will not be surprising. Needless to say, perhaps, it has nothing to do with the recent storm over the failure of the orchestra to play "The Star Spangled Banner" at a Providence concert, with which refusal Dr. Muck himself had no connection.

It must reasonably be assumed that the government has some convincing evidence as to Dr. Muck's private activities as a hostile to the United States, or it would not have taken the step it has. The federal authorities are not interning civilian enemy aliens simply because they are in that category. We shall doubtless learn of the government's discoveries in due time, although in the enemy alien cases it is not obliged to make public any evidence unless it chooses.

It seems hardly necessary to say that Dr. Muck's apprehension is no reflection on the loyalty of the men who have been sponsors for him. Per contra, the fact that he has been vouched for by them is no guaranty whatever of his innocence. He would not be likely to inform them of any underhanded work for Germany in which he might be engaged.

Post American March 27, 1918

Post March 27, 1918

56

INTERNMENT AT OGLETHORPE FOR MUCK

American 3/27

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in custody as an alien enemy, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., for the duration of the war, it has been definitely announced.

Taking on a national interest, the arrest of the noted conductor promises to see newer developments in the next few days.

It was intimated that in connection with Dr. Muck's arrest another man will, in all probability, be brought before the Department of Justice officials. The arrest of this man, whose name has not been revealed, is to be expected soon, it is said.

Many visitors and friends were in evidence at the home of Dr. Muck at No. 50 Fenway all day. They brought kind words of consolation to his wife, who was confined to her room the greater part of the day.

CLAIMS SWISS CITIZENSHIP.

They informed Assistant District-Attorney Dewey that they were true Americans and in asking for the temporary release of the musical conductor, were not trying to obstruct the progress of the government's actions. Among those who called on Mr. Dewey was Major Henry L. Higginson's secretary, who made no attempt to communicate with Dr. Muck.

The disappointment at the failure of the government officials to permit Dr. Muck's rendering of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," at the Symphony Hall was particularly keen among music lovers, inasmuch as the production has been in preparation all Winter. A day before the arrest Dr. Muck had been busy rehearsing the orchestra, which was to have performed with a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of eighty.

It was indicated at Washington that the citizenship of Dr. Muck has been the subject of discussion for some time in diplomatic circles there. It is generally understood in the capital that the Symphony conductor is a

Continued on Page 3, Column 6.

MUCK SLATED FOR GEORGIA FORT

American 3/27

Musician Stoical in Spite of Arrest—Important Developments Expected

Continued from First Page.

Prussian, in fact, although he is said to be the possessor of Swiss citizenship.

Muck's Swiss citizenship claim was held to be true, according to a statement made by Hans Sulzer, the Swiss Minister to the United States. The Minister, who is on a visit to New York, added that no representations in regard to his arrest in Boston had been made to the Swiss legation by Dr. Muck. He said that as far as he knew none had been sent to the legation in Washington.

According to a New York dispatch, the Swiss minister has made clear that unless Dr. Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss legation he would not interfere in the matter. He added that if he were asked to intervene he would proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

As far as could be learned, no claim for Swiss intervention had been made by the arrested musical conductor.

When Dr. Muck was six to eight years old, his father became a resident at the canton of Zug, and there obtained his citizenship a member of the Swiss diplomatic corps revealed. He obtained his new citizenship with a view of gaining protection for his business and to avoid having his son Karl being taken into the Prussian army.

The Swiss naturalization laws are very lenient, the diplomat said, making it possible for anyone to obtain naturalization papers without being obliged to exercise the preliminary duties of citizenship.

At the same time that intimations of the arrest of another person by the Department of Justice, in connection with the arrest of Dr. Muck, were made, it was learned that a careful search of the musician's home and office had been conducted by government officials. The officials did not make any statement.

At the Federal Building Dr. Muck was subjected to a severe cross-examination following his arrest at his home. He was committed in the East Cambridge jail as an alien enemy. He was accompanied to the jail, together with three other prisoners, by Deputy Marshal Arthur Shinners.

WAFTED KISS IS MRS. MUCK'S FAREWELL

Symphony Leader Asks Only for Cigarettes as He Is Taken Away to Jail

By MARIE DUNBAR.

"Good-bye, dear."

Standing on tip toes, Mrs. Muck, wife of Dr. Karl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was taken to the East Cambridge jail, threw her husband a kiss as the elevator carried him to the ground floor of the Federal building.

"Good-bye," said Dr. Muck and as a wan smile spread over his face he threw back a kiss to his wife and then he was gone.

Mrs. Muck and a friend, who accompanied her to bid her husband farewell, then walked down the stairs of the Federal building, were joined in front of the building by C. J. Foley, Dr. Muck's secretary, and drove away in the Muck automobile.

Dr. Muck, together with three other prisoners, was taken to the East Cambridge jail in an automobile which awaited the party in front of the federal building.

Nothing but bright smiles and encouraging words were brought to Dr. Muck by his attractive young wife. She entered the deputy marshal's office, accompanied by her friend, and requested that she be allowed to see Dr. Muck.

BOTH IN SMILES.

A glad smile spread over Mrs. Muck's face as she clasped the hand of her husband. It was reflected on the face of the husband as he clasped her hand.

"How are you?" was Mrs. Muck's first anxious inquiry.

"Fine," responded her husband, who spoke in such low tones that even Mrs. Muck was forced to lean forward to catch the words.

Mrs. Muck carried two small tin boxes of cigarettes. She handed these to Marshal Mitchell, explaining that Dr. Muck could not smoke anything but cigarettes. Her request was granted.

During the day, Dr. Muck was never without a cigarette. He smoked one after the other in rapid succession.

WANTS EVERYTHING O. K.

"Will he have a room by himself? Can I bring him some food? Can I take him some reading matter? Will he have good clean bed clothing?" were some of the questions that Mrs. Muck put to Marshal Mitchell, as she asked solicitously of the comfort of her husband.

"You see, his stomach bothers him and I would like to take him some food so he will not be sick," explained Mrs. Muck. Marshal Mitchell explained that these matters would rest with the sheriff at the jail.

"And what do you need? Is there anything you want?" asked Mrs. Muck of her husband as she named over various articles.

"No, nothing, nothing," wearily said Dr. Muck. "Nothing but,"—and he rubbed his forehead.

NEEDED REST.

"Nothing but rest, I see," said Mrs. Muck as a sympathetic smile broke over her face. And the silent answer of Dr. Muck was an appreciative nod.

"How often can I see him?" asked Mrs. Muck of the marshal. "I would like to see him as often as I can."

Marshal Mitchell answered that this would also rest with the sheriff.

"You have been very kind," said Mrs. Muck to the marshal. "I thank you so much and I am glad to have met you people." She pointed to the Federal officials as she spoke.

Following a few more inquiries as to the welfare of her husband, a silence fell, and then Mrs. Muck reached out and grasped her husband's hand. The bright, reassuring smile which she had worn during the entire conversation did not fade from her face. Her voice did not falter once as she and her husband kissed each other good-by and she said, "Good-by, take good care of yourself. It will be all right."

MUCK REMAINS SILENT.

Dr. Muck's farewell was silent. His smile was a failure.

In company with the federal authorities, Dr. Muck then took the elevator while his wife and her friend walked down the stairs.

She followed him to the elevator as if unwilling to part with him. Throwing a kiss after him as the elevator left, she then turned and slowly walked away. The smile had slowly faded as she realized that he was gone.

"No, no, I cannot talk about it," exclaimed Mrs. Muck when approached for a statement, "you see I do not like the publicity. All day they have been calling me, but I do not want to talk about it now. It will be all right though," she concluded.

J. S. BACH'S "PASSION" PERFORMED

Post 3/27

Schmidt Conducts Great Chorus Through Choral Work

BY OLIN DOWNES

The performance of Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion," which was to have been conducted by Dr. Muck, leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, soloists and a chorus of some 400, took place yesterday afternoon and evening in Symphony Hall, under the leadership of Ernst Schmidt, assistant conductor of the orchestra.

The first part of the great choral work was given at 4 o'clock and came to an end at 5:45, and the second part commenced in the evening at 8.

SOLOISTS AND CHORUS

The soloists were Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, alto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Herbert Witherspoon, bass; Arthur Meyers, tenor; John W. Pierce, baritone. John P. Marshall was organist, Alfred de Voto, pianist. The chorus, which was swelled by the addition to its ranks of a boy choir of 80 voices from Trinity and Emmanuel churches and the Church of the Advent, had been prepared by Stephen Townsend, chorus-master. The audience packed the hall.

The performance was impressive. The St. Matthew Passion music is performed so well, too seldom for a writer who has heard the music on two other occasions, only to speak of it jauntily and with the calm confidence of finality.

It is unquestionably music of another period of a different spirit than this one.

Stupendously Dramatic

The profound religiousness and also the Protestant gloom of the period which followed the Thirty Years war in Thuringia is in the score. It is sorrowful and tragic in its character, as befits the subject, and seldom beatific in its faith.

At the climax of the first part it is stupendously dramatic. Even Handel in his most dramatic mood is not more thrilling than Bach in that mighty chorus which invokes the vengeance of the lightnings and the thunders on the betrayers of the Christ.

Even when the melodic line is unvocal, when it lies badly for the singers, or sounds like music for an instrument rather than the voice, it is noble and emotional, though not in the manner of a Puccini or a Leoncavallo! It cannot be denied that there are passages which become discursive in their length and tedious because of repetition. Yet the music and the performance as a whole made a lasting and profound impression.

Soloists Admirable

The soloists were admirably selected. To them, as well as to the chorus, all praise should be given. Dr. Muck had revised the instrumentation, with intent to restore the spirit and letter of Bach's time as much as possible. Mr. Schmidt conducted with a quiet sincerity and a careful attention, no doubt, to the wishes of the conductor who had prepared the performance, which brought his forces through the trial without disaster and usually with brilliant results.

For diction and tone quality as well, the performances of Messrs. Murphy and Werrenrath and also Miss Hinkle were remarkable. Mr. Witherspoon showed his musicianship.

The chorus excelled in the simplicity and sonority and fine tonal gradations with which they sang the chorals. The orchestra was rarely in character with the quality and style of the music. Only at the end of the performance was applause desired. When it came, it bore testimony to the enjoyment of the audience.

Post. Post March 27, 1918

MUCK IN JAIL INDEFINITELY

A Prisoner as an Alien Enemy—Chafes at Rule Forbidding Cigarettes—Hint Another Arrest

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and now a government prisoner as an alien enemy, was taken to the East Cambridge jail late yesterday afternoon for an indefinite stay.

He had spent six hours in the de-

Continued on Page 4—First Column

DR. MUCK IN JAIL FOR INDEFINITE TERM

Continued From First Page

tention room at the office of Marshal Mitchell in the Federal building, smoking endless numbers of high-grade cigarettes. During the latter part of the day he was interviewed by Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey.

Then, after a brief meeting with his wife, he was escorted to Cambridge by Deputy United States Marshals Shinners and Scully. He held himself well in hand, but when he reached the jail he was distressed by the announcement that his favorite "smokes" will be barred—for cigarettes are not allowed there. Sheriff Fairbairn told him that he was sorry, but the rules of the institution permit only pipe smoking.

HAS HAM AND EGGS

Despite this discouragement, he ate a hearty supper of ham and eggs and French fried potatoes, baked beans and cocoanut custard pie, which had been ordered by the sheriff from a caterer.

From mid-forenoon, when the orchestra leader stepped out of the elevator, escorted by two agents of the Department of Justice, who made the arrest, until late in the afternoon, many people, some of them women, walked to and fro in the corridors, hoping for a glimpse of the man internationally famous. A few obtained a look at Dr. Muck, but to most this was impossible, as he remained seated the chief part of the time on a settee well out of range of vision of the curiosity seekers outside.

Not Locked in Cage

It was not deemed necessary to keep the musician locked up in the cage, although when he first arrived the iron door clanked behind him. It was opened well within a quarter of an hour, however, and the prisoner seemed grateful for the change. Dr. Muck quickly after his arrival showed his fondness for cigarettes. F. J. Foley, the secretary of Charles A. Ellis, manager of the Symphony, was the earliest caller, and he brought with him a box of them.

The musician puffed continually, but kept himself well in hand. At times he paced the little room where one or two other prisoners were quartered, and then resumed his seat.

Talks With Manager Ellis

Assistant United States District Attorney Dewey gave orders that he was to see no one, but an exception was made in the case of Manager Ellis himself, who appeared on the scene within an hour to confer with Dr. Muck about the concerts scheduled in Symphony Hall for yesterday afternoon and last night, for the success of which Dr. Muck had labored hard.

Later Seth H. Gano, Major Henry L. Higginson's secretary, asked to see Mr. Dewey and wished to know if it would be possible for the government to allow Dr. Muck to be bailed and so enabled to conduct as he had planned. Mr. Gano was told that it did not appear to be possible.

Mrs. Gardner Leaves Marmalade

Mrs. John L. Gardner was also a caller at the federal building. But it was indicated that she came in quest of Mr. Ellis likewise to confer about the concerts which for a time they feared might have to be given up. Mrs. Gardner went up in an elevator on the Water street side and inquired of "Jimmy" Masterson, who presides at the throttle of one of the cars, where the "federal office" was. As it is "Jimmy's" business to know everything, he directed Mrs. Gardner to Marshal Mitchell's office. And though she did not converse with Dr. Muck, she waved her hand to him in the inner room, as she departed.

Observant newspapermen noticed as she went in, she carried what looked like a large jar of marmalade or something of the sort and it was also noticed that she did not carry it when she left.

Mrs. Muck Chats With Husband

Mrs. Muck saw her husband for a few moments just before he was leaving for the jail. She, in company with another woman, entered the marshal's office and stood in the outer office for a minute until the musician, with hat and coat on, came into the room.

Husband and wife greeted each other affectionately and they chatted together briefly. Mrs. Muck impressed those who saw her as very confident that their troubles would soon be over and that Dr. Muck would shortly be released from custody.

She was smiling much of the time she was in the marshal's office. She accompanied her husband out to the elevator on the third floor, as he was leaving with the marshals, and she threw him a kiss as the car descended. The two women went down the stairs, it was thought with the purpose of avoiding the photographers who were outside waiting to "snap" her husband as he emerged. But if this was their intention, they were not successful, for the camera man "caught" her as she was leaving the big gray building through the exit to Postoffice square.

Assistant District Attorney Dewey did not have any talk with Dr. Muck for several hours. A hearty dinner from a down-town hotel had been provided, as is done for all prisoners, and Mr. Dewey gave him plenty of time to eat in leisure before sending out word for a conference. And even then it did not last long, perhaps 20 minutes or half an hour. It is not believed that the government official went deeply into the case, but he did acquaint Dr. Muck fully with the fact that he is held as an alien enemy.

Some further aspects of the matter, it is thought, were touched upon, but the inference was given that Dr. Muck was told that he would have to go to jail "indefinitely." It is not Mr. Dewey's intention to have another conference with the prisoner for several days.

Anxious About Concert

During the trip out to Cambridge Dr. Muck appeared greatly disturbed over the fact that he was not able to appear at the concert. And in conversation with Deputy Marshal Shinners he recalled that the concert was "on" at that moment, and the thought seemed to sadden him. He referred to his absence from the concert again and said he "had rehearsed it for weeks and had looked forward to it."

At the jail Dr. Muck was introduced to Sheriff Fairbairn, and he was vastly disappointed when told that he would be unable to smoke cigarettes there, as it was against the rules.

"I have scarcely ever smoked a cigar in my life," he told the sheriff, and he intimated that a pipe was not less objectionable to him.

"I am sorry, but it's against the rules to smoke cigarettes here. Nothing but a pipe is permitted," she sheriff told him. His wife had brought him a large box of his favorite weed, which according to the jail regulations will now be useless.

No Orders From Washington

It became known yesterday that case against Dr. Muck is not h

Post March 27, 1918

DR. MUCK IS CITIZEN OF SWITZERLAND

NEW YORK, March 26.—Hans Sulzer, the Swiss minister to the United States, who is visiting New York today, told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr. Karl Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct.

The minister said that up to the present no representation had been made to him by Dr. Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and that, so far as he knew, none had been sent to the legation at Washington.

The minister added that unless Dr. Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss legation he would take no action in the matter, but that if he was asked to intervene he would proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

Advertiser March 27, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC GIVEN IN ENTIRETY

Ernst Schmidt Leads Choral Concert of Symphony Orchestra

GREAT ARRAY OF VOCAL SOLOISTS

Lambert Murphy, Merle Alcock and Florence Hinkle Win Praise

Bach's St. Matthew Passion Music.
The Work Given Entire.
Mr. Schmidt Directs.

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

"The best-laid plans o' men and mice gang aft agley!" The government just before the concert yesterday took away Conductor Karl Muck and shook the great choral concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra combined with Stephen Townsend's Chorus to its very foundations.

The Symphony Orchestra, however, has many resources, and Ernst Schmidt was suddenly called to direct the performance. The Symphony Choral Concert without Dr. Muck was not quite as bad as "Hamlet" without Hamlet, but much of the savor of the occasion was lost, even though Mr. Schmidt did remarkably well for an emergency call. After all, the careful preparations of Dr. Muck could not go entirely to waste, and his careful rehearsals bore good fruit.

Much of revision was necessary in such a work. Bach and Handel made only skeleton sketches of the orchestral parts of their choral compositions, and numerous are the editors who have tried their hands at "additional accompaniments" in these works. Last night the chief labor, the filling out and rearrangement of many parts of the score, was probably not appreciated by the audience, but the musician could recognize many orchestral improvements and note that Dr. Muck had labored conscientiously at a rather ungrateful task. We believe, however, that the clarinette work of the editors should be retained, even though Bach never used the instrument.

WORK GIVEN COMPLETE.

The work was given complete, divided into an afternoon and an evening concert. We are heterdox in this matter. We do not care for the Passion Music in its entirety. Bach was old-fashioned, long-winded, full of repetitions, archaic in the form of his vocal solos. He was neither so dramatic nor as vocal as Handel. Sometimes however, he flames forth as the greatest genius of them all, and the first and last numbers of this work will possibly never be excelled in sacred music. But between them there is very much that could be spared, much of wearisome monotony.

There was much "obbligato" display with special instruments in the accompaniments, often making a duet or trio of certain vocal numbers, and we may mention the flutes in the alto aria, "Grief and Pain," the unusual Oboe d'Amore in "Never Will My Heart Refuse Thee," the violin solo in "Oh, Pardon Me, My God," and in "Give Me Back My Dearest Master," the violoncello (for Viol di Gamba) in "Come Blessed Cross," the two violins in "At Eventide Cool Hour of Rest," with English horn taking the place of the obsolete Oboe di Caccia here and in "Look Where Jesus Beckoning Stands."

There was a great array of vocal soloists. We may here give the palm to Lambert Murphy, the tenor, for he had the most difficult and most ungrateful task of all, the interminable recitatives of the Evangelist. These can never interest any but the student-musician who follows their ingenious modulations with something akin to awe. They are tiresome to the average auditor and decidedly so to the singer both on account of their high pitch and their constant changes of tonality. The difficulties of the tenor part were bravely mastered, but only in "I'll watch with my dear Jesu," was there any hyrical opportunity.

The interminable recitations were skillfully accompanied on piano by M. Alfred De Voto. Mr. Reinald Werrenrath in the recitatives of the Savior was earnest and expressive, giving the phrases connected with the Passion with dramatic power and being especially pathetic in recitative. Witherspoon gave the bass numbers better than we can recall them in recent Boston performances.

FLORENCE HINKLE SOPRANO.

"Give Me Back My Dearest Master" and "At Eventide" were both commendably interpreted. Merle Alcock is winning a fine reputation in Boston for her pure intonation and reliability in difficult work. She was successful both in "Oh Pardon Me," and in "Grief and Pain," two of the best solos in the work.

Florence Hinkle was the soprano. We think that Bach all through the Passion Music favors the alto and bass with the best solos. The soprano numbers are comparatively weaker. Yet "Never Will My Heart Refuse Thee," with its oboe d'amore backing, and "From Love Unbound," with English horns replacing the obsolete oboi di Caccia, were both interesting. There was no applause at any of the solos, the whole occasion partaking of the nature of a religious service.

In spite of the amount of obbligato work on special instruments, one finds considerable sameness in the tone-color of the orchestral support. Although Bach presents wonderful counterpoint in some of the accompaniments ne was satisfied (so he declared) if he had an orchestra of twenty or twenty-four musicians. Only rarely does one find a really dramatic tone-color, as in the contra-basses at "Ye Lightnings, Ye Thunders." Even in the vocal parts there is lack of dramatic intensity (compensated for by much intellectuality) save in an occasional flash, as at the mob's cry of "Barabbas!" in answer to the question of Pontius Pilate.

But when one comes to the choral parts one cannot fail to become enthusiastic. If the whole Passion Music wer boiled down into a Choral service, although the consecutive narrative would disappear, the work would be much more inspiring to the modern auditor. The glory of the opening chorus, with its Soprano Ripieno (trebles) and its bold contrasts of flowing melody and interjected phrases, was an inspiration to every auditor. So too was the lofty serenity of "Around Thy Tomb."

DOUBLE CHORUSES SURE.

The employment of the congregation in the singing of "Oh Sacred Head Now Wounded," and its often recurrent melody, is another majestic touch. The melody of this is taken from a love-song by Hessler, and Bach used the tune because he knew that his parishioners in the St. Thomas Church would all be familiar with it. Yesterday the audience was not invited to join in the singing of this as in the days of Bach.

Some of the double choruses, and the "Turbae," the choruses of the mob, are by no means easy vocal work, and they were given with a surety, a precision of attack, a general ensemble, that calls for full recognition. Only at times the sopranos overpowered the male voices.

But probably the chief point in which the performance of yesterday afternoon and evening was beyond and above previous interpretations of this work which we have heard, was in the orchestral support. If there is lack of dramatic tone-color here, there is noble counterpoint almost everywhere, and if this is brought out clearly there is at least a sustained intellectual interest. This was done yesterday in spite of the handicap of the conductorial difficulty. The great work revealed many new beauties because of its symphonic treatment.

This and a finely trained chorus (for which many thanks to Mr. Townsend) were the glories of this occasion which not all the excess of recitative and the endless repetitions of the aria-form in the solos could quite obliterate. But Bach's Passion Music, according to St. Matthew, is a severe musical penance at its best. But a very large audience sat through its four long hours with most reverent attention.

Globe March 28, 1918

DR MUCK ATTEMPTS TO FIND CONSOLATION IN PIPE

Dr Karl Muck, who is confined in the East Cambridge Jail under the President's alien enemy proclamation, received a visit yesterday from his wife and his secretary, C. J. Foley. These are the only persons he was allowed to see. All visitors must have a pass from United States Marshal John J. Mitchell.

Dr Muck is beginning to feel the rigors of his confinement. He has been denied the privilege of smoking cigarettes, to which he is addicted. As a substitute for his favorite form of nicotine he is trying to accustom himself to pipe smoking.

Advertiser March 27, 1918

DR. MUCK TO BE INTERNED DURING WAR

Fate of Symphony Leader Settled by Washington Authorities

WILL BE SENT TO FORT OGLETHORPE

Another Arrest in Case Due at Early Date, Is Report

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been taken in custody as an alien enemy by the police and agents of the Department of Justice, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, for the duration of the war, it was definitely announced last night.

Taking on a national interest, the arrest of the noted conductor promises to see newer developments in the next few days.

It was intimated last night that in connection with Dr. Muck's arrest another man will, in all probability, be brought before the Department of Justice officials. The arrest of this man, whose name has not been revealed, is to be expected soon, it is said.

Many visitors and friends were in evidence at the home of Dr. Muck at No. 50 Fenway all day. They brought kind words of consolation to his wife, who was confined to her room the greater part of the day.

During the day eseveral persons visited United States Attorney Dewey, who is in charge of the case, with the request that the prisoner be permitted to conduct the concerts scheduled for yesterday afternoon and evening.

They informed Dewey that they were true Americans and in asking for the temporary release of the musical conductor, were not trying to obstruct the progress of the government's actions. Among those who called on Mr. Dewey was Major Henry L. Higginson's secretary, who made no attempt to communicate with Dr. Muck.

SWISS CITIZENSHIP ADMITTED.

The disappointment at the failure of the government officials to permit Dr. Muck's rendering of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and evning, was particularly keen among music lovers, inasmuch as the production has been in preparation all winter. A day before the arrest Dr. Muck had been busy rehearsing the orchestra, which was to have performed with a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of 80.

It was indicated from Washington that the citizenship of Dr. Muck has been the subject of discussion for some time in diplomatic circles there. It is generally understood in the capital that the symphony conductor is a Prussian, in fact, although he is said to be the possessor of Swiss citizenship.

Government officials were of the opinion that his claimed Swiss citizenship would not prevent him from being interned as a dangerous enemy. His internment, it was pointed out authoritatively, would come under the provisions of the President's proclamation directed against all citizens born in Germany.

The statement that the conductor would be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, and speculations on his citizenship status, were embodied in Washington dispatches reaching Boston late yesterday.

The definite intention of government agents to intern the musician was taken as the death blow to the claim that Dr. Muck would wage a fight for liberty on the ground that he is of Swiss citizenship.

Muck's Swiss citizenship claim was held to be true, acording to a statement made by Hans Sulzer, the Swiss minister to the United States, yesterday. The minister, who is on a visit in New York, added that no representation with regard to his arrest in Boston had been made to the Swiss legation by Dr. Muck. He said that as far as he knew none had been sent to the legation in Washington.

According to a New York dispatch, the Swiss minister has made clear that unless Dr. Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss legation he would not interfere in the matter. He added that if he were asked to intervene he would proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

MUCK MAKES NO CLAIM.

As far as could be learned last night, no claim for Swiss intervention had been made by the arrested musical conductor.

When Dr. Muck was six to eight years old, his father became a resident at the canton of Zug, and there obtained his citizenship, a member of the Swiss diplomatic corps revealed yesterday. He obtained his new citizenship with a view of gaining protection from his business and to avoid having his son Karl being taken into the Prussian army.

The Swiss naturalization laws are very lenient, the diplomat said, making it possible for any one to obtain naturalization papers without being obliged to exercise the preliminary duties of citizenship.

At the same time that intimations of the arrest of another person by the Department of Justice, in connection with the arrest of Dr. Muck, were made, it was learned that a careful search of the musician's home and office had been conducted by government officials late yesterday afternoon. The officials did not make any statement.

At the Federal Building Dr. Muck was subjected to a severe cross-examination following his arrest at his home. He was committed in the East Cambridge jail as an alien enemy. He was accompanied to the jail, together with three other prisoners, by Deputy Marshal Arthur Shinners.

It is expected that Dr. Muck's stay in jail would be of long duration and it is evidenced that his wife would be the only person to be allowed to see him there.

A touching scene took place at the Federal Building when the conductor's wife was called upon to bid farewell to her husband. Mrs. Muck held the hand of her husband for several minutes, showing no emotion during her few mintues' talk. She begged him not to be discouraged in his plight.

Following the arrest Attorney Dewey issued this statement:

"Dr. Muck was born in Germany, and being a native of Germany he comes under the head of being an alien enemy, even though he later acquired citizenship in Switzerland. We had a parallel case only last week of a man who was born in Germany who migrated to South Africa and became a British subject.

"He was sent away on precisely the same grounds as we are now holding Dr. Muck."

Globe 3/27/18

BACH "PASSION" LED BY ERNST SCHMIDT

Given in Entirety, in Two Parts, at 4 and 8

Hinkle, Alcock, Murphy, Werrenrath and Witherspoon the Soloists

Bach's "Passion" music according to St Matthew was performed in its entirety yesterday at Symphony Hall, the first time in that manner within 36 years. There were two sessions, one for each part, one beginning at 4, finishing at 5:45, the other beginning at 8 in the evening. Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed. The Symphony Chorus was larger than at the two choral concerts which preceded this, the third and last of the series. There was a choir of 80 boys from Trinity, Emmanuel and the Church of the Advent. The soloists consisted of Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Herbert Witherspoon, bass. Mr Myers and Mr Peirce assisted in small roles. John P. Marshall was organist and Alfred de Voto pianist.

Had Bach heard a performance of his Matthew "Passion" the year of his death, 21 years after he wrote it, would he have kept its present length? Would he have left the evangelist's narrative of burdensome tessitura so extended, or would he have included certain arias assigned to the bass, written upon texts, not Scriptural, but by Picander, his assisting librettist; arias curiously unworthy of the Bach of the "O, pardon me my God" for alto, and the recitative "Ah, Golgotha," or of the "Behold! Behold!" for tenor? It is to be questioned whether or not the devotional zeal to a composer expressed in the literal production of a work is always the most just homage. Episodes may break up the salient lines of development. Bach's architectural arioso and terse recitative make prolonged attention arduous for the general ear, while to the student there may be endless interest in the contrapuntal mastery, in the economy in material, the clearness of form, the directness of thought, and in the great moments, the amazingly modern expression, the stupendous dramatic force.

The admirer of the propelling, illuminating, vitalizing dramatic recitative of that modern master, Verdi, in his "Otelio" or his "Falstaff," may look with astonishment upon those pages wherein Bach's evangelist pictures the revolting earth, the riven rocks, the dismembered tomts recording the Crucifixion.

The opening antiphonal choruses wherein the Believers reply to the Daughters of Zion in the sharptly punctuating chords, "Whom?" "How?" in the flashing answer, "Barrabas," to the query for choice between the Savior and the criminal, in the feverishly individualized "Lord, is it I?" in the appearance of Arioso in the higher function of poetry, now supplanting and with orchestra the prose of recitative, as the setting to Jesus' words when he administers the sacrament in the chromatic organ pedal telling of the quaking earth. These are a few among many of the symbols of the interpretative sense, which comes to its fullest flower in the lyric drama, yet as used here ennoble and vivify what Bach intended as a devotional service for the church.

The figured part writing of these choruses demands far more of singers than the comparatively incidental choral finales of Mahler or even Beethoven. The choral part of the performance last night was one of fine tonal quality, of praiseworthy part singing, of good precision, and superbly dramatic effects in the madness of the mob's retorts; a performance which spoke loudly in praise for the preparatory rehearsals by Mr Townsend and for the final ones by Dr Muck. The chorales, none of them omitted, were sung with variety of expression. The unaccompanied No. 72, "When I, Too, Am Departing," was deeply impressive. Mr Schmidt showed courage, good taste and no little skill in saving the performance.

The music for the solo voices, demanding a limpidity, a repose and breadth of style, vexatious to many a singer of this day, in the main was treated in a sympathetic spirit, with large skill and true beauty. Mme Hinkle's lovely voice and fine art are well known here. By her haunting voice, her deeply emotional singing, Mme Alcock added to the complete success of her season's appearances. Mr Murphy triumphed over the hight of the trying recitatives, with dignity of style and a clear diction, and in the "Behold" distinguished himself. Mr Werrenrath was an inspired interpreter of the words of Jesus, surpassing past models of his own in vocal beauty and delivery. Mr Witherspoon made much in dramatic sense of the recitatives of Peter, Judas and Pilate. Both audiences were large. The performance will be repeated next Tuesday, afternoon and evening.

Advertiser March 27, 1918

BACH'S PASSION MUSIC GIVEN IN ENTIRETY

Ernst Schmidt Leads Choral Concert of Symphony Orchestra

GREAT ARRAY OF VOCAL SOLOISTS

Lambert Murphy, Merle Alcock and Florence Hinkle Win Praise

Bach's St. Matthew Passion Music.
The Work Given Entire.
Mr. Schmidt Directs.

By LOUIS C. ELSON.

"The best-laid plans o' men and mice gang aft agley!" The government just before the concert yesterday took away Conductor Karl Muck and shook the great choral concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra combined with Stephen Townsend's Chorus to its very foundations.

The Symphony Orchestra, however, has many resources, and Ernst Schmidt was suddenly called to direct the performance. The Symphony Choral Concert without Dr. Muck was not quite as bad as "Hamlet" without Hamlet, but much of the savor of the occasion was lost, even though Mr. Schmidt did remarkably well for an emergency call. After all, the careful preparations of Dr. Muck could not go entirely to waste, and his careful rehearsals bore good fruit.

Much of revision was necessary in such a work. Bach and Handel made only skeleton sketches of the orchestral parts of their choral compositions, and numerous are the editors who have tried their hands at "additional accompaniments" in these works. Last night the chief labor, the filling out and rearrangement of many parts of the score, was probably not appreciated by the audience, but the musician could recognize many orchestral improvements and note that Dr. Muck had labored conscientiously at a rather ungrateful task. We believe, however, that the clarinette work of the editors should be retained, even though Bach never used the instrument.

WORK GIVEN COMPLETE.

The work was given complete, divided into an afternoon and an evening concert. We are heterdox in this matter. We do not care for the Passion Music in its entirety. Bach was old-fashioned, long-winded, full of repetitions, archaic in the form of his vocal solos. He was neither so dramatic nor as vocal as Handel. Sometimes however, he flames forth as the greatest genius of them all, and the first and last numbers of this work will possibly never be excelled in sacred music. But between them there is very much that could be spared, much of wearisome monotony.

There was much "obbligato" display with special instruments in the accompaniments, often making a duet or trio of certain vocal numbers, and we may mention the flutes in the alto aria, "Grief and Pain," the unusual Oboe d'Amore in "Never Will My Heart Refuse Thee," the violin solo in "Oh, Pardon Me, My God," and in "Give Me Back My Dearest Master," the violoncello (for Viol di Gamba) in "Come Blessed Cross," the two violins in "At Eventide Cool Hour of Rest," with English horn taking the place of the obsolete Oboe di Caccia here and in "Look Where Jesus Beckoning Stands."

There was a great array of vocal soloists. We may here give the palm to Lambert Murphy, the tenor, for he had the most difficult and most ungrateful task of all, the interminable recitatives of the Evangelist. These can never interest any but the student-musician who follows their ingenious modulations with something akin to awe. They are tiresome to the average auditor and decidedly so to the singer both on account of their high pitch and their constant changes of tonality. The difficulties of the tenor part were bravely mastered, but only in "I'll watch with my dear Jesu," was there any hyrical opportunity.

The interminable recitations were skillfully accompanied on piano by M. Alfred De Voto. Mr. Reinald Werrenrath in the recitatives of the Savior was earnest and expressive, giving the phrases connected with the Passion with dramatic power and being especially pathetic in recitative. Witherspoon gave the bass numbers better than we can recall them in recent Boston performances.

FLORENCE HINKLE SOPRANO.

"Give Me Back My Dearest Master" and "At Eventide" were both commendably interpreted. Merle Alcock is winning a fine reputation in Boston for her pure intonation and reliability in difficult work. She was successful both in "Oh Pardon Me," and in "Grief and Pain," two of the best solos in the work.

Florence Hinkle was the soprano. We think that Bach all through the Passion Music favors the alto and bass with the best solos. The soprano numbers are comparatively weaker. Yet "Never Will My Heart Refuse Thee," with its oboe d'amore backing, and "From Love Unbound," with English horns replacing the obsolete oboi di Caccia, were both interesting. There was no applause at any of the solos, the whole occasion partaking of the nature of a religious service.

In spite of the amount of obbligato work on special instruments, one finds considerable sameness in the tone-color of the orchestral support. Although Bach presents wonderful counterpoint in some of the accompaniments he was satisfied (so he declared) if he had an orchestra of twenty or twenty-four musicians. Only rarely does one find a really dramatic tone-color, as in the contra-basses at "Ye Lightnings, Ye Thunders." Even in the vocal parts there is lack of dramatic intensity (compensated for by much intellectuality) save in an occasional flash, as at the mob's cry of "Barabbas!" in answer to the question of Pontius Pilate.

But when one comes to the choral parts one cannot fail to become enthusiastic. If the whole Passion Music wer boiled down into a Choral service, although the consecutive narrative would disappear, the work would be much more inspiring to the modern auditor. The glory of the opening chorus, with its Soprano Ripieno (trebles) and its bold contrasts of flowing melody and interjected phrases, was an inspiration to every auditor. So too was the lofty serenity of "Around Thy Tomb."

DOUBLE CHORUSES SURE.

The employment of the congregation in the singing of "Oh Sacred Head Now Wounded," and its often recurrent melody, is another majestic touch. The melody of this is taken from a love-song by Hessler; and Bach used the tune because he knew that his parishioners in the St. Thomas Church would all be familiar with it. Yesterday the audience was not invited to join in the singing of this as in the days of Bach.

Some of the double choruses, and the "Turbae," the choruses of the mob, are by no means easy vocal work, and they were given with a surety, a precision of attack, a general ensemble, that calls for full recognition. Only at times the sopranos overpowered the male voices.

But probably the chief point in which the performance of yesterday afternoon and evening was beyond and above previous interpretations of this work which we have heard, was in the orchestral support. If there is lack of dramatic tone-color here, there is noble counterpoint almost everywhere, and if this is brought out clearly there is at least a sustained intellectual interest. This was done yesterday in spite of the handicap of the conductorial difficulty. The great work revealed many new beauties because of its symphonic treatment.

This and a finely trained chorus (for which many thanks to Mr. Townsend) were the glories of this occasion which not all the excess of recitative and the endless repetitions of the aria-form in the solos could quite obliterate. But Bach's Passion Music, according to St. Matthew, is a severe musical penance at its best. But a very large audience sat through its four long hours with most reverent attention.

Globe March 28, 1918

DR MUCK ATTEMPTS TO FIND CONSOLATION IN PIPE

Dr Karl Muck, who is confined in the East Cambridge Jail under the President's alien enemy proclamation, received a visit yesterday from his wife and his secretary, C. J. Foley. These are the only persons he was allowed to see. All visitors must have a pass from United States Marshal John J. Mitchell.

Dr Muck is beginning to feel the rigors of his confinement. He has been denied the privilege of smoking cigarettes, to which he is addicted. As a substitute for his favorite form of nicotine he is trying to accustom himself to pipe smoking.

Advertiser March 27, 1918

DR. MUCK TO BE INTERNED DURING WAR

Fate of Symphony Leader Settled by Washington Authorities

WILL BE SENT TO FORT OGLETHORPE

Another Arrest in Case Due at Early Date, Is Report

Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been taken in custody as an alien enemy by the police and agents of the Department of Justice, will be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, for the duration of the war, it was definitely announced last night.

Taking on a national interest, the arrest of the noted conductor promises to see newer developments in the next few days.

It was intimated last night that in connection with Dr. Muck's arrest another man will, in all probability, be brought before the Department of Justice officials. The arrest of this man, whose name has not been revealed, is to be expected soon, it is said.

Many visitors and friends were in evidence at the home of Dr. Muck at No. 50 Fenway all day. They brought kind words of consolation to his wife, who was confined to her room the greater part of the day.

During the day several persons visited United States Attorney Dewey, who is in charge of the case, with the request that the prisoner be permitted to conduct the concerts scheduled for yesterday afternoon and evening.

They informed Dewey that they were true Americans and in asking for the temporary release of the musical conductor, were not trying to obstruct the progress of the government's actions. Among those who called on Mr. Dewey was Major Henry L. Higginson's secretary, who made no attempt to communicate with Dr. Muck.

SWISS CITIZENSHIP ADMITTED.

The disappointment at the failure of the government officials to permit Dr. Muck's rendering of Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew," at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and evening, was particularly keen among music lovers, inasmuch as the production has been in preparation all winter. A day before the arrest Dr. Muck had been busy rehearsing the orchestra, which was to have performed with a chorus of 400 and a boy choir of 80.

It was indicated from Washington that the citizenship of Dr. Muck has been the subject of discussion for some time in diplomatic circles there. It is generally understood in the capital that the symphony conductor is a Prussian, in fact, although he is said to be the possessor of Swiss citizenship.

Government officials were of the opinion that his claimed Swiss citizenship would not prevent him from being interned as a dangerous enemy. His internment, it was pointed out authoritatively, would come under the provisions of the President's proclamation directed against all citizens born in Germany.

The statement that the conductor would be interned at Fort Oglethorpe, and speculations on his citizenship status, were embodied in Washington dispatches reaching Boston late yesterday.

The definite intention of government agents to intern the musician was taken as the death blow to the claim that Dr. Muck would wage a fight for liberty on the ground that he is of Swiss citizenship.

Muck's Swiss citizenship claim was held to be true, acording to a statement made by Hans Sulzer, the Swiss minister to the United States, yesterday. The minister, who is on a visit in New York, added that no representation with regard to his arrest in Boston had been made to the Swiss legation by Dr. Muck. He said that as far as he knew none had been sent to the legation in Washington.

According to a New York dispatch, the Swiss minister has made clear that unless Dr. Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss legation he would not interfere in the matter. He added that if he were asked to intervene he would proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

MUCK MAKES NO CLAIM.

As far as could be learned last night, no claim for Swiss intervention had been made by the arrested musical conductor.

When Dr. Muck was six to eight years old, his father became a resident at the canton of Zug, and there obtained his citizenship, a member of the Swiss diplomatic corps revealed yesterday. He obtained his new citizenship with a view of gaining protection from his business and to avoid having his son Karl being taken into the Prussian army.

The Swiss naturalization laws are very lenient, the diplomat said, making it possible for any one to obtain naturalization papers without being obliged to exercise the preliminary duties of citizenship.

At the same time that intimations of the arrest of another person by the Department of Justice, in connection with the arrest of Dr. Muck, were made, it was learned that a careful search of the musician's home and office had been conducted by government officials late yesterday afternoon. The officials did not make any statement.

At the Federal Building Dr. Muck was subjected to a severe cross-examination following his arrest at his home. He was committed in the East Cambridge jail as an alien enemy. He was accompanied to the jail, together with three other prisoners, by Deputy Marshal Arthur Shinners.

It is expected that Dr. Muck's stay in jail would be of long duration and it is evidenced that his wife would be the only person to be allowed to see him there.

A touching scene took place at the Federal Building when the conductor's wife was called upon to bid farewell to her husband. Mrs. Muck held the hand of her husband for several minutes, showing no emotion during her few mintues' talk. She begged him not to be discouraged in his plight.

Following the arrest Attorney Dewey issued this statement:

"Dr. Muck was born in Germany, and being a native of Germany he comes under the head of being an alien enemy, even though he later acquired citizenship in Switzerland. We had a parallel case only last week of a man who was born in Germany who migrated to South Africa and became a British subject.

"He was sent away on precisely the same grounds as we are now holding Dr. Muck."

Globe 3/27/18

BACH "PASSION" LED BY ERNST SCHMIDT

Given in Entirety, in Two Parts, at 4 and 8

Hinkle, Alcock, Murphy, Werrenrath and Witherspoon the Soloists

Bach's "Passion" music according to St Matthew was performed in its entirety yesterday at Symphony Hall, the first time in that manner within 36 years. There were two sessions, one for each part, one beginning at 4, finishing at 5:45, the other beginning at 8 in the evening. Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed. The Symphony Chorus was larger than at the two choral concerts which preceded this, the third and last of the series. There was a choir of 80 boys from Trinity, Emmanuel and the Church of the Advent. The soloists consisted of Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Herbert Witherspoon, bass. Mr Myers and Mr Peirce assisted in small roles. John P. Marshall was organist and Alfred de Voto pianist.

Had Bach heard a performance of his Matthew "Passion" the year of his death, 21 years after he wrote it, would he have kept its present length? Would he have left the evangelist's narrative of burdensome tessitura so extended, or would he have included certain arias assigned to the bass, written upon texts, not Scriptural, but by Picander, his assisting librettist; arias curiously unworthy of the Bach of the "O, pardon me my God" for alto, and the recitative "Ah, Golgotha," or of the "Behold! Behold!" for tenor? It is to be questioned whether or not the devotional zeal to a composer expressed in the literal production of a work is always the most just homage. Episodes may break up the salient lines of development. Bach's architectural arioso and terse recitative make prolonged attention arduous for the general ear, while to the student there may be endless interest in the contrapuntal mastery, in the economy in material, the clearness of form, the directness of thought, and in the great moments, the amazingly modern expression, the stupendous dramatic force.

The admirer of the propelling, illuminating, vitalizing dramatic recitative of that modern master, Verdi, in his "Otelio" or his "Falstaff," may look with astonishment upon those pages wherein Bach's evangelist pictures the revolting earth, the riven rocks, the dismembered tomts recording the Crucifixion.

The opening antiphonal choruses wherein the Believers reply to the Daughters of Zion in the sharptly punctuating chords, "Whom?" "How?" in the flashing answer, "Barrabas," to the query for choice between the Savior and the criminal, in the feverishly individualized "Lord, is it I?" in the appearance of Arioso in the higher function of poetry, now supplanting and with orchestra the prose of recitative, as the setting to Jesus' words when he administers the sacrament in the chromatic organ pedal telling of the quaking earth. These are a few among many of the symbols of the interpretative sense, which comes to its fullest flower in the lyric drama, yet as used here ennoble and vivify what Bach intended as a devotional service for the church.

The figured part writing of these choruses demands far more of singers than the comparatively incidental choral finales of Mahler or even Beethoven. The choral part of the performance last night was one of fine tonal quality, of praiseworthy part singing, of good precision, and superbly dramatic effects in the madness of the mob's retorts; a performance which spoke loudly in praise for the preparatory rehearsals by Mr Townsend and for the final ones by Dr Muck. The chorales, none of them omitted, were sung with variety of expression. The unaccompanied No. 72, "When I, Too, Am Departing," was deeply impressive. Mr Schmidt showed courage, good taste and no little skill in saving the performance.

The music for the solo voices, demanding a limpidity, a repose and breadth of style, vexatious to many a singer of this day, in the main was treated in a sympathetic spirit, with large skill and true beauty. Mme Hinkle's lovely voice and fine art are well known here. By her haunting voice, her deeply emotional singing, Mme Alcock added to the complete success of her season's appearances. Mr Murphy triumphed over the hight of the trying recitatives, with dignity of style and a clear diction, and in the "Behold" distinguished himself. Mr Werrenrath was an inspired interpreter of the words of Jesus, surpassing past models of his own in vocal beauty and delivery. Mr Witherspoon made much in dramatic sense of the recitatives of Peter, Judas and Pilate. Both audiences were large. The performance will be repeated next Tuesday, afternoon and evening.

Globe March 27, 1918

Transcript March 27, 1918 58

DR KARL MUCK TAKEN TO THE JAIL AT EAST CAMBRIDGE

Spends Day at Federal Building—Visited by Wife And Others—Officials Go Over Papers

DR AND MRS KARL MUCK.

Dr Karl Muck had a change of quarters from the dingy cell in Station 16, where he spent Monday night, to the more spacious though thickly populated room in the rear of the deputy marshal's office in the Federal Building, where he was conveyed yesterday morning in company with the arresting officers, all being in plain clothes.

Dr Muck was a temporary occupant of the cage in the marshal's office for about 10 minutes, after which he was allowed to mix with the other prisoners, consisting of alleged slackers and bootleggers who were awaiting arraignment before Commissioner Hayes, and the touching of elbows with the motley gathering did not appear to ruffle the temper of the music master in the least. He smoked cigarettes almost incessantly.

After an uneventful day in smoking and reading the Globe, Dr Muck received an official call from Asst United States Attorney Judd Dewey, who told the noted prisoner that he had been arrested under the President's proclamation as an alien enemy, and that he was to be held in the East Cambridge Jail until further orders.

Going Over Mass of Letters

Almost coincident with the arrest of Dr Muck Monday evening, his home and office were searched by members of the Department of Justice and great quantities of correspondence were secured and removed to the offices of the Federal officials. There was still another search earlier Monday, and quarters known to have been frequented by the prisoner was visited and searched yesterday. The officials spent the entire day, yesterday, examining letters and other documents and in translating them and putting everything in shape for reviewing by United States Dist Atty Thomas J. Boynton and Mr Dewey.

According to present plans the prisoner will not be brought to the Federal Building today, but will remain in the East Cambridge Jail for two or three days while the Government is studying the case, after which Dr Muck will be called over to the Federal Building and will be given every chance to convince the Government men that the charges against him are false.

This will not partake of anything savoring of court action, but rather will be of the star chamber character. This will be Dr Muck's best opportunity to lay any suspicions in the minds of the officials. At the same time he is likely to be informed of the strength of the Government's case against him.

Many Show Interest

There were many callers yesterday at the office of Judd Dewey, assistant United States attorney in charge of the case, chiefly in regard to the musical festival which Dr Muck was to have conducted yesterday afternoon and last night. The Government's position was explained to Seth T. Gano of Belmont, secretary to Maj Henry L. Higginson, who was among the first to drop into the Federal Building yesterday morning.

As the day wore on several influential friends of Dr Muck called, among them Mrs John L. Gardner, the noted patron of music and art. She did not talk with Dr Muck, but brought something in a marmalade jar for him. After stepping across the threshold of the door leading to the rear of the marshal's office she waved her gloved hand at Dr Muck, as she expressed it, just to cheer and encourage him. Mrs Gardner called to see Charles A. Ellis, manager of Symphony Hall, in regard to the concert, but could not resist the temptation to lighten the burden on the mind of the prisoner, who, in common with many other noted artists, had previously enjoyed her hospitality.

Later in the day Mrs Muck called on her husband. Their meeting took place in the office in the rear of the deputy marshal's office, in which Mrs Muck tried to cheer her husband. Her call was brief.

Later in the day Mr Dewey stated that Mrs Muck would be allowed to call on her husband in the East Cambridge Jail, where he is to be confined for the present. One of the attaches of Symphony Hall, named Foley, was a constant attendant on Dr Muck yesterday, remaining close at hand during the entire day and bringing his meals and smoking materials.

JUDD DEWEY,
Assistant United States District Attorney, in Charge of Dr Muck's Case.

It was said that he will make an effort to be close to Dr Muck while he is in the East Cambridge Jail to give him such comforts as he may desire.

Investigating Friend of Dr Muck

Perhaps the most interesting development yesterday was the fact that a close friend of Dr Muck is being closely investigated by the Department of Justice, and in case he is found to have transgressed the law he will be arrested and given the same treatment as is planned for Dr Muck.

Many persons' names figured in the correspondence found in the doctor's apartments and office, and they will also be thoroughly looked up.

Taken to Jail

About 4:40 yesterday afternoon Dr Muck was placed in the care of Deputy United States Marshal Arthur Shinners and, without being subjected to the humiliation of being handcuffed, he was placed in a machine with three other prisoners and Deputy United States Marshal Scully and whisked across to the East Cambridge Jail.

Dr Muck was introduced to the sheriff and found on his arrival that Mrs Muck and another woman had also called at the jail and were making diligent inquiries in regard to room, bedding and meals for Dr Muck.

Perhaps the greatest hardship Dr Muck will have to endure will be his deprivation of cigarettes, which is a rule of the institution.

He will be allowed to smoke a pipe, but the cigarettes are barred for all prisoners. Dr Muck explained that he had smoked cigarettes all his life and that he had never indulged in pipe or cigar, but the officials were obdurate.

Mrs Muck embraced and kissed her husband when she called and kissed him again when leaving. She had just began to pass out when Dr Muck was seen in the elevator and threw a kiss to his wife as he was being carried up.

Worries About Concert

While en route to the jail Dr Muck showed much feeling, especially as he referred to the concert going on at the time he was going to Cambridge.

He stated to one of the attendants that he had trained and drilled the musicians in the production and that his assistant who was leading had not previously conducted for this production.

Throughout the many trying ordeals of the day Dr Muck showed not the slightest spirit of defiance.

During the day there were many women callers from among the employes of the building.

The next step will be in the form of a regular report by Judd Dewey with recommendations for the final disposition of the case which will be forwarded to the Attorney General at Washington.

Maj Higginson Not at Office

No statement could be obtained yesterday from Maj Henry L. Higginson in regard to the arrest of Dr Muck.

At Maj Higginson's office on State st his secretary, Seth T. Gano, said that the major would not be tnere during the day and that there would be no statement on the Dr Muck case. At the Higginson home, 191 Commonwealth av, it was said that the major remained at home because he was not feeling well.

It is said that he had a conference in the morning with members of the Symphony Orchestra relative to the action to be taken in the matter of the concert by the orchestra in the afternoon, in view of the absence of Dr Muck.

Maj Higginson's physician, Dr Edward L. Young of 99 Commonwealth av, who visited the Higginson home during the day, stated last evening that there was nothing to say about his patient save that he was slightly indisposed and would probably be out again within a day or two.

SWISS MINISTER WILL TAKE UP CASE, IF ASKED

NEW YORK, March 26—Hans Sulzer, the Swiss Minister to the United States, who is visiting New York, today told the Associated Press that the claim of Dr Karl Muck that he is a naturalized citizen of Switzerland is correct.

The Minister said that up to the present no representation had been made to him by Dr Muck with regard to his arrest in Boston, and, that so far as he knew, none had been sent to the Legation at Washington.

The Minster added that unless Dr Muck claimed the protection of the Swiss Legation he would take no action in the matter, but if he is asked to intervene he will proceed in the matter as he would in the case of any Swiss citizen.

MUSIC

Monitor 3/27

"St. Matthew" Passion

Specially for The Christian Science Monitor

Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion—Presented, in complete form and with the original accompanying music, by chorus, soloists and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernst Schmidt conducting; Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass., afternoon and evening of March 26, 1918. The principal assisting artists were: Lambert Murphy, tenor, who sang the narrative portions of the text; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, who sang the words of Jesus; Mme. Florence Hinkle, soprano; Mme. Merle Alcock, contralto; and Herbert Witherspoon, bass. Minor assisting singers were Arthur Myers, tenor; and John W. Peirce, baritone. Performers assisting in the accompaniments were John P. Marshall, organist; and Alfred de Voto, pianist. The Bach work completes a series of three choral programs arranged by the manager of the orchestra, C. A. Ellis. The chorus was trained by Stephen Townsend.

BOSTON, Mass.—Ernst Schmidt, the assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was called at the last moment to direct the performance of the Bach "St. Matthew" Passion, upon Karl Muck's being taken into custody by officers of the United States Department of Justice. He presented the music before a large audience and made a markworthy success of his opportunity. He was well received along with the chorus, the soloists and the orchestra; though neither he nor anybody else had especial applause, the occasion being one at which hand-clapping, except by way of courtesy at the opening and the close of the sessions, was not in order.

Oratorios, when well performed, should be impressive in the work of the chorus, the work of the soloists and the work of the orchestra. But very seldom do they make an appeal in all three of these particulars. The department most likely to excel is that of the soloists; the one least likely to, is that of the orchestra. The one that should excel, if only one can be good, is that of the chorus. This, however, is often considered of little importance, and sometimes of no account whatever, as happened a month or so ago at a certain music festival, where, according to reports, Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was performed with soloists, but without chorus.

In the presentation of the "St. Matthew" Passion at Symphony Hall, all three departments acquitted themselves well, though not equally well. The one which, without much question, did the best was the usual one—the soloists; that which earned the next rating was doubtless the orchestra; while that which most of the time seemed to lead the rear of the procession was the chorus.

This is to speak of the matter in relative terms only. For the Townsend chorus, compared with ordinary oratorio groups, made a strong showing. In the first place, the singers were thoroughly acquainted with their music, which cannot always be said of members of oratorio organizations, even when they have the book of some far easier piece than a Bach Passion open before them. And then, the singers were well controlled in respect to rhythm and tone, though their volume of tone was not always in proper adjustment with that of the orchestra and the organ.

More in detail, the singers of Tuesday, at the very beginning of the afternoon session, starting into the brisk, antiphonal passages of "Come, Ye Daughters," and passing into the stern, four-part measures of the hymn, "O Lamb of God," displayed an ability to attack initial notes firmly, and to release final notes smoothly, that was assuring; and an agreement in accenting principal notes vigorously, and in executing subsidiary notes evenly, that was fascinating. Briefly, both here and in the rest of the piece, they merited the praise of being excellent at choral phrasing.

As for the orchestral side of the presentation, the idea was a worthy one of having the accompaniment played according to the original scoring, instead of according to a modern adaptation. A little documentary interest in a concert is always attractive to a serious audience. But what did Saint-Saëns once say? "Instruments pass; the voice remains." He spoke from long experience with Eighteenth Century musical documents when he made that remark. He meant to say that you cannot, try as you will, bring back the music with which voices were accompanied 200 years back.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra a Bach orchestra? Impossible, even when you divide it into two small orchestras and restore to one of them the ancient scheme of wood wind. Orchestra and organ at the sessions of Tuesday afternoon and evening, probably against the intentions of those who planned things, produced a sonority that was realistically of the Twentieth Century. There should have been a larger force of bass singers to hold up the vocal harmony, anyway. With all the circumstances as they were, the choral ship inevitably got

As for the soloists, Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock, the soprano and the contralto, had much meditative singing to do, which they managed in their usual finished way. Mr. Witherspoon, the bass, had dramatic moments, when he represented Peter and Pilate, which he handled capitally. Mr. Murphy, singing the narrative text, and Mr. Werrenrath, singing the words of Jesus, had the leading rôles, and they both gave remarkable interpretations. The tenor could have done no more than he did in preparing his part but to have gone through it with some master of English speech, for the correction of certain pronunciations. The baritone could hardly have done more to improve his study of his part. He has made it a masterwork in point both of technique and expression.

American March 27, 1918

OTHER ARRESTS MAY FOLLOW THAT OF MUCK

3/27

Musician's Papers, Seized by U. S. Officials, Said to Involve Prominent Bostonian

The arrest of a prominent Boston man was intimated today, as the latest development in the case of Dr. Karl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is held in East Cambridge jail as an alien enemy.

It was stated that papers seized by agents of the Department of Justice in the home of Dr. Muck and other places frequented by him were of such character that other arrests may be expected.

Federal officials refused to discuss the identity of the prominent Bostonian said to be implicated with the musical director. The papers were seized on three search warrants, an exhaustive search being made at No. 50 Fenway, the home of Dr. Muck, and at two other places. Mrs. Muck was at home while the search was being made, but was not asked to assist in locating the documents.

QUESTIONED ABOUT LETTERS.

After returning to the Federal building the raiding officers went into executive session in the office of the United States District Attorney. A short time later Dr. Muck was called into the private office of Assistant District Attorney Judd Dewey and interrogated regarding certain of the letters. The names of many persons appeared in the correspondence found in the doctor's office and apartments, and they will be investigated.

The famous conductor was placed in an automobile containing two handcuffed prisoners and was whisked to the jail and installed in a cell where he will probably remain for several days.

A lunch room on Cambridge street furnished his supper and breakfast today. For supper he had ham and eggs with beans, coffee, bread and butter and cocoanut pie. Breakfast consisted only of oatmeal and cream and coffee.

MUST GIVE UP CIGARETTES.

Dr. Muck must abandon cigarettes and woo the pipe while in East Cambridge jail. The jail regulations forbid the "coffin nails" but permit the pipe. The Symphony director is an inveterate cigarette smoker. But, when he returned to the jail last night from the Federal building in Boston, his remaining cigarettes were taken from him. Today he sent word to his secretary to send him a pipe. Prisoners lacking means to buy pipes are furnished by Sheriff John R. Fairbairn with the democratic delight known as the "common clay," or "T. D." Presumably Dr. Muck will have a much more pretentious affair.

After the Federal officials have studied his case, Dr. Muck may be given an opportunity to prove his innocence. At the same time he will probably be informed of the strength of the government's case against him.

It is understood that counsel has been engaged to defend him, but as alien enemies are not entitled to hearings the necessity for an attorney is not apparent.

69 Boston Herald March 27, 1918 Herald 3/27/18

SEIZE PAPERS BELONGING TO DR. KARL MUCK

Officers Visit House and Two Other Places During Their Quest

PRISONER CONSIGNED TO CAMBRIDGE JAIL

Only Charge so Far Placed Against Him Is Being an Enemy Alien

Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was committed to the Middlesex county jail at East Cambridge late yesterday afternoon on a mittimus in which he was described as an enemy alien. Before he departed from the federal building he learned that agents of the department of justice had visited his home and other places frequented by him and had seized correspondence and papers.

At the federal building it was rumored that the government agents found papers of such character that other arrests may be expected and that among those implicated with Dr. Muck is one of the most prominent persons in Boston. Officials declined to give out any information concerning their activities or the results of their visits to places visited by Dr. Muck.

(Continued on Page Twelve, Column 1.)

(Continued from Page One.)

Held in Federal Building

Dr. Muck was a prisoner all day at the federal building. He was held in the pen with several others who were under arrest for various infractions of government regulations, including several "bootleggers" and draft evaders.

He was interrogated at frequent intervals by Asst. U. S. Dist.-Atty. Judd Dewey, Asst. U. S. Dist.-Atty. Daniel Shea, and was several times taken before U. S. Dist.-Atty. Thomas J. Boynton. When he was finally turned over to a deputy marshal for commitment to jail there was no change in the complaint entered on the United States marshal's record.

Officers of the government declined firmly to say that Dr. Muck would not be taken into court at a later date and arraigned on a specific charge of violating some section or sections of the espionage act. The discovery of letters and papers of a compromising nature was not admitted by the department agents, but after Mrs. Muck took the news of the raids to the federal building the officials did not deny that seizures were made.

There were several visitors at the offices of the numerous officials concerned with Dr. Muck's detention, and among them were some of Boston's prominent music patrons. They called on Dist. Atty. Boynton, Asst. Dist. Atty. Dewey and upon United States Marshal Mitchell, inquiring as to the possibility of Dr. Muck's being permitted to conduct the concert at Symphony hall yesterday afternoon and last night. Offers of bonds, escorts and guards failed to move the officials to grant the requests for the orchestra leader's temporary release from custody.

Intercession Proves Vain

One group of 10 patrons of the Symphony concerts interceded with the officials, but made it clear that their interest was entirely musical and that they were not seeking Dr. Muck's release except under suitable restraint, long enough to conduct the orchestra at the concerts, which were arranged far in advance of any suggestion that the leader was to be arrested.

Asst. Dist. Atty. Dewey, in charge of enemy alien cases and in personal charge of the case against Dr. Muck, refused to permit any arrangement to be made for Dr. Muck to leave the custody of the United States marshal, and arrangements were then completed for the concerts to go on with another leader.

When Dr. Muck was transferred from the police station on Boylston street to the detention cage at the marshal's office in the federal building, application was made by department of justice officers for three search warrants. They described three premises where Dr. Muck was known to have visited, including his home at 50 Fenway, where an exhaustive search was conducted. Mrs. Muck was at home during the proceedings, but the officers apparently knew the lay-out of the premises and asked for no assistance in finding the papers they sought.

The other warrants were served in other localities, and when the raiding officers returned to the federal building they had a mass of papers which they had taken from the three places searched, but most of the matter was taken from Dr. Muck's studio.

DR. KARL MUCK, FEDERAL PRISONER, AND HIS WIFE

Herald 3/27

Mrs. Muck Was Devoted in Her Attendance Yesterday While Her Husband Was in Custody at the Federal Building.

Questioned Regarding Papers

The raiding officers went into immediate conference with the officials in the district attorney's office, and a short time later Dr. Muck was called into Asst.-Dist.-Atty. Dewey's private office, where he was questioned concerning some of the documents. He explained the presence of some of them and characterized them as personal matters. Of others he said they had accumulated for some time and were of such little importance that he did not know why they were preserved.

The officers searched among the papers at their leisure while Dr. Muck remained in the detention cage. At intervals he was recalled to the office and questioned regarding other matters which were brought to light as the inquiry progressed.

While awaiting the call of the officials, Dr. Muck assumed an air of indifference to his plight. For hours he appeared to be interested in the newspapers, and several times he chatted animatedly with fellow-prisoners, but during the afternoon he lost his air of nonchalance and paced nervously up and down the cage, smoking cigarettes incessantly and nervously flecking the ashes.

Each time he was called to the assistant district attorney's office he smiled in acknowledgment of the summons, passing the guards with smiles and bows, but each time he returned to enter the cage he appeared pale and distraught, but quickly assumed his mask of smiles as he reached the deputy marshal's office.

One of his fellow-prisoners in the cage was an Italian sent up from Hartford, Ct., and Dr. Muck engaged him in conversation, but the Italian had troubles of his own and was not eager to continue the talk.

Gets His Pet Cigarettes

